

THE COMPLETE GUIDE TO Everything You Need to Know About The Bible

HOLMAN Illustrated Bible Dictionary

Completely Revised, Updated and Expanded

Exhaustive, Theological, Scriptural
Pronouncing Guide,
Unique "Quicktabs" Locator System

Over 700 Full-Color Photos,
Illustrations, Charts, and Maps

The Only Dictionary that includes all the major translations – HCSB, NIV, KJV,
RSV, NRSV, REB, NASB, ESV, and TEV

Copyrighted Material

HOLMAN
Illustrated
Bible Dictionary

H O L M A N
Illustrated
Bible Dictionary

General Editors

Chad Brand, Charles Draper, Archie England

Associate Editors

Steve Bond, E. Ray Clendenen

General Editor, Holman Bible Dictionary

Trent C. Butler

Biblical Reconstructions by Bill Latta

Nashville, Tennessee

Holman Illustrated Bible Dictionary
© 2003 by Holman Bible Publishers
Nashville, Tennessee
All rights reserved

Maps © 1998 by Holman Bible Publishers
Nashville, Tennessee
All rights reserved

Scripture quotations, unless otherwise noted, have been taken from the Holman Christian Standard Bible®.
Copyright © 1999, 2000, 2002, 2004
Holman Bible Publishers.

Scripture quotations marked NASB are taken from the New American Standard Bible®.
Copyright © 1960, 1962, 1963, 1968, 1971, 1973, 1975, 1977, 1995 by the Lockman Foundation. Used by permission.

Scripture quotations marked NRSV are taken from the New Revised Standard Version.
Copyright © 1989 by the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America.
Used by permission. All rights reserved.

Scripture quotations marked NIV are taken from the Holy Bible, New International Version.
Copyright © 1973, 1978, 1984 by the International Bible Society.

Scripture quotations marked REB are taken from The Revised English Bible.
Copyright © Oxford University Press and Cambridge University Press, 1989.
All rights reserved. Reprinted by permission.

Dewey Decimal Classification: 220.3
Subject Heading: BIBLE—DICTIONARIES

ISBN: 978-0-8054-2836-0

Printed in China
13 14 15 16 17 18 19 • 12 11 10 09

Editorial Foreword

Since the inception of the Christian church, believers have found both the center and circumference of divine revelation in the sacred Scriptures. The day the church was born she had a fully authoritative Bible, the Old Testament. The need for more Scripture was recognized in due time and the authority of the books that constitute the New Testament was affirmed through a centuries-long process of canonization. The historic faith of the church is that authoritative inscribed (that is, written) revelation begins and ends with the Bible. These are fundamental theological affirmations central to this project. We declare unequivocally our commitment, and the commitment of the other editors, to the total trustworthiness, truthfulness, sufficiency, inerrancy, and infallibility of the Bible.

Further, nothing is more basic to progress in the Christian life and to ministry of every kind than a working knowledge of Scripture. Our sincere hope is that this book will serve multiple purposes, such as facilitating acquisition of knowledge about the Bible, understanding the Bible's meaning and message, and providing an entree into the wider world of biblical scholarship.

We stand on the shoulders of others, the editors and writers who produced the Holman Bible Dictionary (HBD). Interestingly, that project consumed six years, as has this revision and expansion. Neither edition would have been possible without the Herculean effort of general editor Trent Butler and the contributing editors of the HBD. Trent also encouraged the publisher to prepare a new edition, incorporating the best of recent biblical scholarship.

We are deeply grateful for the opportunity to collaborate with so many gifted people in the completion of the Holman Illustrated Bible Dictionary (HIBD). Without the active and aggressive leadership, participation, patience, and support of Ray Clendenen, Steve Bond, Vicki Lee, Dean Richardson, and others at B&H this project could not have been completed. In addition, we have received invaluable assistance from secretarial assistants, especially Lisa Taylor, Lindi Fowler, and Tina Brand. The institutions where we have taught over these years have been very gracious and supportive of the project. We extend thanks to our deans, presidents, and colleagues at North Greenville College, Boyce College, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary for support, advice, and encouragement along the way. We are indebted also to hundreds of gifted writers.

While our editorial design is to serve a broad audience, from lay people to students and ministers, we believe the HIBD is useful also to professors and scholars. For twelve years prior to the writing of this foreword, the HBD has been among the best-selling Bible dictionaries. We commend the HIBD to you, and we hope and pray that it proves as durable and useful and finds as wide a constituency as its predecessor.

Table of Contents

1. Editorial Foreword

2. Key to Pronunciation

3. Transliteration of Hebrew, Greek, and Aramaic

4. Contributors

5. Time Line

6. Bible Information from A to Z

A

B

C

D

E

F

G

H

I

J

K

L

M

N

O

PQ

R

S

T

UV

W

XYZ

7. Art Credits

Special Internal Features

CHARTS

- 1. Time Line
- 2. Agricultural Calendar
- 3. Significant Dates in Old Testament History
- 4. The Jewish Calendar
- 5. The Hasmonean Dynasty
- 6. Parables of Jesus
- 7. Miracles of Jesus
- 8. Discourses of Jesus
- 9. Jewish Parties in the New Testament
- 10. Messianic Prophecies of the Old Testament
- 11. Millennial Perspectives on Revelation
- 12. Table of Weights and Measures

SCALE RECONSTRUCTIONS

- 1. Lighthouse in the Harbor at Alexandria
- 2. Roman Archer's Machine from First Century A.D.
- 3. Ark of the Covenant
- 4. Athens
- 5. Ancient Babylon
- 6. Pool of Bethesda
- 7. First-Century Corinth
- 8. David's Jerusalem
- 9. Ephesus: A.D. 48 -400
- 10. Reconstruction of the Artemision at Ephesus
- 11. First-Century House in Israel
- 12. Eighth-Century Israelite House
- 13. Herod the Great's Winter Palace in Jericho
- 14. Jerusalem in the Time of Jesus
- 15. Miletus
- 16. Nehemiah's Jerusalem

- 17. Caesarea Maritima
- 18. First-Century Rome
- 19. Phoenician Trader
- 20. Solomon's Temple \(cutaway from the side\)
- 21. Solomon's Temple \(cutaway from the top\)
- 22. First-Century Synagogue
- 23. Tabernacle
- 24. Herod's Temple
- 25. Herod's Temple \(floor plan\)
- 26. Jesus' Triumphal Entry
- 27. Roman Siege Tower
- 28. Roman Battering Ram
- 29. Ziggurat from the Babylonian Period \(605-550 B.C.\)

INTERNAL MAPS

- 1. The Migration of Abraham
- 2. Abraham in Canaan
- 3. Expansion of the Early Church in Palestine
- 4. Jephthah and the Ammonites
- 5. David Defeats the Philistines
- 6. The Rise of the Neo-Babylonian Empire
- 7. The Bar Kokhba Revolt
- 8. Jesus in Judea and Jerusalem
- 9. Journey of the Spies
- 10. Canaan in the Fourteenth Century: The Tell El-Amarna Tablets
- 11. Cities of Refuge
- 12. Joshua's Northern Campaigns
- 13. Joshua's Central and Southern Campaigns
- 14. The Conquests of Cyrus the Great
- 15. David's Rise to Power
- 16. Qumran and the Dead Sea Scrolls
- 17. Deborah's Victory over the Canaanites
- 18. Egypt: Land of Bondage
- 19. Ehud and the Oppression of the Moabites
- 20. Elijah and Elisha

- 21. The Route of the Exodus
- 22. The Returns of the Jewish Exiles to Judah
- 23. The Ministry of Jesus around the Sea of Galilee
- 24. Galilee in the Time of Jesus
- 25. Plain of Philistia
- 26. Gideon's Battles with the Amalekites
- 27. Alexander the Great's Empire
- 28. Herod's Building Program
- 29. Hezekiah's Jerusalem
- 30. The Passion Week in Jerusalem
- 31. The Maccabean Revolt
- 32. Kingdom of David and Solomon
- 33. Kingdoms of Israel and Judah
- 34. Palestine in the Time of Jesus
- 35. Travels of Jacob
- 36. The Revolt of Jehu
- 37. Jerusalem in the Time of David and Solomon
- 38. Jerusalem in the New Testament Period
- 39. Jesus' Birth and Early Childhood
- 40. The Ministry of Jesus beyond Galilee
- 41. Jesus' Journeys from Galilee to Judea
- 42. John the Baptizer
- 43. The Journeys of Joseph
- 44. The Tribal Allotments of Israel
- 45. Limits of Israelite Settlement
- 46. The Reign of Josiah
- 47. The Judges of Israel
- 48. Kadesh-barnea
- 49. Titus's Campaigns
- 50. Expansion of the Christianity in the Second and Third Centuries

A.D.

- 51. The Journey from Kadeshbarnea to the Plains of Moab
- 52. The Omride Dynasty
- 53. Climate Patterns of Ancient Palestine
- 54. Paul's Conversion and Early Ministry
- 55. The Missionary Journeys of Paul

56. Paul's Arrest and Imprisonment

57. Titus's Siege of Jerusalem

58. Samson and the Philistines

59. The Ministry of Samuel

60. David's Flight from Saul

61. Churches of the Revelation

Key to Pronunciation

MARK	EXAMPLE	SIGN
ä	däy, läy	ay
â	hât, cât	a
â	âre, fâr	ah
â	câre, fâre	e, eh
a	(unmarked) call	aw
â	âfraid	u, uh
ah	(unmarked) Elijah	uh
âi	âisle	ī
am	(unmarked) adam's apple	uhm
an	(unmarked) roman	uhn
c, k	cord, chorus	k
ç	çity	s, ss
ê	mête, Crête	ee
ê	mêt, lêt	e, eh (uh)
è	tèrm	u, uh
ə	əlastic	i, ih
g	(unmarked) get	g
ğ	ğerm	gh, j
ī	pīne, fīne	ī
ī	hīm, pīn	ih
î	machīne	ee
ī	fīrm	u, uh (uhr)
ō	nôte, rôde	o, oh
ō	nôt, rôt	ah
o	(unmarked) amok	uh
ô	ôr, fôr	aw
ph	(unmarked) alpha	f
ş	hiş, muşe	z
s	(unmarked) kiss	ss
û	tûne, mûte	yoo, ew
û	ûp, tûb	uh
û	hûrl, fûrl	u, uh
ü	trûth	oo, ew
th	thyme	t
ti, ci, si	attraction	sh
y	city	i, ih

Seldom Used Marks

ao	(unmarked) pharaoh (ant)	oh
au	(unmarked) author	aw on	(unmarked) onion	uhn
ou	(unmarked) out	ow

Transliteration of Hebrew, Greek, & Aramaic

Hebrew	Greek
א	α a
ב	β b
ג	γ g
ד	δ d
ה	ε e
ו	ζ z
ז	η e
ח	θ th
ט	ι i
י	κ k
כ	λ l
ל	μ m
מ	ν n
נ	ξ x
ס	ο o
ש	π p
פ	ρ r
צ	σ s
ק	τ t
ר	υ u
שׁ	φ ph
שׂ	χ ch
ת	ψ ps
	ω o

vocal shewa	◌
patach	◌ַ
qamets	◌ִ
qamets chatuph	◌ֵ
tsere	◌ֶ (full and defective)
segol	◌ֹ
chireq	◌ֻ (short and long)
cholem	◌ֹ (full and defective)
qibbuts	◌ֻ
shureq	◌ֹ

Contributors

† Deceased unavailable

* Current information

Akin, Daniel L. Dean of the School of Theology; VP of Academic Admin.; Prof. of Christian Preaching. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Albright, Jimmy Pastor, Wyatt Park Baptist Church, St. Joseph, Missouri

Allen, Leslie C. Prof. of OT. Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena, California

Anderson, Douglas Exec. Dir., St. Luke's Community House, Nashville, Tennessee

Andrews, Stephen J. Prof. of OT & Hebrew; Dir. of Morton-Seats Institute of Archaeology & Anthropology. Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, Missouri

Arnold, Steve*

Baldwin, Gary D. Pastor, First Baptist Church, Pineville, Louisiana

Baskin, Joe Adjunct Prof. of Davis Center for Ministry Education. Shorter College, Rome, Georgia

Batson, Jerry W. Associate Dean for Academic Affairs; Associate Prof. of Divinity, Beeson Divinity School. Samford University, Birmingham, Alabama

Bean, Albert F. Associate Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, Missouri

Beck, David R. Associate Prof. of NT & Greek. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Beitzel, Barry J. Exec. VP. Trinity International University, Deerfield, Illinois

Bellinger, W. H., Jr. Dir. of Graduate Studies in Religion. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Berry, Donald K. Prof. of Religion. University of Mobile, Mobile, Alabama

Berry, Everett Pastor, Utica Baptist Church, Utica, Kentucky

Betts, Terry J. Assistant Prof. of OT Interpretation, Boyce College. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Bishop, Ronald E. Prof. Jones County Junior College, Ellisville, Mississippi

Blaising, Craig Exec. VP; Provost; Dean of the School of Theology. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Blevins, James L. Retired. Former Prof. of NT Interpretation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Block, Daniel I. Associate Dean, Scripture & Interpretation; Prof. of OT Interpretation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Blount, Douglas Assistant Dean for Ethics & Philosophical Studies; Assistant Prof. of Philosophy of Religion. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Bond, Steve Editor, Bibles and Reference Books. Broadman & Holman Publishers, Nashville, Tennessee

Bonner, Gary*

Borchert, Gerald L. Prof. of NT. Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Lombard, Illinois

Brand, Chad Owen Associate Prof. of Christian Theology. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary/Associate Prof. of Christian Theology; Coordinator, Dept. of Bible & Theology. Boyce College, Louisville, Kentucky

Brangenberg, John H., III VP & Academic Dean; Associate Prof. of Bible & Biblical Languages. Pacific Rim Bible College, Honolulu, Hawaii

Bridges, Linda McKinnish Associate Dean of the College of Wake Forest. Wake-Forest University, Winston-Salem, North Carolina

Brisco, Thomas V. Prof. of OT. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Brooks, James A. Prof. Emeritus of NT. Bethel Seminary, St. Paul, Minnesota

Brooks, Oscar S. Sr. Prof. of NT Studies. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Browning, Daniel C, Jr. Prof. of Religion. William Carrey College, Hattiesburg, Mississippi

Bruce, Barbara J. Freelance writer, Ridgecrest, North Carolina

Bruce, Larry Freelance writer, Fort Worth, Texas

Burris, Kevin*

Butler, Bradley S. Pastor, Warren Woods Baptist Church, Warren, Michigan

Butler, Trent C. Editor, Bibles & Reference Books. Broadman & Holman Publishers, Nashville, Tennessee

Byrd, Robert O. Prof. of Religion. Belmont University, Nashville, Tennessee

Cabal, Theodore J. Prof. of Christian Philosophy. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Carlson, Stephen W. Leadership & Adult Publishing, Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Cate, Robert L. Phoebe Young Prof. of Religious Studies. Oklahoma State University, Stillwater, Oklahoma

Cathey, Joe Adjunct Prof. of Religion. Dallas Baptist University, Dallas, Texas

Chance, Bradley Chair & Prof. of Religion; Dir. of Academic Advising. William Jewell College, Liberty, Missouri

Chandler, William T., III Minister of Education, Valley Station Baptist Church, Louisville, Kentucky

Choi, Kyoungwon Doctoral candidate. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Church, Christopher Prof. of Philosophy & Religion. Baptist College of Health Sciences, Memphis, Tennessee

Clendenen, E. Ray Executive Editor, Bibles & Reference Books. Broadman & Holman Publishers, Nashville, Tennessee

Coats, George W. Prof. Emeritus. Lexington Theological Seminary, Lexington, Kentucky

Cole, R. Dennis Chairperson of the Division of Biblical Studies; Prof. of OT & Archaeology. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Coleson, Joseph*

Collins, Alvin O. † Former Chairman of Dept. of Religion. Houston Baptist University, Houston, Texas

Compton, Bob Roseboro, North Carolina

Conyers, A. J., III Prof. of Theology, Truett Theological Seminary. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Cook, Donald E. *

Cook, William F. Associate Prof. of NT Interpretation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Cooper, C. Kenny President-Treasurer, Tennessee Baptist Adult Homes, Inc., Brentwood, Tennessee

Cornett, Daryl C. Assistant Prof. of Church History. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Cowan, Steven B. Associate Director, Apologetics Resource Center, Birmingham, Alabama

Cowen, Gerald P. Dean of Southeastern College at Wake Forest; Prof. of NT & Greek. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Cox, Steven L. Associate Prof. of NT & Greek. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Craig, Kenneth M., Jr. Associate Prof. Lees-McRae College, Banner Elk, North Carolina

Cranford, Jeff *

Cranford, Lorin L. Prof. of Religion. Gardner-Webb University, Boiling Springs, North Carolina

Creech, R. Robert Sr. Pastor, University Baptist Church, Houston, Texas

Creed, Brad Provost. Samford University, Birmingham, Alabama

Cresson, Bruce C. Dir., Institute of Biblical Languages. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Crook, Roger Retired, Prof. of Religion. Meredith College, Raleigh, North Carolina

Cross, Diane*

Culpepper, R. Alan Dean, McAfee School of Theology. Mercer University, Macon, Georgia

Davis, Earl C.*

Davis, John J. Prof. of OT Studies. Grace Theological Seminary, Winona Lake, Indiana

Davis, M. Stephen*

Dean, Robert J. Retired, Sr. Editorial & Curriculum Specialist. Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Dehoney, Wayne Retired pastor, Walnut Street Baptist Church, Louisville, Kentucky

Depp, David Freelance writer, Taylors, South Carolina

DeVries, LaMoine Prof. of NT, OT, & Biblical Archaeology. Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield, Missouri

DeVries, Simon J. Retired, Prof. of OT. Methodist Theological School, Delaware, Ohio

Dockery, David S. President; Prof. of Christian Studies. Union University, Jackson, Tennessee

Dollar, Stephen E. Vidor, Texas

Dominy, Bert B. Prof. of Christian Theology, Truett Theological Seminary. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Drakeford, John W. Prof. Emeritus of Psychology & Counseling. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Draper, Charles W. Associate Prof. of Biblical Studies, Boyce College. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Draughon, Walter D., III Pastor, St. Petersburg First Baptist Church, St. Petersburg, Florida

Drayer, John R.*

Drinkard, Joel F., Jr. Prof. of OT Interpretation; Dir., Joseph A. Callaway Museum. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Drumm, C. Scott Assistant Prof. of Theological & Historical Studies, Leavell College. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Duke, Barrett, Jr. Ethics & Religious Liberty Commission, VP for Public Policy, Southern Baptist Convention, Washington, D.C.

Duke, David Nelson † Former Prof. of Religion. William Jewell College, Liberty, Missouri

Duvall, J. Scott Dean & Fuller Prof. of Biblical Studies. Ouachita Baptist University, Arkadelphia, Arkansas

Eakin, Frank E., Jr. Prof. of Jewish & Christian Studies. University of Richmond, Richmond, Virginia

Eakins, J. Kenneth Dir., Marian Eakins Archaeological Collection. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Easley, Kendell Chairman of NT Dept., Prof. of NT & Greek. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Echols, Steve Associate Dean of Professional Doctoral Studies, Associate Prof. of Leadership. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Edwards, W. T., Jr. Prof. Emeritus of Religion. Samford University, Birmingham, Alabama

Ellenburg, Dale Pastor, Ellendale Baptist Church, Bartlett, Tennessee

Ellis, Bob R. Prof. of OT & Hebrew, Logsdon School of Theology. Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, Texas

Ellis, Terence B. Pastor, Spring Hill Baptist Church, Mobile, Alabama

England, Archie W. Associate Prof. of OT & Hebrew. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Enns, Paul P. Adjunct Prof. of Theology. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Tampa, Florida

Fallis, William J. Retired, Sr. Editor, Broadman Press, Nashville, Tennessee

Feinburg, Charles Leet Founding Dean & Dean Emeritus, Talbot School of Theology. Biola University, LaMirada, California

Field, Taylor Dir., East Seventh Baptist Ministry New York, New York

Fink, Michael Knowledge & Channel Management. Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Fisher, Fred L. † Former Prof. of NT. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Fleming, David M.*

Fountain, Mark Freelance writer, Louisville, Kentucky

Fredericks, Daniel C. Sr. VP & Provost. Belhaven College, Jackson, Mississippi

Freeman, C. Hal, Jr. Associate Prof. of Christian Studies, Dir. for Christian Emphasis in Academics. North Greenville College, Tigerville, South Carolina

Fricke, Robert Retired Dir., Baptist Seminary, Costa Rica

Fuller, Russell T. Associate Prof. of OT Interpretation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Galeotti, Gary A. Sr. Prof. of OT. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Gautsch, Darlene R. Adjunct Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Gentry, Peter J. Associate Prof. of OT Interpretation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

George, Timothy Founding Dean of Beeson Divinity School; Prof. of Church History, Historical Theology; Samford University, Birmingham, Alabama. Exec. Editor for Christianity Today.

Glaze, Joseph E. First Baptist Church, Hamilton, New York

Glaze, R. E., Jr. Prof. Emeritus of NT. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Gloer, William Hulitt Prof. of Preaching & Christian Scripture, Truett Theological Seminary. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Gower, Ralph*

Graham, Charles E. Prof. Emeritus of OT. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Gray, Elmer L. † Former Editor of California Southern Baptist, Fresno, California

Grissom, Fred A. Prof. of Religious Studies. North Carolina Wesleyan College, Rocky Mount, North Carolina

Haag, Joe Dir., Program Planning & Special Moral Concerns, Christian Life Commission. Baptist General Convention of Texas, Dallas, Texas

Halbrook, Gary K. Dir., Center for Care & Counseling, Lufkin, Texas

Hancock, Omer J., Jr. Prof. of OT, Church Ministry, & Field Education, Logsdon School of Theology. Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, Texas

Hardin, Gary Pastor, Packard Road Baptist Church, Ann Arbor, Michigan

Harris, R. Laird † Former Prof. Emeritus of OT. Covenant Theological Seminary, St. Louis, Missouri

Harrison, R. K. † Prof. Emeritus of OT, Wycliffe College. University of Toronto, Toronto, Canada

Harrop, Clayton † Former Academic VP & Dean of Faculty. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Hatchett, Randy L. Associate Prof. of Christianity & Philosophy. Houston Baptist University, Houston, Texas

Hatfield, Lawson G.*

Haygood, B. Spencer Sr. Pastor, Orange Hill Baptist Church, Atlanta, Georgia

Hemer, Colin J. † Former Research Fellow, Tyndale House, Cambridge, England

Henderson, Gene † Former Design Editor, Adult Bible Teacher. Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Henry, Jerry M. Pastor, First Baptist Church, Fairhope, Alabama

Hepper, F. Nigel Formerly of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew, England

Hill, C. Dale Sr. Pastor, Grand Parkway Baptist Church, Richmond, Texas

Hockenhull, Brenda R.*

Honeycutt, Roy L. Former President, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Horton, Fred L., Jr. John Thomas Albritton Professor. Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, North Carolina

House, Paul R. Dean of Christian Studies; Prof. of OT. Wheaton College, Wheaton, Illinois

Howe, Claude L., Jr. Prof. Emeritus of Church History. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Hubbard, Kenneth Pastor Emeritus, First Baptist Church, Smyrna, Tennessee

Huckabay, Gary C. Sr. Pastor, Calvary Baptist Church, Las Cruces, New Mexico

Humphries-Brooks, Stephenson Associate Prof. of Religious Studies. Hamilton College, Clinton, New York

Hunt, Harry B., Jr. Retired, Prof. of OT. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Ireland, William J., Jr. Pastor, Ardmore Baptist Church, Winston-Salem, North Carolina

Jackson, Paul Associate Prof. of Christian Studies. Union University, Jackson, Tennessee

Jackson, Thomas A. Pastor, Wake Forest Baptist Church, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Johnson, Jerry A. Dean, Boyce College. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Johnson, Ricky L. Former Prof. of OT. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Johnson, Walter Associate Prof. of Philosophy & Christian Studies. North Greenville College, Tigerville, South Carolina

Joines, Karen R. Prof. of Religion. Samford University, Birmingham, Alabama

Jones, Lynn Pastor, First Baptist Church, Booneville, Mississippi

Jones, Peter Rhea Prof. of Preaching & Theology, McAfee School of Theology. Mercer University, Macon, Georgia

Kaiser, Walter C., Jr. President; Prof. of Christian Studies. Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary, South Hamilton, Massachusetts

Keathley, Naymond Dir. of Undergraduate Studies in Religion. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Kelly, Brent R. Adjunct Prof. Indiana Wesleyan University, Louisville, Kentucky

Kelm, George L. Retired, Prof. of Biblical Backgrounds & Archaeology. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Kent, Dan Gentry Retired, Prof. of OT. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Kilpatrick, R. Kirk Assistant Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Kimmitt, Francis X. Associate Dean, Leavell College; Associate Prof. of OT & Hebrew. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Knight, George W. Prof. of NT, Greek, & Biblical Theology, Logsdon School of Theology. Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, Texas

Koester, Helmut Research Prof. of NT Studies. Harvard Divinity School, Cambridge, Massachusetts

Laing, John Assistant Prof. of Philosophy and Theology. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Laing, Stefana Dan Adjunct Instructor in Divinity Beeson Divinity School. Samford University, Birmingham, Alabama

Langston, Scott Associate Prof. of Biblical Studies. Southwest Baptist University, Bolivar, Missouri

Lanier, David E. Prof. of NT; Editor, Faith & Mission. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Laughlin, John C. H. Chairman of the Religion Dept.; Prof. of OT, Hebrew, & Philosophy. Averett University, Danville, Virginia

Lea, Thomas D. † Former Academic Dean. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Lee, H. Page*

Lee, Philip New Orleans, Louisiana

Lemke, Steve W. Provost; Prof. of Philosophy. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Leonard, Bill J. Dean of the Divinity School & Prof. of Church History. Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem, North Carolina

Lewis, Floyd† Former pastor, First Baptist Church, Eldorado, Arizona

Lewis, Jack P. Prof. of Bible. Harding University Graduate School of Religion, Memphis, Tennessee

Lewis, Joe O. Retired, Provost. Samford University, Birmingham, Alabama

Livingston, George Herbert† Prof. Emeritus of OT. Asbury Theological Seminary, Wilmore, Kentucky

Logan, Phil*

Lorenzen, Thorwald Sr. Lecturer. St. Mark's National Theological Center, Canberra, Australia

Lunceford, Joe E. Prof. of Religion. Georgetown College, Georgetown, Kentucky

MacRae, Allan A.† Chancellor & Emeritus Prof. of OT. Biblical Seminary, Hatfield, Pennsylvania

Mallau, Hans-Harold*

Maltsberger, David C. Sr. Pastor, Westlynn Baptist Church, North Vancouver, British Columbia

Mapes, David Assistant Prof. of Theology. Luther Rice Bible College and Seminary, Lithonia, Georgia

Mariottini, Claude F. Prof. of OT. Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Lombard, Illinois

Marsh, C. Robert*

Martin, D. C.† Former Chairman & Prof., Dept. of Christian Studies. Grand Canyon, College. Phoenix, Arizona.

Martin, D. Michael Dir. of Online Education; Prof. of NT. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Martin, Ralph P. Distinguished Scholar in Residence. Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena, California

Martin, Tony M. Prof. of Religion. University of Mary Hardin Baylor, Belton, Texas

Massey, Ken Sr. Pastor, First Baptist Church, Greensboro, North Carolina

Matheney, M. Pierce, Jr. Retired, Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, Missouri

Matheson, Mark E. Pastor, First Baptist Church, Windermere, Florida

Mathis, Donny R., II Adjunct Prof. of NT, Boyce College. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Matthews, E. LeBron Pastor, Eastern Heights Baptist Church, Columbus, Georgia

Matthews, Victor H. Associate Dean of the College of Humanities & Public Affairs; Prof. of Religious Studies; Coordinator of the Antiquities Program. Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield, Missouri

McCoy, Glenn Retired, Bible Chair. Eastern New Mexico University, Portales, New Mexico

McGee, Daniel B. Prof. of Religion. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

McGraw, Larry R. Prof. of NT, OT, & Biblical Backgrounds, Associate Dean for Undergraduate Studies, Logsdon School of Theology. Hardin-Simmons University, Abilene, Texas

McKinney, Larry Dir. of Communications, Baptist Foundation of Kansas City, Overland Park, Kansas

McNeal, T. R. Dir., Leadership Development Team, South Carolina Baptist Convention, Columbia, South Carolina

McRay, John Prof. Emeritus of NT & Archaeology. Wheaton College Graduate School, Wheaton, Illinois

McWilliams, Warren Augie Henry Prof. of Bible. Oklahoma Baptist University, Shawnee, Oklahoma

Meier, Janice Leadership & Adult Publishing. Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Merkle, Ben L. Gelugor, Penang Malaysia

Michaels, J. Ramsey Prof. Emeritus of Religious Studies, Southwest Missouri State University/ Adjunct Prof. of NT. Bangor Theological University, Springfield, Missouri & Madbury, New Hampshire

Mickelsen, A. Berkeley † Prof. of NT Emeritus, Bethel Theological Seminary, St. Paul, Minnesota

Miller, J. Maxwell Prof. Emeritus, Candler School of Theology. Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia

Miller, Stephen R. Chairman of the Doctor of Philosophy Committee; Chairman, Dept. of OT & Hebrew; Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Millikin, Jimmy A. Dir., Masters & Associates Programs; Chairman, Dept. of Theology; Acting Chairman, Dept. of Church History; Prof. of Theology. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Mitchell, Eric Alan Assistant Prof. of Biblical Backgrounds & Archaeology. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Mitchell, Michael J. VP of Mitchell Oil Company, Fort Payne, Alabama

Mohler, R. Albert, Jr. President; Prof. of Christian Theology. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Mooney, D. Jeffrey Doctoral candidate. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Moore, Russell D. Assistant Prof. of Christian Theology; Exec. Dir., Carl F. H. Henry Institute for Evangelical Engagement. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Morgan, Barry Prof. of NT & Greek. Hannibal-LaGrange College, Hannibal, Missouri

Morris, Leon† Former Principal. Ridley College, Melbourne, Australia

Morris, Wilda W. Adjunct Faculty Member. Garrett Evangelical Theological Seminary, Evanston, Illinois

Mosley, Harold R. Associate Prof. of OT & Hebrew. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Mott, Stephen Charles Pastor, Cochesett United Methodist Church, West Bridgewater, Massachusetts

Moyer, James C. Dept. Head of Religious Studies. Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield, Missouri

Murrell, Rich Network Specialist, Church Resources Division. Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Music, David W. Prof. of Church Music, School of Music. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Nelson, David P. Assistant Prof. of Systematic Theology. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Newell, James Pastor, First Baptist Church, Jasper, Alabama

Newman, Carey C. Academic Book Editor, Westminster/John Knox Press, Louisville, Kentucky

Ngan, Lai Ling Elizabeth Associate Prof. of Christian Scriptures, OT & Hebrews, Truett Theological Seminary. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Norman, Robert Stanton Associate Prof. of Theology, occupying the McFarland Chair of Theology. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

O'Brien, J. Randall Chair & Prof. of Religion Dept. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Omanson, Roger L. American Bible Society, New York, New York

Orrick, Jim Scott Prof. of Literature & Culture, Boyce College. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Ortiz, Steven Assistant Prof. of Archaeology. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Osborne, Grant R. Prof. of NT. Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois

Overstreet, Mark M. Adjunct Prof. of Preaching, Boyce College. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Owens, J. J. † Former Sr. Prof. of OT & Hebrew. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Palmer, Clark Intentional interim pastor/ Freelance writer, Pineville, Louisiana

Parker, W. Dan Dir. of Undergraduate Extension Center System; Associate Prof. of Pastoral Ministry, North Georgia Campus. Leavell College, New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Parkman, Joel*

Parks, D.Mark Adjunct Prof. of Religion. Dallas Baptist University, Dallas, Texas

Parsons, Mikeal C. Associate Prof. of Religion. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Patterson, Dorothy Prof. of Women's Studies. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Patterson, L. Paige President; Sr. Prof. of Theology. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Pearce, T. Preston Theological Consultant, International Mission Board, Richmond, Virginia

Plummer, Robert L. Assistant Prof. of NT Interpretation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Polhill, John B. James Buchanan Harrison Prof. of NT Interpretation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Potts, Donald R. Retired, Chairman of the Religion Dept. East Texas Baptist University, Marshall, Texas

Poulton, Gary President Emeritus & Prof. of History. Virginia Intermont College, Bristol, Virginia

Powell, Paul Dean, Truett Theological Seminary. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Price, Nelson Pastor Emeritus, Roswell Street Baptist Church, Marietta, Georgia

Prince, Robert William, III Vernon, Texas

Quarles, Charles L. Associate Prof. of NT & Greek. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Queen-Sutherland, Kandy Prof. of Religious Studies. Stetson University, DeLand, Florida

Rainey, Joel Church Starter Strategist, North American Mission Board. Southern Baptist Convention, Richmond, Virginia

Ray, Charles A., Jr. Associate Dean of Research Doctoral Programs; Prof. of NT & Greek. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Reddish, Mitchell G. Prof. of Religious Studies. Stetson University, DeLand, Florida

Redditt, Paul L. Chair of Religion Dept.; Prof. of OT, NT, & Non-Western Traditions. Georgetown College, Georgetown, Kentucky

Reeves, Rodney Prof. of NT. Southwest Baptist University, Bolivar, Missouri

Register, R. Dean Pastor, Temple Baptist Church, Hattiesburg, Mississippi

Ridge, Donna R. Freelance writer, Kimberly, Wisconsin

Robbins, Ray Frank Prof. Emeritus of NT & Greek. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, St. Joseph, Louisiana

Robertson, Paul E. New Orleans, Louisiana

Robinson, Darrell W. President, Total Church Life Ministries, Inc. & Minister of Evangelism. Roswell Street Baptist Church, Marietta, Georgia

Rogers, Max † Former Prof. of OT. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Rooker, Mark Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Ruffle, John University of Durham, Durham, England

Russell, Jeremiah H. Doctoral student. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Sandlin, Bryce Levelland, Texas

Saul, D. Glenn VP for Academic Services & Graduate Studies. Wayland Baptist University, Plainview, Texas

Sawyer, W. Thomas Prof. Emeritus of NT & Greek. Mars Hill College, Mars Hill, North Carolina

Scalise, Pamela J. Associate Prof. of OT. Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena, California

Schemm, Peter R., Jr. Assistant Prof. of Theology. Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, Wake Forest, North Carolina

Schreiner, Thomas R. Prof. of NT Interpretation; Editor, The Southern Baptist Journal of Theology. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Schweer, G. William Sr. Prof. of Evangelism. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Sexton, James Cordele, Georgia

Shackleford, David G. Prof. of NT & Greek. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Sheffield, Bob Pastoral Ministries. Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Simmons, Billy E. Prof. Emeritus of NT & Greek. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, Gulfport, Mississippi

Skinner, Craig Former Prof. of Preaching. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Sloan, Robert B., Jr. President, CEO, & Prof. of Religion. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Smith, A. J. Doctoral candidate. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Smith, Billy K.† Former Academic Dean & Prof. Emeritus of OT & Greek. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Smith, Fred Theology Student Advisor & Adjunct Teacher of Philosophy of Religion. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary/Adjunct Prof. of Philosophy of Religion, The Criswell College, Dallas, Texas

Smith, Gary V. Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, Missouri

Smith, Marsha A. Ellis Associate VP for Institutional Research. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Smith, Ralph L. Retired, Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Smothers, Thomas Retired, Prof. of OT & Hebrew. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Snider, P. Joel Pastor, First Baptist Church, Rome, Georgia

Songer, Harold S. Retired, Prof. of NT. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Spradlin, Michael R. President; Chairman of Dept. of Evangelism; Prof. of OT & Hebrew, Evangelism, Practical Theology, & Church History. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Stabnow, David K. Bible Translation Editor. Broadman & Holman Publishers, Nashville, Tennessee

Stagg, Robert Prof. Emeritus of Bible. Ouachita Baptist University, Arkadelphia, Arkansas

Stein, Robert H. Mildred and Ernest Hogan Prof. of NT Interpretation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Stephens, Shirley Freelance writer/editor, Nashville, Tennessee

Stevens, Gerald L. Prof. of NT & Greek. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Stewart, Don H. Prof. of NT & Greek. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Stewart, Robert B. Assistant Prof. of Philosophy & Theology. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Stinson, Randy Exec. Dir., Council on Biblical Manhood & Womanhood, Louisville, Kentucky

Strange, James F. Prof. of Religious Studies & Dir. of Graduate Studies. University of South Florida, Tampa, Florida

Street, Robert Anderson, Jr. Prof. of OT. Campbellsville University, Campbellsville, Kentucky

Strong, L. Thomas III Dean, Leavell College; Associate Prof. of NT & Greek, Leavell College. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Summers, Ray † Former Prof. of NT & Greek. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Sutherland, Dixon*

Swanson, Phillip J. Pastor, Colts Neck Baptist Church, Colts Neck, New Jersey

Talbert, Charles H. Distinguished Prof. of Religion. Baylor University, Waco, Texas

Tan, Randall K. J. Doctoral candidate. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Tang, Samuel Yau-Chi Sr. Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Golden Gate Baptist Theological Seminary, Mill Valley, California

Tankersley, Bruce Prof. of Religion. East Texas Baptist University, Marshall, Texas

Taulman, James Assistant to the Exec. Dir., Baptist History & Heritage Society, rentwood, Tennessee

Thompson, J. William Retired, Sr. Design Editor. Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Tobias, Hugh*

Trammell, Timothy Associate Dean, Mary Crowley College of Christian Faith. Dallas Baptist University, Dallas, Texas

Travis, James L. Prof. Emeritus. Blue Mountain College, Blue Mountain, Mississippi

Traylor, John H., Jr. Retired pastor. Monroe, Louisiana

Tulloch, John H. Prof. Emeritus of OT & Hebrew. Belmont University, Nashville, Tennessee

Turnham, Tim Pastor, Luther Rice Memorial Baptist Church, Silver Spring, Maryland

Van Leeuwen, Raymond C. Prof. of Biblical Studies. Calvin Theological Seminary, Grand Rapids, Michigan

Vermillion, William H.*

Vickers, Bryan J. Associate Editor, The Southern Baptist Journal of Theology; Doctoral candidate, The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Wade, Charles R. Exec. Dir., Baptist General Convention of Texas, Dallas, Texas

Walker, Douglas C. Sr. VP for Institutional Relations. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Walker, Larry Retired, Prof. of OT & Hebrew. Mid-America Baptist Theological Seminary, Germantown, Tennessee

Warren, William F., Jr. Dir., Center for NT Textual Studies; Coordinator, Baptist College Partnership Program; Prof. of NT & Greek. New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary, New Orleans, Louisiana

Wellum, Stephen J. Associate Prof. of Christian Theology. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

White, James Dir., Alpha & Omega Ministries, Phoenix, Arizona

Wilbanks, Pete Assistant Prof. of Christian Studies. North Greenville College, Tigerville, South Carolina

Wilder, Terry Prof. of NT & Greek. Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, Missouri

Wilson, Douglas K., Jr. Pastor, First Baptist Church, Orchard Park, New York

Wilson, Kimberly P. Orchard Park, New York

Wolf, Christian*

Wooldridge, Judith Sr. Product Development Specialist, Lifeway Church Resources. Lifeway Christian Resources, Nashville, Tennessee

Wright, G. Al, Jr. Pastor, First Baptist Church, Waynesboro, Georgia

Wright, Paul H. Dir. of Jerusalem University College, Coordinator of Academic Programs; Biblical History & Geography. Jerusalem University College, Jerusalem, Israel

Wyrick, Stephen Von Prof. of Religion. University of Mary Hardin Baylor, Belton, Texas

Yamauchi, Edwin Prof. of History. Miami University, Oxford, Ohio

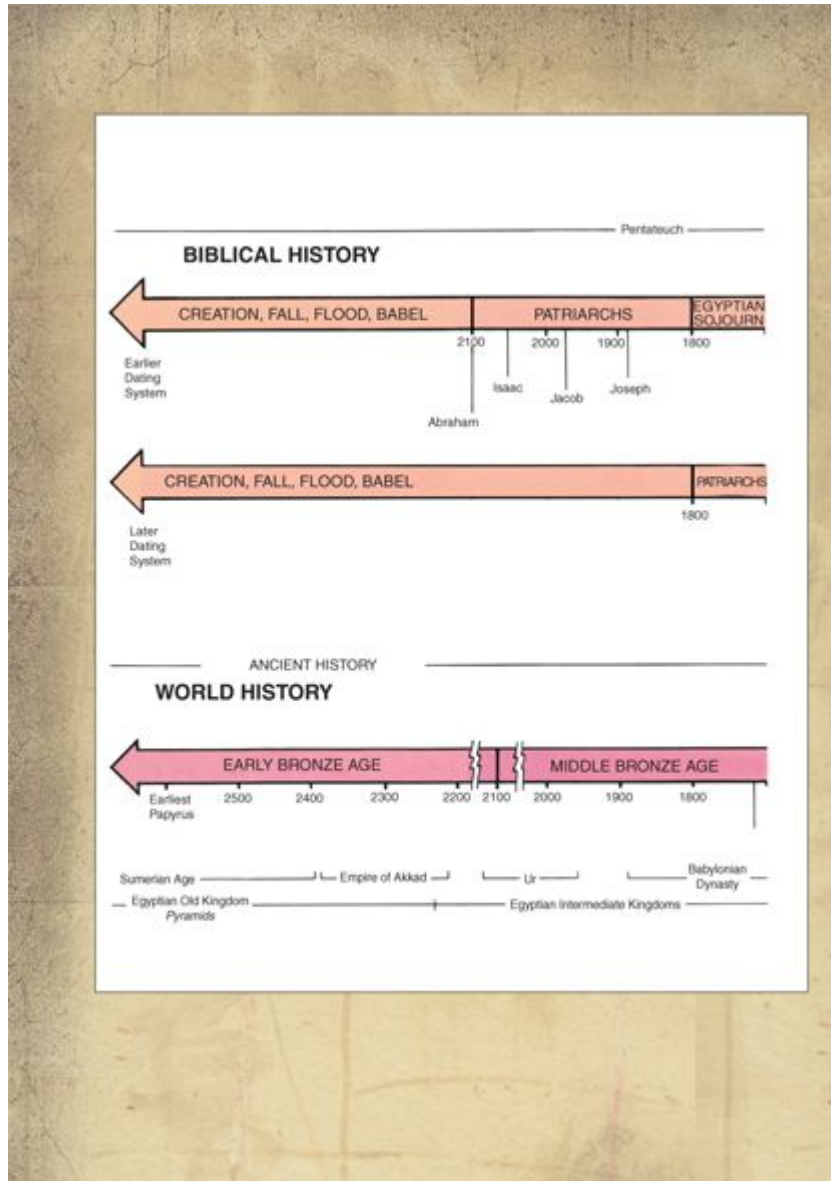

Yarnell, Malcolm B., III Assistant Dean for Theological Studies; Associate Prof. of Theology. Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

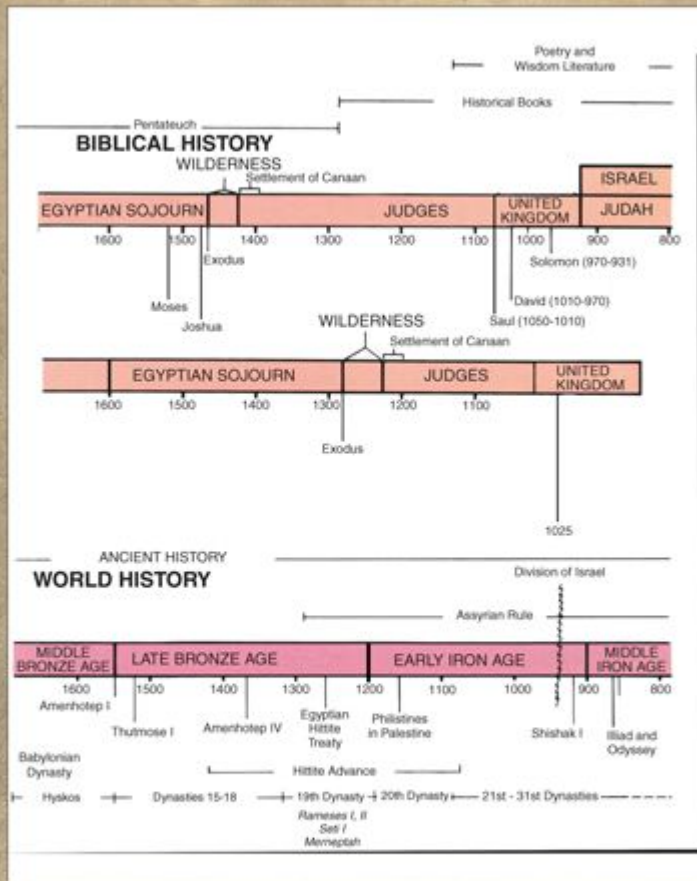

York, Hershael W. Lester Prof. of Christian Preaching; Associate Dean of Ministry & Proclamation. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

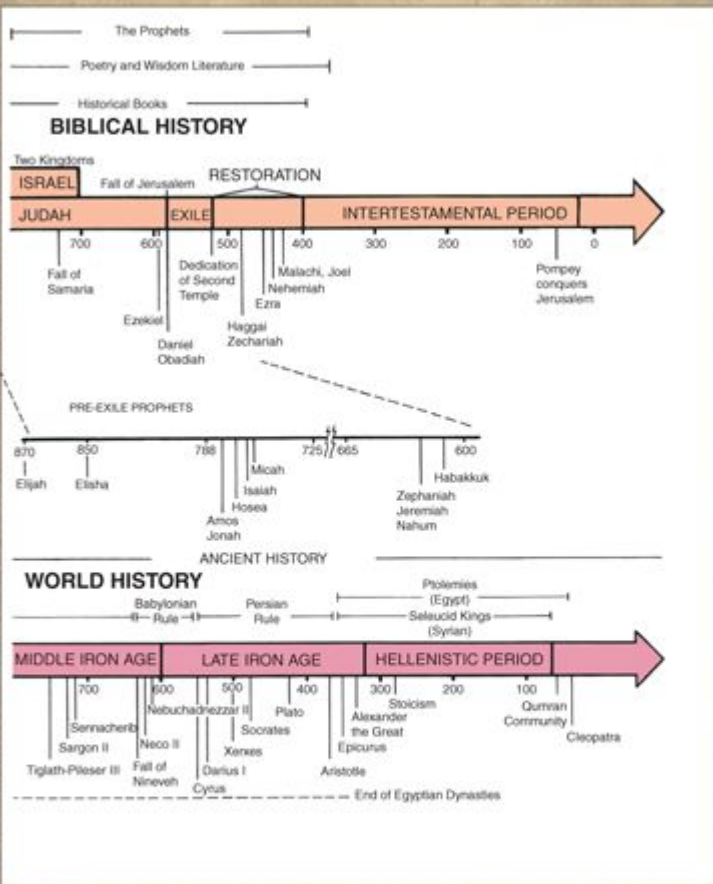

Youngblood, Kevin J. Doctoral candidate. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky

Zachariades, Doros Doctoral candidate. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary/Pastor, Woodstock Baptist Church, Somerset, Kentucky

Time Line

CHURCH HISTORY

EASTERN EVENTS

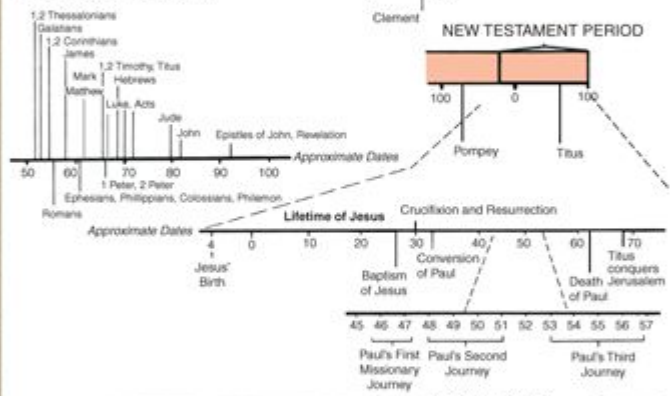

Events of Significance to East and West

WESTERN EVENTS

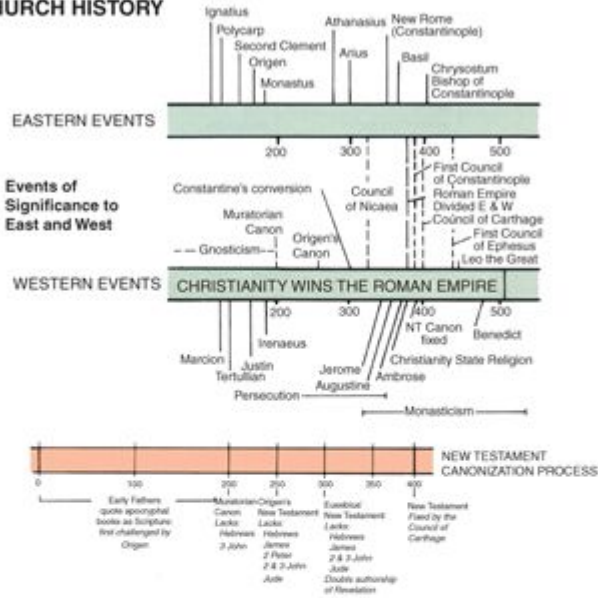

BIBLICAL HISTORY

WORLD HISTORY

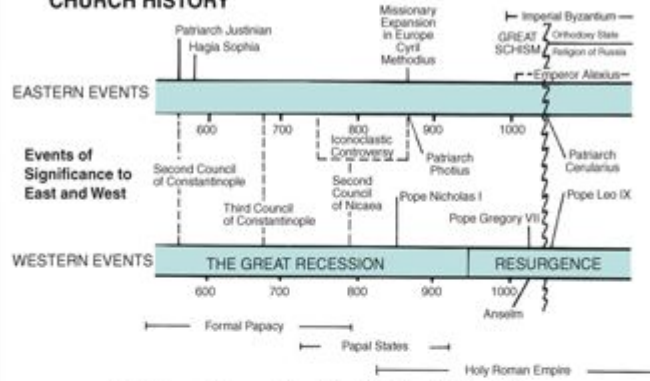

CHURCH HISTORY

WORLD HISTORY

CHURCH HISTORY

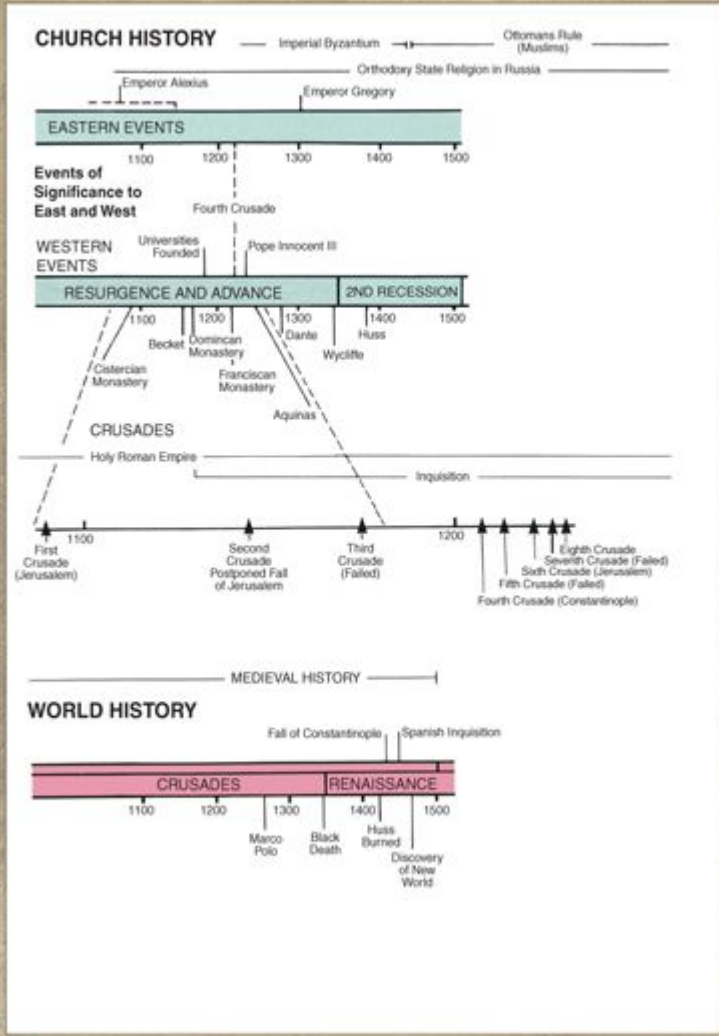

Doctrines Addressed by the Early Church Councils

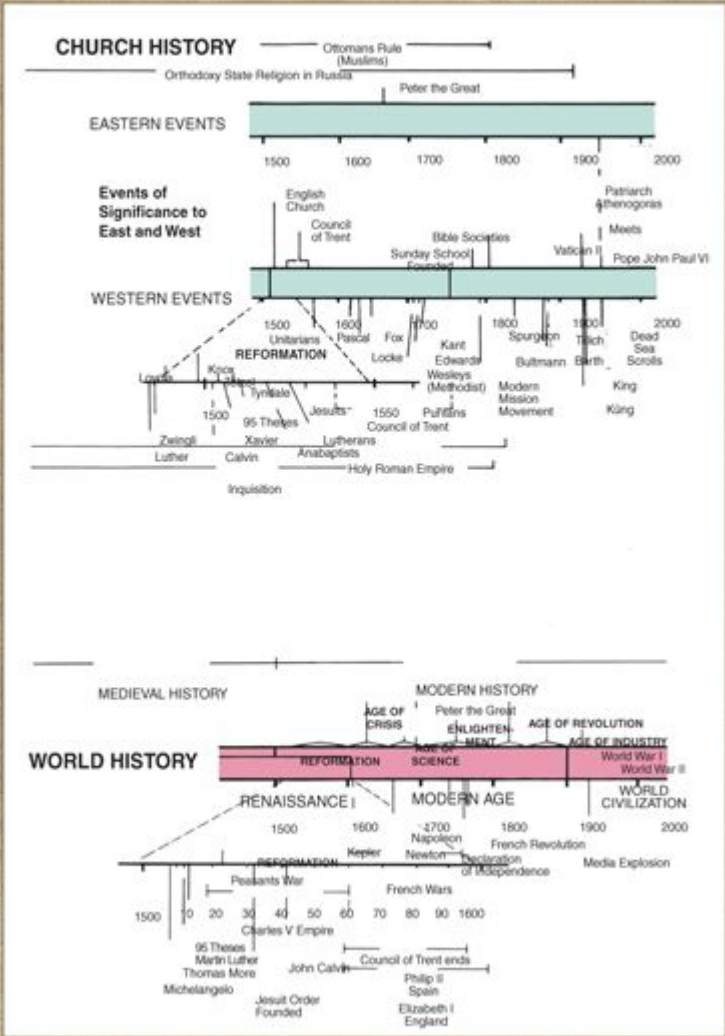

MEDIEVAL HISTORY

WORLD HISTORY

AARON (Ār' on) Moses' brother; Israel's first high priest. His parents Amram and Jochebed were from the tribe of Levi, Israel's tribe of priests (Exod. 6:16-26). Miriam was his sister. With his wife Elisheba, Aaron had four sons: Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. The first two perished when they offered sacrifices with fire that God had not commanded them to make (Lev. 10:1-2; 16:1-2). Two priestly lines developed from the remaining sons: Ithamar through Eli to Abiathar and Eleazar to Zadok (1 Sam. 14:3; 22:20; 1 Kings 2:26-27; 1 Chron. 6:50-53).

Aaron experienced the joy of starting Israel's formal priesthood, being consecrated to the office (Exod. 28-29; Lev. 8-9), wearing the first priestly garments, and initiating the sacrificial system (Lev. 1-7). He also bore the burdens of his office as his sons were killed for their disobedience (Lev. 10:1-2), and he could not mourn for them (Lev. 10:6-7). He also bore the special rules of conduct, clothing, and ritual cleanness (Lev. 21-22).

He could not live up to such high standards perfectly. Thus he had to offer sacrifices for his own sins (Lev. 16:11). Then in his cleansed, holy office, he offered sacrifices for others. In his imperfection Aaron still served as a symbol or type of the perfect priest as seen in Ps. 110:4, where the future king was described as eternal priest. Zechariah 6:11-15 also speaks of a priest—Joshua—in typical terms. Thus the imperfect Aaron established an office full of symbolic meaning for Israel.

With all his faults Aaron was a man chosen by God. We do not know what Aaron did during Moses' 40-year exile from Egypt, but he maintained the faith, kept contact with Israel's leaders, and did not forget his brother (Exod. 4:27-31). Ready of speech, he served nobly as Moses' spokesman before Pharaoh. More than once he stretched out Moses' staff to bring God's plagues on the land (Exod. 7:9,19). In the wilderness Aaron and Hur helped Moses hold up the staff, the symbol of God's power, so that Israel would prevail over Amalek (Exod. 17:12).

At Sinai Aaron and his two older sons, Nadab and Abihu, were called to go up the mountain with Moses and 70 elders (Exod. 24:9). There they worshiped and ate and drank in heavenly fellowship. As Moses and Joshua went farther up, Moses left Aaron and Hur in charge (Exod. 24:14). When Moses delayed on the mountain, the people asked Aaron for action. They cried, “Make gods for us” (Exod. 32:1 NRSV). Their sin was polytheism (worship of many gods) as well as idolatry. Aaron all too easily obliged and made a calf and apparently led in its worship.

On another occasion Aaron appeared in a bad light. In Num. 12 he and Miriam spoke against Moses' marriage to the Cushite (Ethiopian) woman. (Cush was an old name for Upper Egypt—approximately modern Sudan.) The relationship of the Cushite woman to Zipporah is not clear. Numerous explanations have been offered. Some believe Zipporah had died. Others maintain Moses' relationship with her was severed when he sent her away (Exod. 18:2). Possibly both Zipporah and the Cushite woman may have been Moses' wives at the same time. Some have even suggested that Zipporah was the Cushite woman. Even though Zipporah was a Midianite, at least one side of her family may have been from Cush. Anyway, Aaron and Miriam were jealous of their younger brother. In reality, their murmuring was against God (Num. 12).

Though Miriam was severely judged, Aaron was not, perhaps because he was not the instigator but the accomplice. He confessed his sin and pleaded for mercy for Miriam. When Korah, Dathan, and Abiram opposed Moses and Aaron, Aaron's intercession stopped the plague (Num. 16). God vindicated Aaron's leadership in the miraculous blossoming of his staff (Num. 17). When the people cried for water at Kadesh in the desert of Zin, Aaron joined in Moses' sin as they seized the power of the Lord for themselves (Num. 20:7-13). In consequence, Aaron, like Moses, was not to enter the promised land. Nearby on the border of Edom after 40 years of his priesthood, Moses took Aaron up Mount Hor and transferred his garments to his son, Eleazar. Aaron died there at the age of 123 years (Num. 20:23-28). Israel mourned for their first high priest 30 days (Num. 20:29), as they soon would mourn for Moses (Deut. 34:8). R. Laird Harris

AARONITE [Ár' on it] Term used only in the KJV to translate the name Aaron where it refers to the descendants of Aaron (1 Chron. 12:27; 27:17).

Equivalent to the phrases “sons of Aaron,” “descendants of Aaron,” and “house of Aaron” used often in the OT.

AARON'S ROD Aaron used a rod to demonstrate to the Pharaoh that the God of the Hebrews was Lord. It became a snake when cast down (Exod. 7:8-13) and brought about the first three plagues (Exod. 7:19-20; 8:5-7,16-19). This rod was the same one used to strike the rocks at Horeb and Kadesh to bring forth water (Exod. 17:1-7; Num. 20:7-11).

The rebellion of Korah (Num. 16:1-50) made it necessary to determine who would be eligible to come before God in the tabernacle as priests. The head of each tribe was to inscribe his name on an almond rod representing his tribe, and each rod was placed in the tabernacle. The next morning Aaron's rod had blossomed and bore almonds. This was taken as a sign from God that the house of Aaron had the right to serve Him in the tabernacle. The rod was placed inside the tabernacle (Num. 17:1-11). According to Heb. 9:4, the rod was kept in the ark of the covenant. See Korah.

AB Name for the fifth month in the Jewish religious calendar corresponding to the eleventh month in the Hebrew civic calendar. It usually covered parts of July and August. The name does not appear in the Bible.

ABADDON [Ā ·bād' dōn] Name meaning “to perish.” In the KJV Abaddon appears only in Rev. 9:11 as the Hebrew name of the angel of the bottomless pit whose Greek name was Apollyon. Abaddon occurs six times in the Hebrew Bible (Job 26:6; 28:22; 31:12; Prov. 15:11; 27:20; Ps. 88:11). The KJV and NIV translate Abaddon as “destruction,” while the NASB and RSV retain the word “Abaddon.” See Hell.

ABAGTHA [Ā bāg' thā] One of seven eunuchs on the staff of Ahasuerus or Xerxes (486-465 B.C.), King of Persia (Esther 1:10). See Eunuch.

ABANA [Āb' ā-nā] or ABANAH (NASB) River in Damascus in Syria. In his anger Naaman wanted to wash here rather than in the dirty Jordan (2 Kings 5:12). Many Hebrew manuscripts, the Septuagint, and Targums call the river the Amana (Song 4:8). Its modern name is Barada, and it travels swiftly from snow-capped Mount Hermon through Damascus to end in a marsh.

ABARIM [Āb ā-rim] Mountain range including Mount Nebo from which Moses viewed the promised land (Num. 27:12; 33:47-48; Deut. 32:49). The mountain range is in Moab, east of the Dead Sea, west of Heshbon, and slightly southeast of Jericho. Jeremiah called Jerusalem to cross to Abarim and lament because her allies had been defeated (Jer. 22:20). Iye-abarim (Num. 21:11; 33:44) was a different location perhaps south of the Dead Sea. See Iye-abarim.

The Abana River (modern Barad River) flows through the country of Syria.

ABASE Word applies to lowering one's office, rank, or esteem. See Humility; Meekness.

ABBA [Āb' bā] Aramaic word for “father” used by Jesus to speak of His own intimate relationship with God, a relationship that others can enter through faith. It may also refer to an ancestor, grandfather, founder (of something), protector, or even used as an honorary title for an elder.

Old Testament Although abba does not occur in the OT, its Hebrew associate ab occurs frequently. Ab usually refers to a human father. On occasion the OT speaks of God in the role of Father to Israel (Exod. 4:22; Deut. 32:6; Isa. 45:9-11; Mal. 2:10) or to Israel's king (2 Sam. 7:14; Pss. 2:7; 89:26-27).

New Testament The idea of God's intimate relationship to humanity is a distinct feature of Jesus' teaching. God relates to believers as a father relates to his child. Some would translate Abba as “Daddy” to convey the close, personal meaning of the word. Even when “Father” in the NT translates the more formal Greek word pater, the idea of Abba is certainly in the background. Jesus addressed God as Abba in prayer (Mark 14:36) and taught His disciples to pray in the same terms (Luke 11:1-2, pater). Jesus' claim of intimate relationship with God offended many of His opponents because they considered Abba to be overly familiar in addressing God. Nevertheless, Jesus' usage established the pattern for the church's view of God and each believer's relationship with Him. Paul used Abba to describe God's adoption of believers as His children (Rom. 8:15) and the change in the believer's status with God that results (Gal. 4:6-7).

Michael Fink

ABDA [Āb' dā] Name meaning “servant” for two men. 1. Father of Adoniram, whom Solomon entrusted with his labor force (1 Kings 4:6). 2. Levite living in Jerusalem rather than in one of the Levitical cities (Neh. 11:17). He is also called Obadiah, the son of Shemaiah (1 Chron. 9:16).

ABDEEL [Āb' dā-ēl] Name meaning “servant of God.” Abdeel's son Shelemiah was one of three attendants whom Jehoiakim (609-597 B.C.) commanded to arrest Baruch, Jeremiah's scribe, and Jeremiah (Jer. 36:26). God hid His servants from the king's servants.

ABDI [Āb' dī] Name meaning “my servant,” though it is probably an abbreviation for “servant of the Lord.” 1. Levite whose grandson Ethan was one of the temple musicians David appointed (1 Chron. 6:44). 2. Levite whose son Kish followed King Hezekiah's wishes and helped cleanse the temple (2 Chron. 29:12). 3. Israelite with a foreign wife in the time of Ezra (Ezra 10:26).

ABDIEL [Āb' dī-ēl] Name meaning “servant of God.” His son Ahi was a leader in the tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:15).

ABDON [Āb' dōn] Geographical and personal name meaning “service” or “servile.” 1. City from the tribe of Asher given the Levites (Josh. 21:30; 1 Chron. 6:74). Its modern name is Khirbet Abdeh. It lies about three miles from the Mediterranean coast between Tyre and Acco. 2. Judge of Israel from the town of Pirathon in the tribe of Ephraim. He had a large family (40 sons, 30 grandsons) and personal wealth (70 donkeys) (Judg. 12:13-15). 3. Two men of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:23,30; 9:36). The second of these was an ancestor of King Saul. 4. Member of the team named by King Josiah to seek God's guidance as to the meaning of the book that Hilkiah, the priest, found in the temple (2 Chron. 34:20). Known in 2 Kings 22:12 as Achbor or Acbor(NJV).

ABEDNEGO [Ā-bēd' nā-gō] In Dan. 1:7 the Babylonian name given to Azariah, one of the three Hebrew youths who were conscripted along with Daniel to serve in the king's court. God delivered them from the fiery furnace (Dan. 2:48-3:30). The precise meaning of the Babylonian name Abednego is disputed. Abed means “servant.” Nego may be an intentional corruption of the well-known Babylonian deity Nebo (or Nabu). See Azariah; Daniel; Daniel, Book of; Meshach; Shadrach.

ABEL [Ā' bēl] Though best known as the name of the second son of Adam and Eve, the Hebrew word abel also occurs frequently meaning “vanity, breath, or vapor.” See Ecclesiastes, Book of.

Perhaps as a personal name, Abel alludes to the shortness of life. Such was the case with Abel (Gen. 4:8). Having offered “by faith...a better sacrifice than Cain” (Heb. 11:4 HCSB), he was murdered by Cain. Why Abel's sacrifice as a keeper of flocks was better than Cain's, whose sacrifice came from harvested fruits, is not directly stated in Gen. 4:4. No ancient evidence for that period yet exists to suggest that animal sacrifice was better than crops, fruits, or precious metals or gems. Two conditions in 4:7, fortunately, provide a partial answer: Cain had not done what was right; Abel had. However, how Abel did right is left unanswered by the historians, prophets, and sages of Israel. Heb. 11:4 offers one further reason: the faith of Abel. His faith relationship with the Lord led him to present a better sacrifice (the fat of the animals); to live as a better person, one who is righteous before God; and to testify eternally, even in death. Identified as the first righteous martyr among the prophets and the ones sent to Israel (Matt. 23:35; Luke 11:51), Abel's blood cried out for God's vengeance against the unrighteous (Gen. 4:10; Rev. 6:9-10). In contrast, the blood of Christ satisfied that cry for the vengeance of God against unrighteousness, accomplishing the forgiveness of sins and making possible the reconciliation of sinners to God. Abel's death, then, is a prototype of Christ's death (Heb. 12:24).

Archie W. England

ABEL [Ā' bēl] Place-name used alone and as the first part of other place-names as seen below. The Hebrew 'Abel is a distinct word with a different spelling from the personal name Abel (Hb. hebel). The precise meaning of the place-name is uncertain. It may mean "brook" or "meadow near a brook." Standing alone, Abel appears in 2 Sam. 20:14-18, probably being the same place as Abel-beth-maachah.

ABEL-BETH-MAACAH or ABEL-BETHMAACHAH (KJV, NKJV) [Ā' bēl-bēth mā' ā-kah] City with a strong Israelite tradition, known for its wise people. Joab besieged the city when Sheba fled there after seeking to lead a rebellion against David. A wise woman delivered the city by getting the citizens to execute Sheba (2 Sam. 20:1-22). Ben-hadad, king of Syria, answered the call for help of Asa, king of Judah (913-873 B.C.) and conquered Abel-beth-maachah from Baasha, king of Israel (1 Kings 15:20). Tiglathpileser, king of Assyria, captured the city from Pekah, king of Israel (2 Kings 15:29). Abel-bethmaachah is identified with the modern Abil el-Oamh, 12 miles north of Lake Huleh near Dan. Its name indicates it was once part of the citystate of Maachah controlled by Arameans (2 Sam. 10:6). See Abel.

ABEL-CHERAMIM [Ā' bēl-kēr' ā-mim] or ABEL-KERAMIM (NASB, NIV, RSV, TEV) Place-name meaning "brook of the vineyards." Jephthah, the judge, extended his victory over the Ammonites as far as Abel-cheramim (Judg. 11:33), whose location east of the Jordan is not known precisely.

ABEL-MAIM [Ā' bēl-mā' im] Place-name meaning “brook of the waters.” Used in 2 Chron. 16:4 for place called Abel-bethmaachah in 1 Kings 15:20. If Abel-maim is a different city, its precise location east of the Jordan is not known.

ABEL-MEHOLAH [Ā' bēl-mē-hō' lah] Place-name meaning “brook of the round dancing.” A border town or towns whose location(s) is uncertain. Gideon fought the Midianites in the territory of Issachar west of the Jordan (Judg. 7:22). Solomon places Abel-meholah in a district including Taanach, Megiddo, and Beth-shean (1 Kings 4:12). This was Elisha's home (1 Kings 19:16).

ABEL-MIZRAIM [Ā' bēl-mīz' rā' im] Place-name meaning either “brook of Egypt,” or, if derived from a different Hebrew word with similar spelling, “mourning of the Egyptians.” Jacob's children mourned him there east of the Jordan (Gen. 50:11). In giving the name, the Canaanites identified Jacob's sons as Egyptians.

ABEL-SHITTIM [Ā' bēl-shīt' ūm] Place-name meaning “brook of the acacias.” The last stop of Israel before crossing the Jordan (Num. 33:49). See Shittim.

ABEZ [Ā' bēz] or EBEZ (NASB, NIV, RSV, TEV) Place-name with unknown meaning. Town allotted to Issachar (Josh. 19:20).

ABI [Ā' bi] or ABIJAH (NIV) Personal name meaning “my father.” Mother of King Hezekiah (2 Kings 18:2). “Abi” was shortened from “Abijah.”

ABIA [Ā·bi' ā] (KJV, 1 Chron. 3:10; Matt. 1:7; Luke 1:5) See Abijah.

ABIAH [Ā·bi' āh] (KJV, 1 Sam. 8:2; 1 Chron. 2:24; 6:28; 7:8) See Abijah.

ABI-ALBON [Ā' bi-āl' bōn] Personal name meaning “my father is overpowering.” One of David's 30 heroes (2 Sam. 23:31). Called Abiel in 1 Chron. 11:32. Original name in 2 Samuel may have been Abi-baal, whose letters were then transposed to a new name to avoid the idolatrous name. See Abiel.

ABIASAPH [Ā-bī' ā-sāph] Personal name meaning “my father has gathered” or “harvested.” A Levitical priest in the line of Korah (Exod. 6:24) who rebelled against the leadership of Moses (Num. 16). See Ebiasaph.

ABIATHAR [Ā-bī' ā-thār] Personal name meaning “father of abundance.” The son of Ahimelech and the 11th high priest in succession from Aaron through the line of Eli. He survived the slaughter of the priests at Nob and fled to David, hiding in the cave of Adullam from King Saul (1 Sam. 22). Having escaped with the ephod, Abiathar became the high priest and chief counselor for David (1 Sam. 23:6-12; 30:7). Abiathar shared with Zadok the responsibility of taking the ark to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:11-12; 2 Sam. 15:24). While Abiathar remained faithful to David during Absalom's rebellion (2 Sam. 15), he later supported Adonijah as successor of King David instead of Solomon (1 Kings 1:7). Solomon deposed him from the priesthood and banished him to Anathoth, his hometown, fulfilling the prophecy to Eli. Only because of his faithful service to Solomon's father, King David, was he spared the death penalty (1 Kings 2:26-35).

Mark 2:26 records Jesus' statement that David took the showbread from the place of worship when Abiathar was high priest at Nob. First Samuel 21:1 reports that this happened when Ahimelech, the father of Abiathar, was still the high priest. However, a few days after this incident Abiathar did become high priest (1 Sam. 22:19-20). Some NT Greek manuscripts omit “when Abiathar was high priest.” It may be that Abiathar was co-priest with his father, or a copyist of the Gospel of Mark may have copied the text wrong. See Levites; Priests.

Donald R. Potts

ABIB [Ā' bīb] Month of the exodus deliverance from Egypt (Exod. 13:4) and thus of the Passover festival (Exod. 23:15; 34:18; Deut. 16:1). A harvest month covering parts of March and April, Abib means “ears of grain.” Later the month was called Nisan (Esther 3:7). See Calendar.

ABIDA or ABIDAH [Ā-bī' dā] Personal name meaning “my father knows.” As the fourth son of Midian, he was the grandson of Abraham by his wife Keturah (Gen. 25:4; 1 Chron. 1:33).

ABIDAN [Āb' ī-dān] Personal name meaning “my father judged.” Early leader of the tribe of Benjamin who helped Moses and Aaron number the people in the wilderness (Num. 1:11) and captain of the tribe in the wilderness marches (Num. 2:22; 7:60-65; 10:24). He and his family had fallen from leadership by the time of the 12 spies (Num. 13:9), long before the reorganization for entry into Canaan (Num. 26).

ABIEL [Ā-bī' ēl] Personal name meaning “my Father is God.” 1. Grandfather of King Saul (1 Sam. 9:1) or at least closely related to him (1 Sam. 14:50-51), the meaning of the texts not being absolutely clear. See Jehiel. 2. One of David's mighty men (1 Chron. 11:32); known also as Abi-alban (2 Sam. 23:31), the Arbathite. See Abi-albon.

ABIEZER [Ā' bī-ē' zēr] Personal and place-name meaning “my Father is help.” 1. Descendant of Manasseh (his father was Gilead, son of Machir) and grandson of Joseph (Josh. 17:2; 1 Chron. 7:18). 2. Territory belonging to clan of Abiezer of tribe of Manasseh located in southwest part of Manasseh's territory and including towns of Elmattan, Ophrah, and Tetel. The territory was famous for grape production (Judg. 8:2) and was home of the judge Gideon (Judg. 6:11,24,34; 8:32). 3. Member of David's 30 heroes (2 Sam. 23:27; 1 Chron. 11:28) and an administrator of David's forces in the ninth month (1 Chron. 27:12). See jeezer.

ABIEZRITE [Ā' bī-ēz' rīt] Descendants of Abiezer (Judg. 6:11,24; 8:32). See Abiezer.

ABIGAIL [Āb' ī-gāl] Personal name meaning “my father rejoiced.” 1. Wife of David after being wife of Nabal. She was praised for wisdom in contrast to Nabal, her arrogant and overbearing husband, who was a large landowner and successful shepherd. Nabal held a feast for his sheepshearers while David was hiding from Saul in the wilderness of Paran. David and his 600 men were camped near the town of Maon. He heard about Nabal's feast and requested some food. Nabal, in a drunken state, refused the request and insulted David's 10 messengers. In anger David determined to kill Nabal's entire household. Abigail anticipated David's reaction and loaded a convoy of donkeys with food to feed all of David's men. As soon as she met David, she impressed him with her beauty, humility, praise, and advice (1 Sam. 25:32-35). After Nabal became sober and heard about David's plans to kill him, he had a heart attack. Following Nabal's death, David married Abigail, the second of his eight wives. They lived first at Gath and then at Hebron, where Abigail gave birth to Chileab, who is also called Daniel. Later Abigail was taken captive by the Amalekites when they captured Ziklag, but David rescued her (1 Sam. 30:1-18). 2. Sister of David and the mother of Amasa (1 Chron. 2:16-17), married to Jether, an Ishmaelite (also called Ithra). Amasa, her son, was at one time the commander of David's army (2 Sam. 17:25). Abigail was the daughter of Nahash who, because of textual uncertainties, has been described as another name for Jesse. See David.

Donald R. Potts

ABIHAIL [Āb' i-hāil] Personal name meaning “my father is a terror.” 1. Woman in family list of Judah (1 Chron. 2:29), wife of Abishur. 2. Wife of King Rehoboam (2 Chron. 11:18). Personal name with different Hebrew spelling meaning “my father is powerful.” 3. Father of Zuriel, a leading Levite under Moses (Num. 3:35). 4. Father of Esther and uncle of Mordecai (Esther 2:15). 5. Member of the tribe of Gad (1 Chron.5:14).

ABIHU [Ā-bi' hū] Personal name meaning “my father is he.” The second son of Aaron; one of Israel's first priests (Exod. 6:23; 28:1). He saw God along with Moses, Aaron, his brother, and 70 elders (Exod. 24:9-10). He and his brother Nadab offered “strange fire” before God (Lev. 10:1-20). The exact nature of their sin is not known. They simply did what God had not commanded. Perhaps they offered sacrifice at the wrong time or with coals or materials not properly sanctified (cp. Lev. 16:12). The result is clear: God's fire consumed them. See Priests.

ABIHUD [Ā-bi' hūd] Personal name meaning “my father is glorious.” Grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron.8:3).

ABIJAH [Ā-bī' jāh] or ABIJAM Personal name meaning "Yahweh is my Father." 1. Second son of Samuel whose crooked acts as judge led Israel to demand a king (1 Sam. 8:2-5). 2. Son of Jeroboam, first king of the Northern Kingdom Israel. Abijah died according to prophecy of Ahijah (1 Kings 14:1-18). 3. Son of Rehoboam and second king of divided Southern Kingdom of Judah (915-913 B.C.), called Abijam in 1 Kings 15, a name meaning "my father is Yam" (or sea), possibly a reference to Canaanite god. Abijah was his father's favorite son (2 Chron. 11:22). Abijah followed the sins of Rehoboam (1 Kings 15:3) but still maintained proper worship in Jerusalem (2 Chron. 13:10), and God gave him victory over Jeroboam of Israel (2 Chron. 13:15-20). Abijah was remembered for his large family (2 Chron. 13:21). He is listed in the ancestors of Jesus (Matt. 1:7). 4. Wife of Hezron connected with genealogy of Caleb in a text whose meaning is not clear (1 Chron. 2:24). 5. Grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:8). 6. Priestly descendant of Aaron (1 Chron. 24:10). He led the eighth (of 24) division of the priests serving in the temple. 7. Priest under Nehemiah who signed a covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:7). 8. A leading priest in the days of the return from exile (Neh. 12:4), and then a priestly line (Neh. 12:17) to which Zechariah, father of John the Baptist, belonged (Luke 1:5). 9. Mother of King Hezekiah (2 Chron. 29:1) and thus a powerful political influence.

ABILENE [Ā-bī-le' nē] Small mountainous region ruled by the tetrarch Lysanias at the time that John the Baptist began his public ministry (Luke 3:1-3). Abilene was located about 18 miles northwest of Damascus in the Anti-Lebanon mountain range. Its capital was Abila. In A.D. 37 Abilene came under the administrative control of Herod Agrippa I. Later it was part of the kingdom of his son, Agrippa II.

ABIMAEL [Ā-bīm' ā-el] Personal name meaning "El (God) is my father." Ancestor of the Israelites as a descendant of Shem and Eber (Gen. 10:28).

ABIMELECH [Ā-bīm' ē-lek] Personal name meaning "My father is king." 1. King of Gerar, who took Sarah for himself, thinking she was Abraham's sister rather than his wife (Gen. 20). He restored her to Abraham after a nighttime dream of God. 2. Probably the same as 1., a king who disputed the ownership of a well at Beer-sheba with Abraham and then made a covenant of peace with him (Gen. 21:22-34). 3. King of Philistines at Gerar related to or identical with 1. Isaac lived under his protection and fearfully passed Rebekah, his wife, off as his sister. Abimelech scolded Isaac and warned his people not to touch Rebekah. A dispute over water wells led to Isaac's leaving but finally to a treaty of peace (Gen. 26) at Beer-sheba. 4. Son of Gideon, the judge of Israel (Judg. 8:31). Abimelech seized power after his father's death by murdering his brothers and having himself named king by his relatives at Shechem. This provoked Jotham's famous fable (Judg. 9:7-21). God provoked Shechem against Abimelech, who defeated an army under Gaal and then recaptured Shechem. When he tried to repeat his tactics against Thebez, a woman threw a stone down on his head and killed him (Judg. 9:23-57). Abimelech's fate served as an illustration Joab used to protect himself from David (2 Sam. 11:21). 5. Priest under David with Zadok (1 Chron. 18:16), but correct reading of text here is probably Ahimelech as in 2 Sam. 8:17. 6. Person mentioned in title of Ps. 34, which apparently refers to 1 Sam. 21:10-15, where Achish is David's opponent. Abimelech may have been an official title for Philistine kings.

ABINADAB [Ā-bīn' a dāb] Personal name meaning "my father is generous." 1. Resident of Kiriath-jearim whose house was the resting place of the ark of the covenant for 20 years after the Philistines returned it. His son Eleazar served as priest (1 Sam. 7:1-2). Abinadab's other sons Uzzah and Ahio led the cart on which the ark of God was being carried from Kiriath-jearim to the city of David (2 Sam. 6:3-4). 2. Son of Jesse passed over when David was selected as king (1 Sam. 16:8; 17:13). 3. Son of King Saul killed by Philistines in battle of Mount Gilboa (1 Sam. 31:2). 4. Solomon's son-in-law and official over Dor, the Mediterranean seaport below Mount Carmel, was the son of Abinadab or Ben-abinadab (1 Kings 4:11).

ABINOAM [Ā-bīn' ō-ām] Personal name meaning "my father is gracious." Father of Barak, army commander with Deborah (Judg. 4-5).

ABIRAM [Ā-bī' rām] Personal name meaning "my father is exalted." 1. Leader of rebellion against Moses and Aaron, seeking priestly authority. He died when God caused the earth to open and swallow the rebels (Num. 16; 26:9-11). 2. Son of Hiel sacrificed in foundation of rebuilt Jericho, fulfilling Joshua's warning (1 Kings 16:34).

ABISHAG [Āb' 1-shāg] Personal name meaning “my father strayed” or “is a wanderer.” A young virgin or “maiden” (RSV) brought to David's bed in his last days to keep him warm (1 Kings 1:1-4). They had no sexual relations, but Solomon considered her David's wife when his brother Adonijah asked to marry her after David's death (1 Kings 2:17). Solomon interpreted the request as a step toward becoming king and had Adonijah executed (1 Kings 2:23-25). Abishag was from Shunem, a city guarding the Jezreel Valley.

ABISHAI [Āb' 1-shā-i] Personal name meaning “father exists.” Son of David's sister Zeruah and brother of Joab, David's general (1 Sam 26:6; 1 Chron. 2:15-16). He was with David when he spared Abner (1 Sam. 26:7) and with Joab pursuing Abner (2 Sam. 2:24) and killing Abner (2 Sam. 3:30). He commanded troops against Ammon (2 Sam. 10). He sought to kill Shimei for cursing David, but the king restrained him (2 Sam. 16; 19:21). He led a third of David's troops against David's son Absalom (2 Sam. 18). He commanded forces against Sheba, who led a northern rebellion against David (2 Sam. 20). He killed Isbi-benob, the Philistine giant who threatened David (2 Sam. 21:15-17). A mighty captain, he was still not among David's elite three (2 Sam. 23:18-19). He was famed for killing 18,000 Edomites (1 Chron. 18:12).

ABISHALOM [Āb' 1-shā-lōm] Personal name meaning “my father is peace.” Another spelling for Absalom (1 Kings 15:2,10). See Absalom.

ABISHUA [Ā-bīsh' ū-ā] Personal name meaning “my father is salvation.” 1. Levite, the great-grandson of Aaron (1 Chron. 6:4). 2. A Benjaminite (1 Chron. 8:4; cp. 1 Chron. 7:7).

ABISHUR [Ā-bī' shūr] Personal name meaning “my father is a wall.” A descendant of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:28-29).

ABITAL [Ā-bī' tāl] Personal name meaning “my father is dew.” Wife of David (2 Sam. 3:4).

ABITUB [Ā-bī' ūb] Personal name meaning “my father is good.” A Benjaminite from Moab (1 Chron. 8:11).

ABIUD [A-bī' ūd] Greek spelling of Abihud, ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1:13). See Abihud.

ABLUTIONS Ceremonial washings with water to make oneself pure before worship. The practice of ablutions is one background for NT baptism. The Hebrew term rachats is the everyday word for washing with water, rinsing, or bathing (Gen. 18:4; Exod. 2:5; Ruth 3:3). The Greek word louein is similar (Acts 9:37; 16:33; 2 Pet. 2:22).

Old Testament Ablutions were performed for cleansing from the impurity of an inferior or undesirable condition to prepare the person for initiation into a higher, more desirable condition. Aaron and his sons were washed before they were clothed with the priestly robes and anointed with oil (Exod. 29:4; 30:19-21; Lev. 8:6). Such washings prepared people to participate in special acts of religious service.

When a person became unclean (Lev. 11-15), becoming clean involved ablution practices. Washing could symbolize a person's claim to be pure and innocent of sin in a particular case (Deut. 21:1-9).

At times ablutions involved a general washing or bathing as when the Hebrews bathed their bodies and washed their clothes (Lev. 14:8; 15:5; Num. 19:7-8). Such washing occurred in various places—running water (Lev. 15:13), a pool (John 9:7), in a river (2 Kings 5:10), or in a courtyard of a home (2 Sam. 11:2).

In some parts of the Hebrew tradition, the ritual importance of washing became a central part of religious practice with minute descriptions of how a person was supposed to wash before various activities. Some of the stricter groups would not enter a house without ablutions. They said one hand had to be washed first so it could be purified and could wash the second hand.

Old Testament teachings do not give such importance and detail to ablutions. Rather, inward, spiritual purity is the goal. Outward washing is only a symbol (Pss. 24:4; 51:7; 73:13).

New Testament In Heb. 6:2 the writer bid Christians to progress beyond discussion of basic matters, among which he lists “teaching about ritual washings” (HCSB). He may be describing discussions about the differences between Christian baptism and other ablutions. Hebrews 9:10 refers to “ritual washings” (HCSB) practiced by the Hebrews under the law but no longer necessary because Christ was “offered once to bear the sins of many” (9:28 HCSB).

Mark 7:4 (HCSB) mentions that among the traditions observed by the Pharisees was the “washing of cups, jugs, copper utensils, and dining couches.” They “wash their hands ritually” (v. 3 HCSB) before meals. They did this to keep “the tradition of the elders.” Jesus called this the “tradition of men” which meant “disregarding the commandment of God” (v. 8). He cited Isaiah to call for purity of heart rather than strictness of rules (v. 6).

Examples of Jewish practice in Jesus' day have been illustrated by archaeologists in their excavations at Qumran, the Dead Sea Scroll community of the Essenes, a strict Jewish sect. Excavations revealed a vast network of ritual basins and baths used in ablutions.

For the NT the only washing commanded was that of baptism (Acts 22:16; 1 Cor. 6:11). Ephesians 5:26 shows that the washing of baptism is not effective as a ritual in itself but only as it shows the working of God's Word in the life of the one baptized. Inward cleansing must accompany the outward washing (Heb. 10:22).

Jimmy Albright

ABNER [Āb' nēr] Personal name meaning “father is a lamp.” The chief military officer for King Saul and Saul's uncle (1 Sam. 14:50). At Saul's death he supported Ish-bosheth, Saul's son (2 Sam. 2:8) until Ish-bosheth accused him of treason for taking one of Saul's concubines (2 Sam. 3:7-8). Abner transferred loyalty to David. Joab, David's general, went into a jealous rage when David welcomed Abner. Joab then killed Abner, who was buried in Hebron (2 Sam. 3). See 1 Sam. 17:55-58; 20:25; 26:5,14-15.

ABODE OF THE DEAD See Death; Grave; Hades; Hell; Pit; Sheol.

ABOMINATION, ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION English versions differ in the number of OT Hebrew words translated “abomination/s,” but of these to'ebah is by far the most common (KJV 117 times, NRSV 96, NASB 105, HCSB 51). NIV renders to'ebah as “detestable” in the vast majority of cases. To'ebah expresses that which is repulsive, detestable, or offensive. Examples include sexual perversion (Lev. 18:22-26), pride (Prov. 16:5), hypocritical worship (Isa. 1:13), and especially idolatry (e.g., Deut. 7:25-26; 1 Kgs. 14:24; Ezek. 7:20).

Shiqquts, a “detested thing,” is the second most common Hebrew term for “abomination” in English versions. All 28 instances of shiqquts in the OT are associated with idolatry, and usually the term describes the idols themselves as disgusting and offensive to God. Other Hebrew words rendered “abomination” or “abominable” in some translations are piggul (ceremonially unacceptable foods; Lev. 7:18; 19:7; Isa. 65:4; Ezek. 4:14) and ba'ash (literally “stench,” but figurative for that which is offensive, odious, or hated; 1 Sam. 13:4).

Bdelugma, “a detestable thing,” appears six times in the NT and is the usual Greek word rendered “abomination.” Unquestionably the word refers to idolatry in Matt. 24:15; Mark 13:14; and Rev. 17:4,5—possibly in Rev. 21:27.

The abomination of desolation is mentioned five times (Dan. 9:27; 11:31; 12:11; Matt. 24:15; Mark 13:14). The Hebrew varies slightly, but all three Daniel references include a form of shiqquts (“abomination”) and shamem (“be desolated, appalled”). The abomination of desolation is an idolatrous act, object, or person that makes the temple desolate of worshippers.

The “abomination” in Dan. 11:31 was fulfilled in the altar or pagan image of Zeus (Jupiter) erected by Antiochus IV in the Jerusalem temple in December, 167 B.C. (1 Macc. 1:47, 54, 59; 2 Macc. 6:4-5; Josephus Antiquities 12.5.4; cf. Dan. 8:13). Interpreters who date the composition of Daniel to the reign of Antiochus IV often suggest the Hebrew for “abomination of desolation” (shiqquts shomem) is a contemptuous corruption of Ba'al Shamem (“lord of heaven”), the Syrian equivalent to Zeus. Critics also take Dan. 9:27 and 12:11 to refer to Antiochus's blasphemy, whereas evangelical scholars usually associate these passages with the Roman destruction of A.D. 70 or with a sacrilege of the eschatological Antichrist.

“Abomination of desolation” appears twice in the NT (Matt. 24:15=Mark 13:14). In His Olivet Discourse, Jesus attributed the saying to the prophet Daniel and indicated that its fulfillment was yet future. Accepting Jesus' testimony as authentic, all references to “the abomination of desolation” in Daniel were not fulfilled during the time of Antiochus IV. Granting that Dan. 11:31 refers to Antiochus's blasphemy, Christ's words must point to the “abomination of desolation” of Dan. 9:27 and/or 12:11. Jesus, then, is identifying the “abomination” of these passages with a future sacrilege in the Jerusalem temple.

Most scholars associate this NT “abomination of desolation” with (1) the destruction of the temple, (2) the eschatological antichrist, or (3) both. It could refer to any of several aspects of the Jewish revolt and Roman destruction of Jerusalem and the temple in A.D. 70, including Titus's entering the holy of holies (Josephus, Wars 6.4.7; 7.5.5), the Roman army itself (cp. Luke 21:20), specifically the military ensigns with their idolatrous images (Josephus, Wars 6.6.1), or the profaning of the temple in A.D. 67-68 by Jewish Zealots (Josephus, Wars 4.3.7-10).

The sacrilege of the eschatological Antichrist is mentioned in 2 Thess. 2:3-12. Those who appeal to both events argue that it has a dual application. Since elements of Jesus' prophecy reach beyond the Roman destruction of A.D. 70 to His return (Matt. 24:29-30, 36-44), views 2 or 3 appear to be the best options.

See Antiochus; Daniel, Book of; Intertestamental History and Literature; Josephus, Flavius.

Stephen R. Miller

ABORTION The Bible places a high value on all human life, including that of the unborn. Biblical teaching declares that life is a sacred, God-given gift (Gen. 1:26-27; 2:7; Deut. 30:15-19; Job 1:21; Ps. 8:5; 1 Cor. 15:26), especially the life of children (Ps. 127:3-5; Luke 18:15-16), and condemns those who take it away (Exod. 20:13; 2 Kings 1:13; Amos 1:13-14). The development of unborn life is controlled by God (Job 31:15; Ps. 139:13-16; Eccles. 11:5; Isa. 44:2; 46:3; 49:5; Jer. 1:5; Luke 1:15; Gal. 1:15). The personhood of the fetus is clearly taught in Exod. 21:22 where the unborn is called a “child” (yeled) rather than a “fetus” (nephel or golem). Hos. 9:11 implies that life begins at conception, while Luke 1:41,44 recognizes the consciousness of an unborn child.

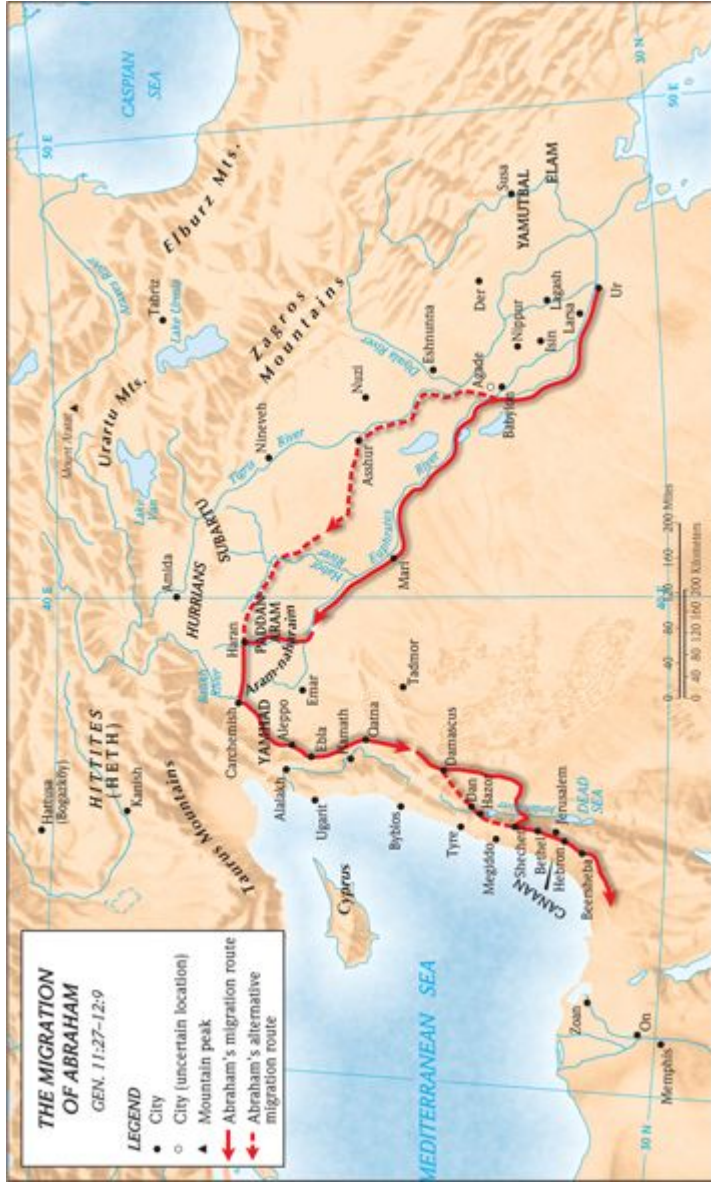

The high value placed on unborn human life in the Bible is consistent with the Mosaic law regarding negligent miscarriage (Exod. 21:22-25). This law can be compared to similar statutes in the Code of Hammurabi (nos. 209-214) in which the punishment exacted for acts of negligence that resulted in a woman's miscarriage was dependent on the legal or social status of the mother, not the personhood (or supposed lack thereof) of her unborn child. Middle Assyrian law no. 53 (12th century B.C.) made a self-induced miscarriage (an abortion) a capital offense.

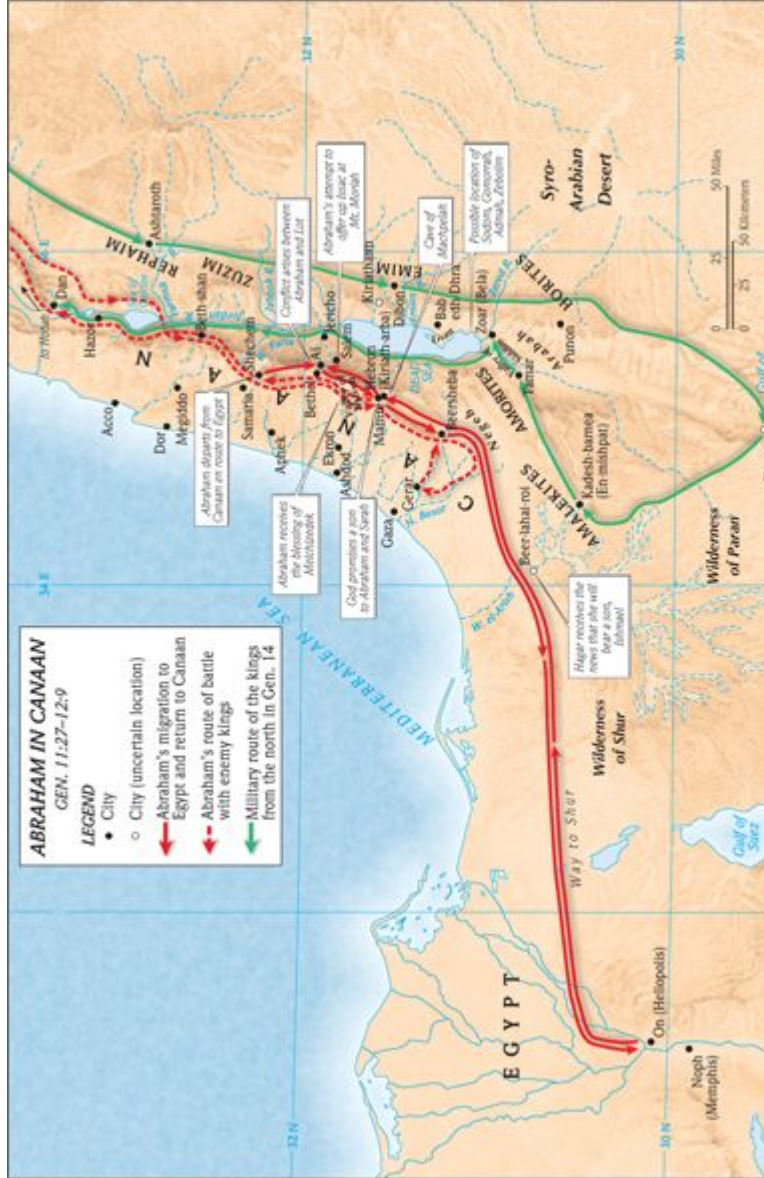

Paul H. Wright

ABRAHAM [Ā' brā-hām] Personal name meaning “father of a multitude.” The first Hebrew patriarch, he became known as the prime example of faith. He was the son of Terah, a descendant of Noah's son, Shem. (Gen. 11:27). His childhood was spent in Ur of the Chaldees, a prominent Sumerian city. He was known at the beginning as Abram (“father is exalted”), but this was changed subsequently to Abraham (“father of a multitude,” Gen. 17:5).

Herodian structure built over the Cave of Machpelah, Abraham's burial place for Sarah.

Well at modern Beersheba thought by some to be Abraham's well.

Terah, his father, moved to Haran with the family (Gen. 11:31) and after some years died there. God called Abram to migrate to Canaan, assuring him that he would father a vast nation. At different times he lived in Shechem, Bethel, Hebron, and Beer-sheba. His wife Sarai's beauty attracted the pharaoh when they moved to Egypt during a famine (Gen. 12:10), but God intervened to save her. The trouble arose partly because Abram had claimed her as his sister rather than his wife, and in fact she was his half-sister (Gen. 20:12). After returning to Palestine, Abram received further covenantal assurances from God (Gen. 15). He decided he could produce offspring by taking Sarai's handmaid Hagar as a concubine. Though the union produced a son, Ishmael, he was not destined to become Abram's promised heir. Even after another covenantal assurance (Gen. 17:1-21) in which the rite of circumcision was made a covenantal sign, Abram and Sarai still questioned God's promise of an heir.

Then Sarai, whose name had been changed to Sarah ("princess"), had her long-promised son, Isaac ("laughter"), when Abraham was 100 years old. Ishmael's presence caused trouble in the family, and he was expelled with his mother Hagar to the wilderness of Paran. Abraham's faith and obedience were tested by God in Moriah when he was commanded to sacrifice Isaac. God provided an alternative sacrifice, however, saving the boy's life. As a reward for Abraham's faithfulness, God renewed the covenant promises of great blessing and the growth of a mighty nation to father and son.

Subsequently, Sarah died and was buried in the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 23:19), after which Abraham sought a bride for Isaac. A woman named Rebekah was obtained from Abraham's relatives in Mesopotamia, and Isaac married her gladly (Gen. 24:67). In old age Abraham remarried and had further children, finally dying after 175 years. Abraham recognized God as the almighty Lord of all and the author of a covenant by which the Hebrews would become a mighty nation. God Himself was known subsequently as the God of Abraham (Exod. 3:6). Through him God had revealed His plan for human salvation (Exod. 2:24). The promises to Abraham became assurance for future generations (Exod. 32:13; 33:1). Abraham became known as "God's friend forever" (2 Chron. 20:7).

John and Paul showed that descent from Abraham did not guarantee salvation (Matt. 3:9; Rom. 9). Indeed, foreigners would join Him in the kingdom (Matt. 8:11; cp. Luke 16:23-30). Lost sons of Abraham, Jesus invited to salvation (Luke 19:9). True children of Abraham do the works of Abraham (John 8:39).

For Paul, Abraham was the great example of faith (Rom. 4; Gal. 3). In Hebrews Abraham provided the model for tithing (Heb. 7) and played a prominent role in the roll call of faith (Heb. 11). James used Abraham to show that justification by faith is proved in works (James 2:21-24).

R. K. Harrison

ABRAHAM'S BOSOM Place to which the angels carried the poor man Lazarus when he died. The Roman custom of reclining at meals was common among the Jews. Such positioning placed one in the bosom of the neighboring person. To be next to the host, that is to recline in the bosom of the host, was considered the highest honor. Lazarus was comforted after death by being given the place of closest fellowship with the father of the whole Hebrew nation (Luke 16:22-23). See Heaven.

So-called Tomb of Absalom in the Kidron Valley in Jerusalem.

ABRAM (Ā' brām) Personal name meaning “father is exalted.” The name of Abraham (“father of a multitude”) in Gen. 11:26-17:4. See Abraham.

ABRONAH [Ā-brō' nah] Place-name meaning “pass” or “passage.” Wilderness camp (Num. 33:34). Its location is not known, but it is apparently close to Ezion-geber at the northern tip of the Gulf of Aqaba. KJV spelling is Ebronah.

ABSALOM [Āb' sā-lom] Personal name meaning “father of peace.” Third son of King David, who rebelled against his father and was murdered by Joab, David's commander (2 Sam. 3:3; 13-19). Absalom apparently resented being ignored by his father and resented his brother Amnon going unpunished for raping Tamar, Absalom's full sister. Being overindulged and ambitious, Absalom became the spokesman for the people (2 Sam. 15:1-6). They, in turn, gladly proclaimed him king in Hebron (15:10), where David was first crowned (2:4). Battle ensued. David left Jerusalem and sent his army to find Absalom, not to hurt him (15:5), but Joab murdered him (18:14). David's lament over Absalom shows the depth of a father's love over the loss of a son as well as regret for personal failures that led to family and national tragedies. See Abishalom.

ABSHAI (NASB) See Abishai.

ABSTINENCE Voluntarily refraining from some action, such as eating certain kinds of foods or drinking alcoholic beverages.

Old Testament The most prominent examples of abstinence in the OT relate to the Sabbath (Exod. 31:14-15), food laws (Lev. 11; 19:23-25; Deut. 14), the Nazarite vow (Num. 6), and fasting. While not unique to the Israelites, observance of the Sabbath and food laws became distinguishing characteristics of Israelites in foreign cultures.

The Nazirite vow involved abstinence from fermented products and all produce of the grapevine. On occasion the vow became a lifelong commitment (Judg. 13:5-7). Fasting was practiced as an act of humbling oneself before the Lord. It involved abstinence from food and drink or on occasion only from food or drink. The Day of Atonement was the most prominent fast in Israel. See Nazirite.

New Testament Old Testament forms of abstinence continued in the NT period, but the forms themselves frequently were points of controversy between Jesus and the religious leaders (Mark 2:18-3:6). Jesus refocused the prohibitive aspects of the practices by emphasizing internal motive over external observance (Matt. 6:16-18). Paul established the principle of abstaining from any activity that might offend or cause another to stumble (Rom. 14; 1 Cor. 8). This principle often guides the contemporary practice.

Michael Fink

ABYSS Transliteration of Greek word abussos, literally meaning “without bottom.” KJV translates “the deep” or “bottomless” pit. NASB, NIV, RSV use “abyss” to refer to the dark abode of the dead (Rom. 10:7). Abaddon rules the abyss (Rev. 9:11), from which will come the beast of the end time of Revelation (11:7). The beast of the abyss faces ultimate destruction (Rev. 17:8), and Satan will be bound there during the millennium (Rev. 20:1-3). See Hades; Hell; Sheol.

ACACIA Hard wood with a beautiful fine grain or close grain, which darkens as it ages. Insects find the taste of acacia wood distasteful, and its density makes it difficult for water or other decaying agents to penetrate. The Israelites pitched their tents by Jordan, from Beth-jesimoth as far as Abel-shittim, translated “meadow of the acacias” (Num. 33:49)

Acacia tree growing in the Sinai Desert.

Moses received the instructions for the building of the tabernacle on Mount Sinai (Exod. 25-35), in the Arabian Desert (Gal. 4:25) where acacia is among the larger of the few timber species to be found. Items constructed for the tabernacle of acacia (shittim) wood include: the ark of the covenant and its poles; the table of showbread and its poles; the brazen altar and its poles; the incense altar and its poles; and all the poles for the hanging of the curtains and the supports (Exod. 36:20,31,36; 37; 38).

The acacia wood was so precious that Exod. 25:5 says that besides the offering of silver and brass, every man who had acacia (shittim) wood brought it for the Lord's offering. In Joel 3:18 Judah will be blessed “in that day” with a spring that will water the valley of Shittim. See Altar; Ark of the Covenant; Plants; Shittim.

ACBOR (NIV) See Achbor.

ACCAD [Ak' ad] or AKKAD (NIV) Place-name of famous city in Mesopotamia ruled by Sargon I about 2350 B.C. (Gen. 10:10). Its exact location is not known. It gave its name to Akkadian language used by Babylon and Assyria.

ACCENT, GALILEAN The peculiarity of Peter's speech that showed he was from Galilee. His peculiar speech made the servant girl suspect that Peter was a follower of Jesus from Nazareth in Galilee (Matt. 26:73; cp. Judg. 12:5-6, where a person's speech betrayed his place of origin. See Shibboleth).

ACCEPTANCE Being received with approval or pleasure. In the Bible, things or persons are often said to be acceptable to men or to God. Human acceptance (or rejection) of other humans is affected by many things such as race, class, clan, sex, actions of the individual, prejudice, etc. On a human level Jesus shows us that all human beings are to be accepted, to be loved for their own sake, simply because they are persons created in the image of the loving Father (Gen. 1:26-27; Matt. 5:43-48).

Above all, sin keeps a person from being acceptable to God (Gen. 4:7; Isa. 59:2). From earliest days sacrifices were offered to God in an attempt to make the worshiper acceptable to Him. Later the law revealed more clearly what one needed to do to be acceptable to God. This included ethical actions (Ten Commandments) as well as sacrifices (Leviticus). Israel succumbed to the temptation of separating sacrifice from ethical action, so the great prophets again and again proclaimed the truth that no sacrifice is acceptable if it is divorced from just treatment of others (Isa. 1:10-17; Amos 5:21-24). Micah summed up the terms of acceptance in 6:6-8, "What does the Lord require of you but to do justice, to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God?" (NASB). The proper attitude of humility is as important as right action (Ps. 51:16-17; 1 Pet. 5:5-6).

Jesus summarized the law and the prophets in the two great commandments (Matt. 22:37-40) and held them up as the requirements for eternal life (Luke 10:25-28). Paul saw that the law serves two purposes. One, it makes known God's requirements, thus revealing human sinfulness

(Rom. 3:20). Two, the moral law as a true expression of God's will remains a goal or guide, even though one no longer thinks God's acceptance is won by the law. The NT proclaims that Jesus has done what is necessary to make one acceptable to God. At the beginning of His ministry, Jesus announced that His mission included proclaiming the acceptable year of the Lord, the time of salvation (Luke 4:19). Jesus revealed the will of God clearer than ever before (Heb. 1:1-2); He destroyed the works of the devil (1 John 3:8); but above all He put away sin “by the sacrifice of Himself” (Heb. 9:26 HCSB). Paul wrote of acceptance before God mainly as justification. People are made acceptable to God because the just requirements of the law have been met by the sacrifice of Jesus (Rom. 3:21-26; 8:3-5). The book of Hebrews presents Jesus as the true High Priest who offers the perfect sacrifice that effectively cleanses or covers sin so that it is no longer a barrier to acceptance by God (Heb. 9:11-14,26). Both Paul and Hebrews taught that for acceptance by God to be effective, one must believe—accept the offer of acceptance from God in Christ and commit one-self to following the way of Jesus, confessing Him as Lord. See Atonement; Justification; Love.

Joe Baskin

ACCESS Permission and ability to enter into a secured area or into the presence of someone important such as God. In the human realm access usually applied to persons who were permitted to see the king face-to-face (Esther 1:14). Thus they had a place to stand in the king's presence (Zech. 3:7). Each royal court had its own rules. The Persian court which Esther faced set the death penalty for anyone who sought access to the king without royal permission (Esther 4:11). The NT teaches that every person can now have access to God because Jesus' death on the cross has opened the way. Such access is actually experienced by those who express personal trust in Jesus and rely on divine grace. This brings peace and eternal hope (Rom. 5:1-2), but it is always dependent upon the heavenly King's royal favor, not upon entrance requirements established or met by humans. Both Gentiles and Jews have an open door to the Father through Christ's death on the cross and through the work of the Holy Spirit present in the believer's life (Eph. 2:10-18). Access to God through faith in Christ was God's eternal purpose and gives the believer confidence and boldness to approach God (Eph. 3:12). Old Testament religious practices allowed only the high priest to enter the holy of holies and that only once a year (Lev. 16:2,34). Through Christ believers have constant access to the holiest place, where God is (Heb. 10:19-22).

ACCO [Ā'kō] or ACCHO (KJV) Place-name for famous Mediterranean seaport north of Mount Carmel. Territory was assigned to tribe of Asher, but they could not conquer it (Judg. 1:31). The Greeks renamed Acco, Ptolemaïs. On his third missionary voyage, Paul spent one day in Ptolemaïs (Acts 21:7). The city has a long history documented by Near Eastern records reaching back to about 2000 B.C., but it plays a small role in the biblical narrative.

ACCOUNTABILITY, AGE OF Age at which God holds children accountable for their sins. When persons come to this point, they face the inevitability of divine judgment if they fail to repent and believe the gospel.

Scripture speaks plainly of the need for sinful humans to be converted in order to have eternal life, but it does not directly address the matter of the destiny of children who die in infancy or young childhood. Some things are clear, though. Scripture is specific that all persons are sinners, even little ones. “The wicked go astray from the womb; liars err from birth” (Ps. 58:3 HCSB). “Indeed, I was guilty when I was born; I was sinful when my mother conceived me” (Ps. 51:5 HCSB). The psalmist is not saying that only certain persons are sinners from birth, nor is he saying that his mother sinned in conceiving him, but rather that all persons are sinners from their earliest days. Jesus also made it clear that all who are born are in need of regeneration when He informed Nicodemus, “Whatever is born of the flesh is flesh, and whatever is born of the Spirit is spirit” (John 3:6 HCSB).

Port of Acco from the South.

People are converted when, under the convicting power of the Spirit, they repent of sin and place faith in God who saves through the atoning work of Jesus on the cross (Acts 2:38; Rom. 3:21-26). In order to be saved, one needs to have a basic understanding of the faith and of the relationship between one's sin and Christ's sacrifice (Rom. 10:9-15). This requires, of course, a certain amount of cognitive knowledge and reasoning ability, along with the convicting work of the Spirit. Though there is no specific “age” of accountability technically speaking (for instance, age 12 or 13), there is a “time” in one's life when he or she is accountable for sin.

What hope is there then for little ones who are too young to work out all of these issues mentally and spiritually? Much hope, actually. First, it is clear in the account of judgment against Israel for its failure to trust God at Kadesh-barnea that God held accountable only those who were decision makers—the children were not held responsible (Num. 14:29-31). Though judgment in this case was only temporal and not eternal, it does illustrate a principle of mercy toward those not in a position to make such determinations. It is not that children are innocent, but only that God is merciful, a mercy seemingly applied somewhat differently to infants than to those who are older—that is, universally. Second, when David's child died seven days after being born, the king informed his servants, “I shall go to him, but he will not return to me” (1 Sam. 12:23 NRSV). He clearly was convinced that he would see his child after his own death. This same king wrote in another place that he would spend eternity in the “house of Yahweh” (Ps. 23:6 NJB). It is to that house that he believed his son would go.

If that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and one must be reborn in order to see God, how is it possible for little ones to be saved? Again, Scripture gives no mechanism for this procedure, though it does drop hints. John the Baptist was filled with the Holy Spirit from his mother's womb (Luke 1:15). This makes it clear that the Spirit can have a relationship with someone who has no intellectual understanding of that bond. This ought not to surprise Bible students since Jesus noted that the Spirit moves where He wills (John 3:8).

God's Word does not present an explicit and unequivocal case for infant salvation; it is somewhat silent on the question. Insofar as it does address the relevant issues, however, it seems clearly to imply that those who die before reaching an age of responsibility will not be condemned by God, even though they are sinners by nature and choice, but will instead be received into eternal salvation. See Family; Regeneration; Salvation.

ACCURSED Translation of Hebrew cherem, a technical term in warfare for items captured from the enemy and devoted to God. TEV demonstrates the difficulty of translating the Hebrew into English, using at various times: “unconditionally dedicate” (Num. 21:2); “put everyone to death” (Deut. 2:34); “completely destroy” (Deut. 20:17); “killed” (Josh. 6:21; 8:26); “become the Lord's permanent property” (Lev. 27:21); “put a curse on...destroyed” (Judg. 1:17). REB uses “dedicated” (Lev. 27:21); “devoted” (Lev. 27:28-29); “utterly destroy” (Num. 21:2); “put to death under solemn ban” (Deut. 2:34); “exterminate” (Deut. 7:2); “destroyed” (Josh. 2:10); “put to death” (Judg. 21:11). NRSV consistently uses “devoted” and “utterly destroyed” to translate cherem, while NASB uses “set apart” and “utterly destroy.” NIV uses “devoted,” “totally destroyed,” “completely destroyed.” Israel's neighbors practiced devoting battle spoils to a god also, as 2 Kings 19:11 shows. “Accursed” appears in KJV for cherem only in Joshua and in 1 Chron. 2:7. In Deut. 21:23 and Isa. 65:20 KJV uses “accursed” to translate another Hebrew root, qalal, “to make light of, curse.”

Paul used a technical Greek term, anathema, to call for persons to be put under a holy ban or be accursed (Rom. 9:3; 1 Cor. 12:3; Gal. 1:8-9; cp. 1 Cor. 16:22). Paul used the term in the sense of the Hebrew cherem. See Anathema; Ban; Blessing and Cursing; Devoted Thing.

ACCUSER Legal term describing a person who claims another is guilty of a crime or a moral offense. The Hebrew word for accuser is Satan (cp. Ps. 109:6 in various translations). False accusation called for serious punishment (Deut. 19:15-21). The psalmist prayed for judgment against his accusers (Ps. 109:4,20,29 NASB, NIV, NRSV). False accusers led to Christ's conviction and death (Matt. 27:12). Jewish accusers (Acts 22:30) finally led Paul to appeal to Rome (Acts 25:11). See Satan.

ACELDAMA [Ā-çəl' dá-má] or AKELDAMA (KJV) Judas Iscariot purchased this field where he killed himself (Acts 1:19). The name is Aramaic and means “field of blood.” (See picture on next page.) Evidently it was purchased with the money that had been paid to Judas for betraying Jesus.

According to Matt. 27:7 the field purchased with this money was used for the burial of foreigners. See Judas.

ACHAIA [Ā·kā' yá] Roman province in which Gallio was deputy, or proconsul, in the time of Paul the apostle (Acts 18:12). It consisted roughly of the southern half of ancient Greece, including the Peloponnesus. Major cities in Achaia included Sparta, Athens, and Corinth, which was the administrative center. Paul preached successfully in the province (Acts 18:27-28).

A monastery on Mount Zion marks the traditional site of Judas's suicide overlooking the Field of Blood.

ACHAICUS [Ā chá' ī cūs] Personal name of messenger who came to Paul from Corinth before he wrote 1 Corinthians (16:17). His presence with Stephanas and Fortunatus encouraged Paul. The three brought news and perhaps a letter (1 Cor. 7:1) to Paul from the church at Corinth. They may have carried 1 Corinthians back to Corinth.

ACHAN [Ā' kān] or ACHAR (1 Chron. 2:7). In Josh. 7:1, a Judahite whose theft of a portion of the spoil from Jericho brought divine displeasure and military defeat on the Israelite army. After the battle of Ai, the Lord told Joshua the reason for Israel's defeat was that the ban concerning the spoil of Jericho had been violated (Josh. 7:11). Achan was discovered to be the guilty party, and he and his family were stoned to death (Josh. 7:25). See Ai; Joshua.

ACHAZ (KJV, Matt. 1:9). See Ahaz.

ACHBOR [Āk' bōr] Personal name meaning "mouse." 1. Father of king in Edom (Gen. 36:38). 2. Man that King Josiah commissioned to ask God the meaning of the book of the Law found in the temple. He and the others commissioned obtained God's word from Huldah, the prophetess (2 Kings 22:12-14). 3. Father of Elnathan, whom Jehoiakim sent to bring back the prophet Uriah from Egypt in order to execute him (Jer. 26:22; cp. 36:12).

ACHIM [Ā' kīm] Personal name of ancestor of Jesus of whom nothing is known except his name (Matt. 1:14).

ACHISH [Ā' kish] Philistine personal name. 1. King of Gath, a Philistine city, to whom David fled in fear of Saul (1 Sam. 21:10). David played as a madman to escape from Achish (21:13). Later David became a soldier for Achish but cunningly expanded his own influence around Ziklag (1 Sam. 27). David joined Achish to fight Saul (28:1-2), but the Philistine leaders forced him to leave without fighting (29:1-11). Saul and his sons, including Jonathan, died in the battle (31:1-6). 2. King of Gath to whom Shimei went to retrieve his servants but in so doing violated his agreement with Solomon and lost his life (1 Kings 2:36-46).

ACHMETHA [Āk' mē-thā] or ECBATANA (NASB, NIV, RSV, TEV) Capital of the ancient Median empire, located in the Zagros Mountains in western Iran, on two major roads that lead from the south and west to the city of Tehran. Only one reference to the city is found in the canonical books of the Bible (Ezra 6:2), but it is known as Ecbatana in the apocryphal books and is referred to frequently, especially in the books of Judith, Tobit, and 2 Maccabees.

No archeological work has been undertaken at Achmetha for the simple reason that it is now occupied by the modern city of Hamadan. Two surface finds, a gold dagger and a gold tablet written in cuneiform, have been made.

ACHOR [A'kôr] Place-name meaning “trouble, affliction,” or “taboo.” The valley in which Achan and his household were stoned to death (Josh. 7:24-26). Later it formed part of the border of Judah. It is the subject of prophetic promises in Isa. 65:10 and Hos. 2:15. See Joshua.

ACHSA [Ak' sâ] or ACHSAH (NASB, RSV, TEV) or ACSAH (NIV) Personal name meaning “bangle” or “ankle ornament.” Daughter of Caleb offered as wife to man who conquered Kirjath-sepher (Josh. 15:16). Othniel took the city and the woman (Judg. 1:12-13).

ACHSHAPH [Āk' shāph] or ACSHAPH (NIV) Place-name meaning “place of sorcery.” City-state which joined Jabin, King of Hazor, in opposing Joshua as he invaded northern Israel (Josh. 11:1). Achshaph was a border city for Asher (Josh. 19:25). It was probably located near Acco.

ACHZIB [Āk' zib] or ACZIB (NIV) Place-name meaning “deceitful.” 1. Town in southern Judah, perhaps modern Tel el-Beida near Lachish (Josh. 15:44). Micah 1:14 makes a wordplay using Achzib, literally “the houses of deceitfulness will be deceitful.” 2. Border town of Asher (Josh. 19:29) which the Israelite tribe could not conquer (Judg. 1:31). It may be modern Tel Akhziv near Acco.

ACRE Translation of Hebrew tsemed, literally a “team” of oxen. As a measure of land, it refers to the land a team can plow in one day (1 Sam. 14:14; Isa. 5:10).

ACROSTIC Literary device by which each section of a literary work begins with the succeeding letter of the alphabet. Thus in Ps. 119 the first eight verses begin with aleph, the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet; the next eight with bet, the second letter of the Hebrew alphabet, and the pattern is continued through verses 169-176, which each begin with taw, the last letter of the Hebrew alphabet. Other examples in the Bible include Pss. 9-10; 25; 34; 37; 111-112; 145; Prov. 31:10-31; Lam. 1-4. The acrostic style helped people memorize the poem and expressed completeness of subject matter from A to Z.

ACSAH (NIV) See Achsa.

ACTS, BOOK OF Standing immediately after the four Gospels in the NT, the book of Acts is part two of a work (part one is the Gospel of Luke) beginning with Luke's statement of his purpose for writing and ending with Paul under house arrest in Rome (A.D. 62). Acts is an important source for the history of the earliest church, documenting the accomplishment of the task given to the apostles by the risen Christ in Acts 1:8, “and you will be My witnesses in Jerusalem, in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth” (HCSB). The roles of Peter and Paul are featured especially in the spread of the gospel to Rome. The speeches in Acts, which constitute about one third of the book, are rich in solid theology.

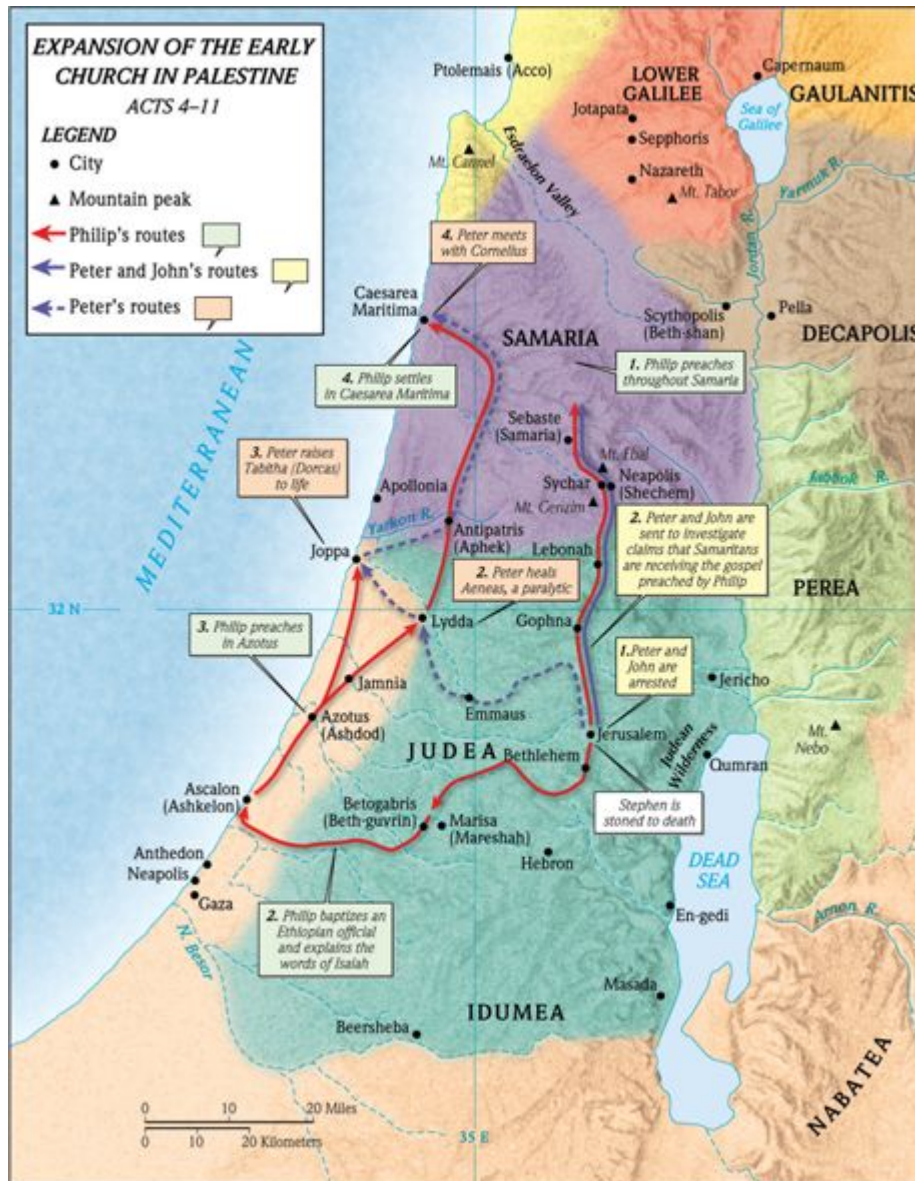

Though echoes of Acts may appear as early as 1 Clement (ca. A.D. 95-100) and the Didache (early second century), the earliest identifiable references appear in Justin Martyr (ca. A.D. 130-150), in his First and Second Apologies. The current title of the book was set by the end of the second century.

By the end of the second century, authorship of both the Gospel of Luke and the book of Acts commonly was attributed to Luke, whom Irenaeus described as a physician and traveling companion of Paul. He noted the occurrences of the second person plural in the later chapters (the so-called “we” passages) of Acts as pointing to the author being a traveling companion of Paul. From Irenaeus forward, patristic opinion is united in support of Lukan authorship and the internal evidence points to common authorship as well. Common style and vocabulary run throughout the two books as do common themes. The prefaces to both books affirm common authorship: both are dedicated to the same person (Theophilus) and the ascension narratives at the end of Luke and the beginning of Acts bind them together.

Many scholars date Luke prior to A.D. 64 because Acts ends abruptly with Paul having been in Rome for two years. The absence of an account of the remainder of Paul's life and ministry would be explained if the book were written at about that point in time (ca. A.D. 62-64). The primitive theology of Peter's speeches and the absence of any reference to the Neronian persecutions of believers in Rome (A.D. 64-67) also support such a date. These arguments are not decisive, however, and perhaps Acts ends as it does because Luke had fulfilled his purpose of describing the extension of the gospel to Rome. Three predictions of the fall of Jerusalem in Luke (19:41-44; 21:20-24; 23:28-31) possibly reflect a knowledge of the fall of the city to the Roman army in A.D. 70. However, they could also reflect authentic predictions by Jesus before the fact. The apparent use of the Gospel of Mark as a source by Luke also suggests a date later than A.D. 62, and most ancient tradition indicates that Mark wrote his gospel based on the memoirs of Peter, after Peter's death (ca. A.D. 67-68). Obviously Acts was written subsequently to Luke but probably not much later. Many scholars also advocate dates between A.D. 70 and 90 for Acts, with most of these falling about midway or about A.D. 80. Though dates between A.D. 95-100 and even as late as A.D. 125-150 have been suggested, they are not tenable.

Opinions vary widely as to the place of writing and the original destination of Acts. Luke and Acts are addressed to Theophilus, possibly a Roman citizen of some prominence, but all attempts to be more specific are speculative. The content of Acts seems directed at an audience including both Gentile and Jewish believers. Antioch of Syria and Rome are the most common suggestions for the provenance of Acts. Nevertheless, perhaps Luke intended his works for an audience without boundaries, as it was, in fact, widely distributed and appreciated from the beginning.

Luke stated that he used all available sources in his preparation to write his record (Luke 1:1-4). Numerous suggestions have been made as to what documentary sources Luke may have used for Acts, but all such proposals are highly subjective and speculative. A. Harnack, who supported Lukan authorship, posited sources for Acts 1-15 from certain locales such as Antioch, Caesarea, and Jerusalem. He believed Luke drew on his own memory for Acts 16-28. C. C. Torrey suggested an Aramaic language original behind Acts 1-15 because of many “semiticisms” in the text. Others have observed that the data can be accounted for by comparison with the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the Hebrew Old Testament, which was the Bible used by most of the early church.

Several solutions have been suggested for the “we” passages of Acts 16-28. The traditional position, and the most feasible, is that they reflect the presence of Luke when the events occurred. Other suggestions feature the use of the diary of a companion of Paul as a source for a later writer. Some suggest that the use of “we” is simply an editorial device not signifying an eyewitness's presence.

Even if written sources for Acts cannot be established, Luke had access to local traditions of believing communities, eyewitness reports, and cherished reminiscences passed down in the churches. These kinds of sources may account, for instance, for details like the work of Philip the evangelist and the conversions at Cornelius' house. Though there is overlap of content between Paul's letters and Acts, there is no clear indication that Luke had access to the epistles. Perhaps the letters of Paul had not yet been collected and were still at the churches to which they were addressed. Luke evidently did not have access to them or considered them not germane to his purpose in writing Acts: to describe the extension of the gospel to Rome.

The identity of the original text of Acts presents a special problem. The early witnesses for the text of Acts diverge more than those of any other NT book. The “Western” text of Acts differs significantly from the “Alexandrian,” being almost 10 percent longer. The Alexandrian is considered earlier and more reliable, and modern Bible translations follow it in Acts. See Textual Criticism, New Testament.

As a writer, Luke is among the best in the NT. He wrote with clear intentionality as a historian and theologian. His gospel followed the new genre pioneered by Mark. Acts also has much in common with the genre of Hellenistic historical monograph. The narratives in Acts also bear much similarity to OT narrative accounts of things like the callings of prophets and commissioning narratives. His treatments of the careers of Peter and Paul also parallel the narratives of Jesus' life in the Gospels.

Luke has been described as the most “Greek” of the NT writers. Ironically, this Gentile composed 27 percent of the NT. He wrote in good literary Koine Greek and often emulated classical Greek authors. Luke's works are also steeped in the OT. A full 90 percent of his vocabulary is found in the Septuagint. See Greek Language.

One of the most characteristic features of Acts is the presence of many speeches. Speeches account for about one third of the book, about 300 of the approximately 1,000 verses of Acts. In all there are 24 speeches, eight from Peter, nine from Paul, and seven from others. Ten can be described as major addresses: three missionary sermons of Peter (Acts 2; 3; 10), three missionary speeches of Paul (Acts 13; 17; 20), three defenses by Paul (Acts 22; 24; 26), and Stephen's address to the Sanhedrin (Acts 7). The speeches in Acts are probably summaries, examples of what was said, but not full reports. If each address was fully reported, it would be many times longer. Luke's style runs almost uniformly through all the speeches by different characters, indicating his hand at work in selecting the summary material to be written in his book. Sheer variety in the content and argumentation of the speeches suggests they are reliable reports of what was said by those giving the speeches. They have an unmistakable ring of authenticity about them. Acts gives us access to the declarations of the earliest church.

Luke utilized other forms of material. In common with the Gospels, he used miracle stories. The difference is that in the Gospels Jesus acted on His own authority and in Acts the apostles act only on the basis of Jesus' authority, never their own. Travel narratives are effectively employed in Acts and are different from the descriptions of Jesus' travels in Luke. With great intentionality they depict the spread of the gospel from one area to another on each of Paul's missionary journeys. Much of the text consists of short episodes sometimes described as edifying stories. A good example is Acts 19, which is devoted to a series of brief encounters with various people and groups. Luke used these short vignettes to illustrate the success of Paul's missionary endeavors. Luke also uses brief summaries effectively for a variety of purposes. Unlike the episodes, the summaries generalize, giving a broad impression of the main characteristics of the early believing communities.

Luke's personality is reflected in his writings. He was a gifted storyteller, using suspense, irony, and an eye for detail. He described nautical procedures carefully, detailed various lodgings, and shared meals. Luke had great concern for the poor and the needy, the oppressed and downtrodden. Luke showed the prominence of women in the ministry of Jesus and in the life of the early church.

Though many have suggested otherwise, Luke's works have much in common with other works of Hellenistic historiography. He carefully placed the events he wrote about in the broader historical context of the Roman Empire. Through selection, emphasis, and analysis he communicated the significance of the events he described. He especially pointed out how the legitimacy of the earliest church was recognized by Roman observers and authorities at various times.

It would be fair to call Luke a theologian. He viewed early Christian history through the eyes of faith and saw constant traces of divine providence. He retained his reliability as a historian but wrote from within the earliest church, not from a viewpoint of total detachment. Luke's theological concerns have been suggested by various scholars. Hans Conzelmann saw salvation history as Luke's main concern. Ernst Käsemann saw the strong influence of the early institutional church in Acts.

Two observations on the theology of Acts are noteworthy. First, though the Gospel of Luke and Acts are closely related, their theology should be considered separately. Each stands on its own theological feet. Second, the theology of Acts is communicated primarily in its narrative movement by repetition and emphasis of the recurring themes of the narratives. It is a narrative theology. The Christology of Acts is a highly developed messianic Christology, found mostly in addresses to Jewish hearers, based on the witness of the OT. This messianic Christology includes the atonement of Christ's death and the confirmation of messiahship provided by the resurrection. Acts resonates with Pauline soteriology, although it is not presented systematically.

The purpose of Acts is that of volume one (Luke's Gospel) stated in Luke 1:4, "that you may know the certainty of the things about which you have been instructed" (HCSB). He accomplished this goal by careful research and a chronological presentation of events. His immediate audience was Theophilus, but Luke certainly expected the works to be copied and circulated. Some have suggested that Luke wrote to counter some false teaching, such as Gnosticism, but this is highly questionable.

Acts is characterized by a multiplicity of themes. Acts 1:8 states the overarching theme of the spread of the gospel from Jerusalem throughout the earth. That the mission of the church is under the direct control of the providence of God is perhaps the strongest single theme in the theology of Acts. The role of the Holy Spirit is part of the emphasis on God's providence. Much of the book of Acts concerns witnessing to the Jews and the possibility of the restoration of Israel when she embraces her Messiah. If Acts gives a picture of massive Jewish rejection of the gospel and their resulting exclusion from the people of God, it also gives the other side as well—the inclusion of the Gentiles in the people of God. It is not a matter of the exclusion of one and the inclusion of the other. Rather, it is the story of how early Jewish-Christians were led by God to the vision of a more inclusive people of God, a church that transcended all barriers of human discrimination and prejudice.

The concept of faithful witness ties the two halves of Acts together. The last half of Acts emphasizes the relationship of Christians to the Roman political authorities by two recurring patterns: first, the constant note that Paul was innocent of breaking any Roman laws, and that this was recognized and confirmed by Roman officials; and second, Roman officials stepped in to deliver Paul from Jewish threats to his life. Paul modeled how believers should relate to authority, and he utilized his Roman citizenship rights to the advancement of the gospel, all the way to Caesar's tribunal in Rome. Through Paul's example Luke set forth a realistic political agenda for his readers: give no grounds for charges against you, use what legal rights you have, be willing to suffer for your faith, and bear witness wherever and whenever you can. Even Rome could be won for Christ.

The story of Acts can perhaps be summarized in the single phrase “the triumph of the gospel.” It is a triumphant story of how the early Christian community in the power of the Spirit saturated their world with the message of God's salvation in Jesus Christ. It was not an easy path. There were internal obstacles and old assumptions were challenged. Opinions had to be revised and prejudices overcome as the Spirit led to an ever more inclusive people of God.

A danger in such triumph is the arrogance of a lopsided “theology of glory.” Rightly viewed, there is no room for arrogance here—only humility and openness to God's direction. The witnesses do not triumph—the Word triumphs—and only when the witnesses are faithful servants of the Lord Jesus. The book of Acts is in a real sense a book for renewal, calling the church back to its roots, setting a pattern for faithful discipleship, for witness in the footsteps of the Master, and a wholehearted commitment to sacrifice and suffering. It speaks to us even in times of deep discouragement, reminding us of the reality of the sovereign hand of God bringing His will and purposes for our lives to pass, reassuring us of the reality of the presence of His Spirit in our lives. It challenges us to faithful witness, regardless of what may come our way.

Acts falls naturally into two divisions: the mission of the Jerusalem church (Acts 1-12) and the mission of Paul (Acts 13-28). Each of these may be divided into two main parts. In the Jerusalem portion, Acts 1-5 treats the earliest church in Jerusalem. Acts 6-12 deals with the outreach beyond Jerusalem. In the Pauline portion, Acts 13:1-21:16 relates the three major missionary journeys of Paul. Acts 21:17-28:31 deals with Paul's defense of his ministry.

Outline

- I. The Spirit Empowers the Church for Witness (1:1-2:47)
 - A. Literary Prologue (1:1-2)
 - B. Instructions Preparatory to Pentecost (1:3-5)
 - C. Christ's Legacy: The Call to Witness (1:6-8)
 - D. The Ascension of Christ (1:9-11)
 - E. Preparation in the Upper Room (1:12-14)

- F. Restoration of the Apostolic Circle (1:15-26)
- G. Miracle at Pentecost (2:1-13)
- H. Peter's Sermon at Pentecost (2:14-41)
- I. The Common Life of the Community (2:42-47)
- II. The Apostles Witness to the Jews in Jerusalem (3:1-5:42)
 - A. Peter's Healing a Lame Beggar (3:1-11)
 - B. Peter's Sermon from Solomon's Colonnade (3:12-26)
 - C. Peter and John before the Sanhedrin (4:1-22)
 - D. The Prayer of the Community (4:23-31)
 - E. The Common Life of the Community (4:32-37)
 - F. A Serious Threat to the Common Life (5:1-11)
 - G. The Miracles Worked by the Apostles (5:12-16)
 - H. All the Apostles before the Council (5:17-42)
- III. The Hellenists Break through to a Wider Witness (6:1-8:40)
 - A. Introduction of the Seven (6:1-7)
 - B. Stephen's Arrest and Trial (6:8-7:1)
 - C. Stephen's Speech before the Sanhedrin (7:2-53)
 - D. Stephen's Martyrdom (7:54-8:1a)
 - E. Persecution and Dispersal of the Hellenists (8:1b-3)
 - F. The Witness of Philip (8:4-40)
- IV. Peter Joins the Wider Witness (9:1-12:25)
 - A. Paul's New Witness to Christ (9:1-31)
 - B. Peter's Witness in the Coastal Towns (9:32-43)
 - C. Peter's Witness to a Gentile Godfearer (10:1-11:18)
 - D. Antioch's Witness to Gentiles (11:19-30)
 - E. Persecution Again in Jerusalem (12:1-25)
- V. Paul Turns to the Gentiles (13:1-15:35)
 - A. Paul and Barnabas Commissioned (13:1-3)
 - B. Sergius Paulus's Conversion on Cyprus (13:4-12)
 - C. Paul's Address to the Synagogue at Pisidian Antioch (13:13-52)
 - D. Acceptance and Rejection at Iconium (14:1-7)
 - E. Preaching to Pagans at Lystra (14:8-21a)
 - F. The Missionaries' Return to Antioch (14:21b-28)
 - G. Debate in Jerusalem over Acceptance of Gentiles (15:1-35)
- VI. Paul Witnesses to the Greek World (15:36-18:22)

- A. Parting Company with Barnabas (15:36-41)
- B. Revisiting Derbe, Lystra, and Iconium (16:1-5)
- C. Called to Macedonia (16:6-10)
- D. Witness in Philippi (16:11-40)
- E. Churches Established in Thessalonica and Berea (17:1-15)
- F. Witness to the Athenian Intellectuals (17:16-34)
- G. A Church Established in Corinth (18:1-17)
- H. Return to Antioch (18:18-22)
- VII. Paul Encounters the Opposition of Gentiles and Jews (18:23-21:16)
 - A. Apollos in Ephesus (18:23-28)
 - B. Paul's Witness to the Disciples of John (19:1-7)
 - C. Paul's Preaching in Ephesus (19:8-12)
 - D. Paul's Encounter with False Religion in Ephesus (19:13-20)
 - E. Paul's Determination to Go to Jerusalem (19:21-22)
 - F. Opposition by the Craftsmen of Ephesus (19:23-41)
 - G. Paul's Journey to Jerusalem (20:1-21:16)
- VIII. Paul Witnesses before Gentiles, Kings, and the People of Israel (21:17-26:32)
 - A. Paul's Witness before the Jews (21:17-23:35)
 - B. Paul's Witness before Gentiles and the Jewish King (24:1-26:32)
- IX. Paul Witnesses to Jews and Gentiles without Hindrance (27:1-28:31)
 - A. Paul's Journey to Rome (27:1-28:16)
 - B. Paul's Witness in Rome (28:17-31)

John B. Polhill and Charles W. Draper

ADADAH [Ād' ā-dāh] Place-name of city in southeastern Judah (Josh. 15:22).

ADAH [Ā' dāh] Personal name meaning “adornment, ornament.” 1. Wife of Lamech and mother of Jabal and Jubal (Gen. 4:19-23). 2. Wife of Esau and mother of Edomite officials (Gen. 36:2-16).

ADAI AH [Ā-dī' ah] Personal name meaning “Yahweh has adorned.” 1. Grandfather of King Josiah (2 Kings 22:1). 2. A Levite, one of the family of temple singers (1 Chron. 6:41). 3. A Benjaminite (1 Chron. 8:21). 4. Priest who returned to Jerusalem from Babylon after the exile (1 Chron. 9:12). 5. Father of Maaseiah, who helped make young Joash king instead of Athaliah, the queen mother (2 Chron. 23:1). 6. Two men with foreign wives in time of Ezra (Ezra 10:29,39). 7. Member of the tribe of Judah in Jerusalem after the exile (Neh. 11:5). 8. Priest in the temple after the exile (Neh. 11:12), probably the same as 4.

ADALIA [Ādā·lī' a] Personal name of Persian origin. One of 10 sons of Haman, villain of the book of Esther, who was slain by Jews (Esther 9:8).

ADAM [Ād' am] Place-name of city near Jordan River, where waters of Jordan heaped up so Israel could cross over to conquer the land (Josh. 3:16). Its location is probably Tel ed-Damieh near the Jabbok River.

ADAM AND EVE First man and woman created by God from whom all other people are descended.

Old Testament The name Eve is related to the Hebrew word for “living,” but it occurs only as the name of the first woman. Adam means “man,” and in many places the Hebrew word refers to mankind in general. Genesis 1:27, for example, says, “So God created man [adam] in His own image; He created him in the image of God; He created them male and female” (HCSB; see also Gen. 5:2; 6:1). Adam is also used of the first man, either with the article as “the man” (Gen. 2:15-16) or as the name “Adam” (Gen. 4:1,25; 5:3-4). Finally, the term can refer to a member of the human race, “a man” (e.g., Gen. 2:5, “there was no man to work the ground”).

New Testament The name Adam also occurs in the NT in reference to the first man. Luke traces Jesus' genealogy back to Adam (Luke 3:38), and Paul refers to Jesus typologically as the last Adam (1 Cor. 15:45). As Adam was the beginning and representative head of humanity, Christ was the beginning and representative head of a new humanity.

Eve is mentioned two times in the NT. In 2 Cor. 11:3 she is used as an example of being lured away from the truth by Satan. In 1 Tim. 2:11-15 women are urged to devote themselves to learning in quiet submission rather than pressing for authoritative teaching roles in the church. The reason given is that Adam was created before Eve and that Eve was deceived into sinning. The deception that occurred in the garden that opened the door to sin, death, and corruption was caused in part by Adam passively letting Eve handle Satan by herself rather than his taking his appropriate role according to the created order and dealing with Satan on their behalf. Whether Adam would have been more successful we do not know. We do know that he failed in his responsibility as head of the family and head of the human race, bringing us down with him. So Paul instructs churches not to follow Adam's fatal example by placing women in the front lines in the role of teaching and exercising authority over men.

Theological Concerns The Apostle Paul in his Athens oration based his conviction regarding the unity of the human race on our relation to Adam: “From one man He has made every nation of men to live all over the earth” (Acts 17:26, HCSB).

Although much about the first man and woman was unique, the nature of sin has not changed (see Isa. 53:6), and the goals and strategies of the evil one are essentially the same (see 2 Cor. 11:3). Eve's temptation may be understood as a paradigm of our own, and the sinful corruption that permeates our world and our lives is the direct result of Adam's decision to disobey God. But Adam and Eve were also the first to learn that God had a plan of redemption by which one of their descendants would remove evil from the world (Gen. 3:15).

As the serpent claimed, sin did open their eyes (Gen. 3:5,7), but all that they saw was their own nakedness and alienation from each other. Shame and fear had displaced their innocence, and their first impulse was to cover themselves and hide (v. 10). The second immediate result of their sin was that the man and his wife could no longer walk with God (cp. Lev. 26:12; Ps. 89:15; Mic. 6:8). God's question directed to the man, whom He held primarily responsible, drove this point home. In effect, God asked (Gen. 3:9), “Why are you not walking with Me?”

The penalty suffered by the woman was to be twofold (3:16). First, there would be pain, anxiety, and trouble associated with bearing children. Second, there would be marital conflict.

Adam's sin was not that he listened to his wife but that he listened to her rather than to God (3:17). Like the woman's, the man's penalty would be twofold. First, as the serpent would have conflict with the woman, and the woman with the man, the man would have conflict with the ground, which would produce food for him only through pain, anxiety, and trouble. Second, he would eventually die and return to the dust (3:19), no longer having access to the tree of life (3:22). Although the woman would also die, the penalty was announced to the man because as the representative of the race he was the one responsible (Gen. 2:16-17; Ps. 90:3). Paul explained in Rom. 5:12, "Sin entered the world through one man, and death through sin." Furthermore, "through one trespass there is condemnation for everyone" (3:18). So in Gen. 5 the death knell of "then he died" is sounded eight times. Eve, on the other hand, would be the source of life as the one who would produce the deliverer (3:15). As Paul declared in Rom. 5:15, "If by the one man's trespass the many died, how much more have the grace of God and the gift overflowed to the many by the grace of the one man, Jesus Christ" (also 1 Cor. 15:22).

The consequences of Adam's sin fell not merely on the first family but on all mankind, and even the earth (Gen. 3:17; Rom. 8:19-21). Descent from Adam has resulted not only in physical death but in spiritual and moral corruption—"dead in your trespasses and sins"—and "by nature...children of wrath" (Eph. 2:1,3). Apart from Christ everyone is "darkened in their understanding, excluded from the life of God, because of the ignorance that is in them and because of the hardness of their hearts" (Eph. 4:18). This can ultimately be traced to Adam from whom all men have inherited a nature inclined toward sin. See Jesus Christ ; Judgment Day; Mercy; Sin; Wrath.

E. Ray Clendenen

ADAMAH [Ād' á-mah] Place-name and common noun meaning “soil, farmland.”

1. The earth or cultivated ground from whose dust God formed mankind, forming the wordplay Adam from dust of ‘adamah. (Gen. 2:7; cp. 2:19). Pottery was also made from the soil (Isa. 45:9), as were altars (Exod. 20:24). The dead return to the earth (Ps. 146:4), but the soil also produces harvests (Deut. 7:13; 11:7). 2. City in Naphtali's territory (Josh. 19:36) near where the Jordan River joins the Sea of Tiberias, perhaps modern Hagar ed-Damm.

ADAMANT See Minerals and Metals.

ADAMI [Ād' á-mi] or ADAMI-NEKEB (NASB, NIV, RSV, TEV) Place-name meaning “red earth” or “red earth pass.” Town in Naphtali's territory (Josh. 19:33), perhaps Khirbet Damiyeh north of Mount Tabor.

ADAR [Ā' dār] Twelfth month of Jewish calendar after the exile, including parts of February and March. Time of Festival of Purim established in Esther (9:21).

ADBEEL [Ād' bə-ēl] Personal name meaning “God invites.” Son of Ishmael and grandson of Abraham (Gen. 25:13).

ADDAN [Ād' dān] Personal name of one who returned from exile but could not prove he was of Israelite parents (Ezra 2:59). Also called Addon (Neh. 7:61).

ADDAR [Ād' dār] Place-name and personal name meaning “threshing floor.” 1. City on southwest border of Judah (Josh. 15:3). Also called Hazar-addar (Num. 34:4). 2. Benjamin's grandson (1 Chron. 8:3). Also called Ard (Gen. 46:21; Num. 26:40).

ADDER [Ād-der] See Asp; Reptiles.

ADDI (Ād' dī) Personal name meaning “adornment.” Hebrew equivalent is Iddo. Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:28).

ADDON See Addan.

ADER [Ā' dēr] (KJV) See Eder.

ADIEL [Ād' 1-ēl] Personal name meaning “an ornament is god.” 1. Important leader of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:36), a shepherd people. 2. Father of a priestly family in Jerusalem after the exile (1 Chron. 9:12). 3. Father of David's treasurer (1 Chron. 27:25).

ADIN [Ā' dīn] Personal name meaning “delightful, blissful, luxuriant.” 1. Ancestor of Jews who returned from exile with Zerubbabel and Joshua (Ezra 2:15; Neh. 7:20). 2. Ancestor of exiles who returned with Ezra (Ezra 8:6). 3. Signer of the covenant of Nehemiah to obey God's Law (Neh. 10:16).

ADINA [Ād' 1-nā] Personal name meaning “delightful, luxuriant.” A captain of 30 men in David's army from tribe of Reuben (1 Chron. 11:42).

ADINO [Ā-dī' nō] Personal name meaning “loving luxury.” Chief of David's captains who slew 800 men at one time (2 Sam. 23:8). Name does not appear in Septuagint, earliest Greek translation of this passage, nor in the Hebrew text of the parallel passage in 1 Chron. 11:11. Some modern translators omit it from 2 Sam. 23:8 (NIV, RSV, TEV).

ADITHAIM [Ādī-thā' 1m] Place-name meaning “elevated place.” City Joshua allotted to Judah (Josh. 15:36). Its location is not known.

ADLAI [Ād' la-1] Personal name of father of one of David's chief shepherds (1 Chron. 27:29).

ADMAH [Ād' māh] Place-name meaning “red soil.” City connected with Sodom and Gomorrah as border of Canaanite territory (Gen. 10:19). Its king was defeated along with kings of Sodom and Gomorrah by coalition of four eastern kings (Gen. 14). God destroyed Admah, one of “the cities of the plains” (Gen. 19:29), along with Sodom and Gomorrah (Deut. 29:23). God could not stand to treat Israel, the people He loved, like He had treated Admah, even though Israel's behavior resembled Admah's (Hos. 11:8). Admah may have been located under what is now the southern part of the Dead Sea.

ADMATHA [Ād-mā' thá] Personal name in Persian meaning “unconquered.” One of the leading advisors to King Ahasuerus (Xerxes) of Persia (Esther 1:14).

ADMIN [Ād' mīn] Personal name in best Greek manuscripts of Luke 3:33 in the ancestry of Jesus but not in those available to KJV translators. Thus Admin appears in NASB, RSV, TEV, but not in KJV, HCSB, or NIV (see text notes).

ADMINISTRATION Spiritual gift that God gives to some members to build up the church (1 Cor. 12:28 NASB, NIV, RSV; HCSB “managing”), called “governments” in KJV. The Greek word kubernesis occurs only here in the Greek NT. It describes the ability to lead or hold a position of leadership.

NASB translates Hebrew idiom “to do justice” as “administer justice” (2 Sam. 8:15; 1 Kings 3:28; 1 Chron. 18:14). Similarly, NASB translates the idiom “to judge justice” as “administer justice” (Jer. 21:12). NIV goes further with other Hebrew and Aramaic idioms translated as “administer.” The person called in Hebrew “who is over the house” NIV calls the “palace administrator” (2 Kings 10:5). The OT seeks to lead people in authority to establish a society in which God's law brings fairness and justice to all people without favoritism and prejudice.

KJV speaks of differences of administrations (1 Cor. 12:5), translating the Greek diakonia, “services” (NIV, RSV) or “ministries” (NASB, HCSB). Leading a church involves ministering to or serving the needs of its members.

ADNA [Ād' nā] Aramaic personal name meaning “joy of living.” 1. Postexile Israelite with a foreign wife (Ezra 10:30). 2. Postexilic priest (Neh. 12:15).

ADNAH [Ād' nāh] Personal name meaning “joy of living.” 1. Military leader from the tribe of Manasseh who joined David at Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:20). 2. Military leader of Judah stationed in Jerusalem under Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 17:14).

ADONI-BEZEK [Ād' ·ō-ni-bē' zek] Personal name meaning “lord of Bezek,” a place-name meaning “lightning” or “fragments.” Canaanite king of Bezek. Tribe of Judah defeated him and cut off his thumbs and big toes, a sign of humiliation, before taking him to Jerusalem. There he died (Judg. 1:5-7). See Bezek

ADONIJAH [Ād'·ō-ni' jāh] Personal name meaning “Yah is Lord.” 1. Fourth son of David. His mother's name was Haggith (2 Sam. 3:4). In David's old age Adonijah maneuvered to succeed his father on the throne of Israel, but his effort failed (1 Kings 1:5-50). After Solomon's accession to the throne, Adonijah gave renewed expression to his regal aspirations by asking for Abishag, David's nurse, as a wife. Solomon's response to this request was to have Adonijah put to death (1 Kings 2:13-28). Adonijah sought to establish hereditary kingship for Israel in which the eldest son automatically became king. Nathan, the prophet, worked with David and Bathsheba to establish a kingship in which the wishes of the dying monarch and the election by God determined the new king. See David. 2. Levite that Jehoshaphat sent to teach the people of Judah the book of the law (2 Chron. 17:8). 3. Leader of the Jews after the exile who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:16).

ADONIKAM [Ād'·ō-ni' kam] Personal name meaning “the Lord has arisen.” Family head of 666 persons who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel from Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:13). Some members of the family returned with Ezra under Xerxes (Ezra 8:13; cp. 7:18). Some Bible students think Adonikam is the same person as Adonijah in Neh. 10:16.

ADONIRAM [Ād'·ō-ni' ram] Personal name meaning “the Lord is exalted.” Officer in charge of the work gangs Solomon conscripted from Israel (1 Kings 4:6; 5:14). The king forced Israel's citizens to work for the state to secure materials to build the temple and the other projects of Solomon. Apparently the same person continued administering the work force for Rehoboam, though his name is abbreviated to Adoram in 1 Kings 12:18. At that time Israel rebelled against making free citizens work. They stoned Adoniram to death. The name is spelled Hadoram in 2 Chron. 10:18.

ADONIS [Ā dō' nīs] God of vegetation and fertility with Syrian name meaning “lord.” Worshiped in Greece and Syria. Rites seem to include the planting of seeds that quickly produced plants and that just as quickly wilted in the sun. These were used to symbolize the dying and rising of the god and to bring blessing upon crops. Similar rites were celebrated for Osiris in Egypt and possibly for Tammuz in Babylon. REB translates Isa. 17:10 as “your gardens in honour of Adonis.” The Hebrew term appears only here, being related to the personal name Naaman and to the Hebrew word meaning “lovely, pleasant, agreeable.” Other translations read “finest plants” (NIV), “pleasant plants” (KJV), “delightful plants” (NASB), “sacred gardens” (TEV), “pleasant plants” (NRSV).

ADONI-ZEDEK [Ād' ō-ni-zē-dēk] Personal name meaning “the Lord is righteous” or “the god Zedek is lord.” King of Jerusalem who gathered coalition of Canaanite kings to fight Gibeon after Joshua made a peace treaty with Gibeon (Josh. 10). Joshua marched to Gibeon's aid and defeated the coalition. Joshua made a public example of the kings before executing them (10:22-26). He exposed their bodies on trees, a further sign of humiliation, since it postponed burial.

ADOPTION Legal process whereby one person receives another into his family and confers upon that person familial privileges and advantages. The “adopter” assumes parental responsibility for the “adoptee.” The “adoptee” is thereby considered an actual child, becoming the beneficiary of all the rights, privileges, and responsibilities afforded to all the children of the family.

References to adoption in the OT are rare. Old Testament law did not contain specific legislation concerning the adoption of children. Further, the Hebrew language possesses no technical term for the practice. Its explicit absence among the Israelites may be explained in part by alternatives to infertile marriages. Levirate marriages lessened the need for adoption, and the principle of maintaining property within the tribe (Lev. 25:23-34; Num. 27:8-11; Jer. 32:6-15) allayed some of the fears of childless parents.

Although adoption is not overtly mentioned in the OT, allusions to the concept do exist. Jacob declares to Joseph, “And now your two sons, who were born to you in the land of Egypt before I came to you in Egypt, are mine; Ephraim and Manasseh shall be mine, as Reuben and Simeon are” (Gen. 48:5 NASB). The notion of sonship to Yahweh played a crucial role in the covenantal identity of the nation of Israel. “Then you shall say to Pharaoh, 'Thus says the LORD: “Israel is My son, My first-born. So I said to you, 'Let My son go, that he may serve me’”’” (Exod. 4:22-23 NASB). The idea is also found among the prophets: “When Israel was a youth I loved him, and out of Egypt I called My son” (Hos. 11:1 NASB). Adoption as a covenantal concept was applicable to the Israelites as a corporate whole; it was not perceived as the adoption of individual Israelites.

The concept of adoption finds its fullest expression in the NT. In Paul's thought it carries various implications. In Rom. 9:4, adoption refers to Israel's unique relationship to Yahweh; in Rom. 8:23, adoption has connotations for future bodily resurrection; and in Rom. 8:15, adoption refers to becoming children of God. Thus, as God's children, the Holy Spirit (1) bears witness in the hearts of believers that they are “God's children” (Rom. 8:16 HCSB); (2) works in the hearts of believers, making possible intimacy with God as Father (Gal. 4:6); and (3) provides personal direction as believers “walk...according to the Spirit” (Rom. 8:4 HCSB). Paul contrasts the unique relationship conferred upon the believer through God's adoptive work to that of the slave who lives, works, and relates in fear (Rom. 8:15). Those adopted by God into His family are “heirs of God” and “joint heirs” with Christ, receiving all the blessings, benefits, and privileges attained by the sacrifice of the Son of God (Rom. 8:17).

Although primarily developed in Paul, certain aspects of adoption are found in other places in the NT. Adoption is implicit in Jesus' teaching concerning God as Father (Matt. 5:16; 6:9; Luke 12:32). The conferral of family benefits upon an adoptee is an expression of the Living Word's authority (John 1:12) and is in keeping with His mission to bring “many sons to glory” (Heb. 2:10 HCSB). Thus, Jesus is not ashamed to call believers “brothers” (Heb. 2:11).

Adoption becomes the primary way that the believers live and relate to God and other believers. Adoption is an action of the Father (Gal. 4:6; Rom. 8:15) and is based on the love of the Father (Eph. 1:5; 1 John 3:1). The basis of this activity of God is the atoning work of Jesus Christ (Gal. 3:26). Adoption involves peacemaking (Matt. 5:9) and compels the believer to become Christlike (1 John 3:2). As an expression of the familial relationship, God as Father disciplines His children (Heb. 12:5-11). Believers are to regard all those who have come to Christ by grace through faith as members of God's family (1 Tim. 5:1-2). See Regeneration; Salvation.

Stan Norman

ADORAIM [Ā-dō-rā' ım] Place-name meaning “double strength.” City located at modern Durah, six miles southwest of Hebron. Rehoboam fortified the city and placed troops and supplies there as part of a massive defense building program (2 Chron. 11:9). See Rehoboam.

ADORAM [Ā-dō' rām]. See Adoniram.

ADRAMMELECH [Ā-drām' mə-lēk] Divine and personal name meaning “Adra is king.” Probably based on earlier form Hadadmelech, “Hadad is king,” using name of Canaanite god. 1. A god of the city of Sepharvaim. The Assyrian king Sargon spread the people of Israel all over his empire and replaced them with settlers from other cities he conquered (2 Kings 17:24). These new settlers tried to worship Yahweh, Israel's God, as the god of the land along with the gods they brought with them. One of these gods was from the city of Sephervaim, possibly in Assyria. His worshipers sacrificed their own children to this Semitic god (17:31-33). 2. Murderer of Sennacherib, king of Assyria, during the king's worship in the temple of Nisroch (2 Kings 19:37). One reading of the Hebrew manuscripts describes this Adrammelech as Sennacherib's son (KJV, NIV, RSV). Other manuscripts do not have “his sons” (NASB).

ADRAMYTTIUM [Ā-d-rā-myt' tī-ūm] or ADRAMYTTIAN (NASB) Place-name of a seaport on the northwest coast of modern Turkey in the Roman province of Asia. Paul used a ship whose home port was Adramyttium to make the first leg of his journey from Caesarea to Italy to appeal his case to Caesar (Acts 27:2). The ancient site is near modern-day Edremit.

ADRIA [Ā' dri-ā] or ADRIATIC SEA (NASB, NIV) During Paul's time the designated body of water between Crete and Sicily where Paul's ship was battered by gale-force winds and resultant high waves for 14 days as he sailed toward Rome to appeal his case to Caesar (Acts 27:27). Later the Adriatic Sea was extended to cover the waters between Greece and Italy.

ADRIEL [Ā' dri-el] Personal name meaning “God is my help.” Saul's daughter Merab was promised as David's wife but then given to Adriel from Meholah, on the northern Jordan River (1 Sam. 18:19). His five sons David gave to the Gibeonites, who hanged them in revenge for unexplained actions Saul had taken against Gibeon (2 Sam. 21:1-9).

ADULLAM [Ā-dōl' lam] Place-name meaning “sealed off place.” City five miles south of Bethshemesh in Judah, probably modern Tell eshSheikh Madkur. Joshua conquered it (Josh. 12:15), though no account of its conquest appears in the Bible. Hirah, a friend of Judah, son of Jacob, was from Adullam (Gen. 38:1,12). He took the sheep Judah had pledged to Tamar and discovered Tamar did not live where they first encountered her (38:20-22). David escaped to the cave at Adullam when he feared Achish, king of Gath (1 Sam. 22:1). There David collected an army from the lower class and outcasts of society. There he assembled an army against the Philistines (2 Sam. 23:13). Micah, the prophet, used David's experience almost 300 years later to warn his people that again their glorious king would have to flee to the caves of Adullam to escape an enemy who would take possession of the country because of Judah's sin (Mic. 1:15). In his build-up of Judah's defenses, King Rehoboam, Solomon's son, rebuilt Adullam's defenses, stationed soldiers, and stored supplies at Adullam (2 Chron. 11:7). After returning from the exile, some members of the tribe of Judah lived at Adullam (Neh. 11:30).

ADULTERY Act of unfaithfulness in marriage that occurs when one of the marriage partners voluntarily engages in sexual intercourse with a person other than the marriage partner.

Old Testament Israel's covenant law prohibited adultery (Exod. 20:14) and thereby made faithfulness to the marriage relationship central in the divine will for human relationships. Many OT regulations deal with adultery as the adulterous man's offense against the husband of the adulterous wife. Yet both the adulterous man and woman were viewed as guilty, and the punishment of death was prescribed for both (Lev. 20:10). The severity of the punishment indicates the serious consequences adultery has for the divine-human relationship (Ps. 51:4) as well as for marriage, family, and community relationships.

Several OT prophets used adultery as a metaphor to describe unfaithfulness to God. Idolatry (Ezek. 23:27) and other pagan religious practices (Jer. 3:6-10) were viewed as adulterous unfaithfulness to the exclusive covenant that God established with His people. To engage in such was to play the harlot (Hos. 4:11-14).

New Testament Jesus' teachings expanded the OT law to address matters of the heart. Adultery has its origins within (Matt. 15:19), and lust is as much a violation of the law's intent as is illicit sexual intercourse (Matt. 5:27-28). Adultery is one of the “works of the flesh” (Gal. 5:19). It creates enmity with God (James 4:4), and adulterers will not inherit the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6:9).

Adulterers can be forgiven (John 8:3-11); and once sanctified through repentance, faith, and God's grace, they are included among God's people (1 Cor. 6:9-11). See Divorce; Marriage.

Michael Fink

ADUMMIM [Ā-dum' mīm] Place-name meaning “red ones.” A rocky pass on the road descending from Jerusalem to Jericho located at modern Tal'at ed-damm. It formed the border of Judah and Benjamin in the tribal allotments Joshua made (Josh. 15:7; 18:17). Today the Inn of the Good Samaritan is there because late traditions locate the Good Samaritan narrative there (Luke 10:30-37).

ADVENT Word with Latin roots, meaning “coming.” Christians of earlier generations spoke of “the advent of our Lord” and of “His second advent.” The first phrase refers to God's becoming incarnate in Jesus of Nazareth. The latter phrase speaks of Jesus' second coming. In a second sense “advent” designates a period before Christmas when Christians prepare for the celebration of Jesus' birth. This practice may have begun in some churches as early as the late fourth century. Advent began as a time of fasting. Sermons focused on the wonder of the Incarnation. By the Middle Ages four Sundays had become the standard length of the Advent season. Since then, Advent has been considered to be the beginning of the church year. See Church Year; Parousia; Second Coming.

Fred A. Grissom and Steve Bond

ADVENTURESS RSV translation of nokriya, which is also translated as “strange woman” (KJV), “adulterous woman” (Prov. 23:27 NASB), “wayward wife” (NIV), “adulteress” (NRSV), “forbidden woman” (HCSB), and “immoral women” (TEV) in Prov. 2:16; 5:20; 6:24; 7:5; 23:27. Some see an adventuress as a woman who lives in part by her wits but largely based upon sex. Others describe her as a woman who seeks social advancement or wealth by seduction or other immoral means. Solomon's wives were called nokriyot—that is, foreign wives (1 Kings 11:1,8), so the term may refer to women cut off or ostracized from Israelite society and normal social relationships. They are feared as ones that break up marriages.

ADVERSARY Enemy, either human or satanic. Psalmists often prayed for deliverance from adversaries (Pss. 38:20; 69:19; 71:13; 81:14; 109:29). The devil is the greatest adversary and must be resisted (1 Pet. 5:8-9).

ADVOCATE One who intercedes on behalf of another. Used to refer to Christ interceding with the Father on behalf of sinners.

Old Testament While the word “advocate” is not found in the OT, the concept of advocacy is found. Abraham interceded with God on behalf of Sodom (Gen. 18:23-33); Moses interceded with God on behalf of the Israelites (Exod. 32:11-14); Samuel interceded with God on behalf of the children of Israel (1 Sam. 7:8-9). Other examples may be found in Jer. 14:7-9,13,19-22 and Amos 7:2,5-6. Modern translators often use “advocate” to refer to Job's desire for a heavenly attorney to plead his case even though he die (Job 16:19).

New Testament “Advocate” is the translation often given to the Greek parakletos in 1 John 2:1, a word found elsewhere only in John's Gospel as a title referring to the Holy Spirit, and there translated “Helper,” “Comforter,” “Counselor,” or “Advocate” (John 14:16,26; 15:26; 16:7). Ancient Greeks used the term for one called in to assist or speak for another, frequently in a court setting. Rabbis transliterated the word into Hebrew, using it to denote an advocate before God. First John portrayed a courtroom scene in which Jesus Christ, the righteous One, interceded with the Father on behalf of sinners. Such a portrayal stands in line with OT ideas of advocacy but supersedes it. In contrast to OT advocates, Jesus is both the one righteous Advocate and the “atoning sacrifice” (NIV) for the world's sins (1 John 2:2). First John 2:1 parallels other NT descriptions of Jesus' intercessory role (Rom. 8:34; Heb. 7:25). See Helper; High Priest; Intercession; Jesus Christ; Paraclete.

R. Robert Creech

AENEAS [Ā-nē' ās] Personal name of a paralyzed man Peter healed at Lydda (Acts 9:33-34), resulting in great evangelistic victories in the area.

AENON [Aē' nōn] Place-name meaning “double spring.” The location where John the Baptist was baptizing during the time that Jesus was baptizing in Judea (John 3:23). The biblical text indicates that Aenon was a place richly endowed with water near Salim, which precise location is unknown. The most likely location of Aenon was in a broad open valley called Wadi-Farah, west of the Jordan and northeast of Nablus.

AFFLICTION Condition of physical or mental distress. While the source and purpose of affliction may vary, the Bible describes the state of affliction with many terms. In the OT the Hebrew language uses as many as 13 words that may be translated “affliction.”

Old Testament The OT identifies many forms of affliction, including: national affliction, resulting from the oppression of a political entity (Exod. 1:11; Neh. 9:9); social affliction, resulting from a perversion of the law (Job 5:4; 22:9; Pss. 10:18; 74:11; 94:23; Isa. 3:15); moral affliction, as God's retribution for sin (Job 4:7-9; Ps. 25:16-20; Lam. 3:32-33; Isa. 30:20; Jer. 30:15); natural affliction (Gen. 16:11; 29:32; Ps. 25:18); and spiritual affliction (1 Sam. 16:14; Job 1:6-12).

New Testament Three Greek words may be used for “affliction.” “Suffering” is sometimes used interchangeably for the word “affliction,” particularly in the KJV. NT reasons for affliction include: God's use to induce humility (2 Cor. 12:7); God's use to promote holiness (1 Pet. 1:6-7; 4:1-2); eschatological endurance (Rom. 5:3-4; James 1:3-4); experience for the instruction of others (2 Cor. 1:3-4); natural causes (James 1:27); persecution because of faithfulness to Christ (2 Cor. 6:4; 1 Thess. 1:6); discipline for the purpose of Christian maturity (Heb. 12:6); and pain resulting from personal sin (Gal. 6:7).

Affliction throughout Scripture serves as a remembrance of God's supreme sovereignty (Job 42:2-4). Affliction can be an individual matter (Phil. 4:14) or a corporate condition (Exod. 3:7; 2 Cor. 8:1-2). One may experience affliction directly (Deut. 16:3) or indirectly (James 1:27). Affliction is sometimes described as overflowing all of life (Pss. 42:7; 69:1; 88:7; 124:4; Isa. 30:20; Jon. 2:5).

Although affliction seems an inevitable fact of human existence, the believer may find comfort in affliction by remembering that God sees and knows the affliction of His people (Gen. 29:32; 31:42; Exod. 3:7; 2 Kings 14:26; Acts 7:34), that affliction will end (2 Cor. 4:17), and that God can deliver from any affliction (Exod. 3:17).

As a response to affliction, the believer should pray to the Lord (Ps. 25:18; Lam. 1:9; James 5:13); comfort others (James 1:27; Phil. 4:14); remain faithful through patient endurance (2 Cor. 6:4; 1 Tim. 4:5; James 1:2,12; 1 Pet. 4:13); cultivate an attitude of joy (James 1:2); and follow the example of Jesus Christ (1 Pet. 2:19-23).

The purpose of affliction is to show the power of Christ (2 Cor. 12:8-9). The discipline of affliction produces strong faith. The end of affliction is the salvation of God's people. Christ's affliction in His atoning sacrifice and the continued affliction of His people will end in the exaltation of God and consummation of His kingdom (Col. 1:24; 2 Tim. 2:10).

Mark M. Overstreet

AFTERBIRTH Placenta and fetal membranes that are expelled after delivery (Deut. 28:57).

AGABUS [Āg' a-būs] Personal name meaning “locust.” Prophet in the Jerusalem church who went to visit the church at Antioch and predicted a universal famine. His prophecy was fulfilled about 10 years later in the reign of Claudius Caesar (Acts 11:27-29). His prediction led the church at Antioch to begin a famine relief ministry for the church in Jerusalem. Later Agabus went to Caesarea and predicted that the Jews in Jerusalem would arrest Paul (Acts 21:10-11). Still Paul's friends could not persuade him not to go to Jerusalem.

AGAG [Ā' gāg] Personal name means “fiery one.” He was king of the Amalekites, a tribal people living in the Negev and in the Sinai Peninsula. The Amalekites had attacked the Israelites in the wilderness and were therefore cursed (Exod. 17:14). In 1 Sam. 15:8, Saul destroyed all the Amalekites but King Agag. Since the Lord had ordered the complete destruction of the Amalekites, Samuel, Saul's priest, rebuked Saul for his disobedience and reported God's rejection of Saul as king. Then Samuel himself executed Agag.

In Num. 24:7 Agag is used to refer to the Amalekite people. Agag was a common name among Amalekite kings much as Pharaoh among Egyptian rulers.

AGAGITE [Ā' gāg-īt] Apparently, the term means a descendant of Agag. Only Haman, the archvillain in the book of Esther, is called an Agagite (Esther 3:1). Agagite is probably a synonym for Amalekite. See Agag.

AGAPE See Love; Lord's Supper.

AGAR (KJV, NT) See Hagar.

AGATE Translucent quartz with concentric bands, generally white and brown. “Agate” translates three words in the Bible: a stone in the breastpiece of judgment (Exod. 28:19; 39:12), the material in the pinnacles of Jerusalem (Isa. 54:12; Ezek. 27:16), and the third jewel in the foundation wall of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:19). See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

AGEE [Ā' gee] Personal name, perhaps meaning “camel thorn.” Father of one of David's three chief commanders (2 Sam. 23:11).

AGE TO COME The expression “age to come” or “coming age[s]” is found in the Apocrypha (2 Esdras 7:113; 8:52) and several times in the NT (Matt. 12:32; Mark 10:30; Luke 18:30; Eph. 1:21; 2:7; 1 Tim. 6:19; Heb. 6:5). It is usually either explicitly or implicitly considered in opposition to “this age” or “the present age” (Matt. 12:32; Luke 16:8; 20:34-35; 1 Cor. 2:6-8; 2 Cor. 4:4; Gal. 1:4; Eph. 1:21; 2:2; 1 Tim. 6:17; 2 Tim. 4:10; Titus 2:12). The expression “the end of the age” (Matt. 13:39-40,49; 24:3; 28:20) refers to the end of the present age and therefore relates to the age to come.

There is evidence that the biblical writers also viewed this age since the coming of Christ as an era transitional to a time when human history will in some sense come to an end. Thus the present time could also be described as “the end[s] of the ages” (1 Cor. 10:11; Heb. 9:26). In some sense the coming age has already dawned (1 Cor. 10:11; 2 Cor. 5:17), so that being in Christ makes one no longer truly part of the present age (Luke 16:8; 1 Cor. 1:20; 3:18; Phil. 3:20; Heb. 6:5), although the coming age is not yet fully here (1 Cor. 15:20-28). The distinction, then, between the present age and the coming age is not strictly temporal.

The concept of a former age is implied in which the OT prophets and types announced the present messianic age (Luke 1:70; Acts 3:21; 15:18; Heb. 9:9-10). The expression “before the ages” is also found, referring to eternity past before God created the world and human history began (1 Cor. 2:7).

In the OT a coming age of divine deliverance and blessing is referred to as “that day” or as coming “days” as in Jer. 30:3 (“For, behold, days are coming,” declares the LORD, ‘when I will restore the fortunes of My people Israel and Judah.’ The LORD says, ‘I will also bring them back to the land that I gave to their forefathers, and they shall possess it’”); cp. Isa. 11:1-12:6; Jer. 23:3-8; 31:27-34; Ezek. 37:21-28; Amos 9:11-15). See also Eschatology.

E. Ray Clendenen

AGING Natural process of human beings growing older and, according to the Bible, gaining respect.

Old Testament References to aging persons in the OT stress the physiological changes of aging (1 Kings 14:4; 2 Sam. 19:35; Eccles. 12:1-5; Zech. 8:4), the wisdom of the aging (Deut. 32:7; Job 12:12), the honor due the aging (Exod. 20:12; Lev. 19:32), and the continuing service of the aging (Gen. 12-50, the patriarchs; Josh. 13:1; 14:10; Ps. 92:14; Joel 2:28). Aging is presented as a normal part of the biblical view of the life cycle (Ps. 90:10; Isa. 46:4). See Elder.

New Testament References to aging persons in the NT focus on the responsibility of children or the family of faith to care for dependent or disabled aging persons (Mark 7:1-13; Matt. 15:1-6; 1 Tim. 5:4,8; James 1:27). The young are urged to honor the aging (1 Tim. 5:1-2), and the aging are encouraged to be worthy examples (Titus 2:2-3). Christians are expected to care for widows (Acts 6:1-7), and the aging are expected to serve God as did Zechariah, Elizabeth, Simeon, and Anna in Luke 1-2. Such service by the aging can bring blessings to their families, as did Timothy's grandmother and mother (2 Tim. 1:5).

Practical Concerns The biblical view of aging is unequivocally positive, though allowing for the possibility that an older person can be foolish (Eccles. 4:13). Generally older persons have a reservoir of wisdom and understanding based on past experience (Deut. 32:7). They can experience new family joys, even after many previous sad experiences (Ruth 4:13-17). Both youth and age have their unique worth; they are not in competition (Prov. 20:29). While advancing age results in diminishing strength (Eccles. 12:1-8), God's grace and help are available to persons in each stage of life (Isa. 46:4).

Douglas Anderson

AGRAPHIA Unwritten things, used since about 1700 to denote words of Jesus not written in the four canonical Gospels. Some examples are Acts 20:35 and 1 Cor. 11:24-25. More are found in apocryphal writings, Gnostic Gospels, the Talmud, the Islamic sources, Oxyrhynchus Papyri, and the church fathers. Some scholars suggest that the canonical gospels may rely in part on these sayings. Scholars regard most sayings as expansions of the gospel tradition or creations by subsequent followers of Jesus, though a few of them may be authentic.

Joe Baskin

AGRICULTURE Cultivating the land to grow food. The people of both the OT and NT periods were essentially agrarian. Even those who lived in towns were close to the country and usually owned gardens or farms. With the seasons as a background to their daily life, the religious calendar was partly based on the agricultural year with several festivals coinciding with significant events such as the Feast of Weeks or first fruits (of wheat, Exod. 32:11 NRSV) and the Feast of Tabernacles or ingathering (of grapes, Lev. 23:34). The primary crops include grain, grapes, and olives (Gen. 27:28; Deut. 7:13; Joel 1:10).

How were grains cultivated? Grain crops were the staple food of rich and poor alike, although the poor may have had to consume barley bread rather than the more palatable wheat. Both were sown by scattering the grains into prepared land usually ploughed by draft animals. The parable of the sower (Matt. 13:3-23; Luke 8:5-15) provides an interesting account of grain sowing and the subsequent fate of the seed. Peasant agriculture, unlike modern farming practices, was unsophisticated with primitive implements often used in harsh conditions where rocky ground and vigorous weeds militated against a good yield. Hence it would be normal for some of the scattered seed to fall on a path of compacted soil where it would not be covered and lie vulnerable to birds. Similarly, some seeds would fall at the margins of the fields where thorny thickets and rapidly growing thistles easily suffocated the germinating wheat. Shallow soil and lack of moisture during the hot dry summer encouraged the withering of the seeds that did sprout into young plants on the field's outer borders. Those seeds that fell on moist, deep soil grew and matured their ears ready for harvest.

Woman gathering grain.

The book of Ruth provides a vivid picture of the harvesting scene that was carried out by whole families and extra hired men, followed by poor women gleaners picking leftovers. Barley was harvested first during April and May, followed by wheat a month later. A sickle was used to cut off the ears which were held with one hand, and then bundled together in small sheaves to be carted off to the threshing floor (1 Chron. 21:22)—a cleared area of stamped earth or stone. Animals, usually cattle, were driven over the spread-out stalks to trample out the grains. Often a cartwheel or a heavy sledge with small stones inserted in the bottom was drawn round and round the floor to hasten the threshing. The grains were swept together and separated from the useless chaff by winnowing—a process involving the throwing up of the grain in breezy weather so that the light scaly chaff is blown away, leaving a pile of clean grain ready for grinding into flour (Matt. 3:12). A proportion of the crop was always kept aside and carefully stored in dry conditions for sowing the following year (Gen. 47:24).

How did the agriculture of Egypt differ from that of Canaan? The essential difference between Egyptian and Canaanite agriculture was that Canaan depended on rainfall (Deut. 11:11), while Egypt depended on the Nile River and its annual flood (Amos 8:8). In other words, Canaan was a rain-fed agriculture, while Egypt used irrigation agriculture. In July the Nile rose following rainfall in Ethiopia and flooded the land on both sides. (Now the modern Aswan Dam impounds the water and releases it evenly throughout the year.) The flood carried silt that enriched the farmland; and the water level fell later in the year, leaving behind pools of water that could be used for irrigation in channels small enough to be opened and closed by a farmer's foot (Deut. 11:10). Egypt was renowned for its rich harvests of wheat and vegetables that were missed by the Israelites fleeing the country via the desert of Sinai. There the Israelites longed for the succulent melons, cucumbers, garlic, leeks, and onions they left behind (Num. 11:5).

Were vineyards for growing grapevines? The Bible presents two accounts of vineyards that describe them in some detail. In Isa. 5:1-7 and Mark 12:1-9 we read how the hillside was fenced and terraced to provide deep stone-free soil where the rainfall could water the vines' roots in winter. Dung and compost nourished the plants that needed to be trained over rocks or fences. Constant attention had to be given to the trailing branches of carefully chosen varieties in order to yield sweet green or black grapes. As harvest time approached, the owners of the vineyards and their families camped near the vineyards in shelters (booths) or in stone-built towers (Isa. 1:8) to protect the grapes from animals, such as jackals (foxes) and wild pigs (boar) (Ps. 80:13) and human thieves. When ripe, the grapes were picked for eating fresh (Isa. 65:21), drying in the sun as raisins (1 Sam. 30:12), or crushed for wine. Most vineyards had a winepress where the grapes were trodden under human foot (Neh. 13:15; Rev. 19:15), the juice collected in flagons or skins and fermented (Matt. 9:17). Fermentation was caused by naturally occurring yeast (Saccharomyces) breaking down the sugars into alcohol and carbon dioxide gas. During the winter the long shoots of the previous year's growth had to be pruned away from the vines to leave a few buds for the next season (John 15:2).

How long do olive trees live? The huge trees in the garden of Gethsemane (Matt. 26:36) on the Mount of Olives in Jerusalem are hundreds of years old and could potentially stretch back to NT times. During the siege of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, the Roman forces under Titus felled all the trees, presumably including the olives which could have sprouted again (Ps. 123:3) to yield the aged hollow trees still growing around Jerusalem.

Olive trees are not raised from seeds because the seedlings invariably produce very inferior ones similar to the wild stock. Selected cuttings are rooted or more often grafted on to the wild plant that has a better root system. Olive roots spread widely to gain nourishment on rocky hillsides; hence the trees are often well spaced. Although flowering begins when the trees are less than 10 years old, full yield of fruit is not reached until they are 40 or 50 years old, after which branches are pruned to encourage new fruitful growth. Olives require a Mediterranean type of climate of moist cool winters and hot dry summers to be economically productive.

Olive groves usually had an oil press nearby where the heavy stone wheel crushed the fruit and its hard kernel. The pulp was placed in a press that extracted the precious yellow oil. This was used for cooking purposes as an essential part of diet (Deut. 7:13, 2 Kings 4:5, 2 Chron. 2:10). Olive oil was rubbed over skin and hair (Pss. 23:5; 133:2; 141:5) and used for anointing guests (Luke 7:46; 1 Kings 1:34). Christ was God's "anointed" one (Ps. 2:2; John 1:41; Acts 4:27), anointing being symbolic of the Holy Spirit (Isa. 61:1; Acts 10:38). Medicinally, olive oil mixed with antiseptic wine healed wounds (Luke 10:34, James 5:14). Taken internally, olive oil soothed gastric disorders and acted as a laxative. Olive oil was used as fuel for lamps with a wick made of flax, producing a bright flame when lit (Exod. 25:6; Matt. 25:34).

What animals were used in agriculture? Mainly cows (oxen) were used to pull carts (1 Sam. 6:7) and simple wooden plows (Job 1:14; 1 Sam. 14:14) tipped with iron, if farmers could afford them (Isa. 2:4). Oxen and donkeys (asses) were driven over the harvested grain to thresh it. The use of horses and camels in agriculture appears to have been limited, presumably because they were more valuable animals, well adapted for carrying heavy loads and for use in time of war. When pairs of animals were used, they were coupled with a wooden yoke across their shoulders (Jer. 28:13; Luke 14:19).

F. Nigel Hepper

AGRIPPA See Herod.

AGUE KJV translation of Hebrew word meaning “burning with fever.” The Hebrew term appears in Lev. 26:16 and Deut. 28:22, KJV translating “fever” in the second passage.

AGUR [Ā' gŭr] Personal name meaning “hired hand.” Author of at least part of Prov. 30.

AHAB [Ā' hāb] Personal name meaning “father's brother.”1. The seventh king of Israel's Northern Kingdom, married a foreigner, Jezebel, and incited God's anger more than any of Israel's previous kings. Ahab was the son and successor of Omri. His 22-year reign (874-853 B.C.), while enjoying some political and military success, was marred by spiritual compromise and failure (1 Kings 16:30).

Ahab's palace.

Ahab's marriage to Jezebel, a Phoenician princess, had both commercial and political benefits. Commercially, it brought desired goods to Samaria and opened the way for expanded sea trade. Politically, it removed any military threat from Phoenicia.

During Ahab's days Israel enjoyed peace with Judah, largely as a result of a marriage he arranged between princess Athaliah and Joram, the crown prince of Judah. The resulting alliance produced cooperative efforts in sea trade (1 Kings 22:48; 2 Chron. 20:35-37) and a joint military campaign to recapture Ramoth-gilead, which had fallen under Aramean control (1 Kings 22:2-40).

Throughout his reign effective control was maintained over Moab, producing revenue extracted by tribute, a tax the Moabite king paid to maintain his position (2 Kings 3:4). The oppression of Moab under Ahab and his father Omri found expression in the famous Moabite Stone.

Ahab was successful in two major campaigns against the Syrian king, Ben-hadad, but was mortally wounded in the third. His participation in the great battle of Qarqar (853 B.C.), though not mentioned in the Bible, is recorded on an inscription of Shalmaneser III of Assyria. According to Shalmaneser, Ahab committed 2,000 chariots and 10,000 men to the battle.

The days of Ahab in Samaria were days of growing wealth and spiritual apostasy. According to 1 Kings 22:39, he built an "ivory house" for Jezebel, the remains of which were discovered in the Harvard excavations at the site. Rooms and furniture were decorated with ivory inlay that in many cases featured Egyptian deities. His surrender to the influences of idolatry is illustrated by the construction of a temple for Baal (1 Kings 16:32), the massacre of the Lord's prophets (1 Kings 18:4,19), and seizure of an Israelite's property (1 Kings 21).

Ahab appears to have been a worshiper of Yahweh, God of Israel, but probably along with other deities. He frequently consulted with Yahweh's prophets (1 Kings 20:13-14,22,28; 22:8,16), used the divine name in naming his children (Ahaziah, Jehoram, and Athaliah) and did not interfere with the execution of the priests of Baal after the contest on Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18:40). The influence of Jezebel in his life, however, overshadowed any significant influence the prophets of the Lord had in his life. He became a prime example of evil (Mic. 6:16).

2. False prophet living in Babylon who prophesied lies and faced Jeremiah's condemnation (Jer. 29:20-23).

John J. Davis

AHARAH [Ā-hār' ah] Spelling in 1 Chron. 8:1 for Ahiram (Num. 26:38). See Ahiram.

AHARHEL [Ā-hār' hēl] Personal name with unknown meaning. Descendant of Judah (1 Chron. 4:8).

AHASAI [Ā-hās' ai] (KJV) See Ahzai.

AHASBAI [Ā-hās' bāi] Father of a leader in David's army (2 Sam. 23:34; 1 Chron. 11:35). He apparently came from Maacah.

AHASUERUS [Ā-hās-u-e' rūs] Hebrew spelling for Xerxes, the king in the book of Esther (NIV, TEV). See Persia; Xerxes.

AHAVA [Ā-hā' vā] River in Babylon and town located beside the river where Ezra assembled Jews to return to Jerusalem from exile (Ezra 8:15,21,31). Ahava was probably located near the city of Babylon, but the exact site is not known.

AHAZ [Ā' hāz] 1. Evil king of Judah (735-715 B.C.). Ahaz, whose name means "he has grasped," was the son and successor of Jotham as king of Judah and the father of Hezekiah. Ahaz is characterized as an evil man who participated in the most monstrous of idolatrous practices (2 Kings 16:3). His 16-year reign was contemporary with the prophets Isaiah and Micah. Isaiah gave counsel to Ahaz during the Syro-Ephraimitic crisis, when Rezin, king of Syria, and Pekah, king of Israel, joined forces to attack Jerusalem. The prophet Oded rescued some captives from Israel (2 Chron.

28). Ahaz refused the prophet's advice and appealed for help to Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria (Isa. 7). That appeal and the resulting entanglement had unfortunate results religiously and politically in that Ahaz surrendered to Assyrian domination. He even placed an altar made from a Syrian model in the temple (2 Kings 16:11). Ahaz suffered the final humiliation of not being buried in the royal tombs (2 Chron. 28:27). See Israel; Chronology of the Biblical Period. 2. A Benjaminite descended from Saul (1 Chron. 8:35-36; 9:42).

AHAZIAH [Ā-hā-zī' ah] Name of two OT kings, the king of Israel (850-840 B.C.) and the king of Judah (ca. 842). The name means “Yahweh has grasped.” 1. Son and successor of Ahab as king of Israel (1 Kings 22:40). He reigned two years and died after suffering a fall in his palace at Samaria (2 Kings 1:2-17). The prophet Elijah announced Ahaziah would die because he sent for help from Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, instead of from Yahweh. 2. Son and successor of Jehoram as king of Judah (2 Kings 8:25). He reigned for one year and died after being wounded as he fled from Jehu while visiting King Joram of Israel (2 Kings 9:27).

These two kings were related to each other. Athaliah, the mother of Ahaziah of Judah, was the sister of Ahaziah of Israel.

AHBAN [Ā'h' bān] Personal name meaning “the brother is wise” or “the brother is creator.” A member of the clan of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:29).

AHER [Ā' hēr] Personal name meaning “another.” A member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:12); may be another spelling for Ahiram (Num. 26:38).

AHI [Ā' hi] Personal name meaning “my brother.” 1. Member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:15), who lived in Gilead. 2. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:34).

AHIAH [Ā-hī' ah] Personal name meaning “Yahweh is my brother.” Variant spelling of Ahijah but not used consistently by English translations to reflect Hebrew spellings. See Ahijah.

AHIAM [Ā·hī'ām] Personal name whose meaning is not certain. One of David's 30 heroic soldiers (2 Sam. 23:33).

AHIAN [Ā·hī'ān] Personal name meaning “little brother.” A member of tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 7:19).

AHIEZER [Ā·hī·e'zēr] Personal name meaning “my brother is help.” 1. Aide to Moses in the wilderness from the tribe of Dan (Num. 1:12; 2:25). He brought the tribe's offerings (7:66-71) and led the tribe on the march (10:25). 2. Chief warrior who joined David at Ziklag. He was skilled with both hands and represented Benjamin, the tribe of King Saul, who threatened David (1 Chron. 12:1-3).

AHIHUD [Ā·hī'hūd] 1. Personal name meaning “my brother is splendid or majestic” (Hb. ‘achihud). A leader of the tribe of Asher who helped divide the promised land among the tribes (Num. 34:27). 2. Meaning “my brother is a riddle” (Hb. ‘achichud). A member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:7).

AHIJAH [Ā·hī'jah] Personal name rendered several ways in Hebrew and English meaning “my brother is Yahweh.” 1. Priest of the family of Eli in Shiloh (1 Sam. 14:3-4). He brought the ark of God to Saul (1 Sam. 4:18). 2. Scribe of Solomon (1 Kings 4:3). 3. Prophet from Shiloh who tore his clothes in 12 pieces and gave 10 to Jeroboam to signal God's decision to divide the kingdom after Solomon's death (1 Kings 11:29-39). Later when Jeroboam's son fell sick, the blind prophet recognized Jeroboam's wife through God's word. He announced the end of Jeroboam's reign and of his dynasty (1 Kings 14:1-18; 15:29). Second Chronicles 9:29 refers to a prophecy of Ahijah in written form. 4. Father of King Baasha of Israel from tribe of Issachar (1 Kings 15:27). 5. Son of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:25). 6. Son of Ehud in tribe of Benjamin, an official in Geba (1 Chron. 8:7). 7. One of David's 30 military heroes whose home was Pelon (1 Chron. 11:36). The corresponding list in 2 Sam. 23:34 has Eliam the son of Ahithophel the Gilonite. 8. Signer of Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:26). 9. The Hebrew text of 1 Chron. 26:20 says Ahijah, a Levite, had charge of temple treasuries under David (KJV, RSV). The Septuagint or oldest Greek translation suggests reading 'achehem, “their brothers or relatives” (NASB, NIV, TEV). See Ahiah.

AHIKAM [Ā-hī' kām] Personal name meaning “my brother stood up.” Son of Josiah's scribe Shaphan. He took the book of the Law found in the temple to Huldah the prophetess to determine God's will (2 Kings 22:8-20). His son Gedaliah headed the Jews left in Judah after Nebuchadnezzar destroyed Jerusalem (586 B.C.) briefly before rebels killed him (2 Kings 25:22-25). Ahikam protected Jeremiah when King Jehoiakim wanted to kill the prophet (Jer. 26:24). Later his son also protected Jeremiah (Jer. 39:14).

AHILUD [Ā-hī' lūd] Personal name meaning “a brother is born.” The father of Jehoshaphat, David's court recorder (2 Sam. 8:16), who retained the position under Solomon (1 Kings 4:3). Probably the same Ahilud was father of Baana, Solomon's official to get court provisions from the province around Taanach, Megiddo, and Beth-shean (1 Kings 4:12).

AHIMAAZ [Ā-hīm' ā-āz] Personal name with uncertain meaning, “brother of anger” and “my brother is counselor” being suggestions. 1. Saul's father-in-law (1 Sam. 14:50). 2. Son of Zadok, one of David's priests (2 Sam. 15:27). He served as one of David's secret messengers from the court when Absalom rebelled and drove his father from Jerusalem (2 Sam. 15:36; 17:17). Once he had to hide in a well to keep from being found out (17:18-21). He was a swift runner, overtaking Cushie to bring tidings to David (18:19-29), but he did not report Absalom's death. He maintained a reputation as a “good man” (18:27). 3. One of 12 officers over Solomon's provinces, he had charge of Naphtali. He married Solomon's daughter Basmath. He may be the same as 2. Zadok's son (1 Kings 4:15).

AHIMAN [Ā-hī' man] Personal name with uncertain meaning. 1. One of the giants of Anak (Num. 13:22). Caleb drove him and his two brothers out of Hebron (cp. Judg. 1:10, where the tribe of Judah killed the three brothers). See Anak. 2. Levite and temple gatekeeper (1 Chron. 9:17).

AHIMELECH [Ā-hīm' ē-lek] Personal name meaning “my brother is king.” See High Priest.

AHIMOTH [Ā·hî' mōth] Personal name meaning literally “my brother is death” or “my brother is Mot (god of death). A Levite (1 Chron. 6:25).

AHINADAB [Ā·hîn' ā·dāb] Personal name meaning “my brother has devoted himself” or “my brother is noble.” One of Solomon's 12 province officials, he provided supplies for the royal court from Mahanaim (1 Kings 4:14).

AHINOAM [Ā·hîn' ō·ām] Personal name meaning “my brother is gracious.” 1. King Saul's wife (1 Sam. 14:50). 2. Wife of David from Jezreel (1 Sam. 25:43) who lived with him under the Philistines at Gath (27:3). When she and Abigail, David's other wife, were captured by the Amalekites, the people threatened to stone David. David followed God's word, defeated the Amalekites, and recovered his wives and the other captives (30:1-20). Ahinoam then moved to Hebron with David, where the people crowned him king (2 Sam. 2:2-4). She gave David his first son, Amnon (3:2).

AHIO [Ā·hî' ō] Personal name meaning “my brother is Yahweh.” 1. Son of Abinadab at whose house the ark of the covenant was stationed (2 Sam. 6:3). He and his brother Uzzah drove an ox and cart carrying the ark. 2. Member of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:14), but the Septuagint or earliest Greek translation of the OT reads “their brothers” or kinfolk. 3. Member of Benjamin with connections to Gibeon (1 Chron. 8:31; 9:37). See Ahiah; Ahijah.

AHIRA [Ā·hî' rā] Personal name meaning “my brother is a friend.” Leader of tribe of Naphtali under Moses (Num. 1:15), who presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (7:78-83) and led them in the wilderness marches.

AHIRAM [Ā·hî' ram] Personal name meaning “my brother is exalted.” Son of Benjamin who gave his name to a clan in that tribe (Num. 26:38).

AHIRAMITE [Ā·hî' rām it] Clan established by Ahiram. See Ahiram.

AHISAMACH [Ā·hîš' ā·māk] Personal name meaning “my brother has supported.” Father of Oholiab, the artisan who helped Bezaleel create the artwork of the wilderness tabernacle (Exod. 31:6; 35:34; 38:23).

AHISHAHAR [Ā-hī' shā-hār] Personal name meaning “brother of the dawn.” A member of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:10) but not listed in the genealogy of 1 Chron. 8.

AHISHAR [Ā-hī' shār] Personal name meaning “my brother sang.” Head of Solomon's palace staff (1 Kings 4:6).

AHITHOPHEL [Ā-hīth' o-phēl] Personal name meaning “brother of folly” if it is not a scribal attempt to hide an original name including a Canaanite god such as Ahibaal. The name of David's counselor who joined Absalom's revolt against King David (2 Sam. 15:12). David prayed that his counsel might be turned to foolishness (15:31) and commissioned the faithful Hushai to help Zadok and Abiathar, the priests, counteract the counsel of Ahithophel. Ahithophel led Absalom to show his rebellion was for real by taking over his father's concubines (16:15-23). Ahithophel's counsel was famous as being equal to the word of God (16:23). Hushai, however, persuaded Absalom not to follow Ahithophel's military advice (chap. 17), this being God's work (17:14). Disgraced, Ahithophel returned home to Giloh, put his house in order, and hanged himself (17:23). He may have been the grandfather of Bathsheba, David's partner in sin and later his wife (2 Sam. 11:3; 23:34).

AHITUB [Ā-hī' tūb] Personal name meaning “my brother is good.” 1. Priest, son of Phinehas and grandson of Eli ministering in Shiloh (1 Sam. 14:3). He was Ahimelech's father (22:9). 2. Father of Zadok, the high priest under David and Solomon (2 Sam. 8:17). The name occurs twice in the Chronicler's list of priests (1 Chron. 6:7-8,11-12,52; cp. 9:11). Ezra descended from Ahitub's line (Ezra 7:2).

AHLAB [Āh' lab] Place-name meaning “mountain forest” or “fertile.” Probably located at Khirbet el-Macalib on the Mediterranean coast four miles above Tyre. The tribe of Asher could not conquer it (Judg. 1:31).

AHLAI [Āh' la-i] Personal name meaning “a brother to me,” perhaps an abbreviated form of Ahliya, “the brother is my god.” Others interpret as interjection meaning “O would that.” 1. Member of clan of Jerahmeel (1 Chron. 2:31). Ahlai's father was Sheshan. First Chronicles 2:34 says Sheshan had no sons, only daughters. This makes Ahlai either a daughter of Sheshan or part of a Hebrew text that is incomplete due to copying errors. Some would identify Ahlai with Sheshan's grandson Attai (1 Chron. 2:35). Others think Sheshan changed his servant Jarha's name to Ahlai when he made Jarha his son-in-law (v. 35). No certain answer to Ahlai's identity has been offered. 2. Father of a valiant soldier of David (1 Chron. 11:41).

AHOAH [Ā·hō' ah] Personal name of uncertain meaning. Grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:4) but lists in 2:25; 8:7; and evidence of early translations may point to Ahijah as the original name.

AHOHITE [Ā·hō' hit] Clan name. In time of David and Solomon military figures of this clan or place became military leaders (2 Sam. 23:9,28; 1 Chron. 11:12,29; 27:4).

AHOLAH [Ā·hō' lah] (KJV) See Oholah.

AHOLIAB [Ā·hō' li·ab] (KJV) See Oholiab.

AHOLIBAH [Ā·hō' li·bah] (KJV) See Oholibah.

AHOLIBAMAH [Ā·hō·li·bā' mah] (KJV) See Oholibamah.

AHUMAI [Ā·hū' mi] Personal name meaning “a brother is it” or “brother of water.” Member of clan of Zorathites of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:2).

AHUZAM [Ā·hū' zām] or AHUZZAM (NASB, NIV, RSV, TEV) Personal name meaning “their grasping” or “their property.” A member of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:6).

AHUZZATH [Ā·hūz' zāth] Personal name meaning “that grasped” or “property.” Official who accompanied Abimelech, king of Philistines, to make covenant of peace with Isaac (Gen. 26:26). Called literally “the friend of the king,” he probably held an office as the closest advisor of the king. Compare KJV, NASB, NIV.

AHZAI [אַחַזַּי] or AHASAI (KJV) Personal name meaning “property” or abbreviated form of Ahzaiah, “Yahweh has grasped.” A priest after the return from exile (Neh. 11:13). Sometimes said to be same as Jahzerah (1 Chron. 9:12).

AI [אֵי] Name means “the ruin” in Hebrew. The biblical city of Ai may be a tale of two cities rather than one. In 1924 W. F. Albright first identified Ai with Et Tell, two miles southeast of Beitin (the site originally identified for biblical Bethel by Albright) and 12 miles north of Jerusalem. This site was excavated by John Garstang (1920s), Judith Marquet-Krause and Samuel Yeivin (1930s), and by Joseph Callaway of Southern Seminary (1960s and 1970s). This 27.5-acre walled city of Ai (at Et Tell) flourished from 3000 to 2200 B.C. Et Tell was the Ai of Abraham who pitched his tent between Bethel and Ai on his way to Egypt (Gen. 12:8) and later built his first altar on the same spot when he returned (Gen. 13:3). However, Callaway found no evidence that the site existed as a town in the Late Bronze Age (ca. 1400 B.C.). Later in time, 1220-1050 B.C., Et Tell (Ai) was rebuilt as a small 2.75-acre village without walls. Et Tell's gap in existence has been a problem for anyone holding to the historicity of the biblical conquest account. The debate over Ai has led scholars to discount the biblical account as a legend, to place Ai at Beitin (Bethel), or to relocate Ai (and Bethel) elsewhere. Several sites near Et Tell have been proposed for Ai over time: Deir Dibwan, Haiyan, and Khudriya.

The city name “Ai” of the conquest could have moved to a different site in the 15th century B.C. Albright noted the phenomenon of displacement of place-names “over a considerable local area” (BASOR, 74, Apr. 1939, 14). After their 1997 season, Bryant Wood and Gary Byers reported finding a fortified site near the Ai (Et Tell) of Callaway. At the time this article was written, Wood and Byers were excavating Khirbet el-Maqatir that sits on a ridge .9 miles southeast of Beitin and .6 miles west of Et Tell. While Et Tell was in ruins during the 1400's B.C., Fortress I at Khirbet el Maqatir, which was built in the 1400s B.C., covered 1.9 acres with walls 4 meters wide. Byers proposed that this site is Joshua's Ai. Accordingly, Byers followed David Livingston in identifying Bethel with el-Bireh instead of Beitin. Livingston proposed el-Bireh, a city on the north-south road from Jerusalem to Shechem (Nablus), as the best candidate for Bethel. El-Bireh is 1.8 miles west of Khirbet el-Maqatir located on the geographical boundary between Ephraim and Benjamin. El-Bireh is also the correct distance from Jerusalem as coordinated with the Roman mile markers and the correct distance from Gibeon as evidenced by the Onomasticon of Eusebius and Jerome. Livingston identified Ai with Khirbet Nisya and Beitin with Beth-aven, which has never been convincingly located. Josh. 7:2 describes Ai as adjacent to Beth-aven. According to the accounts of Genesis and Joshua, Ai is said to be east of Bethel (Gen. 12:8, Josh. 7:2), Bethel is very near Ai (Josh. 12:9), a mountain is said to separate Bethel and Ai (Gen. 12:8), and Ai is implied to be a small town (Josh. 7:3). Khirbet el-Maqatir (Ai) was an important military target to Joshua and the Israelites since it guarded the approach to a strategic central crossroads to the central hill country—Bethel. The topography of the account in Joshua fits with this site as does a dating of the conquest in the late Bronze Age (ca. 1400 B.C.). Israel learned at Ai that they cannot prevail without God. The sin of one man, Achan, affected the whole nation's conquest commission. Ai was originally in Ephraimite territory (1 Chron. 7:28) and was later occupied by Benjamites (Neh. 11:31). Isaiah mentions the Assyrians approaching through Ai (Isa. 10:28). The residents of the twin cities of Bethel and Ai who returned from the exile are mentioned together in Ezra 2:28 and Neh. 7:32. Jeremiah also mentions the destruction of a Moabite town of the same name in his prophecy about the Ammonites (Jer. 49:3).

Eric Alan Mitchell

The ruins of the ancient city of Ai.

AIAH [Ā·ī' ah] Personal name imitating the cry of a hawk, then meaning “hawk.” 1. Son of Zibeon among the clans of Edom descended from Esau (Gen. 36:24). 2. Father of Rizpah, Saul's concubine (2 Sam. 3:7) and grandfather of Mephibosheth (2 Sam. 21:8).

AIATH [Ā·ī' āth] Alternate spelling of Ai (Isa. 10:28). See Ai.

AIDS (Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome) While the Bible does not specifically address AIDS, it does provide principles by which AIDS may be understood and those affected by AIDS may find comfort and hope.

Like all disease, suffering, and death, AIDS is a consequence of the fall (Gen. 2:17; 3:19b; Rom. 1:27). Unlike most other diseases, however, the HIV virus primarily (though not exclusively) infects persons through acts of irresponsible behavior (Hos. 8:7a; Gal. 6:7-8). The Bible enjoins all followers of Christ to cultivate pure lifestyles (Phil. 4:8; Col. 3:1-7; 2 Pet. 1:5-11), thereby minimizing the risk by which they might become infected by the HIV virus and develop AIDS.

Jesus showed compassion to lepers (Mark 1:40-42), social outcasts (Mark 5:1-8; John 4:1-38), and others who were sick and in desperate need (Matt. 9:36; 14:14; Mark 1:32-34) by touching (Matt. 20:34; Mark 1:41) and healing all who came to Him. Paul adjures Christians to express active empathy for those in need (Rom. 12:15; Gal. 6:2), declaring that sufferers are comforted by God through the work of Jesus (2 Cor. 1:3-4). In the same way those who are affected by AIDS are able to find comfort and hope through the love of God.

AIJA [Ā-i' jā] Alternate spelling of Ai (Neh. 11:31). See Ai.

AIJALON [Ā' jā-lōn] Also spelled "Ajalon." Place-name meaning "place of the deer." 1. Town and nearby valley where moon stood still at Joshua's command (Josh. 10:12). Near the Philistine border, south of Beth-horon, Ajalon belonged to Dan, according to tribal allotments (Josh. 19:42); but Dan did not conquer the territory and moved to the north (Judg. 18:1). It was one city in Dan given the Levites (Josh. 21:24). Amorites gained temporary control, but the Joseph tribes subjected them to pay tribute (Judg. 1:34-35). Saul and Jonathan won a battle between Michmash and Ajalon (1 Sam. 14:31). In postexilic times the Chronicler knew Aijalon as a city of the tribe of Benjamin which defeated Gath (1 Chron. 8:13). Rehoboam, Solomon's son, had fortified Aijalon (2 Chron. 11:10). King Ahaz (735-715 B.C.) asked for Assyrian help because the Philistines had taken Aijalon and other cities. Thus it was an important military location on Judah's western border. Aijalon is located at modern Yalo about 14 miles from Jerusalem. 2. Elon, a judge of the tribe of Zebulun was buried in a northern Aijalon (Judg. 12:12), whose location may be at Tell et-Butmeh.

AIJELETH SHAHAR [Āi' jē-lēth shā' hār] Musical direction in title of Ps. 22, literally "doe of the dawn." May be name of musical tune.

AIN [Ā' ın] Place meaning “eye” or “water spring.” Often used as first part of a place-name indicating the presence of a water source. English often used “En” as first part of such names. See En-dor, for example. 1. Place on eastern border of Canaan (Num. 34:11). Location is uncertain. 2. City of southern Judah (Josh. 15:32) belonging to Simeon (Josh. 19:7) but assigned as homestead for the Levites, who had no land allotted (Josh. 21:16), if this is not read Ashan as in some manuscripts of Joshua and in 1 Chron. 6:59.

AIR Space beneath the sky according to the human sense description of the universe. English versions translate Hebrew mach, “wind, breath, spirit,” as “air” in Job 41:16 to describe empty space between objects on earth (cp. Jer. 14:6 NASB, RSV). The birds fly in the air (Matt. 6:26). Mourners throw dust into the air (Acts 23:23). Inept boxers hit the air instead of opponents (1 Cor. 9:26). Speaking in tongues without an interpreter is vainly speaking in the air with no one understanding (1 Cor. 14:9). More theologically and symbolically Eph. 2:2 (KJV) mentions the “prince of the power of the air,” showing Satan's power to tempt and rule people here below but his lack of power in heaven. At the second coming those still alive will be caught up with those being resurrected to meet the Lord Jesus in the air (1 Thess. 4:17). The fifth angel of Revelation opens the bottomless pit, which is so dominated by fire that its smoke darkened the sun and the air (Rev. 9:2). The seventh angel poured destruction into the air, thus on earth, from his vial (Rev. 16:17).

AJAH [Ā' jah] (KJV, Gen. 36:24). See Aiah.

AJALON Variant spelling of Ajalon. See Aijalon.

AKAN [Ā' kan] Personal name of uncertain meaning. An official of Edom of Horite ancestors (Gen. 36:27). Spelled “Jakan” in 1 Chron. 1:42.

AKELDAMA (NIV, RSV, TEV) See Aceldama.

AKHENATON [Ākh-a'nā' tōn] Egyptian Pharaoh (1370-1353 B.C.) Originally named Amenhotep IV, he made a radical religious switch from worshipping Amon to serving Aton, the sun disc. Often referred to as the first monotheist, he probably did not go so far as denying the existence of all other gods. Later Egyptian writers called him blasphemer and criminal. He married the famous Nefertiti, known for her beauty, and was succeeded by his son-in-law Tutankhamen, known today as King Tut. He moved his capital northwards from Thebes to Akhenaton at Tell El-Amarna. During his reign he received the reports and requests from city-state rulers in Palestine that archaeologists call the Amarna letters. These show the lack of unity and harmony in Palestine that Joshua found when he entered to conquer Palestine.

Gary C. Huckabay

AKIM (NIV) See Achim.

AKKAD (NIV) See Accad.

AKKADIAN First known Semitic invaders of Mesopotamia and the language they spoke. Also spelled “Accadian.” The Akkadians, under Sargon the Great, conquered Mesopotamia and established the first true empire in world history (2360-2180 B.C.). Their ancient capital Akkad (Agade) is mentioned in Gen. 10:10 as one of the cities of Shinar (Mesopotamia).

Akkadian is also the ancient name of the Semitic language used in the cuneiform inscriptions and documents that modern archaeologists have discovered. The earliest inscriptions in Old Akkadian date from about 2400-2000 B.C. Two main dialects evolved, Babylonian and Assyrian. These dialects are conveniently outlined in three phases: Old Babylonian and Old Assyrian, about 2000-1500 B.C., Middle Babylonian and Middle Assyrian, about 1500-1000 B.C., and Neo-Babylonian, about 1000-100 B.C., and Neo-Assyrian, about 1000-600 B.C. After about 600 B.C. Akkadian was increasingly replaced by Aramaic.

Akkadian is commonly classified as East Semitic to distinguish it from Northwest Semitic (Amorite, Ugaritic, Hebrew, etc.) and Southwest Semitic (Arabic, Ethiopic). Akkadian was the international language of diplomacy and commerce in the Near East before 1000 B.C. Consequently, collections of documents written in Akkadian originated among several non-Akkadian-speaking national and ethnic groups. Examples include the Amarna Tablets of Palestinian rulers addressed to Egypt, Akkadian documents from Ugarit in Syria, and the Nuzi Tablets from a Hurrian people.

Akkadian studies have had a profound effect on OT studies in at least four areas. First, the meanings of many Hebrew words have been determined or clarified by Akkadian cognates. Second, the literary (poetic) texts and legal texts have provided a rich source for comparative study of OT poetry and law texts. Third, historical annals and international treaties provide the wider framework for understanding biblical events and sometimes mention events and persons known also from the Bible. Fourth, the Akkadian religious texts have included accounts of creation and flood, as well as prophetic oracles, curses and blessings, and prayers, which provide a basis for understanding both the common Semitic heritage and the uniqueness of Israel's faith. See Cuneiform.

Thomas Smothers

The Treaty of Kadesh, between the Hittites and Egypt, is inscribed on this tablet in Akkadian.

AKKUB [Āk' kūb] Personal name possibly meaning “protector,” or “protected one.” 1. Descendant of Solomon in postexilic Judah about 420 B.C. (1 Chron 3:24). 2. Gatekeeper of the temple after the return from exile (1 Chron. 9:17; Ezra 2:42; Neh. 7:45; 11:19); he was a Levite (Neh. 12:25). Since “the children of Akkub” are mentioned (Neh. 7:45), the family apparently served for several generations, with more than one person in the family line named Akkub. 3. Levite who helped Ezra teach the Law to God's returned people (Neh. 8:7). He may have been related to 2. 4. The head of another family of temple staff personnel (Ezra 2:45).

AKRABBIM [Āk-rab' bim] Place-name meaning “scorpions.” The “ascent of Akrabbim” lies southwest of the Dead Sea forming the southern border of Canaan (Num. 34:4; Josh. 15:3; Judg. 1:36). It is a mountain pass on the road southeast of Beersheba, today called Neqb es-Safa. Recent study has found the Scorpion Pass mentioned in other Near Eastern literature.

ALABASTER See Minerals and Metals.

*Alexander the Great fighting Darius III at the Battle of Issus in 333 B.C.
The scene comes from a firstcentury mosaic found in Pompeii.*

ALAMETH [Ālā·mēth] (KJV, 1 Chron. 7:8). See Alemeth.

ALAMMELECH [Ā·lām' mē·lēk] (KJV) See Allammelech.

ALAMOTH [Āl' ā·mōth] Musical notation meaning literally “upon or according to young woman.” This apparently signifies a tune for a high voice, a song for a soprano (1 Chron. 15:20; Ps. 46 title).

ALARM Signal given by shouting or playing an instrument. The Hebrew term (teru'ah) literally means a shout, but musical instruments were used as the trumpets of Num. 10:1-10. The alarm called the wilderness community to march (Num. 10:5-6). The alarm was a special, unspecified, sound of the trumpets, for the instruments could be blown without sounding the alarm to march (10:7). Later in Israel the alarm called them to battle (10:9) and reminded them of God's presence with their armies (cp. 31:6). The alarm is sounded against the enemy of God's people (2 Chron. 13:12). Joshua 6 describes a different alarm system. The priests marched with horns, instruments distinct from trumpets, and the people shouted a great shout or alarm (teru' ah) before God's miraculous act. The trumpet could also sound the alarm on a great religious day (Lev. 25:9), and Israel would raise a shout of joy (1 Sam. 4:5). The alarm did not always bring joy. The alarm announcing the enemy coming in war brought shock, sadness, and fear (Jer. 4:19; Hos. 5:8). The greatest fear should come, however, when God sounds the alarm for His day (Joel 2:1).

ALDEBARAN Red star of first magnitude in eye of Taurus; brightest star in Hyades; REB, KJV reading for Arcturus (Job 9:9; 38:32).

ALEMETH [Āl' əmeth] Place and personal name meaning “concealed” or “dark.” 1. City set aside for the Levites from Benjamin's allotment (1 Chron. 6:60). Known as Almon in Josh. 21:18. 2. Grandson of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:8). 3. Descendant of Saul and Jonathan in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:36).

ALEXANDER [Āl-əx-ən' dər] Five NT men including the son of Simon of Cyrene (Mark 15:21), a relative of Annas (Acts 4:6), a Jew of Ephesus (Acts 19:33), a false teacher (1 Tim. 1:19-20), and a coppersmith (2 Tim. 4:14).

ALEXANDER THE GREAT [Āl-əx-ən' dər] Succeeded his father as king of Macedonia and quickly conquered the Persian empire. Alexander the Great (356-323 B.C.) was one of the greatest military leaders in history. His father was Phillip of Macedon, king of a region of Greece known as Macedonia.

When Alexander was 20 years old (336 B.C.), his father was killed, and Alexander became king. This ambitious young king immediately began to make plans to conquer Persia. Persia had extended its empire to Asia Minor (modern-day Turkey). In 334 B.C. Alexander led his troops into Asia Minor where they won a series of victories over the Persians.

Alexander the Great continued his victorious military march into Syria and Egypt. From victories there, he led his troops into Persia, Media, and as far east as northern India. He returned to Babylon, where he died in 323 B.C. at the age of 33.

Alexander the Great.

Alexander's most lasting legacy was his spread of Greek culture. Everywhere he went he tried to instill that culture. While Alexander is never directly named in the Bible, the culture that he brought to Palestine greatly affected the biblical world, especially during the time between the writing of the OT and NT. His empire is one element of the historical background of Daniel. See Alexandria; Greece.

Lynn Jones

ALEXANDRIA [Al-ĕx-ān' drī-ā] Capital of Egypt from 330 B.C., founded by Alexander the Great as an outstanding Greek cultural and academic center.

Alexandria was designed to act as the principal port of Egypt located on the western edge of the Nile Delta. Built on a peninsula, it separated the Mediterranean Sea and Lake Mareotis. A causeway (Heptastadion, or “seven stadia”) connected the peninsula with Pharos Island and divided the harbor. The Pharos lighthouse was visible for miles at a height of over 400 feet and is remembered today as one of the “Seven Wonders of the World.”

Lighthouse in the harbor at Alexandria.

The city was divided into sections with a substantial Jewish quarter, the Royal area, the Neapolis, and a necropolis to the far west. The city was known for its cultural and academic pursuits. The finest library in the ancient world with over 500,000 volumes attracted many scholars. The Mouseion (Museum) complimented the library as the center of worship for the Muses, goddesses of “music,” dancing, and letters. It became the most important center of Judaism outside of Jerusalem. Jewish rabbis gathered in Alexandria to produce the Septuagint (LXX), the Greek translation of the OT. Greek philosophers and mathematicians such as Euclid, Aristarchus, and Eratosthenes worked here. Octavian incorporated it into the Roman Empire about 30 B.C. It quickly became second in importance to Rome. Its importance declined about A.D. 100.

Well-preserved Roman theater in Alexandria with seating for 800 spectators. It was used for musical performances as well as wrestling matches.

The educated Jews of Alexandria contended with Stephen (Acts 6:9). Apollos, the great Christian orator, came from Alexandria (Acts 18:24), and Paul rode the ships of that port (Acts 27:6; 28:11). Although the Christians suffered persecution there, they produced a school with such notables as Clement and Origen in leadership. The school was noted for its allegorical approach to Scripture.

Gary C. Huckabay

ALGUM Rare wood that Solomon imported from Lebanon for the temple (2 Chron. 2:8). The exact type of wood is not known. First Kings 10:11-12 refers to “almug” wood imported from Ophir (cp. 2 Chron. 9:10-11). The rare wood was used for gateways and for musical instruments.

ALLAH [Ā·hī' āh] Personal name meaning “height.” A leader of Edom (1 Chron. 1:51), known in Gen. 36:40 as Alvah.

ALIAN [Ā·hī' an] Personal name meaning “high one.” Descendant of Esau and thus an Edomite (1 Chron. 1:40). Known in Gen. 36:23 as Alvan.

ALIEN Person who is living in a society other than his own. Related terms are “foreigner,” “stranger,” and “sojourner.” Elijah was an alien in the home of the widow of Zarephath (1 Kings 17:20; “to sojourn” is to be an alien). Isaac was an alien with Abimelech, the Philistine king (Gen. 26:3). The patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, Jacob) were aliens in Canaan but owned large material resources (Gen. 20:1; 26:3; 32:5). Israel had a special place for aliens, because Israel began history in Egypt as aliens (Exod. 23:9). Special laws provided food and clothing for aliens (Deut. 24:19-20; 26:12). Aliens had rights in the courtroom (Deut. 24:17; 27:19).

The ritual expectations of the alien are not always clear (Deut. 14:21; Lev. 17:15). God loves aliens (Deut. 10:19), and the alien could worship God and was supposed to keep the Sabbath (Exod. 23:12; Deut. 31:12). They could observe Passover just as any Israelite (Num. 9:14) and offer sacrifices (Lev. 17:8). They should obey sexual laws (Lev. 18:26).

Unexpectedly, the prophets have little to say about aliens (Jer. 7:6; 22:3; Ezek. 22:7,29). Jeremiah does lament that God appears to be an alien (Jer. 14:8). The psalmist saw all people as aliens on earth (39:12; 119:19). Peter reminded his readers that they were “aliens and temporary residents” on earth (HCSB).

ALLAMMELECH [Ál·lám·mè·lék] Place-name meaning “king's oak” or “royal holy tree.” Border town of Asher (Josh. 19:26) whose specific location is not known.

ALLEGORY Literary device in which a story or narrative is used to convey truths about reality. The word “allegory” is taken from two Greek words: alla (other) and agoreuo (to proclaim). An allegory conveys something other than its literal meaning. Sometimes “allegory” is defined as an extended metaphor. Cicero viewed allegory as a continuous stream of metaphors.

Allegorical interpretation is a reading of a text with a view to finding meanings other than the literal. Such interpretations are legitimate when it is clear that the text is an allegory. For example, John Bunyan wrote Pilgrim's Progress as an allegory. Therefore, allegorical interpretation is not only legitimate but is required to understanding Bunyan's work. To bring allegorical interpretation to texts that are not allegories is to misread those texts.

Background Allegorical interpretation can be found among early Greeks who read Homer and other epic tales as allegories. In Book VII of The Republic, Plato seeks to convey important truths about human knowledge in the allegory of the cave.

Philo Judaeus of Alexandria (50 B.C.) was a Jewish Platonist who exerted great influence on the course of biblical interpretation. In his commentary of the Pentateuch, Philo employed allegorical exegesis. In addition to the literal meaning, Philo found higher levels of meaning, avoiding unpalatable statements. Others have employed allegorical interpretation to make Christianity compatible with some other religious form such as Greek philosophy of the New Age movement. Still others employ the method in order to unearth “deeper, spiritual” meanings. Philo's approach was developed around A.D. 200 by Clement of Alexandria and his student Origen.

Old Testament Allegory No entire book of the OT was written as an allegory, but portions of it have been interpreted allegorically. For example, Rabbi Akiba (ca. A.D. 50-132) interpreted the Song of Songs allegorically to refer to God's love of Israel rather than as a collection of romantic love songs. Many Christian scholars have followed that lead and interpreted this OT book as a picture of Christ's love for the church. At least one interpreter has done the same thing with Esther, reading each of the major characters as facets of the spiritual life and interpreting the book as an elaborate allegory of the victorious Christian life.

Philo applied allegorical interpretation to many parts of the OT in order to defend biblical teachings where they seemed to conflict with the philosophical understandings of his day. However, Jewish proponents of allegory, including Philo, never completely abandoned the historical meaning of Scripture. They employed allegorical interpretation alongside lexical, historical, and grammatical interpretations of the text. Whether they were able to retain the historical intent once they detoured into allegorical hermeneutics is questionable.

New Testament Allegory While Jesus never interpreted the OT allegorically, He did give allegorical interpretations to some of His parables. Jesus' interpretation of the parable of the soils (Mark 4:1-20) assigns symbolic meaning to the various elements of the parable: for example, the seed represents the word, and the four kinds of soil symbolize the different ways in which the word is received. Both the parable of the soil and the parable of the tares (Matt. 13:24-30,36-43) were spoken and interpreted by their author as allegories. Most of the parables, however, are not allegorical.

Whether Paul ever used an allegorical hermeneutic in dealing with the OT is debatable. He did employ the term on one occasion (Gal. 4:22-31), and there are two other passages in his writings in which his method of interpretation is not strictly lexical and historical (1 Cor. 9:8-10; 10:1-11). "allegory" in Gal. 4, he did not employ what has come to be known as the allegorical method but rather used typology, seeing the historical Sarah and Hagar as types pointing to later "antitypes." Typological interpretation is a very valid approach that does not remove the historical element from the text, as allegorical interpretation generally does. The texts in 1 Cor. 9 and 10 also feature a typological approach. Paul uses typology in his comparison of Adam and Christ in Rom. 5:12-21 as well. Paul's approach here was similar to Matthew's, citing OT testimonies about Jesus to demonstrate that He was the fulfillment of OT expectations, not to contend for some dehistoricized allegorical interpretation. In the vast majority of Paul's specific interpretations of the OT, he uses a normal, lexical, historical hermeneutic.

Authors are free to use whatever method of communication they wish in order to establish their point. Readers, though, must be careful not to use inappropriate interpretive methods. Allegorical interpretations of nonallegorical passages may seem helpful, “spiritual,” and theologically significant. Such approaches, though, eventually distort the meaning of the passage in question and make its “meaning” subject to the interests and prejudices of the interpreter. As Luther once said in allegorical hermeneutics, the text becomes a “nose of wax” which can be formed and manipulated in whatever way the interpreter wishes. In this approach the interpreter no longer is attempting to find the meaning placed in the text by the author but is actually creating his own meaning to replace that of the author.

Chad Brand and Steve Bond

ALLELUIA (KJV) See Hallelujah.

ALLEMETH [Āl' lē-mēth] Variant spelling of Alemeth in some English translations (1 Chron. 6:60). See Alemeth.

ALLIANCE See Covenant.

ALLON [Āl' lōn] Personal name meaning “oak.” Leader of tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:37).

ALLONBACHUTH [Āl' lōn-bāk' ūth] or ALLONBACUTH Place-name meaning “oak of weeping.” Burial place near Bethel of Rebekah's nurse (Gen. 35:8).

ALLOTMENT OT concept of land allocation either by God or by lot. The allotment of the land of Canaan to the tribes of Israel is recorded in Num. 32 and Josh. 13-19. God directed the process through the lot of the priest (Josh. 14:1-2). The tribes of Reuben and Gad, along with half the tribe of Manasseh, requested land east of the Jordan (Num. 32:33). Ezekiel 48 also contains a version of the allotment of the land for the Jews after the exile, revised so that each tribe received an equal share. See Lots.

Ronald E. Bishop

ALMIGHTY Title of God, translation of Hebrew El Shaddai. The early Greek translation introduced “Almighty” as one of several translations. Recent study has tended to see “The Mountain One” as the most likely original meaning. The name was particularly related to Abraham and the patriarchs (Gen. 17:1; 28:3; 35:11; 49:25). Job is the only book to use El Shaddai extensively, 31 times in all. Paul used “Almighty” once at the end of a series of OT quotations to imitate OT style and to underline divine power to bring His word to fulfillment. Revelation refers to God nine times as “Almighty,” again giving a feeling of power to the vision of Revelation.

ALMODAD [Āl-mō’ dād] Personal name meaning “God is a friend.” Grandson of Eber and ancestor of Arabian tribes (Gen. 10:25-26).

ALMON [Āl’ mōn] Place-name meaning “darkness,” or “hidden,” or “small road sign.” City given to Levites from tribe of Benjamin, called Alemeth in 1 Chron. 6:60. The site is probably modern Khirbet Almit.

ALMOND Large, nut-bearing tree and the nuts that it bears. Noted as the first tree to bloom (January) and for its pretty white or pink blossoms. Jacob used the almond (KJV, “hazel”) as a breeding device to increase his herds (Gen. 30:37). He sent almonds as one of the best fruits of the land to satisfy the Egyptian ruler (Gen. 43:11). The bowls for the tabernacle had almond-shaped decorations (Exod. 25:33-34). Aaron's rod miraculously produced ripe almonds, showing that he and his tribe were the only chosen priests (Num. 17:8). The early-appearing white bloom of the almond apparently serves as a picture of the early graying of a person's hair, pointing the writer of Ecclesiastes to the certainty of death (Eccles. 12:5). The early blossom meant for Jeremiah that the almond watched for spring and gave the prophet a wordplay on the almond (Hb. shaqed) and his task to watch (Hb. shoqed) (Jer. 1:11).

ALMON-DIBLATHAIM [Āl' mōn-dīb-lā-thā'im] Place-name meaning “road sign of the two figs.” A stopping place near the end of the wilderness wandering near Mount Nebo (Num. 33:46-47). It may be the same as Beth-diblathaim in Jer. 48:22. Location may be modern Deleilat el-Gharbiyeh that looks over three roadways.

ALMS Gifts for the poor.

Old Testament Although the Hebrew language apparently had no technical term to refer to “alms” or “almsgiving,” the practice of charitable giving, especially to the poor, became a very important belief and practice within Judaism. The OT taught the practice of benevolent concern for those in need. Israel's ideal was a time when no one was poor (Deut. 15:4). Every three years, for example, the tithe of the produce of the year was to be brought to the towns and made available to the Levites, the aliens in the land, the orphans, and the widows (Deut. 14:28-29). Every seventh year all debts were to be cancelled among the Israelites (Deut. 15:1-3), and the fields were to lie fallow so that the needy of the people might eat (Exod. 23:10-11). In addition, the law instructed Israel to give generously to the needs of their Hebrew neighbors (Deut. 15:7-11). Such charitable giving was not a grudging chore or a loan for repayment. Failure to comply would be sin (Deut. 15:9-10). Israel showed concern for the needy by not harvesting the corners of fields and by leaving the gleanings so the needy and the stranger might gather what remained (Lev. 19:9-10; 23:22; Deut. 24:19-22).

New Testament The NT regards alms as an expression of a righteous life. The technical term for alms (Gk. eleemosune) occurs 13 times in the NT. This does not include Matt. 6:1, where the preferred reading is “righteousness” (NASB, NJV) instead of “alms” (KJV). By the first century

A.D. righteousness and alms were synonymous in Judaism. Although Jesus criticized acts of charity done for the notice of men (Matt. 6:2-3), He expected His disciples to perform such deeds (Matt. 6:4) and even commanded them (Luke 11:41; 12:33). Alms could refer to a gift donated to the needy (Acts 3:2-3,10) or to acts of charity in general (Acts 9:36; 10:2,4,31; 24:17).

The principle of deeds of mercy performed in behalf of the needy receives emphatic significance in the NT, since such actions are ultimately performed in behalf of the Lord (Matt. 25:34-45). Early Christians voluntarily sold their possessions and shared all things in common to alleviate suffering and need within the church (Acts 2:44-46; 4:32-35). Much of Paul's later ministry involved the supervision and collection of a contribution for the needy Christians in Jerusalem (Rom. 15:25-28; 1 Cor. 16:1-4; 2 Cor. 8-9). According to James 1:27, pure and undefiled religion consists, at least partially, in assisting orphans and widows in their distress. John also presented charitable giving as evidence of one's relationship to God (1 John 3:17-18). See Aliens; Hospitality; Mercy, Merciful; Stewardship.

Barry Morgan

ALMUG (1 Kings 10:11) See Algum.

ALOE Large tree grown in India and China, producing resin and oil used in making perfumes. Balaam used the beauty of the aloe tree to describe the beauty of Israel's camp as he blessed them (Num. 24:6). The aloe perfume gave aroma to the king's garment as he was married (Ps. 45:8). Aloe also perfumed the harlot's bed (Prov. 7:17). The beloved's garden includes aloe (Song 4:14). Nicodemus brought aloe with myrrh to perfume Jesus' body for burial (John 19:39). See Plants.

ALOTH [אַ' לוֹת] Place-name meaning "the height" if not read Bealoth (NASB, RSV), "feminine baals." Center of activity for Baana, one of Solomon's 12 district supervisors (1 Kings 4:16).

ALPHA AND OMEGA First and last letters of the Greek alphabet, used in Revelation to describe God or Christ (Rev. 1:8,17; 21:6; 22:13). “Alpha and omega” refers to God's sovereignty and eternal nature. God and Christ are “the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End” (Rev. 22:13 HCSB).

ALPHAEUS [Āl·phē' ūs] or ALPHEUS Personal name. 1. Father of apostle called James the Less to distinguish him from James, the son of Zebedee and brother of John (Matt. 10:3; Mark 3:18; Luke 6:15; Acts 1:13). Mark 15:40 says James' mother, Mary, was with Jesus' mother at the cross. John 19:25 says Mary the wife of Cleophas was at the cross. This would seem to indicate that Cleophas and Alphaeus are two names for the same person. Some want to equate Alphaeus, Cleophas, and the Cleopas of Luke 24:18. 2. Father of the Apostle Levi (Mark 2:14). Comparison of Matt. 9:9 and Luke 5:27 would indicate Levi was also called Matthew.

ALTAR Structure used in worship as the place for presenting sacrifices to God or gods.

Old Testament The Hebrew word for altar that is used most frequently in the OT is formed from the verb for “slaughter” and means literally “slaughter place.” Altars were used primarily as places of sacrifice, especially animal sacrifice.

While animals were a common sacrifice in the OT, altars were also used to sacrifice grain, fruit, wine, and incense. The grain and fruit sacrifices were offered as a tithe of the harvest or as representative first fruits of the harvest. They were presented in baskets to the priest who set the basket before the altar (Deut. 26:2-4). Wine was offered along with animal and bread sacrifices. Incense was burned on altars to purify after slaughterings and to please God with sweet fragrance.

“Altar” is distinct from “temple.” Whereas temple implies a building or roofed structure, altar implies an open structure. Altar and temple were often adjacent, though not all altars had a temple adjacent. The reference to Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. 22) may indicate that the animal to be sacrificed was placed on the altar alive but bound and slaughtered on the altar. Such may have been the earliest practice. By the time of the Levitical laws, the animal was slaughtered in front of the altar, dismembered, and only the fatty portions to be burned were placed on the altar (Lev. 1:2-9).

In the OT, altars are distinguished by the material used in their construction. The simplest altars, and perhaps oldest, were the earthen altars (Exod. 20:24). This type altar was made of either mud-brick or a raised roughly shaped mound of dirt. Mud-brick was a common building material in Mesopotamia, so mudbrick altars would have appeared most likely in Mesopotamia. An earthen altar would not have been very practical for permanently settled people, for the rainy season each year would damage or destroy the altar. This type altar might be more indicative of a nomadic people who move regularly and are less concerned with the need for a permanent altar. It might also reflect the Mesopotamian ancestry of the Hebrews, since the mud-brick was the typical building material there.

Islam's Dome of the Rock, built over the rock said to be the altar of Abraham's near sacrifice of Isaac as well as the site of Solomon's temple.

The stone altar is the most commonly mentioned altar in biblical records and the most frequently found in excavations from Palestine. A single large stone could serve as an altar (Judg. 6:19-23; 13:19-20; 1 Sam. 14:31-35). Similarly, unhewn stones could be carefully stacked to form an altar (Exod. 20:25; 1 Kings 18:30-35). Such stone altars were probably the most common form of altar prior to the building of the Solomonic temple. A number of examples of stone altars have been excavated in Palestine. The sanctuary at Arad, belonging to the period of the Divided Monarchy (900 B.C.-600 B.C.), had such a stone altar. The Hebrew stone altars were not to have steps (Exod. 20:25-26), probably in part to distinguish them from Canaanite altars which did have steps. A striking circular Canaanite altar dating from 2500 B.C. to 1800 B.C. was excavated at Megiddo. It was 25 feet in diameter and 45.5 feet high. Four steps led up to the top of the altar. Apparently in later times, the requirement forbidding steps on Hebrew altars was not enforced, for in Ezekiel's vision of the restored temple, the altar has three levels and many steps.

Other stone altars have been excavated in Palestine. One from Beersheba, belonging also to the period of the Divided Monarchy, was of large hewn stones and had, when reassembled, horns on the four corners (Exod. 27:2; 1 Kings 1:50). Apparently the Exodus restrictions concerning unhewn stones, like those concerning steps, were not consistently followed throughout the OT period.

The third type altar mentioned in the OT is the bronze altar. The central altar in the court of Solomon's temple was a bronze altar. Its dimensions are given as 20 cubits by 20 cubits by 10 cubits high, about 30 feet square and 15 feet high (2 Chron. 4:1). Yet, it is unclear whether the entire altar was made of bronze or had a bronze overlay on a stone altar. It is also possible that the bronze portion was a grate set on top of the otherwise stone altar (Exod. 27:4). This altar is regularly known as the altar of burnt offering. The earlier tabernacle had a similar altar made of acacia (KJV "shittim") wood overlaid with bronze (Exod. 27:1-2). The tabernacle altar was smaller, only five cubits square and three cubits high. The location of the altar of burnt offering of the tabernacle and Solomon's temple was not given specifically. It was located "at" or "before" the door of the Tent of Meeting, which was also the place that sacrificial animals were slaughtered. Generally reconstructions of the tabernacle and temple locate the altar in the center of the courtyard, but the text seems to favor a location near the entrance of the tabernacle/temple structure. The rationale was probably to locate the altar as close as possible to the focal point of God's presence, near the ark itself.

Ezekiel's vision of the restored temple had the altar of burnt offering located in the center of the courtyard. Although the dimensions are not fully given in the text, it seems that this altar was approximately 18 cubits square and 12 cubits high (Ezek. 43:13-17). Ezekiel's altar had three superimposed levels, each slightly smaller than the preceding, and had steps from the east leading up to the top.

Both the altar of the tabernacle and that of Ezekiel are described as having horns. It is likely that the altar of burnt offering in Solomon's temple also had horns. The stone altar found at Beersheba has such horns preserved. Apparently grasping the horns of the altar was a way of seeking sanctuary or protection when one was charged with a serious offense (1 Kings 1:50-51; 2:28-34; cp. Exod. 21:12-14). More importantly, the horns of the altar were the place where blood from a sacrificial animal was applied for atonement from sin (Exod. 29:12; Lev. 4:7). Jeremiah graphically described the people's sin as being so severe that they were engraved on the horns of the altar (Jer. 17:1). During certain festivals a sacred procession led into the temple and up to the horns of the altar (Ps. 118:27). Probably this procession carried the chosen animal sacrifice to atone for the people's sin and ended at the place of sacrifice.

Canaanite altar at Hazor in Northern Israel.

During the reign of Ahaz, the bronze altar or altar of burnt offering in Solomon's temple was displaced by an altar that Ahaz had built on a Syrian model (2 Kings 16:10-16). This altar was apparently larger than the bronze altar of Solomon and was placed in the central position in the courtyard to be the main altar of sacrifice.

No biblical description exists for the altar of burnt offering from the second temple. However, such an altar was constructed even before the temple was rebuilt (Ezra 3:2). Josephus described the altar in the rebuilt temple of Herod. He wrote that the altar was 50 cubits square and 15 cubits high with a ramp leading to the top. This altar would have been much larger than the earlier ones.

A fourth type of altar is the gold altar or altar of incense. It was located in the inner room of the sanctuary, just outside the holy of holies (1 Kings 7:48-50). The incense altar is described in Exodus as constructed of acacia wood, overlaid with gold, with dimensions one cubit square and two cubits high (Exod. 30:1-6). Like the altar of burnt offering, the altar of incense had horns on the four corners. As its name implies, incense was burned on this altar. The incense served as a means of purification after slaughtering animals, a costly sacrifice, and also as a sweet-smelling offering that would be pleasing to God.

Fragments of what was probably an altar base unearthed at the high place at Lachish in Israel.

Another Hebrew word for “altar” that is used infrequently in the OT means literally “high place” (Hb. bamah). Such “high places” were probably raised platforms at which sacrifices and other rites took place. The “high place” may have been itself a kind of altar, though this is not certain. The circular Canaanite altar mentioned above may be an example of a “high place,” an elevated place of sacrifice and worship.

New Testament The Greek word used for altar literally translates “place of sacrifice.” New Testament references to altars concern proper worship (Matt. 5:23-24) and hypocrisy in worship (Matt. 23:18-20). The altar of incense described in the OT (Exod. 30:1-6) is mentioned in Luke (Luke 1:11). Several NT references to altars refer back to OT altar events (Rom. 11:3; James 2:21). In Revelation John described a golden altar (Rev. 9:13) that, like the OT bronze altar, had horns.

While direct references to altar and the sacrifice of Jesus Christ are few in the NT (Heb. 13:10), the message that Jesus Christ is the ultimate sacrifice who effects reconciliation with God is the theme of the NT.

Theological Significance Altars were places of sacrifice. Beyond that function, altars also were places of God's presence. The patriarchal narratives regularly record the building of an altar at the site of a theophany, a place where God had appeared to an individual (Gen. 12:7; 26:24-25). It was quite natural to build an altar and commemorate the appearance of God with a sacrifice. If God had once appeared at a site, that would be a good location for Him to appear again. Thus sacrifices would be offered there with the feeling that God was present and would accept the offering. With the building of the Solomonic temple, the presence of God was associated especially with the ark of the covenant. The altar of burnt offering then came to signify more of a sense of reconciliation or mediation. The worshiper brought a sacrifice to the altar where it was burned and thereby given to God. The acceptance of the offerings by the priest symbolized God's acceptance, manifest in blessings (Exod. 20:24) and covenant renewal.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

The summit of Mount Carmel where Elijah's altar to God and the altar of the priests of Baal were built.

ALTASHHETH [Āi-tāsh' hēth] (NASB) or ALTASCHITH (KJV). Word in psalm title (Pss. 57; 58; 59; 75), transliterated letter for letter from Hebrew to English by NASB and KJV, but translated “Do not destroy” by NIV and RSV. This may indicate the tune to which the people sang the psalm.

ALUSH [Ā' lūsh] Wilderness camping place not far from Red Sea (Num. 33:13-14).

ALVAH [Āl' vāh] Personal name of leader of Edom. Spelled Aliah in 1 Chron. 1:51.

ALVAN [Āl' vān] Personal name meaning “high” or “tall.” A descendant of Seir (Gen. 36:23), spelled Alian in 1 Chron. 1:40.

AMAD [Ā' mād] Place-name of unknown meaning. City allotted to tribe of Asher (Josh. 19:26).

AMAL [Ā' māl] Personal name meaning “worker” or “trouble.” Leader of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:35).

AMALEKITE [Āmāl' ē-kīt] Nomadic tribe of formidable people that first attacked the Israelites after the exodus at Rephidim. Descendants of Amalek, the grandson of Esau (Gen. 36:12), they inhabited the desolate wasteland of the northeast Sinai Peninsula and the Negev. They were the first to attack Israel after the exodus (Num. 24:20). Israel won the initial battle (Exod. 17:8-16), but later was driven back into the Sinai wilderness by a coalition of Amalekites and Canaanites (Num. 14:39-45). Thereafter the Amalekites waged a barbaric guerrilla war against Israel (Deut. 25:17-19). Fighting continued after Israel settled in Canaan. Because of their atrocities, God commanded Saul to exterminate the Amalekites (1 Sam. 15:2-3). Saul disobeyed and the Amalekites were not defeated completely until late in the eighth century B.C. (1 Chron. 4:43). No archaeological data concerning the Amalekites has been discovered to date. See Exodus; Negev.

LeBron Matthews

AMAM [Ā' mām] Place-name in southern Judah (Josh. 15:26).

AMANA [A-mā' nā] Place-name meaning “trusted.” Mountain peak in Anti-Lebanon mountains where lovers met and then descended (Song 4:8).

AMANUENSIS (Ā-mān-ū-ēn' sis) One employed to copy manuscripts or write from dictation. Romans 16:22 identifies Tertius as the one “who penned this epistle” (cp. Col. 4:18; 1 Pet. 5:12). See Scribe.

AMARIAH [Ā-mā-rī' āh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh has spoken.” Popular name, especially among priests, after the exile. Brief biblical comments make it difficult to distinguish with certainty the number of separate individuals. 1. Priest in the line of Aaron (1 Chron. 6:7,52; Ezra 7:3). 2. Priest in the high priestly line after Solomon's day (1 Chron. 6:11). 3. Priestly son of Hebron in Moses' line (1 Chron. 23:19; 24:23). 4. Chief priest and highest judge of matters involving religious law under King Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 19:11). 5. Priest under Hezekiah responsible for distributing resources from Jerusalem temple to priests in priestly cities outside Jerusalem (2 Chron. 31:15). 6. Man with foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:42). 7. Priest who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey the law (Neh. 10:3). 8. Ancestor of a member of tribe of Judah living in Jerusalem during Nehemiah's time (Neh. 11:4). 9. Priest who returned to Jerusalem from exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel (Neh. 12:2). 10. Head of a course of priests in Judah after the exile (Neh. 12:13). 11. Ancestor of Zephaniah, the prophet (Zeph. 1:1).

AMARNA, TELL EL Site approximately 200 miles south of Cairo, Egypt, where, in 1888, 300 clay tablets were found describing the period of history when the Israelites were in bondage in Egypt. Amarna is not mentioned by name in the Bible. Tell el-Amarna lies on the east bank of the Nile River. The name for the area of Tell el-Amarna was apparently coined about 1830 by John Gardner Wilkinson when he combined the name of the village, Et-Till, with the name of the surrounding district, El-Amarna. The use of the word “tell” in the name is misleading. In Arabic, it means “mound,” and it would therefore be expected that the site be made up of several levels, indicating successive periods of occupation. There are no such levels, however.

Tell el-Amarna is the present location of the ancient Egyptian city Akhenaton. That city was constructed as the new capital of a young Pharaoh, Amenhotep (or Amenophis) IV, who was in power during the mid-fourteenth century B.C.

The so-called Amarna Letters were written in Akkadian, the international language of that era. These letters were primarily diplomatic communications between Egypt and Egyptian-controlled territories, including Syria and Palestine. Rulers of small Palestinian city-states including Shechem, Jerusalem, and Megiddo complained of mistreatment by other rulers and asked for Egyptian aid. These letters evidence the political unrest, disunity, and instability in the area around the time of the Hebrew conquest. Reference to the Habiru in these letters has intrigued scholars, but no definite connection to the Hebrews has been determined.

In recent years archaeologists have done a petrographic analysis of these tablets to determine their chemical composition and where they came from. The letters sent by Canaanite kings of Hazor, Shechem, and Lachish were found to be from those very cities. Other Amarna tablets appear to have been made in Egypt. One explanation of this is the fact that the Egyptians made copies of foreign correspondence.

Hugh Tobias and Steve Bond

AMASA [Ā-mā' sā] Personal name meaning “burden” or “bear a burden.” 1. Captain of Judah's army replacing Joab during Absalom's rebellion against his father David (2 Sam. 17:25). He is related to David, but the texts leave some question as to the exact relationship. Abigail was Amasa's mother. His father was either Ithra an Israelite (2 Sam. 17:25) or Jether the Ishmaelite (1 Chron. 2:17). She was sister of Zeruah, Joab's mother (2 Sam. 17:25) or sister to David and to Zeruah, Joab's mother (1 Chron. 2:16). When he defeated the rebel forces and Joab murdered Absalom (2 Sam. 18:14), David made peaceful overtures to Judah by inviting Amasa as his relative to assume command of his army (2 Sam. 19:13). When called to battle, Amasa appeared too late (2 Sam. 20:4-5). Joab marched among David's army and cunningly killed Amasa (2 Sam. 20:10). This served as reason for David to advise Solomon to do away with Joab (1 Kings 2:5) and thus reason for Solomon to kill Joab (1 Kings 2:28-34). 2. Leader in tribe of Ephraim who prevented Israel's soldiers from keeping captives of the army of King Ahaz of Judah, knowing this was a sin (2 Chron. 28:12-14).

AMASAI [Ā-mā' saī] Personal name meaning “burden bearer.” 1. Levite in the line of Kohath (1 Chron. 6:25). 2. Levite in the line of Kohath and of Heman the singer (1 Chron. 6:35), often identified with 1. 3. The chief of David's captains, who received prophetic inspiration from the Spirit (1 Chron. 12:18). Note that he does not appear in 2 Sam. 23. 4. Priest and musician who blew trumpets before the ark of God in David's time (1 Chron. 15:24). 5. Levite, father of Mahath, who helped purify the temple under Hezekiah (2 Chron. 29:12).

AMASHAI [Ā-māsh' aī] or AMASHSAI (NASB, TEV) Personal name of priest after the exile (Neh. 11:13).

AMASIAH [Ām ā si' ah] Personal name meaning “Yahweh has borne.” One of the captains of Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 17:16).

AMAW [Ām' aw] Place-name meaning “his people.” Translated “land of children of his people” (KJV) or “his native land” (NJV) or “land of the sons of his people” (NASB) in Num. 22:5, but translated as place-name in RSV, TEV. Place-name also appears in Idrim Inscription about 1450 B.C. and in an Egyptian tomb inscription. It was located west of Euphrates River south of Carchemish and included Pethor, the hometown of Balaam, the prophet.

AMAZIAH [Ām-ā-zī' āh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh is mighty.” 1. A Simeonite (1 Chron. 4:34). 2. A Levite and a descendant of Merari (1 Chron. 6:45). 3. Priest at Bethel who sent Amos the prophet home, saying he did not have the right to prophesy against King Jeroboam II of Israel (789-746 B.C.) in the king's place of worship (Amos 7:10-17). 4. Ninth king of Judah, the son of Joash and father of Uzziah (797-767 B.C.). He was 25 years old when he ascended the throne. He speedily avenged the murder of his father, who had been killed by court servants. Amaziah was uncommonly merciful in his avenging, as he only murdered the guilty servants, not the servants' children (2 Kings 14:5-6).

Among Amaziah's accomplishments, he conscripted an army for Judah, composed of all men age 20 and above. He also hired mercenaries from Israel but declined to use them at the advice of a “man of God” (2 Chron. 25:7). Amaziah led his army to Seir, where he easily defeated the Edomites, making them again subject to Judah. Yet he took Edomite idols back to Jerusalem and worshiped them. He then refused to listen to the rebuke and the forecast of doom brought by God's prophet (2 Chron. 25:11-16).

Encouraged by his victory in Edom, Amaziah challenged Joash, king of Israel, to battle. Though Joash tried to avoid a conflict, Amaziah persisted and was defeated at the hands of Israel. The temple and royal palace were plundered, the wall of Jerusalem was pierced, and Amaziah was taken prisoner. Amaziah survived Joash by 15 years. Because of a conspiracy against him, he fled to Lachish but was murdered there. See Chronology of the Biblical Period; Jehoaddan; Joash; Uzziah.

Ronald E. Bishop

AMBASSADOR Representative of one royal court to another. According to the KJV, NASB, and NIV reading of Josh. 9:4, the Gibeonites pretended to be official ambassadors from a foreign government as they approached Joshua (cp. NRSV). The king of Babylon sent official ambassadors to learn of Hezekiah's power (2 Chron. 32:31). Pharaoh Necho sent ambassadors to prevent King Josiah of Judah (640-609 B.C.) from joining in the battle at Megiddo, but Josiah persisted and died (2 Chron. 35:21-24). Faithful ambassadors bring health to a nation (Prov. 13:17). Isaiah condemned Israel for sending ambassadors to Egypt seeking military aid rather than seeking God's aid (Isa. 30:4). While they suffered before God's announced salvation, the people lamented before God. This included ambassadors who had unsuccessfully worked for peace (Isa. 33:7). Israel consistently relied on ambassadors to foreign lands rather than on Yahweh and His plan (Isa. 57:9). Jeremiah announced that God had prompted an ambassador to call the nations to punish Edom (Jer. 49:14; cp. Obad. 1). Ezekiel condemned King Zedekiah (597-586 B.C.) for sending ambassadors to Egypt seeking help in rebelling against Babylon (Ezek. 17:15).

Paul saw himself even in prison as an ambassador sent by the divine King to proclaim salvation through Christ to the world (Eph. 6:20; cp. 2 Cor. 5:20).

AMBER Yellowish or brownish translucent resin that takes a good polish. Also translated as gleaming bronze in RSV, but amber in NRSV, glowing metal in NASB and NIV, and bronze in TEV (Ezek. 1:4,27; 8:2). Some think that the Greek (Septuagint) and Latin (Vulgate) translations of the OT suggest the substance known as electrum—an amalgam of silver and gold. See Jewels, Jewelry.

AMBUSH Military tactic of hiding a unit of troops for surprise attack while carrying on normal battle with the remainder of the troops. Joshua used the tactic against Ai (Josh. 8). The people of Shechem waited in hiding to attack and rob people who crossed the mountain (Judg. 9:25; cp. Hos. 6:9). Abimelech used ambush to defeat Shechem (Judg. 9:43-45). Israel used ambush to attack Gibeah and the rebellious tribe of Benjamin (Judg. 20:29-43). Saul apparently used similar tactics against the Amalekites (1 Sam.

15:5). Jeroboam, king of Israel (926-909 B.C.) tried unsuccessfully to ambush Judah (2 Chron. 13:13). God set ambushes against Moab, Ammon, and Edom to defeat them for King Jehoshaphat (873-848 B.C.). God delivered Ezra from ambush attempts (Ezra 8:31).

The psalmists asked for God's help against wicked persons who sought to ambush them (Pss. 10:8; 59:3; 64:4; cp. Prov. 1:11,18). Jeremiah accused his people of spiritual ambush against one another (Jer. 9:8). He also called for ambushes to defeat Babylon (Jer. 51:12). The people of Jerusalem lamented that the enemy had used ambushes to defeat and destroy the city and nation (Lam. 4:19). Paul's nephew saved him from Jewish plans to ambush him as the Roman authorities transferred him from Jerusalem to Caesarea (Acts 23:12-33; cp. 25:3).

AMEN Transliteration of Hebrew word signifying something as certain, sure and valid, truthful and faithful. It is sometimes translated “so be it.” In the OT it is used to show the acceptance of the validity of a curse or an oath (Num. 5:22; Deut. 27:15-26; Jer. 11:5), to indicate acceptance of a good message (Jer. 28:6), and to join in a doxology in a worship setting to affirm what has been said or prayed (1 Chron. 16:36; Neh. 8:6; Ps. 106:48). “Amen” may confirm what already is, or it may indicate a hope for something desired. In Jewish prayer “amen” comes at the end as an affirmative response to a statement or wish made by others, and is so used in the NT epistles (Rom. 1:25; 11:36; 15:33; 1 Cor. 16:24; Gal. 1:5; Eph. 3:21; Phil. 4:20). Paul ended some of his letters with “amen” (Rom. 16:27; Gal. 6:18). Ancient authorities add “amen” in other letters, but translations reflect this only in their notes.

In the Gospels Jesus used “amen” to affirm the truth of His own statements. English translations often use “verily,” “truly,” “I tell you the truth” to translate Jesus' “amen.” He never said it at the end of a statement but always at the beginning: “Amen, I say to you” (Matt. 5:18; 16:28; Mark 8:12; 11:23; Luke 4:24; 21:32; John 1:51; 5:19). In John's Gospel Jesus said “Amen, amen.” That Jesus prefaced His own words with “amen” is especially important, for He affirmed that the kingdom of God is bound up with His own person and emphasized the authority of what He said.

Jesus is called “the Amen” in Rev. 3:14, meaning that He Himself is the reliable and true witness of God. Perhaps the writer had in mind Isa. 65:16 where the Hebrew says “God of Amen.”

Roger L. Omanson

AMETHYST Deep purple variety of stone of the aluminum oxide family. Used in the breastplate of the high priest (Exod. 28:19; 39:12) and the twelfth stone in the foundation wall of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20). See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

AMI [Ā' mi] Personal name with uncertain meaning. A servant in the temple after the exile belonging to a group called “children of Solomon's servants” (Ezra 2:55-57). Ami is apparently called Anion in Neh. 7:59.

AMINADAB [Ā-mīn' ā-dāb] (KJV, NT) See Amminadab.

AMITTAI [Ā-mīt' tāi] Personal name meaning “loyal,” “true.” Father of the prophet Jonah who lived in Gath-hepher (2 Kings 14:25).

AMIZZABAD (TEV) See Ammizabad.

AMMAH [Ām' mah] Hill near Giah in the territory of Gibeon between Jerusalem and Bethel. There Joab and Abishai pursued Abner after he killed Asahel, their brother (2 Sam. 2:24).

AMMI [Ām' mi] Name meaning “my people” was given to Israel by Hosea in contrast to the name Lo-ammi (Hos. 1:9) meaning “not my people.” The name Lo-ammi was given to the third child of Gomer, the wife of Hosea the prophet, to pronounce God's rejection of Israel. The name “Ammi” was the new name to be given the restored Israel in the day of redemption.

AMMIEL [Ām' mī-ēl] Personal name meaning “people of God” or “God is of my people,” that is, God is my relative. 1. Spy that represented the tribe of Dan whom Moses sent to spy out the promised land. He was one of 10 who brought a bad report and led people to refuse to enter the land (Num. 13:12). 2. Father of Machir, in whose house Mephibosheth, son of Jonathan and grandson of Saul, lived after the death of his father and grandfather. The family lived in Lodebar (2 Sam. 9:4; 17:27). 3. Father of Bathshua, David's wife (1 Chron. 3:5). Second Samuel 11:3 speaks of Bathsheba, daughter of Eliam. Many Bible students think these verses are talking about the same person, whose names have been slightly altered in the process of copying the manuscripts. 4. Gatekeeper of the temple whom David appointed (1 Chron. 26:5).

AMMIHUD [Ām-mi' hūd] Personal name meaning “my people are splendid.” 1. Father of Elishama, who represented the tribe of Ephraim to help Moses during the wilderness wandering (Num. 1:10). He presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (7:48) and led them in marching (10:22). He was Joshua's grandfather (1 Chron. 7:26). 2. Father of Shemuel of the tribe of Simeon, who helped Moses, Eleazar, and Joshua allot the land to the tribes (Num. 34:20). 3. Father of Pedahel of the tribe of Naphtali, who helped allot the land (Num. 34:28). 4. Father of King of Geshur to whom Absalom fled after he killed his brother Amnon (2 Sam. 13:37). 5. Member of tribe of Judah who returned from exile (1 Chron. 9:4).

AMMINADAB [Ām-min' á-dāb] Personal name meaning “my people give freely.” 1. Aaron's father-in-law (Exod. 6:23). Father of Nahshon, who led tribe of Judah in the wilderness (Num. 1:7). Ancestor of David (Ruth 4:19) and Jesus (Matt. 1:4; Luke 3:33). 2. Son of Kohath in genealogy of Levites (1 Chron. 6:22), but this may be copyist's change for Izhar (Exod. 6:18,21). 3. Head of a family of Levites (1 Chron. 15:10). He helped carry the ark of the covenant to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:11-29).

AMMI-NADIB [Ām' mī-ná' díb] KJV takes these words as a personal name in Song 6:12. Most modern versions express uncertainty about the translation of this verse. Some modern translations translate ammi-nadib as “my noble people” (NASB, HCSB) or “my people” (NIV), while others translate “my prince” (NRSV) or “chariot driver” (TEV). Some versions (NIV, REB, TEV) take the verse as spoken by the young man. The NRSV takes the words in verse 12 as coming from the maiden who spoke about her fancy (perhaps her imagination) setting her in a chariot beside her prince. Because of the confusion, James Moffatt did not even attempt a translation.

AMMISHADDAI [Ām' mī-shād' dāi] Father of Ahiezer, the leader of the tribe of Dan in the wilderness. (Num. 1:12) The name Ammishaddai means “people of the Almighty.”

AMMIZABAD [Ām' mīz' ā-bād] Personal name meaning “my people give.” Son of Benaiah, one of captains of David's army (1 Chron. 27:6).

AMMON, AMMONITES Territory east of the Jordan roughly equivalent to the modern state of Jordan. The Ammonites were a Semitic people living northeast of the Dead Sea in the area surrounding Rabbah who often battled with the Israelites for possession of the fertile Gilead. Ammon, the kingdom of the Ammonites, was hardly more than a city-state, consisting of the capital city itself, Rabbah or Rabbath-Ammon (“chief city,” or “chief city of the Ammonites”) and its immediately surrounding territory. Rabbath was located at the headwaters of the Jabbok River, where the southeastern corner of Gilead gives way to the desert. The agricultural productivity of Gilead, the waters of the Jabbok itself and of associated springs, as well as Rabbah's naturally defensible position, destined Rabbah to be a city of medium importance in ancient times. The proximity of the Ammonites to Gilead likewise destined them to be constant enemies of the Israelites, who made claims to Gilead and actually controlled it during the reigns of certain strong kings such as David, Omri, Ahab, and Jeroboam II.

Most of our information about the Ammonites comes from the OT, although Ammonite kings are mentioned occasionally in the Assyrian records. We know from the latter, for example, that an Ammonite king named Ba'sha, along with Ahab of Israel and other kings of the region, defended Syria-Palestine against Shalmaneser III in 853 B.C. An Ammonite inscription, the so-called Siran Bottle Inscription and several seals/seal impressions have provided additional information about the Ammonites.

Archaeologists have excavated only a small portion of the site of ancient Rabbah (the so-called “citadel” in the heart of the modern city of Amman). The surrounding area remains largely unexplored. In addition to the inscription and seals mentioned above, the bust of an Ammonite warrior (or god) and the remains of round stone towers thought to be Ammonite are significant archaeological discoveries shedding light on the Ammonites.

Conflict broke out between the Ammonites and Israelites as early as the time of the Judges. The Ammonites made war on the Israelites of Gilead, leading the Israelites to appeal to Jephthah, chief of a local band of renegade raiders, to organize and lead their resistance. Jephthah accepted the challenge but only after extracting a promise from the elders of Gilead that, if he indeed succeeded in defeating the Ammonites, they would recognize him as ruler of Gilead. At the same time he vowed to Yahweh, "If you will give the Ammonites into my hand, then whoever comes out of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return victorious from the Ammonites, shall be the LORD'S, to be offered up by me as a burnt offering" (Judg. 11:30b-31 NRSV). Jephthah was victorious, and the Gileadites submitted to his rule, but then his little daughter greeted him upon his return (Judg. 10:6-11:40).

On another occasion when the Ammonites were attacking the city of Jabesh in Gilead and the Jabeshites attempted to negotiate terms for surrender, the Ammonites demanded nothing less than to put out the right eye of each man in the city. In desperation the Jabeshites sent messengers to Saul at Gibeah for help. Saul organized an army, hurried to Jabesh, and lifted the siege. Consequently, the Jabeshites were strong supporters of Saul in later years (1 Sam. 11; 31:11-13). The Ammonite king that Saul defeated at Jabesh was Nahash. Presumably this was the same Nahash with whom David had good dealings but whose son, Hanun, renewed hostilities (2 Sam. 10:1-11:1; 12:26-31). The ensuing wars between Israel and Ammon involved warfare between David's troops and those of Hadadezer of Zobah (2 Sam. 10:6-19) and provided the occasion of David's affair with Bathsheba. Uriah, Bathsheba's husband, was killed while storming the walls of Rabbah (2 Sam. 11-12).

No war with the Ammonites is reported during Solomon's reign. On the contrary, Solomon took one or more Ammonite wives and allowed the worship of Milcom, the Ammonite god, in Jerusalem (1 Kings 11:1-8). Presumably the worship of Milcom continued in Jerusalem until it was stamped out by Josiah many years later (2 Kings 23:13). We know little of relations between the Ammonites and either Israel or Judah during the first half century of the separate kingdoms, probably because neither of the Hebrew kingdoms attempted to exercise influence in the Transjordan. The coalition of SyroPalestinian kings, which included Ba'sha of Ammon and Ahab of Israel, halted the Assyrian king, Shalmaneser's march in 853 B.C.

However, success was only temporary. Later Shalmaneser penetrated the very heart of Syria-Palestine, exacting tribute from the Israelites and, although it is not recorded, probably also from the Ammonites. Eventually, all the petty kingdoms of the region fell to the Assyrians and either were incorporated into the Assyrian province system or controlled as satellites. Ammonite kings paid tribute to Tiglath-pileser III, Sennacherib, and Esarhaddon.

The Israelites recognized the Ammonites as relatives, although somewhat more distant than the Edomites. This relationship was expressed genealogically. Specifically, the Ammonites were descended from an ancestor named Ben-ammi, one of two sons that Lot bore to his two daughters. The Moabites were descended from the other son (Gen. 19:30-38). The Ammonites also are mentioned from time to time in Israel's poetical literature. See, for example, Amos' oracle against the Ammonites in Amos 1:13-15.

Rabbah apparently had dwindled to an insignificant settlement by the third century B.C. when Ptolemy II Philadelphus (285-246) rebuilt the city and renamed it "Philadelphia" after himself. Philadelphia came to be regarded as one of the Decapolis cities, a federation of 10 Greek cities in Palestine (Matt. 4:25), and was annexed with the whole Decapolis region to the Roman Empire in A.D. 90.

J. Maxwell Miller

AMNON [Ām' nōn] Personal name meaning "trustworthy, faithful." 1. Firstborn son of King David (2 Sam. 3:2). He raped his half sister Tamar. Tamar's brother Absalom avenged this outrage by killing Amnon (2 Sam. 13:1-20). This incident marked the beginning of the decline of David's family following his adulterous relationship with Bathsheba and the murder of Uriah. See David. 2. Member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:20).

AMOK [Ā' mōk] Personal name meaning "deep." A priestly family after the return from exile (Neh. 12:7,20).

AMON [Ā' mōn] Personal name meaning “faithful.” 1. Governor of Samaria when Jehoshaphat was king of Judah, who followed orders from the king of Israel and put the prophet Micaiah in prison (1 Kings 22:26). 2. King of Judah (642 B.C.) following his father Manasseh. He followed the infamous idolatry of his father and was killed in a palace revolt (2 Kings 21:19-23). The people of Judah, in turn, killed the rebels. Good King Josiah, Amon's son, succeeded to his throne. See Matt. 1:10. 3. Ancestor of temple staff members after the exile (Neh. 7:59), called Ami in Ezra 2:57. 4. Egyptian god whose worship center at Thebes Jeremiah threatened with divine destruction (Jer. 46:25). KJV translates “the multitude of No.”

AMORITES People who occupied part of the promised land and often fought Israel. Their history goes back before 2000 B.C. They took control of the administration of Babylonia for approximately 400 years (2000-1595), their most influential king being Hammurabi (1792-1750). Their descent to Canaan may be traced back to 2100-1800 when their settlement in the hill country helped to set the stage for the revelation of God through Israel.

Abraham assisted Mamre the Amorite in recovering his land from four powerful kings (Gen. 14), but later the Amorites were a formidable obstacle to the Israelites' conquest and settlement of Canaan. They preferred living in the hills and valleys that flank both sides of the Jordan River. Sihon and Og, two Amorite kings, resisted the Israelites' march to Canaan as they approached east of the Jordan (Num. 21:21-35); but after the Israelite victory here, Gad, Reuben and half of Manasseh settled in the conquered area. These two early victories over the Amorites foreshadowed continued success against other Amorites to the west and were often remembered in both history (Deut. 3:8; Josh. 12:2; Judg. 11:19) and poetry (Num. 21:27-30; Pss. 135:10-12; 136:17-22). West of the Jordan the Amorites lived in the hills along with the Hivites, Hittites, and Jebusites (Num. 13:29; Josh. 11:3); but specific identification of Amorite cities cannot be certain since the term “Amorite” is used often as a very general name for all the inhabitants of Canaan, as is “Canaanite” (Gen. 15:16; Josh. 24:15; Judg. 6:10; 1 Kings 21:26). Five city-states in south Canaan formed an alliance instigated by the king of Jerusalem (Jebus, Jebusites) and intimidated an ally of Joshua, Gibeon. These “Amorites,” as they are called in the general sense, were defeated by Joshua's army and the Lord's “stones from heaven” (Josh. 10:1-27). Amorites also were among those in the north who unsuccessfully united to repel the Israelites (Josh. 11:1-15). Later two other Amorite cities, Aijalon and Shaalbim, hindered the settlement of Dan near the Philistine border (Judg. 1:34-36).

Amorite culture lay at the root of Jerusalem's decadence, according to Ezekiel (Ezek. 16:3,45); and Amorite idolatry tainted the religion of the Northern and Southern Kingdoms (1 Kings 21:26; 2 Kings 21:11). Despite the Amorite resistance and poor influence, they were subjugated as slaves (Judg. 1:35; 1 Kings 9:20-21; 2 Chron. 8:7-8). Their past hindrance is a subject of derision for the prophet Amos (Amos 2:9-10). See Babylon; Jebusites; Sihon; Syria. Daniel C. Fredericks

AMOS [Ā' mōs] Personal name meaning “burdened” or, more likely, “one who is supported [by God].” Prophet from Judah who ministered in Israel about 750 B.C.

Amos was a layperson who disclaimed professional status as a prophet: “I am no prophet, nor a prophet's son, but I am a herdsman, and a dresser of sycamore trees, and the Lord took me from following the flock, and the Lord said to me, 'Go, prophesy to my people Israel'” (7:14-15 RSV). Because of God's call, Amos assumed his prophetic responsibilities as a lonely voice prophesying from both the desert and the villages. He indicted both Judah and Israel, challenging the superficial qualities of religious institutions. For Amos, his call and his continuing ministry rested in God's initiative and in His sustaining power: “The lion has roared; who will not fear? The Lord God has spoken; who can but prophesy?” (3:8 RSV).

Amos lived in a time of relative peace on the international political scene. Both Egypt and Assyria were in a period of decline, although Assyria was beginning to expand its power. Syria had become ineffective, but the reduction of this buffer state between Israel and Assyria was to have serious repercussions in the generation following Amos.

Internally, the political structures of both Israel and Judah were stable. Beginning his prophetic activity during the reign of Jeroboam II in the Northern Kingdom of Israel, Amos lived during an era that rivaled Solomon's generation in its stability and economic prosperity (2 Kings 14:23-27). Yet it was precisely the social, moral, and religious problems attending that prosperity that became the focus for Amos' voice of judgment. In the Southern Kingdom of Judah, the noble king Uzziah reigned (Amos 1:1). Amos probably began his ministry with God's call "two years before the earthquake" (1:1). Traces of a major earthquake have been found at ancient Hazor, which have been dated to 765-760 B.C., a time that would fit Amos.

Morally Israel and Judah were suffering under the corruption generated as a by-product of Canaanite and Tyrian Baalism, as well as infidelity to the Lord's covenant. Israelite society had experienced the inevitable decay that characterizes misdirected prosperity. It may appear strange that the corruption of Israelite society could be traced to its contemporary religious structures and to the material prosperity, which Israelites so often interpreted as a sign of divine favor. Despite the contradictory nature of those circumstances, the debauched moral condition of the land was the product of both corrupt religion and perverted material prosperity. Rampant luxury and self-indulgence were clearly manifest (4:1-3; 5:10-13; 6:1,4-8; 8:4-6).

Exploitation of the poor occurred throughout the land (2:6; 3:10; 4:1; 5:11; 8:4-6). Justice was distorted. The dynamism of personal religious experience gave way to the superficiality of institutional religion as demonstrated in the conflict between Amos and Amaziah, the priest of Bethel (7:10-15). Amos' opposition to those moral and religious evils led him to emphasize the primary theme of the book: "Let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an everlasting stream" (5:24 RSV).

Ruins of small building, probably dating from post-biblical times, at Tekoa, Israel, Amos's hometown.

Amos was listed as an ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:25), but it is not known specifically if it was this prophet.

Roy L. Honeycutt

AMOS, BOOK OF One of the 12 Minor Prophets of the OT. The book of Amos may be divided into three sections. Chapters one and two are a basic section, divided into subsections that begin with a common literary introduction (1:3,6,9,11,13; 2:1,4,6). The second section of the book consists of judgment oracles directed against Israel (3:1-6:14). The third section contains the visions of Amos (chaps. 7-9), which may have been the earliest revelations through the prophet. The visions were central to his call experience. Aware of the awesome reality of human sin and divine judgment, these visions shaped his prophetic messages (7:1-3,4-6,7-9; 8:1-3; 9:1-4).

The words of Amos address various issues, but the central theme stresses sin and judgment. Whether in addressing other nations, Israel, or Judah, the prophet condemned those who sin against a universal conscience

(1:1-2:3), the revealed law (2:4-5), or God's redeeming love (2:6-16). Amos challenged people to live by covenant standards and condemned them for their failure to reflect the covenant in daily life. He was concerned about people who “do not know how to do right” (3:10 RSV). His word of judgment was severe for the “first ladies of Samaria” who encouraged the injustice and violence of their husbands “who oppress the poor, who crush the needy, who say to their husbands, 'Bring, that we may drink!’” (4:1 RSV). Because of such injustice and the failure to bind authentic religious experience with a social conscience, Amos claimed that the nation was already dead. One could sing Israel's funeral lament: “Fallen, no more to rise, is the virgin Israel” (5:2 RSV). For individuals who were superficially and confidently “at ease in Zion, and to those who feel secure on the mountain of Samaria” (6:1 RSV), their only hope rested in the renewal of authentic religious experience leading to a life of justice and righteousness which overflow the land (5:24). For those who rejected that way, only judgment remained: “prepare to meet your God, O Israel!” (4:12).

Chasm at Tekoa, Israel, the hometown of Amos the prophet.

Outline

- I. The Sermons: God Confronts His People's Sin (1:1-6:14).
 - A. God's Word is revealed in human words (1:1-2).
 - B. God identifies and condemns all human sin (1:3-2:16).

1. Acts against common human decency are sinful (1:3-2:3).
 2. The rejection of God's law by substituting one's own wisdom is sin (2:4-5).
 3. Rejecting God's love is sin (2:6-16).
- C. God condemns empty religion (3:1-15).
1. The privilege of being loved by God brings responsibility (3:1-2).
 2. God reveals His purposes to His people (3:3-8).
 3. God uses historical agents in His judgment (3:9-12).
 4. Centers of empty religion and illgotten prosperity will fall (3:13-15).
- D. God's love confronts His disobedient people in judgment (4:1-13).
1. Insatiable desire leads to sin (4:1-3).
 2. Empty and meaningless worship is sin (4:4-5).
 3. Temporal judgment is intended to lead God's people to repentance (4:6-11).
 4. God's rebellious people face an ultimate confrontation with Him (4:12-13).
- E. God calls His people to practice justice and righteousness (5:1-27).
1. God sees the end of His sinful people (5:1-3).
 2. God's rebellious people are invited to seek Him (5:4-9,14-15).
 3. God's inescapable judgment is on His people (5:10-13,16-20).
 4. Practical righteousness is God's ultimate demand of His people (5:21-27).
- F. False security in national strength leads to ultimate downfall (6:1-14).
- II. The Visions: Seeing God Properly Reveals Both His Judgment and His Mercy (7:1-9:15).
- A. God extends mercy in response to serious intercession (7:1-6).
- B. Ultimate confrontation with God can never be escaped (7:7-9).
- C. A proper view of God brings everything else into perspective (7:10-17).
1. A false view of the nature of God's message leads to wrong decisions (7:10-13).

2. A person transformed by a vision of God sees people and things as they really are (7:14-17).
- D. The final consequence of sin offers judgment without hope (8:1-9:4).
1. An overripe, rotten religion is worthless (8:1-3).
 2. The empty observance of meaningless ritual leaves our morality unaffected (8:4-6).
 3. God's final judgment is a horrible sight (8:7-9:4).
- E. God's mercy can be seen beyond His judgment (9:5-15).
1. God is Sovereign over the entire universe (9:5-6).
 2. God's mercy still offers hope beyond temporal judgment (9:7-10).
 3. God's ultimate purpose of good for His people will be fulfilled (9:11-15).

Roy L. Honeycutt

AMOZ [Ā' máz] Name means “strong.” Father of the prophet Isaiah (2 Kings 19:2).

AMPHIPOLIS [Ām·phīp' o·līs] City near the Aegean Gulf between Thessalonica and Philippi. Paul and Silas passed through it on their way to Thessalonica on Paul's second missionary journey (Acts 17:1) as they traveled the famous Egnatian Way.

AMPLIAS [Ām' plī·ás] or AMPLIATUS [Ām·plī·á' tus] Christian convert in Rome to whom Paul sent greetings (Rom. 16:8). Amplias was a common name often given to slaves. Paul referred to this individual as “my dear friend in the Lord” (HCSB), which may suggest a particularly warm and affectionate relationship between Amplias and the apostle. Modern translations spell the name “Ampliatus.”

AMRAM [Ām' rām] Personal name meaning “exalted people.” 1. Father of Moses, Aaron, and Miriam and grandson of Levi (Exod. 6:18-20). Moses' father, Amram, was the father of the Levitical family, the Amramites (Num. 3:27; 1 Chron. 26:23), who served in the wilderness sanctuary and may have served in the temple treasuries in later years. 2. One of the 12 sons of Bani who was guilty of marrying foreign women (Ezra 10:34). 3. One of four sons of Dishon in 1 Chron. 1:41. In Gen. 36:26 the four sons of Dishon are also listed; however Amram is listed as Hemdan. Translations other than the KJV list this son of Dishon as Hemdan in Chronicles as well as Genesis.

AMRAPHEL [Ām' rā-phēl] Personal name, probably originally Akkadian, meaning “the God Amurru paid back” or “the mouth of God has spoken.” King of Shinar or Babylon who joined a coalition to defeat Sodom and Gomorrah, then other kings in Canaan and the Dead Sea area. The kings captured Lot. Hearing the news, Abraham assembled an army, defeated the coalition, and rescued Lot (Gen. 14:1-16). Amraphel cannot be equated with any other king of whom records are available from the ancient Near East.

AMULETS [Ām' ū lēts] NASB, RSV translation of rare Hebrew word for charms inscribed with oaths, which women wore to ward off evil (Isa. 3:20). NIV translates “charms,” KJV, “earrings.”

AMZI [Ām' zī] Personal name meaning “my strong one,” or an abbreviation for Amaziah. 1. Member of temple singer family (1 Chron. 6:46). 2. Ancestor of Adaiah, who helped build the second temple (Neh. 11:12).

ANAB [Ā' nāb] Place-name meaning “grape.” Joshua eliminated the Anakim from southern Judah including Hebron, Debir, and Anab (Josh. 11:21). Joshua allotted the mountain city to Judah (Josh. 15:50). Located at modern Khirbet Anab about 15 miles southwest of Hebron.

ANAH [Ā' nāh] Personal name meaning “answer.” 1. Mother of Oholibamah, a wife of Esau (Gen. 36:2), and grandmother of Jeush, Jalam, and Korah (36:14). RSV reads “daughter” as “son.” This would allow this Anah to be related to or identified with Anah 2. below. In Gen. 36:24 Anah is noted for having found “mules in the wilderness” (KJV) or “hot springs in the desert” (NIV; cp. NASB, RSV). Here Zibeon is still Anah's father as in 36:2, but this Anah is masculine. In 36:29 Anah is a Horite chief living in Seir. 2. Son of Seir and brother of Zibeon (Gen. 36:20).

ANAHARATH [Ā-nā' hā-rāth] Place-name meaning “gorge.” City on border of Issachar (Josh. 19:19) located possibly at modern Tell el-Mukharkhash between Mount Tabor and the Jordan.

ANAI AH [Ā-nāi' āh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh answered.” Ezra's assistant when Ezra read the law to the postexilic community (Neh. 8:4). He or another man of the same name signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:22).

ANAK, ANAKIM [Ā' nāk, Ān' ā-kīm], ANAKITES (NIV) Personal and clan name meaning “longnecked” or “strongnecked.” The ancestor named Anak had three children: Animas, Sheshai, Talmai (Num. 13:22). They lived in Hebron and the hill country (Josh. 11:21) before being destroyed by Joshua. Their remnants then lived among the Philistines (Josh. 11:22). These tall giants were part of the Nephilim (Gen. 6:4; Num. 13:33). Arba was a hero of the Anakim (Josh. 14:15). The spelling of “Anakims” puts the English plural “s” on to the Hebrew plural “im.” NIV uses “Anakites.”

ANAM [Ā' nām] NASB reading of 1 Chron. 1:11, interpreting Anam as an individual rather than as a tribe or nation. See Anamim.

ANAMMELECH [Ā-nām' mē-lēk] Personal name meaning “Ami is king.” A god of the Sepharvites who occupied part of Israel after the Northern Kingdom was exiled in 721 B.C. Worshipers sacrificed children to this god (2 Kings 17:31).

ANAMIM [Ān' ā-mīm] or ANAMITES (NIV) Tribe or nation called “son of Egypt” in Gen. 10:13. No further information is known about these people. See Anam.

ANAN [Ā' nān] Personal name meaning “cloud.” Signer of Nehemiah's covenant to obey God (Neh. 10:26).

ANANI [Ā-nā' nī] Personal name meaning “cloudy” or “he heard me.” Descendant of David's royal line living after the return from exile (1 Chron. 3:24).

ANANIAH [Ān-ā-nī' ah] Personal name meaning “Yahweh heard me.” 1. Grandfather of Azariah, who helped Nehemiah repair Jerusalem (Neh. 3:23). 2. Village where tribe of Benjamin dwelt in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:32). It may be located at Bethany, east of Jerusalem.

ANANIAS [Ān ā nī' ās] Greek form of the Hebrew name Hananiah, which means “Yahweh has dealt graciously.” 1. Husband of Sapphira (Acts 5:1-6). They sold private property, the proceeds of which they were to give to the common fund of the early Jerusalem church (Acts 4:32-34). They did not give all the proceeds from the sale, as they claimed, and both were struck dead for having lied to the Holy Spirit (Acts 5:5,10). 2. Disciple who lived in the city of Damascus (Acts 9:10-19). In response to a vision he received from the Lord, this Ananias visited Saul (Paul) three days after Saul had his Damascus road experience. Ananias laid his hands on Saul, after which Saul received both the Holy Spirit and his sight. Acts 9:18 may imply that Ananias was the one who baptized Saul. 3. Jewish high priest from A.D. 47 to 58 (Acts 23:2; 24:1). As high priest, he was president of the Jewish court known as the Sanhedrin which tried Paul in Jerusalem (Acts 23). As was typical of high priests that belonged to the aristocratic Jewish group known as the Sadducees, he was quite concerned to appease Roman authorities and representatives. This desire may have prompted Ananias to take such a personal interest in the case of Paul (Acts 24:1-2), since some Roman authorities suspected the apostle of sedition against Rome (Acts 21:38). Because of Ananias' pro-Roman sentiments, he was assassinated by anti-Roman Jewish revolutionaries at the outbreak of the first great Jewish revolt against Rome in the year A.D. 66. See Sadducees; Sanhedrin.

ANATH [Ā' nāth] Personal name meaning “answer,” or it was the name of a Canaanite god. Father of Shamgar, a judge of Israel (Judg. 3:31).

ANATHEMA Greek translation of Hebrew cherem; booty taken in a holy war that must be thoroughly destroyed (Lev. 27:28; Deut. 20:10-18). The total destruction of this booty showed that it was being completely turned over to God. In the NT, “anathema” has two seemingly opposite meanings. It means gifts dedicated to God (Luke 21:5 HCSB) as well as something cursed. Paul invoked such a curse on those who did not love the Lord (1 Cor. 16:22) as well as one who preached another gospel other than the gospel of grace (Gal. 1:8-9). It is from these uses that anathema has come to mean banned or excommunicated by a religious body. Paul said he was willing to become anathema, cursed and cut off from the Messiah for the benefit of his Jewish brothers (Rom. 9:3 HCSB).

ANATHOTH [Ān' á-thôth] Personal and place-name. 1. City assigned to the tribe of Benjamin, located about three miles northeast of Jerusalem (Josh. 21:18). King Solomon sent Abiathar the priest there after removing him as high priest (1 Kings 2:26-27). It was also the home of Jeremiah the prophet, who may have been a priest in the rejected line of Abiathar (Jer. 1:1). Though Jeremiah was opposed and threatened by the citizens of Anathoth (Jer. 11:21-23), he purchased a field there from his cousin Hanameel in obedience to the word of the Lord to symbolize ultimate hope after exile (Jer. 32:6-15). Anathoth was overrun by the Babylonians but resettled following the exile (Neh. 7:27; 11:32). 2. The eighth of nine sons of Becher, the son of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:8). 3. A chief that is a family or clan leader, who along with 84 other priests, Levites, and leaders signed a covenant that the Israelites would obey the law of God given through Moses (Neh. 10:19).

ANCESTORS Those from whom a person is descended both literally and figuratively. Some English versions use the term frequently to translate 'abot in the OT and pater in the NT, both of which are the normal word for "father," "grandfather," etc. When these words are plural and the context deals with the past, the term usually refers to male ancestors or forefathers. Likewise, genealogies normally list male ancestors.

Ancestor Worship Ancestor worship is the adoration or payment of homage to a deceased parent or ancestor. Such worship was usually reserved for deities. Among ancient Israel's neighbors, there are several instances of deification of ancestors (Mesopotamian mythology and Egyptian kings). There may be one instance of ancestor worship recorded in the Bible. Ezekiel 43:7-9 may suggest that the bodies of Israel's dead kings were being worshiped. This practice of ancestor worship was condemned and forbidden.

Cult of the Dead Much like ancestor worship, the cult of the dead involves adoration of the deceased. The cult of the dead goes a step beyond adoration, however, seeking to maintain or manage a relationship with the dead. The cult of the dead involves the beliefs that certain departed spirits must be fed or honored and that they can be channels of information with the spiritual world.

While ancestor worship was not common among Israel or her neighbors, the cult of the dead was widely practiced. The belief in an afterlife was apparently universal in the ancient Near East. The provision of food, drink, and artifacts within tombs is an indication of the belief that the departed spirit would have need of such things.

Though Israel was forbidden to practice the cult of the dead, she often departed from God's injunctions and engaged in the worship of pagan deities. Wayward Israelites were also guilty of practicing the cult of the dead (1 Sam. 28). Israel was specifically warned not to offer to the dead (Deut. 26:14). God warned them through the prophets not to consult the dead in an effort to learn the future (Isa. 8:19; 65:4). Such acts were considered by the prophets to be dangerously at odds with God's will. See Burial; Divination and Magic; Genealogies; God, Pagan; Medium.

Larry Bruce and E. Ray Clendenen

ANCHOR Weight held on the end of a cable that when submerged in water holds a ship in place. Anchors were made of stone, iron, and lead during biblical times. The ship on which Paul sailed to Rome let down four anchors as it approached Malta (Acts 27:29-30,40). “Anchor” is used in a figurative sense in Heb. 6:19 where the hope of the gospel is compared to “an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast”— that is, a spiritual support in times of trial.

ANCIENT OF DAYS Phrase used in Dan. 7:9,13,22 to describe the everlasting God. Ancient of days literally means “one advanced in (of) days” and may possibly mean “one who forwards time or rules over it.”

Several biblical passages are related in terms and ideas with Dan. 7 (Gen. 24:1; Job 36:26; Pss. 50:1-6; 55:19; 1 Kings 22:19-20; Isa. 26:1-27:1; 44:6; Ezek. 1; Joel 3:2). It is impossible to determine the origin or original meaning of this term. However, in ancient Ugaritic literature, the god El is designated as “the father of years.”

Coupled with the figures of speech in the context of Dan. 7, “Ancient of Days” suggests age, antiquity, dignity, endurance, judgment, and wisdom. It clearly describes Yahweh, the God of Israel.

J. J. Owens

ANDREW Disciple of John the Baptist who became one of Jesus' first disciples and led his brother Simon to Jesus. Because of John the Baptist's witness concerning Jesus, Andrew followed Jesus to His overnight lodging and became one of His first disciples. Subsequently Andrew brought his brother Simon to Jesus (John 1:40-41). He was a fisherman by trade (Matt. 4:18). He questioned Jesus about His prophesy concerning the temple (Mark 13:3). Andrew brought the lad with his lunch to Jesus, leading to the feeding of the 5,000 (John 6:8). He and Philip brought some Greeks to see Jesus (John 12:22). He is mentioned for the last time in Acts 1:13. He figures prominently in several early extrabiblical church traditions. He is believed to have been killed on an x-shaped cross. See Disciple.

ANDRONICUS [Ān-drōn' 1-cūs] Kinsman of Paul, honored by the church. He had suffered in prison for his faith and had been a Christian longer than Paul (Rom. 16:7). Evidently he lived in Rome when Paul wrote Romans. He is referred to as an “apostle” in the broadest sense, meaning “messenger.”

ANEM [Ā' nēm] Place-name meaning “fountains.” A city given the Levites from the territory of Issachar (1 Chron. 6:73). Joshua 21:29 lists the city as En-gannim.

ANER [Ā' nēr] Personal and place-name. 1. Ally of Abraham in the battle against the coalition of kings in Gen. 14. 2. City from tribe of Manasseh given to Levites (1 Chron. 6:70). In Josh. 21:25 the Levites' city is called Taanach. See Taanach.

ANETHOTHITE KJV for Anathothite in 2 Sam. 23:27. See Anathoth.

ANGEL Created beings whose primary function is to serve and worship God. Though some interpret the “us” in Gen. 1:26 as inclusive of God and His angelic court, the Bible does not comment as to when they were created. Unlike God they are not eternal or omniscient. The Hebrew word in the OT is mal'ak, and the NT Greek word is angelos. They both mean “messenger” and occasionally refer to human messengers.

Classification of Angels Angels not only carry messages to people (Gen. 18:9-16; Judg. 13:2-24; Luke 1:13,30; 2:8-15), they also carry out God's will as He directs them (Ps. 148:2-5; Col. 1:16). The Bible offers little description of angelic messengers because the focus is on the message and not the messenger. Angels also performed tasks as mediators (Acts 7:53; Gal. 3:19; Rev. 1:1; 10:1).

Angels also serve God in His heavenly court. Titles such as “sons of God” (Gen. 6:2-4; Job 1:6; 2:1), “holy ones” (Ps. 89:5; Dan. 4:13), and “heavenly hosts” (Luke 2:13) identify angels as celestial beings who worship God (Luke 2:13-15; Rev. 19:1-3), attend His throne (Rev. 5:11; 7:11), and make up God's army (1 Sam. 1:11; 1 Chron. 12:22).

Angels are sometimes identified as winged creatures—the cherubim and seraphim. These angels appear in Ezekiel's visions (1:4-28; 10:1-22) and in Isa. 6:2-6. Cherubim are primarily guards/attendants to God's throne, whereas seraphim attend God's throne and offer praises to Him.

Angelic Appearance The physical appearance of angels varies, based on their categorization. Unlike popular imagery, only cherubim and seraphim have wings. Within biblical texts angels always appear as men and never as women or children. Angels identify with humans on the basis of form, language, and action. Angelic uniqueness is sometimes evidenced in Scripture by their activity or appearing in ways humans do not (Gen. 16:1-11; Exod. 3:2; Num. 22:23; Judg. 6:21; 13:20; John 20:12). The feature of a brilliant white appearance of angels occurs only in the NT (Mark 16:5).

Guardian Angels Though the term “guardian angel” does not occur in the Bible, many people believe angels are assigned to believers for this purpose on a permanent basis. Others hold that angels intervene in human history but in unique situations to assist believers (Pss. 34:7; 91:11-12; Acts 12:6-11,15). Hebrews 1:14 confirms that angels do service to believers but by God's will and under His direction.

Angels are described as heavenly beings in the very presence of God (Matt. 18:10). They cannot be in heaven and on earth simultaneously. A likely interpretation of “their angels” in the presence of God is that they are poised for action at God's command. The angelic guardianship that is apportioned to the faithful appears as a universal phenomenon rather than as an individual one.

Angels at Christ's Return Angels predicted Jesus would personally, bodily, visibly come again to earth (Matt. 25:31; Acts 1:11). In His second advent Christ will descend from heaven (1 Thess. 1:10) with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God (1 Thess. 4:16; 2 Thess. 1:7). According to 2 Thess. 1:7, angels will accompany Him as the executors of His decrees.

Mark 13:26-27 addresses the second coming of “the Son of Man.” These verses describe the coming of Jesus with great power and glory and sending His angels to gather His elect. Many scholars assign the fulfillment of prophecy in Mark 13 to A.D. 70 in connection with the Roman destruction of Jerusalem and the temple. It is clear, however, that much of this text refers to His triumphant final return. Verse 27 confirms that the Son of Man will send angels to gather the elect. Angelic appearance often marked a turning point in biblical history (Gen. 18:9-15; Luke 1:13,26-38; 2:8-15). Matthew's parallel passage (24:31) adds that the angels will gather the elect “with a loud trumpet.” Angels will gather believers where believers will be like the angels in that they will not die or marry in heaven (Luke 20:35).

By performing this act, angels will assist in vindicating believers in the very presence of their enemies (Rev. 11:12). Angels will worship Christ at His return (Heb. 1:6). Likewise, believers will join the angels in the praise of God in heaven (Rev. 5:13; 19:6).

Angels and the Final Judgment The theme of angelic involvement in divine judgment occurs in both the OT and NT. According to 2 Kings 19:35, the angel of the Lord put to death 185,000 Assyrians, whereas 2

Sam. 24:16 reports that the angel of the Lord brought death to the children of Israel until the Lord told him to stay his hand at Jerusalem (2 Sam. 24:16). Exodus 14:19-20 records that the angel of the Lord stood between the Hebrews and the Egyptians, which resulted in the deliverance of the Hebrews and the subsequent destruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea.

Some of these references pertained to immediate judgment and some to a final judgment (Gen. 19:12-13; 2 Sam. 24:16-17; 2 Kings 19:35; Ezek. 9:1,5,7). The NT likewise offers several examples of angelic participation in the judgment of evil, including immediate judgment (Acts 12:23) and a futuristic and final judgment (Rev. 8:6-9:21; 16:1-17; 18:1,21; 19:11-14,17-21; 20:1-3). At the crucifixion Jesus could have called upon 12 legions of angels in order to execute immediate judgment on those who crucified and mocked Him (Matt. 26:53).

According to Rev. 14:14-16, “the Son of Man” will gather the grain harvest (the believer), while Rev. 14:17-20 describes angels as gathering the unbelievers for the purpose of judgment. Angels will gather the “wheat” and the “tares” in the name of “the Son of Man” and by His authority (cp. Matt. 13:36-43). Angels will also gather impenitent people for Christ's judgment so that they may be cast into fire (Matt. 13:39-43; 2 Thess. 1:7-10). See Archangel; Cherub, Cherubim; Seraphim.

Steven L Cox

ANGER See Wrath, Wrath of God.

ANGLE or ANGLE OF THE WALL See Turning of the Wall.

ANIAM [A nī' 4m] Personal name meaning “I am a people,” “I am an uncle,” or “mourning of the people.” A member of the tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 7:19).

ANIM [Ā' nīm] Place-name meaning “springs.” City given tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:50). Located at modern Khirbet Ghuwein at-Tahta, 11 miles south of Hebron.

ANIMAL RIGHTS The Bible provides a clear distinction between animals and people. Though both were created by God (Gen. 1:20-30), people alone were made in His image (Gen. 1:27) and have an immortal soul (Gen. 2:7; 1 Pet. 1:9). Adam's naming of the animals (Gen. 2:19-20) signifies his dominion over them (Gen. 1:26-28; Ps. 8:5-8). This dominion was expanded after the Flood when God gave animals to mankind for food (Gen. 9:3).

Even though Jesus said that people are of greater value than animals (Matt. 6:26), this in no way provides license to mistreat them in any way. Because all animals belong to God (Ps. 50:10), they have great intrinsic worth. People are to care for animals and, when using them, treat them with the utmost dignity.

Just as wild animals are cared for by God (Job 38:39-41; Pss. 104:10-30; 147:7-9; Matt. 6:26), so domesticated animals must be treated well by their human owners (Prov. 12:10; 27:23). The Mosaic law stipulates that animals be fed adequately (Exod. 23:11; Deut. 25:4; cp. 1 Cor. 9:9; 1 Tim. 5:18), helped with their loads (Exod. 23:5), not overworked (Exod. 20:10; Deut. 5:14), and treated fairly (Deut. 22:6-7,10). Ezekiel compared Israel's unjust leaders to shepherds who mistreated their sheep (Ezek. 34:1-6), a situation reversed by Jesus the Good Shepherd (John 10:11; cp. Luke 15:3-6).

Paul H. Wright

ANIMALS In Gen. 1:20-26, on the fifth and sixth days of the creation story, God created the animals. Then He created man to rule over animals. Genesis 2:19-20 indicates that God brought the animals to Adam, the first man, and gave him the task of naming them. Many biblical episodes include the animals as a specific part of their story. As translations have evolved, some of the specific animal names have created confusion because later understandings have given greater knowledge to the general nature of the land and the types of animals existing there. Little is known in some cases what specific animal was actually present or referenced.

Mammals, birds, reptiles, amphibians, fish, and the classification of invertebrates include such a wide range of animals that not all will be found specifically in the Bible, but an attempt has been made to identify those mentioned and to offer some explanation. (Most of the specifically named animals of the Bible will be found under their own alphabetical listing.)

Domestic Generally, the people of Scripture tamed many animals for use in food production, military endeavors, and transportation. Among those found in the biblical text are the ass or donkey, camel, dog, goat, horse, mule, ox, sheep, and swine.

Wild In contrast the wild animals provided food and sport. Frequently biblical people feared them. Some identified in the biblical text are antelope (possibly pygarg [KJV]), ape, badger, bat, bear, behemoth (possibly hippopotamus), boar, coney, deer, dog, dugong, elephant (only referenced in connection with King Solomon and the ivory he imported, 1 Kings 10:22), gazelle, hare, hyena, ibex, jackal, leopard, lion, mole, mouse, ox, porcupine, rat, rodent, weasel, whale, and wolf.

Clean and unclean God established a group of laws specifically for the Israelites concerning clean and unclean animals. He made a stricter distinction for His chosen people than for all the other nations. Whether this distinction was related to idolatry, hygiene, or the ethical and religious nature of the Israelites is debatable. A study of Lev. 11:1-47; 22:4-5; and Deut. 14:1-21 gives the specifics of these regulations. The Apostle Peter had a vision in Acts 10:9-16 indicating that the practice of distinguishing between clean and unclean animals was still taught even in NT times. This distinction has been done away with and is no longer relevant for Christians. See Clean, Cleanness.

Amphibians Frogs are the only amphibious animal included in Scripture. They are mentioned prominently in connection with the 10 plagues in Egypt, where frogs were quite common (Exod. 8:2-13). The psalmist reminded the Israelites of that devastating plague in Pss. 78:45 and 105:30. Revelation 16:13 refers to spirits that look like frogs. See Frogs.

Birds Mentioned generally and specifically throughout the OT and NT. Some were used for food while others were used for sacrifice. In Luke 9:58 Jesus spoke about the birds having a nest while He had “no place to lay His head.” See Birds.

Fish Various cold-blooded, aquatic vertebrates with gills (for breathing), fins, and usually scales. Primarily a food source. See Fish, Fishing.
Invertebrates Classification of any animal not having a backbone or spinal column. Some have jointed legs, some are legless; some have wings, some have antennae; some even live as parasites. See Insects; Spiders; Worms.

Mammals Any class of higher vertebrates including humans and all other animals that nourish their young with milk secreted by mammary glands and have their skin more or less covered with hair. Numerous kinds of mammals can be identified in Scripture with a high degree of certainty even though some in the OT are not as easy to distinguish. (See individual mammal names in the alphabetical dictionary listing.)

Reptiles Members of the class of cold-blooded vertebrates with lungs, bony skeletons, and bodies of scales or horny plates, including the snakes and the dinosaurs. See Reptiles.

ANISE KJV translation of the Greek term more properly translated as “dill” in Matt. 23:23. The KJV translates the corresponding Hebrew word as “fitches” in Isa. 28:25,27. Dill is a leafy plant, resembling parsley. It was grown for its seeds, which were aromatic and used in cooking as a seasoning. See Fitches; Spices.

ANKLET Ornamental rings worn above the ankles; sometimes called “ankle bracelets.” The KJV has “tinkling ornaments about their feet” (Isa. 3:18; cp. 3:16). Anklets were luxury items worn by the women of Jerusalem during the days of Isaiah. Archaeologists have recovered anklets that date to the biblical period. They were made of bronze, from 2½ to 4½ inches in diameter and from about 2/10 to 4/10 of an inch wide. See jewels, jewelry.

ANNA Aged prophetess who recognized the Messiah when He was brought to the temple for dedication (Luke 2:36). Anna, whose name means “grace,” was the daughter of Phanuel of the tribe of Asher. After seven years of marriage, she was widowed and became an attendant of the temple. She was 84 when she recognized the Messiah, thanked God for Him, and proclaimed to all hope for the redemption of Jerusalem.

ANNAS [An' nās] Son of Seth; a priest at the time John the Baptist began his public preaching (Luke 3:2). Evidently, Annas, whose name means “merciful,” was appointed to the high priesthood about A.D. 6 by Quirinius, governor of Syria. Though he was deposed in A.D. 15 by Gratus, he continued to exercise considerable influence. When Jesus was arrested, He was taken before Annas (John 18:13). After Pentecost, Annas led other priests in questioning Peter and the other church leaders (Acts 4:6).

Church of the Annunciation in Nazareth commemorating Gabriel's unprecedented announcement to Mary.

ANNUNCIATION In Christian historical tradition, the annunciation refers specifically to the announcement with which the angel Gabriel notified the virgin Mary of the miraculous conception of Christ within her (Luke 1:26-38; Joseph received a similar announcement in Matt. 1:20-25). The births of Isaac (Gen. 17:16-21; 18:9-14), Samson (Judg. 13:3-7), and John the Baptist (Luke 1:13-20) were also announced by divine messengers, but despite a similar format, the news that a “virgin” would conceive by the Holy Spirit was unprecedented; all the other women were married. The Lukan account portrays two main characters, Mary and Gabriel, yet does not omit the work of the “Most High God” and the Holy Spirit in the incarnation of the Son, showing a Trinitarian involvement. Gabriel's announcement points to the Messiah's human (Luke 1:32) and divine (Luke 1:34-35) character and to the eternity of His kingdom (Luke 1:33). In the Christian calendar, March 25 was designated as the feast day of the Annunciation, beginning in about the seventh century.

Stefana Dan Laing

ANOINT, ANOINTED Procedure of rubbing or smearing a person or thing, usually with oil, for the purpose of healing, setting apart, or embalming. A person can anoint himself, be anointed, or anoint another person or thing. While olive oil is the most common element mentioned for use in anointing, oils produced from castor, bay, almond, myrtle, cyprus, cedar, walnut, and fish were also used. In Esther 2:12, for example, the oil of myrrh is used as a cosmetic.

The Hebrew verb mashach (noun, messiah) and the Greek verb chrío (noun, christos) are translated “to anoint.” From ancient times the priests and kings were ceremonially anointed as a sign of official appointment to office, and as a symbol of God's power upon them. The act was imbued with an element of awe. David would not harm King Saul because of the anointing the king had received (1 Sam. 24:6). Likewise, Israel (Ps. 89:38), and even Cyrus (Isa. 45:1), are called God's anointed because of God's working through them. Israel came to see each succeeding king as God's anointed one, the messiah who would deliver them from their enemies and establish the nation as God's presence on the earth.

In the NT “anoint” is used to speak of daily grooming for hair (Matt. 6:17), for treating injury or illness (Luke 10:34), and for preparing a body for burial (Mark 16:1).

Christians see Jesus as God's Anointed One, the Savior (Acts 10:38). The same symbolism as in the OT is employed in this usage: God's presence and power are resident in the anointing. Likewise, the Christian is anointed by God (2 Cor. 1:21; 1 John 2:27) for the tasks of ministry.

Mike Mitchell

ANON [ˈænɒn] Archaic word meaning “immediately.”

ANT See Insects.

ANTEDILUVIANS Meaning “before the deluge”; refers to those who lived before the flood described in Gen. 6-8. The early chapters of Genesis affirm that the God of Israel is the God who created the world and who guides all of human history. Those chapters connect the history of all humankind to that of God's covenant people, and thus to salvation history.

The genealogy in Gen. 4 is framed by two accounts of violence: (1) the murder of Abel by Cain and God's promise of sevenfold vengeance on anyone who harmed Cain (Gen. 4:8-16), and (2) the war song of Lamech, threatening 77-fold vengeance for any injury (Gen. 4:23-24). In between we are told of the cultural achievements of the antediluvians. Cain is credited with building the first city. The three sons of Lamech are attributed with the origins of cattle raising (Jabal), music (Jubal), and metallurgy (Tubalcain). Since cultural achievements were often attributed to the gods in the ancient Near East, the Scripture wants to emphasize that they are achievements of human beings created by the one God. The text shows an awareness that development of technology was a mixed blessing then and now. Technology both enhances life and is used for evil purposes.

The longevity attributed to the antediluvians in Gen. 5 is the subject of study and debate. The ages of the antediluvians are reported somewhat differently in the Hebrew Bible (Masoretic Text), the Samaritan Pentateuch, and the Greek OT (Septuagint). One traditional view is that these people lived longer because they were closer to the state in which God created human beings. Others say that their more simple life and vegetarianism (Gen. 2:16-17; 3:18b; and Gen. 9:3) allowed for longer life spans. Some consider the numbers symbolic.

The discovery of lists of Sumerian kings who reigned before the flood has thrown light on the theological significance of the text. The Sumerian kings, who were considered gods, were said to have lived for tens of thousands of years. In contrast, the biblical antediluvians were clearly human. Genesis emphasizes the oneness of God and the distinction between the Creator and human beings who were created. See Flood.

Wilda W. Morris

ANTELOPE Fleet-footed mammal with horns, about the size of a donkey. It is a grass-eating deerlike animal which does not appear in the KJV but does in NASB, NIV, NRSV, TEV, translating Hebrew te'o, a word translated in different ways by the earliest translations. The references may be to a large white antelope or oryx (oryx leucoryx) with striking long horns, black markings, and a tuft of black hair under its neck. It had a divided hoof and chewed the cud and so qualified as a clean animal to be eaten (Deut. 14:5). They were hunted and caught with nets (Isa. 51:20).

The pygarg (KJV), found in a list of animals in Deut. 14:5, has not been identified with certainty but is considered by a number of scholars to be an antelope. Pygarg literally means “white rump” and is the Greek name for a kind of antelope. This animal has been connected with one that is native to North Africa. It has grayish-white hinder parts with a white patch on the forehead and twisted and ringed horns that point upward and backward. It also has been identified with the Arabian Oryx, an antelope of Iraq that has long horns stretching backward.

ANTHOTHIAH [Ān-thō-thī' jāh] Descendant of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:24). The name may represent connection with city of Anathoth.

ANTHROPOLOGY Biblical anthropology concerns the origin, essential nature, and destiny of human beings. Human beings do not possess a knowledge of their own depraved nature nor a saving knowledge of God apart from the work of the Word, both incarnated and inscribed in our hearts and minds.

The Rhorh gazelle is one species of antelope found in Palestine.

The OT uses five words for “man.” Adam may be either individual or collective, may include both men and women (Gen. 5:1-2). Josephus claimed that “adam” means “red” because the first man was formed out of “the red earth.” More likely it is related to the same word in Arabic which means “creatures” or “mankind.” Ish in the OT is most often used for the male gender and is used to refer to man as opposed to God (Num. 23:19), man as opposed to woman (Gen. 2:23), man as opposed to beast (Exod. 11:7), man as husband (Gen. 3:6), man as father (Eccles. 6:3), and man as brave (1 Sam. 4:9). Enosh is usually a poetical reference to man individually (Job 5:17), men collectively (Isa. 33:8), or mankind in general (Job 14:19). Geber derives from a verb which means to be “strong” or “mighty” and is used poetically to distinguish men from those protected, namely, women and children. Metim can refer to males (Deut. 2:34), a quantity of men (Gen. 34:30), or people (Job 11:4).

The NT, likewise, uses about five main words to refer to “man.” Anthropos, like Adam, is used to refer to men as a class (John 16:21), in contrast to other forms of life (plants, animals—Matt. 4:19), as the equivalent of people (Matt. 5:13), and as a physical being (James 5:17) subject to sin (Rom. 5:18) and death (Heb. 9:27). Anthropos is used of Christ as representative of all humanity (1 Cor. 15:21). Aner, like Ish, is used to refer to man as opposed to woman (Matt. 14:21), man as opposed to boy (1 Cor. 13:11), and man as husband (Matt. 1:16). It is also used of Jesus as the Man whom God appointed to be judge of all men (Acts 17:31). Thnetos refers to man as mortal in reference to flesh (sarx, 2 Cor. 4:11), the body (soma, Rom. 6:12), and mortal man in general (1 Cor. 15:34). Psuche is the soul, the self, or life (John 10:11 ; cp. nephesh, Gen. 2:7). Arsen is used to distinguish male from female (Matt. 19:4, cp. LXX; Gen. 1:27; Rom. 1:27).

Creation The Scriptures give no indication that God created humans out of necessity or because He was lonely. Because God is independent, there was no necessity for the creation of humankind (Job 41:11; Acts 17:24-25); He has no need for fulfillment outside of Himself. Therefore, God must have created human beings for His own glory (Isa. 43:6-7; Rom. 11:36; Eph. 1:11-12). Humans, therefore, are to delight in and seek to know their Maker (Pss. 37:4; 42:1-2; Matt. 6:33).

Since humans were created by God for His own glory, then it is logical that humanity reflects His “likeness” or “image” (Gen. 1:26-31; 5:1-3). God's creation of human beings was good (Gen. 1:31), and they were the highest beings in the created order (Gen. 1:26; Ps. 8). As the highest creation, humans were given responsibility over the earth as representatives of God and caretakers of the created order (Gen. 1:26-31). All humans were created equally in His image. While “likeness” does not indicate physical similarity, even the body reflects God's glory and is the means by which humans carry out God's purposes. The image is found particularly in the mind and heart. Being created in the image of God sets humanity apart from the rest of creation. Specifically, it involves the following capacities: moral (original righteousness, Eccles. 7:29), mental (reasoning capacity and knowledge, Isa. 1:18; Rom. 12:2; Col. 1:10; 1 John 5:20), and spiritual (Gen. 2:7; Job 20:3; 1 Cor. 2:12-14; 15:35-50). Yet the purpose for being created with these capacities is that humans might be capable of knowing and being known by their Creator. Hence the relational capacity, in which we glorify, yearn for, and delight in God, encompasses the others. That relationship is for the purpose of glorifying God and taking pleasure in Him forever (Ps. 16:11).

Redemption Because of the fall, the image of God has been damaged. The image was not destroyed but only corrupted (James 3:9). This corruption is universal, affecting everyone, regardless of race, gender, education, or social status (Rom. 3:10-26). Humans are presumed to have some vestiges of God's image because the Bible speaks of its need for restoration (Rom. 8:29; 1 Cor. 3:18; Eph. 4:23-24; Col. 3:10). Because of sin, human beings need redemption, or regeneration, in order that the image might be renovated and the capacity for relationship with God be restored. Sin separates us from our intended purpose of glorifying God (Rom. 3:23). Hence, human beings must depend wholly upon God to reveal His glory as well as our own depravity. When He reveals His glory to us, it has two results: knowledge of God and knowledge of our iniquity (Ezek. 39:21-23; Rom. 3:21-26). In the corrupted nature, humanity rejects the revelation of God's glory. This results in a lack of knowledge both of God and our own condition (Rom. 1:18-32). He has given humankind over to a depraved mind (Rom. 1:28). Having fallen from His glory due to sin, those who do not have the knowledge of God are separated from His glory to eternal destruction (2 Thess. 3:1-3).

Due to the corruption of the image, the only hope for knowledge of God and of our depravity is the special revelation of God's Word, written and incarnate. The means by which human beings are redeemed is by the gracious gift of Christ (John 3:16). It is by His substitutionary atonement on the cross that we may be recreated (Gal. 6:14-15; 2 Cor. 5:14-19). As the Second Adam (1 Cor. 15:45-47), Christ represents the true image of God (John 12:45; Col. 1:15). That likeness can occur in fallen humans only as we are brought into union with Christ (Rom. 12:1-2). The knowledge God gives of Himself by His glory is all that is necessary to escape our corruption and partake of the divine nature (1 Pet. 1:2-4). Through recreation, the purpose of creation is restored, namely, to glorify and delight in Him. Our redemption serves this purpose of God (Eph. 1:3-5) who purges our sin for His glory (Ps. 79:9). This work of God is a work in process which will be complete at the return of Christ (Phil. 1:6; 1 John 3:2). Constitution The Bible speaks of humans as a unity of body and soul/spirit (Gen. 2:7). Though there are negative references to the flesh as sinful, others speak of it in relation to the unity of whom we are (Ps. 63:1). Though there is an immaterial part that can exist without the body (1 Cor. 14:14; Rom. 8:16; 2 Cor. 5:8), the body is not the only part infected by sin. Sin involves the understanding and heart (Eph. 4:18). The body can refer to the totality of a person (Rom. 7:18), the flesh (Rom. 8:7-8), the mind and conscience (Titus 1:15), and thought and intent (Gen. 6:5). Hence, body, flesh, soul, spirit, mind, conscience, heart, will, and emotions are not discrete parts of a human being which exist independently, but make up the totality of that person. Spirit, as much as flesh, needs to be rescued from corruption and conformed to the image of Christ (2 Cor. 7:1).

Theological Implications Humans have value because of our creation in the image of God (Gen. 9:6). This value is not based on any merit but is given by God (Ps. 8:4-6). Humans are valued by God more than birds and flowers (Matt. 6:26-29) because we were created with the moral, mental, and spiritual capacity to enjoy and glorify Him. Neither creation nor re-creation is based on merit but upon the basis of His own name's sake (Isa. 48:9-11). Christ gave Himself “to the praise of His glorious grace” (Eph. 1:6 HCSB). Human beings “deserve to die” (Rom. 1:32 HCSB). Only Christ is worthy (Rev. 5:1-14), and only by virtue of His having created (Rev. 4:11) and redeemed us do we have worth. Redemption reflects and manifests God's glory in that, though sinful people were worthless (Matt. 25:30; Titus 1:16), Christ, the Worthy One, died for us.

Humans are fragile and wholly depraved. We are subject to sickness, trouble, and death (Job 5:6; Pss. 103:14-16; 144:3-4). We are conceived in iniquity (Ps. 51:5) and can do nothing to change our nature (Jer. 13:23). Sin is universal to the human race (Rom. 3) and to the constitution of each human (Gen. 6:5).

Humans are created and redeemed for the glory of God and to enjoy Him forever. Human nature was not corrupt as it was created by God but only as it was tainted by Adam. While human beings are wholly depraved due to the fall, God can recreate us and restore our corrupted image through the Second Adam. Only as God reveals Himself to us through Christ and His Word do we unite with Christ and, as a result, know ourselves as depraved and Christ as our sole Redeemer. Once the process of restoration begins, it will be brought to completion. Redeemed men and women will, by the blood of Christ, give glory to His name and enjoy Him forever, thus fulfilling their original purpose (Phil. 2:5-11).

Human beings are held accountable individually and communally. Each person answers for his own deeds, yet we are called not only to love the Lord God with our entire being we are to love our neighbors as ourselves. According to Gen. 5:1-2, part of the image of God is reflected in the creation of male and female. Unlike God humans are interdependent; that is, we need each other. This carries significant implications as to the responsibility of human beings to one another as we live together on this globe to the glory of God and according to His purposes. See Creation; Death; Eternal Life; Ethics; Humanity; Salvation; Sin.

David Depp

ANTHROPOMORPHISM Words which describe God as if He had human features. They occur wherever Scripture mentions God's arm, ear, or other body parts. These descriptions are not to be taken literally because God is Spirit (John 4:24). Scripture uses anthropomorphisms frequently in poetic and prophetic literature, but they may occur elsewhere as well. One common anthropomorphism speaks of God's arm. This is usually related to His power to judge or to save. In Exod. 6:6 God says that He will redeem Israel from the Egyptians “with an outstretched arm and with great judgments” (NKJV). This pictures God reaching out to bring plagues on Egypt. Moses, after the deliverance of the Israelites at the Red Sea, praises God saying that fear of the Lord will fall upon people “because of the greatness of Your arm” (Exod. 15:16 NKJV; cp. Ps. 77:15). Additional passages promise that the arm of the Lord will be strong or victorious (Isa. 40:10; 48:14) and will execute judgment (Isa. 51:5).

Sometimes the Lord's hand is also said to rescue Israel (Exod. 15:16; Deut. 5:15; 11:2-4; 26:8). Psalm 44:1-3 describes how the hand of the Lord and His arm drove the nations out before Israel when they came into the land. Again the words refer to God's actions (breaking down the walls of Jericho, making the sun stand still, etc.) leading to the conquest of Canaan. The hand or arm of the Lord is elsewhere described as having rescued His people or as routing God's enemies (Pss. 89:10; 98:1; 136:11-12).

God's ear is also mentioned often in Scripture. In the Psalms God is implored to incline His ear to the psalmist's prayer (Pss. 17:1,6; 31:2; 39:12; 55:1; 71:2; 86:1,6; 88:2; etc.), meaning He is asked to listen closely. One important passage in Isaiah combines His ear, hand, and face: "The Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save; nor is his ear heavy that it cannot hear, but your sins have hidden His face" (Isa. 59:1-2 NKJV).

Anthropomorphism, while rarer in the NT, is found there. There are references to God's "hand" or to His "right hand" (Matt. 26:64; Luke 1:66; 23:46; John 10:29; Acts 2:33; etc.). These refer to divine power or to the place of honor in God's kingdom. First Peter 3:12 speaks of the eyes, ears, and face of the Lord, quoting Ps. 34:15-16.

Scripture also describes God as having human emotions such as joy, anger, and sorrow, as well as having thoughts, will, and plans. These are not anthropomorphisms because God, being a person, has the attributes of personality. Descriptions of His emotions in Scripture are sometimes called anthropopathisms, meaning the attribution of human emotions to God. God, being eternal and unchanging, does not experience emotions in the same way as people, though He certainly has them. Descriptions of His emotions in Scripture are by analogy to emotions as we experience them.

Anthropomorphisms make the language of the Bible more vivid. They help the reader to picture what God does. One may say sin separates us from God, but it evokes a deeper emotional response to say that God hides His face from the sinner (Deut. 31:17). Anthropomorphisms also make the truths of Scripture easier to remember. It is true that God judged Egypt for oppressing Israel, but it is more memorable to picture God "stretching forth

His hand” and “touching” Egypt with the plagues. Anthropomorphisms, then, aid one's understanding of who God is and how He acts for His glory in the world.

Fred Smith

ANTICHRIST Describes a particular individual or a group of people who oppose God and His purpose.

Old Testament The OT described the antichrist in various ways. Especially in Daniel, there arose the expectation of one who would oppose the Lord and His people Israel. This evil leader was referred to as the king of the north (11:40) who would come with a mighty army to crush the nations, to persecute the righteous (7:25), to bring death (8:10), and to set up his throne in the temple (8:13). This latter event the Jews term the “abomination of desolation.” Many Jews viewed the arrival of Antiochus Epiphanes IV as the embodiment of these verses. Yet in the mind of many Jews, the rule of Antiochus did not meet the full expectations of these Scriptures. There evolved a permanent expectation of an antichrist figure in Judaism. In later Jewish history such Roman figures as Pompey and Caligula were identified with the antichrist.

In Daniel one also finds a collective antichrist. In 7:7-28 the Fourth Empire was viewed as a collective antichrist. In later Judaism, the Fourth Kingdom or the collective antichrist was viewed as the Roman Empire (2 Baruch 26-40; 4 Ezra 5:3-4).

New Testament In the NT the only use of the term “antichrist” is in the Johannine epistles. First John 2:18 speaks of the antichrist who is the great enemy of God and, in particular, antichrists who precede that great enemy. These antichrists were human teachers who had left the church. Such antichrists deny the incarnation (1 John 4:3) and Christ's deity (1 John 2:2). In 2 John 7, the antichrists are identified as deceivers who teach that Jesus Christ did not come in the flesh. The concept of the antichrist appears in the term “false Christ” (pseudo christos) (Matt. 24:24; Mark 13:22). Mark and Matthew apparently expected a Roman ruler to once again enter the temple as did Antiochus and Pompey. In Rev. 13:3 the beast from the sea is often viewed as an antichrist figure. There, John may have looked for a return of the emperor Nero.

In 2 Thess. 2:1-12, the antichrist figure is armed with satanic power and is fused with Belial, a satanic being (2 Cor. 6:15). In this passage the Roman government is viewed as restraining its power. In Revelation the Roman Caesar is the evil force.

Contemporary Concerns Christians today have differing views of the antichrist figure. Dispensationalists look for a future Roman ruler who will appear during the tribulation and will rule over the earth. Those in the amillennialist school interpret the term symbolically.

James L. Blevins

ANTIMONY [Ān' tī mō nē] Silvery-white, brittle, metallic chemical element of crystalline structure, found only in combination. It is used in alloys with other metals to harden them and increase their resistance to chemical actions. Compounds of antimony are used in medicines, pigments, matches, and fireproofing. In the NRSV and the NASB “antimony” is used as a translation of the Hebrew terms 'abne-puk to describe the materials used to build the temple (1 Chron. 29:2; Isa. 54:11; NIV “turquoise”; REB, TEV “stones for mosaic work”; KJV “glistening stones” and “stones with fair colors,” respectively). It is likely that 'abne-puk refers to some sort of cement or mortar used in the creation of mosaics, which it is suggested would make precious stones appear larger and more colorful. In two other passages (2 Kings 9:30; Jer. 4:30), puk is consistently translated as eye paint. One of Job's daughters was named Kerenhapuk—that is, “horn of eye paint” (Job 42:14).

ANTINOMIANISM [Ān tī nō' mī ān tsm] False teaching that since faith alone is necessary for salvation, one is free from the moral obligations of the law. The word “antinomianism” is not used in the Bible, but the idea is spoken of. Paul appears to have been accused of being an antinomian (Rom. 3:8; 6:1,15). While it is true that obedience to the law will never earn salvation for anyone (Eph. 2:8-9), it is equally true that those who are saved are expected to live a life full of good works (Matt. 7:16-20; Eph. 2:10; Col. 1:10; James 2:14-26). Since we have been freed from the dominion of sin through faith in Jesus, we have also been freed to practice the righteousness demanded by God (Rom. 6:12-22).

Temple of Augustus in Pisidian Antioch.

ANTIOCH [Ān' tī-ōk] Name of two NT cities, one of which was home to many Diaspora Jews (Jews living outside of Palestine and maintaining their religious faith among the Gentiles), and the place where believers, many of whom were Gentiles, were first called Christians.

One of the cities called Antioch was the third largest city of the Roman Empire after Rome in Italy and Alexandria in Egypt. Because so many ancient cities were called by this name, it is often called Antioch on the Orontes River or Antioch of Syria. Antioch was founded around 300 B.C. by Seleucus Nicator. From the beginning it was a bustling maritime city with its own seaport. It lay about 20 miles inland from the Mediterranean in ancient Syria on the Orontes River nearly 300 miles north of Jerusalem. Many Jews of the Diaspora lived in Antioch and engaged in commerce, enjoying the rights of citizenship in a free city. Many of Antioch's Gentiles were attracted to Judaism. As was the case with many of the Roman cities of the east, Antioch's patron deity was the pagan goddess Tyche or "Fortune."

Temple of Augustus in Pisidian Antioch.

In the NT only Jerusalem is more closely related to the spread of early Christianity. Luke mentioned Nicholas of Antioch in Acts 6:5 among the Greek-speaking leaders of the church in Jerusalem. The persecution that arose over Stephen resulted in Jewish believers scattering to Cyprus, Cyrene, and Antioch (Acts 11:19). In Antioch the believers were first called Christians (11:26), and it was to Antioch that Barnabas fetched Saul (Paul) from Tarsus so that they could teach this mixed congregation of Jewish and Gentile followers of the Lord. At Antioch the Christian prophet Agabus foretold the famine that would shortly overtake the Roman world (11:28). The disciples responded with the work of famine relief for the church in Jerusalem, directed and carried out from Antioch. The church at Antioch felt the leading of the Holy Spirit to set aside Barnabas and Saul for what was the first organized mission work (13:1-3). Barnabas and Saul left for Seleucia (also known as Pieria, Antioch's Mediterranean seaport) to begin their preaching. The church at Antioch heard the reports of Paul and Barnabas on return from their first missionary journey (14:27) and likely their second missionary journey (18:22). This was a missionary effort to both Jews and Gentiles, about which Paul says in Gal. 2:11 that he had to oppose Peter to his face at Antioch.

Archaeological excavations at Antioch have been very fruitful, revealing a magnificent, walled Roman city of theatres, forums, a circus, and other public buildings. The language of the city was Greek, as inscriptions and public records show, but the language of the peasantry around this mighty city was Syriac, a dialect of Aramaic.

From Antioch of Syria, a small first-century marble statue of a sleeping traveler reminiscent of Paul.

The Cilician Gates through the Taurus Mountains north of Antioch of Syria where Paul would have passed on his second missionary journey.

Another city called Antioch was in Pisidia, Asia Minor, west of Iconium. Like the Syrian Antioch, this Antioch was founded by Seleucus Nicator. Under Roman rule this city was called Caesarea. Paul preached in a synagogue there on his first missionary journey (Acts 13:14) and was warmly received (13:42-44). Jewish jealousy led to a separate ministry to Gentiles (13:46). Finally, the Jews drove Paul and Barnabas from the city. These Jews from Antioch followed Paul to Lystra and stirred up trouble there (14:19). Despite this, Paul returned to Antioch to strengthen the church (14:21). Paul used the experience to teach Timothy (2 Tim. 3:11).

James F. Strange

ANTIOCHUS [Ān ti' ō kūs] Name of 13 rulers of Syria between 281 B.C and 64 B.C. They were part of the Seleucid dynasty that inherited part of Alexander the Great's kingdom. No Antiochus is specifically mentioned in Scripture. Many Bible students think the book of Daniel originally had its attention focused on the Seleucid kings, particularly Antiochus IV (175 to 163 B.C.). The Maccabean revolt and Jewish intertestamental history occurred during the reigns of the Antiochus kings. See Daniel; Intertestamental History and Literature; Maccabees.

Pisidian Antioch in the mountains of Asia Minor (modern Turkey) north of the Mediterranean Sea.

ANTIPAS [Ān' ti-pās] Name of a martyr in Revelation and the son of Herod the Great. 1. Tetrarch of Galilee at the time John the Baptist and Jesus began their public ministries (Luke 3:1). Antipas, whose name is an abbreviation of Antipater, ordered John the Baptist beheaded (Matt. 14:3). Pilate sent Jesus to Antipas prior to the crucifixion. On that occasion he treated Jesus with scornful contempt (Luke 23:11). This won the friendship of Pilate. See Herod. 2. According to tradition, the martyr of the church of Pergamum in Rev. 2:13 was roasted in a brazen bowl at Domitian's request.

ANTIPATRIS [Ān-ti-pāt'ris] Place-name meaning “in place of father.” City that Herod the Great built to honor his father Antipater in 9 B.C. It was 40 miles from Jerusalem and 25 miles from Caesarea on the famous Via Maris, “way of the sea,” international highway. Roman soldiers taking Paul from Jerusalem to Caesarea spent the night at Antipatris (Acts 23:31). It is located on the site of OT Aphek. See Aphek.

ANTONIA, TOWER OF Fortress near the temple built around A.D. 6 that served as a palace residence for King Herod, barracks for the Roman troops, a safe deposit for the robe of the high priest, and a central courtyard for public speaking. The tower of Antonia is not mentioned directly in the Bible. It served various functions between A.D. 6 and A.D. 66, the time of its destruction by Titus. Herod the Great built the tower at the northwest corner of the temple court to replace the Maccabean fort. The tower was 75 feet high and was named for Herod's friend, Mark Antony. Although the name “Antonia” is not used in the Bible, several references from the first-century Jewish historian, Josephus, describe the appearance and function of the tower of Antonia.

*Antonia Fortress (Tower of Antonia) in the model of first-century Jerusalem
(Holyland Hotel, Jerusalem)*

Josephus describes the splendor of the tower with spacious apartments, elaborate baths, and beautiful courtyards. The tower served as an official residence for the Roman procurators. Capable of accommodating at least a Roman cohort (500-600 men), the tower housed portions of the Roman army used to guard the Jews inside the temple court. Herod required that the vestments of the high priest be kept in the tower to maintain control over the worship festivals of the Jews.

The pavement beneath the modern convent of Notre Dame de Sion has been thought to be the place of the tower's courtyard, traditionally considered the site of Jesus' trial before Pilate (John 19:13). Recent archaeological evidence, however, has shown that the pavement dates from the second century and not the time of Jesus.

Linda McKinnish Bridges

ANTOTHIJAH [Ān-tō-thī' jah] (KJV) See Anthothijah.

ANTOTHITE [Ān' tō-thit] KJV for person from Anathoth. See Anathoth.

ANUB [Ā' nūb] Personal name meaning “grape” or “with a mustache.” A member of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:8).

ANXIETY State of mind wherein one is concerned about something or someone. This state of mind may range from genuine concern (Phil. 2:20,28; 2 Cor. 11:28) to obsessions that originate from a distorted perspective of life (Matt. 6:25-34; Mark 4:19; Luke 12:22-31). Jesus did not prohibit genuine concern about food or shelter, but He did teach that we should keep things in their proper perspective. We should make God's kingdom our first priority; everything else will fall in line after we do that (Matt. 6:33).

APE Large, semierect primate, mentioned only twice in the OT and not described. The ape was not native to the Holy Land, but the Israelites were familiar with it. Some types were kept as pets. They were among the gifts that the navy of Hiram brought to Solomon (1 Kings 10:22; 2 Chron. 9:21).

The Hebrew term qoph may refer to apes (papio hamadrias arabicus), using a loanword from Egyptian, but the exact animal referred to by this term is far from certain, the animal apparently being an imported novelty for the people of Solomon's day.

APELLES [Ā·pĕl' lĕs] A Christian in Rome whom Paul saluted as “approved in Christ” (Rom. 16:10), which may mean he had been tested by persecution and proved faithful.

APHARSACHITES [Ā·phār' sāk'its] or APHARSATHCHITES KJV transliteration of Aramaic terms in Ezra 4:9; 5:6; 6:6. Modern translations translate the term to indicate government officials: governors (RSV); officials (NIV; NASB). The term in 4:9 may represent officials representing the Persian king in the provinces of his kingdom. The term in 5:6 and 6:6 may refer to government investigators or inspectors.

APHARSITES [Ā·phār' sīts] KJV transliteration of Aramaic term in Ezra 4:9 variously translated and interpreted by modern translators and Bible students: men from Persia (NIV); Persians (RSV); secretaries (NASB). The verse is difficult to read in the original language, and no satisfactory interpretation has been offered.

APHEK [Ā' phèk] Place-name meaning “bed of brook or river” or “fortress.” 1. City whose king Joshua defeated (Josh. 12:18), where Philistine armies formed to face Israel in days of Samuel (1 Sam. 4:1) resulting in Philistine victory and capture of Israel's ark of the covenant. Philistine armies including David and his men gathered in Aphek to fight Saul. The Philistine commanders forced Achish to send David back from battle (1 Sam. 29). Eventually the Philistines defeated Israel, bringing death to Saul and Jonathan. Aphek is located at modern Tell Ras el' Ain near the source of the Yarkon River in the Sharon plain northeast of Joppa. Egyptian execration texts from about 1900 B.C. apparently refer to Aphek. Aphek became known as Antipatris in the NT era. See Antipatris. 2. Northern border city which Joshua did not conquer (Josh. 13:4). This may be modern Afqa, 15 miles east of ancient Byblos and 23 miles north of Beirut, Lebanon. 3. City assigned to Asher (Josh. 19:30) but not conquered (Judg. 1:31). This may be modern Tell Kerdanah, three miles from Haifa and six miles southeast of Acco. 4. City east of Jordan near the Sea of Galilee where Benhadad led Syria against Israel about 860 B.C. but met defeat as a prophet predicted for Israel (1 Kings 20:26-30). A wall of Aphek fell on 27,000 Syrians (1 Kings 20:30). Also Elisha promised Joash victory over the Syrians in Aphek (2 Kings 13:17).

Late Bronze Age palace excavated at Aphek-Antipatris.

APHEKAH [Ā-phē' kāh] City that Joshua assigned to tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:53). Its location is unknown.

APHIAH [Ā-phī' ah] Personal name meaning “forehead.” An ancestor of King Saul from the tribe of Benjamin (1 Sam. 9:1).

APHIK [Ā-phūk] Variant Hebrew spelling of Aphek (Judg. 1:31). See Aphek 3.

APHRAH [Ā-ph' rah] KJV interpretation of place-name in Mic. 1:10, also called Beth Ophrah (NIV) or Beth-le-aphrah (RSV; NASB); or Beth Leaphrah (TEV). The longer name used in modern translations means “house of dust” and is used to make a wordplay by Micah, the meaning of the name being more important than the actual city. The city has not been located. It may be modern Tel et-Taijibe near Hebron.

APHSES [Ā-ph' sēs] (KJV) See Happizzesz.

APIRU See Habiru.

APIS [Ā' pīs] Sacred bull worshiped in Memphis, Egypt. RSV and TEV divide the words in Jer. 46:15 differently than does printed Hebrew text. They thus translate, “Why has Apis fled?” (RSV) or “Why has your mighty God Apis fallen?” (TEV). Other translations retain the present Hebrew text and read, “Why are thy valiant men swept away?” (KJV)

APOCALYPTIC Occurs 18 times in the NT in the Greek noun form apokalupsis and 26 times in the verb form apokalupto. These Greek terms derive from the combination of the preposition apo and the verb kalupto, resulting in the definition “to uncover, unveil, or reveal.” Such “uncovering” or “revelation” comes through visions or dreams and refers to the eschatological disclosure of secrets with reference to the last days. The use of the term “apocalyptic” is due to the opening word of Revelation, apokalupsis, meaning a revelation. When commentators speak of apocalyptic writings, they mean works written in a similar style to the book of Revelation. Apocalyptic, therefore, refers to writings that employ symbolic or figurative language used to describe a future divine intervention; the doctrinal system explicit in this genre of literature; and the movements that produced such writings and doctrines.

There are some similarities between Zoroastrianism and biblical apocalyptic material, for the eschatological element in apocalyptic thought is combined with a cosmic dualism. In this dualism the future is not an outgrowth of the present, for if it was, humanity would vastly improve, and the present age would not come to an end. The differences between Persian religious ideas and those of the Hebrews are distinct. The apocalypticism of Zoroastrianism is a dualism of two opposing personified forces in the universe, a good god and an evil god. In the Judeo-Christian concept Satan is not equal, but clearly inferior to God and an opponent to God. Satan is the tempter and oppressor of humanity, but even so God is in control with Satan operating at God's pleasure. The Zoroastrian sources from which Jewish apocalyptic supposedly derived occurred later in composition than the biblical materials. Zoroastrianism is indebted to the Bible and not vice versa.

The Nature of Apocalyptic The critical scholars, who accept late dates of apocalyptic literature (including the OT book of Daniel), view apocalyptic merely as a literary method employed by ancient writers to convey a future hope of a better world. The enduring value of apocalyptic is its promise of this better world to those who are overwhelmed by their present circumstances, such as poverty, disease, and persecution. Such is the significance of the canonical apocalyptic book of Daniel and the Revelation. Some hold that the best approach in defining works as apocalyptic is to compare features with those of Revelation. This appears to be the best method. Some typical features of apocalyptic are illustrated from Revelation: the revelation is given by God (Rev. 1:1); the revelation is given through a mediator or an angel (Rev. 1:1; 22:16); the mediator delivers the revelation to a seer/ prophet (Rev. 1:1); the revelation is in reference to future events, generally the triumph of good over evil (Rev. 1:1); apocalyptic writings were written during a time of persecution or during a historical crisis (Rev. 1:9); the message is presented in visions (Rev. 1:10); there is much use of symbolism and gematria/numerology (Rev. 1:20; 7:4-8); and the major theme or message is the eschatological triumph of the kingdom of God over the evil kingdoms of the earth (Rev. 19:17-21). Some scholars, however, tend to classify works as apocalyptic that are not of this genre.

Old Testament Critical scholars hold that the genre of apocalyptic is a late development that arose during the postexilic period, though there were earlier influences in this direction. The Jewish people had hoped Israel would regain its former glory and that a Davidic king would rule over them, resulting in the defeat of Israel's enemies. As time passed, the Jews realized that this would not occur without an intervention from God. Gradually, Israel began to place its confidence for the future in a Messiah who would bring in a new era of peace, prosperity, and victory over the nations.

Portions of Joel, Amos, Zechariah, and Isaiah have apocalyptic features, as does Daniel, which many view as most like apocalyptic literature. Though Zech. 1-6 contains many features of this genre, such as visions, gematria, and angels, this material does not appear to emphasize the eschatological themes which are prominent in Daniel and Revelation (e.g. the eschatological triumph of the kingdom of God over the kingdoms of the earth, the resurrection) and is best not classified as apocalyptic. Zechariah 9-14 is prophecy but does not share the certain features of apocalyptic literature (i.e., angels or visions). Some scholars include Isa. 24-27, Ezek. 38-39, and Joel 3 as apocalyptic, but these passages, though eschatological, lack far too many features of the genre to be classified as apocalyptic.

Apocryphal Works Several apocalyptic works were written between 200 B.C. and A.D. 100, though they were not included in the biblical canon: 1 Enoch (163-80 B.C.), Book of Jubilees (100 B.C.), the Sibylline Oracles (approximately 150 B.C.), the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs (140-110 B.C.), the Psalms of Solomon (50 B.C.), the Assumption of Moses (4 B.C.-A.D. 30), the Martyrdom of Isaiah (first century A.D.), 4 Ezra (A.D. 90-100), and 2 Baruch (A.D. 50-100). Differences between canonical and noncanonical apocalyptic literature are numerous: (1) noncanonical apocalypses appeared as imitations of the biblical books; (2) these works were pseudonymous—written under a false name. The people associated with these works had long been deceased, but they were used to lend authority to the books; (3) noncanonical apocalyptic writings claimed to predict future events but were actually prophecies written after the given event occurred; (4) noncanonical apocalypses were written after the OT prophetic message had ceased (approximately 400 B.C.); and (5) noncanonical apocalyptic works were never considered to be inspired in the same way as the biblical books, due to various doctrinal and ethical matters.

New Testament The book of Revelation is the only NT document that is totally apocalyptic. Other sections of the NT classify as true apocalyptic including Matt. 24-25 and Mark 13. Portions of the letters to the Thessalonians, likewise, contain elements that warrant the classification of apocalyptic: the culmination of evil (2 Thess. 2:1-4); Christ will descend from heaven (1 Thess. 1:10) with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God (1 Thess. 4:16; 2 Thess. 1:7); angels will accompany Him as the executors of His decrees (2 Thess. 1:7); vengeance will be taken on the godless among both the Gentiles and Jews (1 Thess. 4:6; 2 Thess. 1:8) and the doom of the wicked is eternal destruction (2 Thess. 1:9). At the climax of evil, Christ will descend from heaven and slay the man of sin with the breath of His mouth and then consume him with the manifestation of His coming (2 Thess. 2:8). See Daniel, Book of; Eschatology; Revelation, Book of.

Steven L. Cox

APOCRYPHA, OLD TESTAMENT Jews did not stop writing for centuries between the OT and the NT. The intertestamental period was a time of much literary production. We designate these writings as Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha. They did not attain canonical status, but some of them were cited by early Christians as almost on a level with the OT writings, and a few were copied in biblical manuscripts. Some NT authors were familiar with various noncanonical works, and the letter from Jude made specific reference to at least one of these books. They were ultimately preserved by the Christians rather than by the Jews.

Meaning “things that are hidden,” apocrypha is applied to a collection of 15 books written between about 200 B.C. and A.D. 100. These are not a part of the OT but are valued by some for private study. The word “apocrypha” is not found in the Bible. Although never part of the Hebrew Scriptures, all 15 apocryphal books except 2 Esdras appear in the Greek translation of the OT, the Septuagint. They were made a part of the official Latin Bible, the Vulgate. All except 1 and 2 Esdras and the Prayer of Manasseh are considered canonical (in the Bible) and authoritative by the Roman Catholic Church. From the time of the Reformation, the apocryphal books have been omitted from the canon of the Protestant churches. The Apocrypha represents various types of literature: historical, historical romance, wisdom, devotional, and apocalyptic.

First Esdras is a historical book from the early first century A.D. Paralleling material in the last chapters of 2 Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah, it covers the period from Josiah to the reading of the law by Ezra. In a number of places, it differs from the OT account. It is believed that this writing drew from some of the same sources used by the writers of the canonical OT books. The Three Guardsmen Story, 3:1-5:3, is the one significant passage in 1 Esdras that does not occur in the OT. It tells how Zerubbabel was allowed to lead the exiles back to Palestine.

First Maccabees is the most important historical writing in the Apocrypha. It is the primary source for writing the history of the period that it covers, 180 to 134 B.C. The emphasis is that God worked through Mattathias and his sons to bring deliverance. He did not intervene in divine, supernatural ways. He worked through people to accomplish His purposes. The writer was a staunch patriot. For him nationalism and religious zeal were one and the same. After introductory verses dealing with Alexander the Great, the book gives the causes for the revolt against the Seleucids. Much detail is given about the careers of Judas and Jonathan. Less attention is given to Simon, although emphasis is placed upon his being acclaimed leader and high priest forever. Brief reference to John Hyrcanus at the close suggests that the book was written either late in his life or after his death, probably shortly after 100 B.C.

Second Maccabees also gives the history of the early part of the revolt against the Seleucids, covering the period from 180 to 161 B.C. It is based upon five volumes written by Jason of Cyrene, about which volumes nothing is known. Second Maccabees, written shortly after 100 B.C., is not considered as accurate historically as 1 Maccabees. In places the two books disagree. This book begins with two letters written to Jews in Egypt urging them to celebrate the cleansing of the temple by Judas. In the remainder of the writing, the author insisted that the Jews' trouble came as the result of their sinfulness. He emphasized God's miraculous intervention to protect the temple and His people. Great honor was bestowed upon those who were martyred for their faith. The book includes the story of seven brothers and their mother who were put to death. The book clearly teaches a resurrection of the body, at least for the righteous.

Tobit is a historical romance written about 200 B.C. It is more concerned to teach lessons than to record history. The story is of a family carried into exile in Assyria when Israel was destroyed. The couple, Tobit and Anna, had a son named Tobias. Tobit had left a large sum of money with a man in Media. When Tobit became blind, he sent his son Tobias to collect the money. A man was found to accompany the son Tobias. In reality he was the angel Raphael. Parallel to this is the account of a relative named Sarah. She had married seven husbands, but a demon had slain each of them on the wedding night. Raphael told Tobias that he was eligible to marry Sarah. They had caught a fish and had preserved the heart, liver, and gall. When burned, the heart and liver would drive away a demon. The gall would cure blindness. Thus Tobias was able to marry Sarah without harm. Raphael collected the money that was left in Media, and the blindness of Tobit was cured by means of the fish's gall. The book stresses temple attendance, paying of tithes, giving alms, marrying only within the people of Israel, and the importance of prayer. Obedience to the law is central along with separation of Jews from Gentiles. It introduces the concept of a guardian angel.

The book of Judith, from 250 to 150 B.C., shows the importance of obedience to the law. In this book Nebuchadnezzar, the king of the Assyrians, reigned at the time the Jews returned from exile. This shows it is not historically accurate, for Cyrus of Persia was king when the Jews returned from exile (538 B.C.). The story may be based upon some event where a woman played a heroic role in the life of her people. In the story Nebuchadnezzar sent one of his generals, Holofernes, to subjugate the nations in the western part of his empire. The Jews resisted so Holofernes laid siege to the city of Bethulia (unknown except for this reference). Because of a shortage of water, the city decided to surrender in five days if God did not intervene. Judith had been a widow for three years and had been careful to obey all the law. She stated that God was going to act through her to save His people. She went with her maid to the camp of Holofernes, claiming that God was going to destroy the people because of their sin. She promised to show the general how he could capture the city without loss of a life. At a banquet a few days later, when Holofernes had drunk himself into a coma, she cut off his head and took it back to the city. The result was a great victory for the Jews over their enemies. This book places emphasis upon prayer and fasting. Idolatry is denounced, and the God of Israel is glorified. The book shows a strong hatred of pagans. Its moral content is low, for it teaches that the end justifies the means.

The Apocrypha contains additions to the OT book of Esther. The Hebrew text of Esther contains 163 verses, but the Greek contains 270. These additions are in six different places in the Greek text. However, in the Latin Vulgate they are all placed at the end. These sections contain such matters as the dream of Mordecai, the interpretation of that dream, the texts of the letters referred to in the canonical book (Esther 1:22; 3:13; 8:5, 10; 9:20, 25-30), and the prayers of Esther and Mordecai. The additions give a more obviously religious basis for the book. In the OT book of Esther, God is never named. This omission is remedied by the additions that were probably made between 125 and 75 B.C.

The Song of the Three Young Men is one of three additions to the book of Daniel. It follows Dan. 3:23 in the Greek text. It satisfies curiosity about what went on in the furnace into which the three men were thrown. The final section is a hymn of praise to God. It emphasizes that God acts to deliver His people in response to prayer. This writing, along with the other two additions to Daniel, probably comes from near 100 B.C.

The story of Susanna is added at the close of the book of Daniel in the Septuagint. It tells of two judges who were overpowered by the beauty of Susanna and sought to become intimate with her. When she refused, they claimed they had seen her being intimate with a young man. Authorities believed their charges and condemned the young lady to death. Daniel then stated that the judges were lying, and he would prove it. He asked them, separately, under what tree they saw Susanna and the young man. When they identified different kinds of trees, their perjury became apparent. They were condemned to death, and Susanna was vindicated.

The third addition to Daniel is Bel and the Dragon, placed before Susanna in the Septuagint. Bel was an idol worshiped in Babylon. Large quantities of food were placed in Bel's temple each night and consumed before the next morning. King Cyrus asked Daniel why he did not worship Bel, and Daniel replied that Bel was only a man-made image. He would prove to the king that Bel was not alive. Daniel had ashes sprinkled on the floor of the temple and food placed on Bel's altar before sealing the temple door. The next morning the seals on the doors were intact, but when the doors were opened the food was gone. However, the ashes sprinkled on the floor revealed footprints of the priests and their families. They had a secret entrance and came at night and ate the food brought to the idol. The second part of the story of Bel and the Dragon concerned a dragon worshiped in Babylon. Daniel killed the dragon by feeding it cakes of pitch, fat, and hair. The people were outraged, and Daniel was thrown into the lions' den for seven days. However, the lions did not harm him. These stories ridicule paganism and the worship of idols.

The next four apocryphal books are examples of Wisdom literature. The Wisdom of Solomon, which was not written by Solomon, was probably written about 100 B.C. in Egypt. The first section of the book gave comfort to oppressed Jews and condemned those who had turned from their faith in God. It shows the advantages of wisdom over wickedness. The second section is a hymn of praise to wisdom. Wisdom is identified as a person present with God, although it is not given as much prominence as in some other writings. The final section shows wisdom as helpful to Israel throughout its history. This writing presents the Greek concept of immortality rather than the biblical teaching of resurrection.

The Wisdom of Jesus the Son of Sirach is also known as Ecclesiasticus. It emphasizes the importance of the law and obedience to it. Written in Hebrew about 180 B.C., it was translated into Greek by the author's grandson shortly after 132 B.C. The book has two main divisions, 1-23 and 24-51, each beginning with a description of wisdom. The writer was a devout Jew, highly educated, with the opportunity to travel outside Palestine. Thus he included in his writing not only traditional Jewish wisdom but material that he found of value from the Greek world. He pictured the ideal scribe as one who had time to devote himself to the study of the law. Chapters 44-50 are a praise of the great fathers of Israel, somewhat similar to Hebrews 11. Wisdom is highly exalted. She is a person made by God. She goes into the earth to seek a dwelling place. After she is rejected by other people, she is established in Zion. Wisdom is identified with the law.

The book of Baruch is also in the wisdom category. It is a combination of two or three different writings. The first section is in prose and claims to give a history of the period of Jeremiah and Baruch. However, it differs from the OT account. The second section is poetry and a praise of wisdom. The final section is also poetic and gives a word of hope for the people. As in Sirach, wisdom and law are equated. It was written shortly before 100 B.C.

The Letter of Jeremiah is often added to Baruch as chapter 6. As the basis for his work, the author evidently used Jer. 29:1-23, in which Jeremiah did write a letter to the exiles. However, this letter comes from before 100 B.C. It is a strongly worded condemnation of idolatry.

The Prayer of Manasseh is a devotional writing. It claims to be the prayer of the repentant king whom the OT pictured as very wicked (2 Kings 21:10-17). Second Kings makes no suggestion that Manasseh repented. However, 2 Chron. 33:11-13,18-19 states that he did repent and that God accepted him. This writing from before 100 B.C. is what such a prayer of repentance might have been.

The final book of the Apocrypha is 2 Esdras, written too late to be included in the Septuagint. Chapters 1-2 and 15-16 are Christian writings. Chapters 3-14, the significant part of the work, are from about 20 B.C. This writing is an apocalypse, a type of writing popular among the Jews in the intertestamental period and which became popular among Christians. Second Esdras contains seven sections or visions. In the first three, Ezra seeks answers from an angel about human sin and the situation of Israel. The answer he receives is that the situation will change only in the new age that God is about to inaugurate. The third section pictures the Messiah. He will remain 400 years and then die. The next three visions stress God's coming intervention and salvation of His people through the preexistent Messiah. The final section states that the end will be soon and reports that Ezra was inspired to write 94 books. Twenty-four are a rewrite of the canonical OT while the other 70 are to be given to the wise. The last two chapters of 2 Esdras contain material common to the NT. See Apocalyptic; Pseudepigrapha.

Clayton Harrop

APOCRYPHA, NEW TESTAMENT Collective term referring to a large body of religious writings dating back to the early Christian centuries that are similar in form to the NT (Gospels, acts, epistles, and apocalypses) but were never included as a part of the canon of Scripture.

Meaning of the Term “Apocrypha” When the term apokruphos occurs in the NT, it simply means “hidden things.” This original sense does not include the later meanings associated with it. In the formation of the Christian canon of Scripture, “apocrypha” came to mean works that were not divinely inspired and authoritative. The term was also used by certain groups (e.g. Gnostics) to describe their writings as secretive. They believed their writings were written much earlier but kept hidden until the latter days. Such writings were even then only available to the properly initiated. Since the church recognized works that were read openly in services of public worship, the term “apocrypha” came to mean “false” and began to be used to describe heretical material. In contrast to portions of the OT Apocrypha, which have been accepted by some branches of the Christian Church, none of the NT Apocrypha (with the possible exception of the Apocalypse of Peter and the Acts of Paul) has ever been accepted as Scripture. Though some scholars allow the term to describe writings that are neither a part of the NT nor strictly apocryphal (e.g. apostolic fathers), it seems best to restrict the term to material that was not received into the canon of Scripture yet, by form and content, claimed for itself a status and authority equal to Scripture.

Purpose of the Apocrypha Three general reasons explain the existence of the NT Apocrypha. First, some groups accepted apocryphal writings because they built on the universal desire to preserve the memories of the lives and deaths of important NT figures. Regardless of whether the transmitted traditions were true or false, the desire of later generations to know more detail made the apocryphal writings attractive. The second purpose is closely related to the first. Apocryphal works were intended to supplement the information given in the NT about Jesus or the apostles. This may be the motivation behind the Third Epistle to the Corinthians (to provide some of the missing correspondence between Paul and the Corinthian church) and the Epistle to the Laodiceans (to supply the letter referred to in Col. 4:16). For the same reason, the apocryphal acts made certain to record the events surrounding the death of the apostles, a matter on which the NT is usually silent. Third, heretical groups produced apocryphal writings in an attempt to gain authority for their own particular views.

Classification of the New Testament Apocrypha These writings parallel, in a superficial way, the literary forms found in the NT: Gospels, acts, epistles or letters, and apocalypses. Although this formal similarity exists, the title of an apocryphal work does not necessarily provide a trustworthy description of its character and contents.

The apocryphal gospels This large group of writings can be further classified into infancy gospels, passion gospels, Jewish-Christian gospels, and gospels originating from heretical groups.

Infancy Gospels is the name given to apocryphal works that in some way deal with the birth or childhood of Jesus or both. Though Matthew and Luke stressed the same basic story line, they emphasized different aspects of the events surrounding the birth of Jesus, primarily because of their audience and their own particular purpose in writing. The writers of these apocryphal infancy gospels attempted to correct what they viewed as deficiencies in the canonical accounts and to fill in the gaps they believed existed. Most of the material is concerned with the silent years of Jesus' childhood. The two earliest infancy gospels, from which most of the later literature developed, are the Protoevangelium of James and the Infancy Gospel of Thomas. The Protoevangelium of James seems to have been written to glorify Mary. It includes the miraculous birth of Mary, her presentation in the temple, her espousal to Joseph (an old man with children), and the miraculous birth of Jesus. This second-century work was extremely popular and undoubtedly had an influence on later views of Mary, the mother of Jesus. The Infancy Gospel of Thomas depicts Jesus in a crude manner as a wonder boy, using his miraculous powers as a matter of personal convenience. This work attempts to fill in the silent years of Jesus' childhood but does so in a rather repulsive and exaggerated manner.

As legend continued to expand, many later infancy gospels developed including the Arabic Gospel of the Infancy, the Armenian Gospel of the Infancy, the Gospel of Pseudo-Matthew, the Latin Infancy Gospel, the Life of John According to Serapion, the Gospel of the Birth of Mary, the Assumption of the Virgin, and the History of Joseph the Carpenter.

Passion Gospels, another class of apocryphal gospel, are concerned with supplementing the canonical accounts by describing events surrounding the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus. The two most important works in this category are the Gospel of Peter and the Gospel of Nicodemus (sometimes called the Acts of Pilate). The Gospel of Peter is a second-century work that downplays Jesus' humanity, heightens the miraculous, and reduces Pilate's guilt, among other things. The Gospel of Nicodemus (Acts of Pilate) is another example of an apocryphal passion gospel. The trial and death of Jesus are expanded as Nicodemus, the chief narrator, tells of one witness after another coming forward to testify on Jesus' behalf. Pilate gives in to popular demand and hands Jesus over to be crucified. The Gospel of Nicodemus also includes a vivid account of Jesus' "Descent into Hell," much like that of a Greek hero invading the underworld to defy its authorities or rescue its prisoners. Another apocryphal work that might be classified as a passion gospel is the Book of the Resurrection of Christ by Bartholomew the Apostle.

Jewish-Christian Gospels are works that originated among Jewish-Christian groups. They include the Gospel of the Ebionites, the Gospel of Hebrews, and the Gospel of the Nazorenes. Although some scholars equate the Gospel of Hebrews and the Gospel of the Nazorenes, the evidence is inconclusive. The Gospel of the Hebrews, perhaps the most prominent, appears to have been in some ways a paraphrase of the canonical Gospel of Matthew and places a special emphasis on James, the brother of the Lord.

Heretical Gospels cover a wide variety of apocryphal gospels, most of which are considered Gnostic gospels. Gnosticism developed in the second century as a widespread and diverse religious movement with roots in Greek philosophy and folk religion. The Gospel of Truth contains no references to the words or actions of Jesus. Some heretical gospels are attributed to all or one of the twelve apostles. These include the Gospel of the Twelve Apostles and the gospels of Philip, Thomas, Matthias, Judas, and Bartholomew. Written about A.D. 100, the Gospel of Thomas (of no relation to the Infancy Gospel of Thomas) is a collection of 114 secret sayings "which Jesus the living one spoke and Didymus Judas Thomas wrote down." This document is one of almost fifty discovered in 1945 near Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt as a part of what many scholars believe was the library of a Gnostic community. The heretical emphases of the Gospel of Thomas are countered in advance by the canonical epistle of 1 John, which emphasizes the gospel of Jesus Christ as the message of life, available for every person to experience. Other gospels in this class include those under the names of Holy Women (for example, the Questions of Mary and the Gospel According to Mary), and those attributed to chief heretics such as Cerinthus, Basilides, and Marcion.

The apocryphal acts A large number of legendary accounts of the journeys and heroics of NT apostles sought to parallel and supplement the book of Acts. The five major apocryphal acts are second- and third-century stories named after a “Leucius Charinus” and therefore known as the Leucian Acts. Even though they show a high regard for the apostles and include some historical fact, much of what they offer is the product of a wild imagination, closely akin to a romantic novel (with talking animals and obedient bugs).

The Acts of John is the earliest of the group (A.D. 150-160). It contains miracles and sermons by John of Asia Minor and has a distinct Gnostic orientation. It tells the story of John's journey from Jerusalem to Rome and his imprisonment on the isle of Patmos. After many other travels, John finally dies in Ephesus.

The Acts of Andrew, written shortly before A.D. 300, is, like the Acts of John, distinctly Gnostic.

The Acts of Paul was written before A.D. 200 by an Asian presbyter “out of love for Paul.” He was later defrocked for publishing the writing. It is divided into three sections: the Acts of Paul and Thecla, a girl from Iconian who assisted Paul on his missionary travels; correspondence with the Corinthian church; and the martyrdom of Paul.

The Acts of Peter is a late second-century writing that tells of Peter defending the church from a heretic named Simon Magus by public preaching. Peter, who is forced to flee, later returns to be crucified upside down. Like the other acts, it is ascetic, that is, it promotes a lifestyle of self-denial and withdrawal from society as a means of combating vice and developing virtue.

The Acts of Thomas is a third-century work, thought by most scholars to have originated in Syriac Christianity. It tells how Judas Thomas, “Twin of the Messiah,” was given India when the apostles divided the world by casting lots. Thomas, though he went as a slave, was responsible for the conversion of many well-known Indians. The ascetic element is again present in Thomas' emphasis on virginity. In the end he was imprisoned and martyred.

Other later apocryphal acts include: the Apostolic History of Abdias, the Fragmentary Story of Andrew, the Ascents of James, the Martyrdom of Matthew, the Preaching of Peter, Slavonic Acts of Peter, the Passion of Paul, Passion of Peter, Passion of Peter and Paul, the Acts of Andrew and Matthias, Andrew and Paul, Paul and Thecla, Barnabas, James the Great, Peter and Andrew, Peter and Paul, Philip, and Thaddaeus.

The apocryphal epistles We know of a small group of apocryphal epistles or letters, many of which are ascribed to the Apostle Paul. The Epistle of the Apostles is a second-century collection of visions communicating postresurrection teachings of Christ. The Third Epistle to the Corinthians was purported to be Paul's reply to a letter from Corinth. Though it circulated independently, it is also a part of the Acts of Paul. The Latin Epistle to the Laodiceans is a gathering of Pauline phrases probably motivated by Col. 4:16.

Other important apocryphal epistles include the Correspondence of Christ and Abgar, the Epistle to the Alexandrians, the Epistle of Titus, of Peter to James, of Peter to Philip, and of Mary to Ignatius.

The apocryphal apocalypses Revelation is the only apocalyptic book in the NT, though there are apocalyptic elements in other books (such as Mark 13 and parallels; 2 Thess. 2:1-12). The term “apocalypse” or “apocalyptic” means “to uncover” and is used to describe a category of writings that seek to unveil the plan of God for the world using symbol and visions. While the NT apocalyptic material emphasizes the return of Christ, the later apocryphal apocalypses focus more on heaven and hell. The most popular of these, the Apocalypse of Peter, seems to have enjoyed a degree of canonical status for a time. It presents visions of the resurrected Lord and images of the terror suffered by those in hell. The Apocalypse of Paul is probably motivated by Paul's reference in 2 Cor. 12:2 of a man in Christ being caught up to the third heaven. The author is thoroughly convinced this was Paul's personal experience and proceeds to give all the details.

Other apocalypses include the Apocalypse of James, of Stephen, of Thomas, of the Virgin Mary, and several works discovered at Nag Hammadi.

Other apocryphal works These include the Agrapha (a collection of sayings attributed to Jesus), the Preachings of Peter, the Clementine Homilies and Recognitions, the Apocryphon of John, the Apocryphon of James, and certain Gnostic writings such as the Pistis Sophia, the Wisdom of Jesus, and the Books of Jeu.

Relevance of the New Testament Apocrypha The NT Apocrypha is significant for those who study church history. Even though these writings were not included in the canon, they are not worthless. They give a sample of the ideas, convictions, and imaginations of a portion of Christian history. The NT Apocrypha also serves as a point of comparison with the writings contained in the canon of the NT. By way of contrast the apocryphal writings demonstrate how the NT places a priority on historical fact rather than human fantasy. While the NT Apocrypha is often interesting and informative, it is usually unreliable historically and always unauthoritative for matters of faith and practice. See Apocalyptic.

J. Scott Duvall

APOLLONIA [Áp ol ló' ní á] Place-name meaning “belonging to Apollo.” Paul visited Apollonia on his second missionary journey, though the Bible reports no activity there (Acts 17:1). The city is in northern Greece or Macedonia on the international highway called Via Egnatia, 30 miles from Amphipolis and 38 miles from Thessalonica.

APOLLOS [Á pól' lós] Alexandrian Jew who came to Ephesus following Paul's first visit and was taught Christian doctrine by Priscilla and Aquila. An educated man, Apollos handled the OT Scriptures with forcefulness. However, he was lacking in a full understanding of the way of God, so Priscilla and Aquila took him aside and instructed him (Acts 18:26). Apollos became even more successful in his ministry. He went from Ephesus to Greece with the encouragement of the Asian believers and a letter of introduction (Acts 18:27). He greatly strengthened the believers by using the Scriptures to demonstrate that Jesus was the Christ (Acts 18:28).

Apollos is last mentioned in the book of Acts as being in Corinth (19:1). Paul referred to Apollos frequently, particularly in 1 Corinthians. Here the majority of the references (1 Cor. 1:12; 3:4-6,22) have to do with the schisms in the Corinthian church centering on personalities. Paul noted that some believers championed Paul; some, Apollos; and some, Cephas. What is important is that believers belong to Christ, not to individual leaders. Such references show that Apollos must have been a dynamic figure to be compared with Paul or Peter. In 1 Cor. 4:6 Paul placed Apollos on the same level as himself. They both sought to defeat the arrogance and superiority which comes from being self-centered rather than Christ-centered.

Paul referred to Apollos in 1 Cor. 16:12 as “our brother,” showing how much Paul considered him as one of the team. This is also demonstrated in Titus 3:13 where Paul asked Titus to help Apollos on his way. A learned and gifted preacher Apollos was willing to receive more instruction and be part of the team.

Because of Apollos' knowledge of the OT, Luther suggested that Apollos might well be the writer of the letter to the Hebrews. See Corinth; Corinthians, First Letter to the; Corinthians, Second Letter to the; Ephesus; Priscilla and Aquila.

William H. Vermillion

APOLLYON [Ā-pōllī' yon] Greek name meaning “destroyer” (Rev. 9:11). See Abaddon.

APOSTASY Act of rebelling against, forsaking, abandoning, or falling away from what one has believed.

Old Testament The OT speaks of “falling away” in terms of a person's deserting to a foreign king (2 Kings 25:11; Jer. 37:13-14; 39:9; 52:15). Associated ideas, however, include the concept of religious unfaithfulness: “rebellion” (Josh. 22:22); “cast away” (2 Chron. 29:19); “trespass” (2 Chron. 33:19); and “backslidings” (Jer. 2:19; 8:5). NASB uses “apostasy” in Jer. 8:5 and Hos. 14:4 with the plural in Jer. 2:19; 5:6; 14:7.

The prophets picture Israel's history as the history of turning from God to other gods, from His law to injustice and lawlessness, from His anointed king to foreign kings, and from His word to the word of foreign kings. This is defined simply as forsaking God, not fearing Him (Jer. 2:19). Such action was sin, for which the people had to ask forgiveness (Jer. 14:7-9) and repent (Jer. 8:4-7). The basic narrative of Judges, Samuel, and Kings is that Israel fell away from God, choosing selfish ways rather than His ways. Exile resulted. Still God's fallen people had hope. In freedom God could choose to turn away His anger and heal their “backsliding” (Hos. 14:4).

New Testament The English word “apostasy” is derived from a Greek word (apostasia) that means, “to stand away from.” The Greek noun occurs twice in the NT (Acts 21:21; 2 Thess. 2:3), though it is not translated as “apostasy” in the KJV. A related noun is used for a divorce (Matt. 5:31; 19:7; Mark 10:4). The corresponding Greek verb occurs nine times.

Acts 21:21 states an accusation made against Paul that he was leading Jews outside Palestine to abandon the law of Moses. Such apostasy was defined as failing to circumcise Jewish children and to observe distinctive Jewish customs.

In 2 Thess. 2:3 Paul addressed those who had been deceived into believing that the day of the Lord had already come. He taught that an apostasy would precede the day of the Lord. The Spirit had explicitly revealed this falling away from the faith (1 Tim. 4:1). Such apostasy in the latter times will involve doctrinal deception, moral insensitivity, and ethical departures from God's truth.

Associated NT concepts include the parable of the soils, in which Jesus spoke of those who believe for a while but “fall away” in time of temptation (Luke 8:13). At the judgment those who work iniquity will be told to “depart” (Luke 13:27). Paul “withdrew” from the synagogue in Ephesus (Acts 19:9) because of the opposition he found there, and he counseled

Timothy to “withdraw” from those who advocate a different doctrine (1 Tim. 6:3-5). Hebrews speaks of falling away from the living God because of “an evil heart of unbelief” (3:12). Those who fall away cannot be renewed again to repentance (Heb. 6:6). Yet God is able to keep the believer from falling (Jude 24).

Implications Apostasy certainly is a biblical concept, but the implications of the teaching have been hotly debated. The debate has centered on the issue of apostasy and salvation. Based on the concept of God's sovereign grace, some hold that, though true believers may stray, they will never totally fall away. Others affirm that any who fall away were never really saved. Though they may have “believed” for a while, they never experienced regeneration. Still others argue that the biblical warnings against apostasy are real and that believers maintain the freedom, at least potentially, to reject God's salvation.

Persons worried about apostasy should recognize that conviction of sin in itself is evidence that one has not fallen away. Desire for salvation shows one does not have “an evil heart of unbelief.” Michael Fink APOSTLE Derivation of the Greek word apostolos, one who is sent. Apostolos was used to refer to a ship or a group of ships. Later it designated a bill, invoice, or passport.

In the NT, “apostle” has three broad uses. First, it referred to the Twelve whom Jesus chose to train for the task of carrying His message to the world. Following His resurrection, Jesus commissioned them for this task. These men had been with Jesus from the beginning of His ministry and were witnesses to His resurrection. Paul was an apostle in this sense because he had seen the risen Christ.

The second designation of apostle is a person authorized by a local congregation with the safe delivery of specific gifts for another Christian church (2 Cor. 8:23; Phil.2:25).

The third sense of apostle is those whom Jesus Christ has sent. Paul refers to a number of people as apostles in this sense (Rom. 16:7; 1 Cor.

9:1,5; 12:28; Gal. 1:17-19). See Disciple.

Steve Bond

APOSTOLIC COUNCIL Meeting in Jerusalem at which the apostles and elders of Jerusalem defended the right of Paul and Barnabas to preach the gospel to the Gentiles without forcing converts to obey the Jewish laws (Acts 15). A “decree” from the council did ask Gentile converts not to eat food that had been sacrificed to idols, not to eat meat with blood in it, not to eat animals which had been strangled, and not to commit sexual immorality (Acts 15:28-29). These requirements may all be taken from Leviticus 17-18, which set up requirements not only on the “house of Israel” but also on “the strangers which sojourn among you” (Lev. 17:8).

In Galatians 2 Paul described the work of the council from his perspective, though some Bible students have long tried to distinguish between the events of Acts 15 and Galatians 2. Paul not only reported the council's decision, he emphasized the fact that the council didn't require Titus, a Gentile, to be circumcised.

APOSTOLIC FATHERS Group of early church writers, some of whom knew the apostles. These writers were not grouped together or called the Apostolic Fathers until the late 17th century. That first collection, entitled the Apostolic Fathers, included the works of Clement, Ignatius, Polycarp, Barnabas, and Hermas. Other works such as the Didache, Diognetus, and Papias often have been included in recent collections. The documents (except for Diognetus, and Papias) were written between approximately between A.D. 96 and 156, yet they were not accepted as part of the NT canon, although Codex Sinaiticus (fourth century) included the Epistle of Barnabas and the Shepherd of Hermas, and Codex Alexandrinus (fifth century) included the two epistles of Clement.

The Apostolic Fathers includes two epistles of Clement who was the third bishop of Rome (following Linus and Anacletus). The first epistle, which dates to 96, was written to the church in Corinth to address internal problems within the church, namely the expulsion of the presbyters by the congregation. Clement called on the congregation to re-instate the expelled presbyters who had been selected by the apostles. The epistle illustrated the continued existence of factions within the Corinthian church, even after Paul had addressed those problems in his own epistles to the church. Clement also provided the seminal idea of apostolic succession when he argued that the elders should be reinstated because they were appointed by the apostles themselves. The second epistle of Clement was in reality a sermon that exhorted the hearers to live a godly life and remain faithful in view of Christ's final coming. Recent scholars have questioned Clement's authorship of the sermon since certain elements may have been directed toward the Gnostics, who did not emerge within the church until the mid-second century.

The Didache, or Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, was an early church handbook that dates between A.D. 100 and 110. Although this anonymous work was not originally grouped with the collection, since its discovery in the late nineteenth century, it has come to be an accepted part of the Apostolic Fathers. The work began by addressing proper conduct, which was discussed as the “way of life” versus the “way of death.” The second section of the work provided instructions for church leaders regarding how to conduct services and included instructions to the church leaders should baptize by immersion if at all possible.

The collection contains several epistles from Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, who was a disciple of the Apostle John. Ignatius wrote these epistles around A.D. 115 as he journeyed to Rome, where he was martyred. Numerous epistles exist, yet scholars have generally only accepted as authentic the epistles to the churches of Ephesus, Magnesia, Tralles, Rome, Philadelphia, Smyrna, and the epistle to Polycarp. Within these epistles Ignatius expressed a desire to be martyred and affirmed Christ's humanity against the heresy of Docetism. Ignatius' epistles made two significant contributions to the development of Roman Catholic theology. The first related to the Eucharist, which Ignatius described as the “flesh of our savior Jesus Christ” (Epistle to Smyrnaens) and the “medicine of immortality, the antidote against death” (Epistle to the Ephesians). These thoughts laid a foundation for the development of the Eucharist as a sacrament and for the doctrine of transubstantiation. The second contribution related to his elevation of the bishop, as he charged, “follow the bishop as Jesus Christ followed the Father” (Epistle to Smyrnaens). This thought helped support the idea of apostolic succession and the elevation of tradition within the church.

The collection contains two documents related to Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna and disciple of the Apostle John. The first document was an epistle written by Polycarp and sent to the church at Philippi. The letter, which may date to around A.D. 116, was essentially an amalgam of quotes from the Pastoral Epistles, although it did include information regarding the debate over whether to celebrate Easter on the actual day of the resurrection or on the closest Sunday. The second document related to Polycarp was an account of his martyrdom. This document, written in 156, detailed the death of Polycarp and described mythical elements surrounding his execution, such as his blood extinguishing the fire which was meant to consume him. It was significant for its encouragement to remain faithful in the face of persecution, for its glorification of martyrdom, and for its use of the term “catholic [i.e., “universal”] church.”

The collection also includes the Epistle of Barnabas, which was not written by the biblical Barnabas. The work was most likely written around 135 and was responding to the second Jewish rebellion under Bar Kokhba from 132 to 135. The writing was anti-Jewish in tone, describing OT elements such as animal sacrifice, construction of a temple, and adherence to the law as being mistakes made by the Jews, who did not understand God's will. Barnabas relied upon allegorical interpretation to prove that the OT taught that Christianity was the true religion and Judaism was based upon human misunderstanding.

The Shepherd of Hermas was written by an anonymous writer, probably sometime between A.D. 140 and 150. The work was an allegory that stressed penance. It was significant for its mention of only one forgiveness of sins after baptism, an idea that led many Christians, like Constantine, to postpone baptism until they lay on their deathbed. That practice eventually developed into the sacrament of final unction. In addition, the work also presented the seminal idea of purgatory.

In the 20th century, scholars added several other works to the Apostolic Fathers, although some disagreement over which additions rightly belong does still exist. Among the works added was the Epistle to Diognetus, which was written by an anonymous author to an anonymous recipient. The work is difficult to date, being written sometime during the late second or early third century. This is an apology that argues the merits of Christianity over Judaism and Paganism. Due to the nature of the work, some scholars choose to classify it with the apologetic literature rather than with the Apostolic Fathers. Some scholars consider the works of Papias to be considered to be a part of the collection, even though his works no longer exist. Papias was a disciple of the Apostle John and an associate of Polycarp.

The Apostolic Fathers allow modern scholars to see the issues being dealt with by the early church. They also help scholars trace the development of Roman Catholic doctrines like baptismal regeneration, transubstantiation, and purgatory, which all find their beginnings in the Fathers. In addition, the Apostolic Fathers' quotations of Scripture show not only which Scriptures were being used by the early church but also provide insight into how the early church interpreted and used the Word of God.

Scott Drumm

APOTHECARY [Ā pōth' ə cār y] KJV translation of a word translated as “perfumer” in modern versions (Exod. 30:25, 35; 37:29; 2 Chron. 16:14; Neh. 3:8; Eccles. 10:1). See Perfume, Perfumer.

APPAIM [Āp' pā-īm] Personal name meaning “nostrils.” Member of clan of Jerahmeel of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:30-31).

APPEAL TO CAESAR When Paul was brought before Festus for trial on charges made against him by Jews from Jerusalem, Festus asked him if he wanted to return to Jerusalem for trial. Paul, fearing the Jews would kill him, asked that his case be heard by the emperor, as he had done nothing deserving of death (Acts 25:1 -12). By all appearances, Paul's Roman citizenship gave him the right to have his case heard by the emperor. There are cases, however, where Roman citizens in Africa were refused the right of appeal and were crucified by Galba, the governor of the province. Paul was granted his appeal, though it was later determined that he need not have appealed his case as he had done nothing wrong (Acts 26:32). We do not know the results of Paul's appeal since Acts ends with Paul still in prison awaiting trial. It is probable that Paul's case was dismissed after two years and he was released from prison.

APPENDAGE OF THE LIVER See Caul.

APPHIA [Āp' pĥi-á] Christian lady Paul greeted as “beloved” while writing Philemon (v. 2). Early Christian tradition identified her as Philemon's wife, a claim that can be neither proved nor disproved.

APPI FORUM [Āp' pi fō' rŭm] KJV translation of Acts 28:15 reference to Forum of Appius or Market of Appius. See Forum.

APPIUS [Āp' pi-ŭs] See Forum.

APPLE OF THE EYE English expression that refers to the pupil of the eye and therefore to something very precious. Three different Hebrew words or phrases are rendered as the apple of the eye: (1) the word in Deut. 32:10 and Prov. 7:2 literally means “little man” and evidently refers to the reflection of a person in the eye of another; (2) the word in Ps. 17:8 and Lam. 2:18 (KJV) literally means “the daughter of the eye” with possibly the same significance as (1); and (3) the word in Zech. 2:8 literally means “gate.” The reference in Lam. 2:18 is to the pupil of the eye as the source of tears; the other references are metaphorical of something that is precious.

APPLE TREE Known in the OT for its fruit, shade, beauty, and fragrance (Joel 1:12; Prov. 25:11; Song 2:3,5; 7:8; 8:5). Some scholars doubt that the Hebrew text is referring to the apple tree. They think the common apple tree was only recently introduced to Palestine, and that the wild variety hardly matches the description given to the tree and its fruit in the Bible. The citron, quince, and apricot have been proposed as the tree spoken of in the Bible. Of the three, the apricot seems to have the best support. Having been introduced from China prior to the time of Abraham, the apricot is widespread in Palestine. When conditions for it are right, the apricot tree can grow to a height of about 30 feet with spreading branches, which make it a good shade tree. Hebrew tappuach “apple” does appear as a place-name in the Bible and may indicate apple trees were known as unusual occurrences in some Palestinian sites.

Pharaoh's Island in the Gulf of Aqaba.

APRON Translation of a Hebrew word in the OT otherwise translated as girdle (1 Sam. 18:4; 2 Sam. 18:11; 20:8; 1 Kings 2:5; Isa. 3:24). In Gen. 3:7, the fig leaves sewn together by Adam and Eve are called aprons to hide their nakedness. In the OT the girdle was an inner garment wrapped around the waist. In the NT the girdle was wrapped around the waist of the outer garment. In Acts 19:12 the aprons and handkerchiefs of Paul had healing powers.

AQABA, GULF OF TEV translation in 1 Kings 9:26 to show that the part of the Red Sea meant is the eastern arm below the Dead Sea. Its northern port city is Elath (or Elath, NIV). See Elath; Ezion-geber.

AQUEDUCTS Troughs cut out of rock or soil, or pipes made of stone, leather, or bronze that were used from very early times in the Middle East to transport water from distant places into towns and cities.

Old Testament The simplest aqueducts were troughs cut out of rock or soil and sometimes lined with mortar. These troughs carried water from hillsides to the valleys below. Jerusalem was served by a system of aqueducts which brought mountain spring water first to collecting reservoirs outside the city, and then into the city itself. Hezekiah's tunnel, the Siloam tunnel, was a twisting underground aqueduct that diverted water from the Gihon Spring to the Pool of Siloam (2 Kings 20:20).

Roman Aqueducts The Romans excelled in building aqueducts, and the remains of these systems are impressive. Ancient aqueducts, the nonpressure type, carried water downhill by means of gravity. Although most conduits were beneath the ground, lowlands were crossed on high, arched structures, each containing a built-in slope so that water flow was not impeded. Sometimes these elevated sections, while also carrying several channels of water, served as footbridges. The Romans built many aqueducts, the longest of which covered 57 miles.

Diane Cross

Roman aqueduct at Caesarea Maritima which transported water to the city from the Carmel Mountains.

AQUILA AND PRISCILLA Married couple who came from Italy to Corinth after the emperor Claudius ordered Jews expelled from Rome, became Christians, and assisted Paul in his ministry. They were tentmakers by trade (2 Tim. 4:19). They came into contact with Paul, who was a tentmaker, in Corinth (Acts 18:2). It is not clear whether they became Christians before or after meeting Paul, but they became workers in the gospel and accompanied Paul to Ephesus (Acts 18:19). There they instructed Apollos in the Christian faith (18:25). A church met in their home, and they joined Paul in writing to the Corinthian church (1 Cor. 16:19).

Aquila and Priscilla were apparently influential among the “Gentile churches” (Rom. 16:3 HCSB). This reference in Romans probably indicates that Priscilla and Aquila moved back to Rome. Some scholars think the church at Ephesus received a copy of the last chapter of Romans. The reference to the couple in 2 Tim. 4:19 may indicate the couple was in Ephesus.

Paul thanked Aquila and Priscilla for risking their own lives for him (Rom. 16:4). The circumstances of this incident are unknown, although it may have occurred during Paul's trouble with Demetrius the silversmith (Acts 19:23-41).

Taylor Field

AR ^[Ar] Place-name meaning “city.” Town on northern border of Moab on southern bank of Arnon River (Num. 21:15,28). Israel celebrated its defeat with a proverbial taunt song (Num. 21:28). God refused to let Israel occupy Ar, having designated it for Lot's descendants, the Moabites (Deut. 2:9). Israel could only pass through Ar (Deut. 2:18), evidently the region controlled by the city-state. Ar provided provisions for the Israelites as they passed through on the last legs of the wilderness wandering (Deut. 2:29). Isaiah used a threatening situation in Ar to announce a time when Moab would seek protection from Judah (Isa. 15:1). The exact location of the city is not known.

ARA [Ā' rā] Leader in tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:38).

ARAB [Ā' rāb] Place-name meaning “ambush.” 1. City in the hill country of Judah near Hebron (Josh. 15:52). Usually identified with modern er-Rabiyeh. See Arbite. 2. Member of the Semitic people of the Arabian peninsula. See Arabia.

ARABAH [Ā' rā-bāh] Place-name meaning “dry, infertile area” and common Hebrew noun meaning desert with hot climate and sparse rainfall. 1. Modern usage refers specifically to the rift area below the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Elath or Aqaba, a distance of 110 miles. This was a copper-mining region and was guarded by military fortresses. Control of the Arabah along with control of the Red Sea port on its southern end meant control of valuable trade routes and sea routes connecting to southern Arabia and eastern Africa (Deut. 2:8; 1 Kings 9:26-27). 2. The wilderness of Judah encompassing the eastern slopes of the mountains of Judah with little rain, deep canyons, and steep cliffs where David hid from Saul (1 Sam. 23:24-25). 3. The entire Jordan Valley running 70 miles from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea, or more precisely, the desert areas above the actual Zor or lushly fertile areas on the immediate shore of the Jordan (Deut. 3:17 RSV, NIV; Josh. 8:14 TEV, NIV; 11:2,16; 12:8 NASB, NIV; 2 Sam. 2:29 NASB, NIV; Jer. 39:4 NASB, NIV; Ezek. 47:8 NASB, NIV; Zech. 14:10 NIV). 4. Sea of the Arabah is the Dead Sea (NASB, NIV, RSV of Deut. 3:17; 4:49; Josh. 3:16; 2 Kings 14:25). 5. Araboth of Moab or plains of Moab includes the eastern shore of the Dead Sea south of the Wadi Nimrim (NEB translation as “lowlands of Moab”; Num. 22:1; 31:12; 36:13; Deut. 34:1; Josh. 13:32). 6. Desert area or the eastern border of the Jordan River from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea (Josh. 12:1 NASB, NIV, RSV). 7. Araboth of Jericho or plains of Jericho represent the area near the Jordan once dominated by the city-state of Jericho (Josh. 4:13; 5:10; 2 Kings 25:5; Jer. 39:5). 8. Brook of the Arabah represents the southern border of Israel (Amos 6:14), possibly the River Zered, the Wadi el-Qelt, or the Wadi Hefren.

ARABIA [Á-rá' bî-á] Asian peninsula lying between the Red Sea on the west and the Persian Gulf on the east incorporating over 1,200,000 square miles of territory. Old Testament The Arabian peninsula, together with the adjoining lands which were home to the biblical Arabs, includes all of present-day Saudi Arabia, the two Yemens (San'a' and Aden), Oman, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar, and Kuwait, as well as parts of Iraq, Syria, Jordan, and the Sinai Peninsula. The vast Arabian Peninsula was divided into two distinct economic and social regions. Most biblical references to Arab peoples or territory are to the northern and western parts of this whole but sometimes includes both the northern and southern portions.

In the northern portion of Arabia, the mountains of the Anti-Lebanon, the Transjordanian Highlands, and the mountains of Edom flank the desert on the west. The mountains continue all the way down the western edge of the Arabian Peninsula bordering the Red Sea and are actually much higher and more rugged in the south. The central and northern portions of the peninsula, and extending north into Syria and Iraq, are vast expanses of sandy and rocky desert, including some of the driest climate in the world.

The name “Arab” comes from a Semitic root, which in Hebrew is arab, probably meaning “nomad” or Bedouin. This refers to the people of the northwestern parts of the Arabian territory, whom the OT writers knew as nomadic herders of sheep and goats, and later, of camels. Sometimes arab simply refers to the economic status of nomads without geographical or ethical reference. Proper understanding of Scripture includes determining the specific meaning of “Arab” in each context.

The Arabs are also called in the Bible “the sons (or children) of the east.” Furthermore, many of the names of the OT refer to people or tribes who were ethnically and linguistically Arab. These include the Midianites, the Ishmaelites, the people of Kedar, the Amalekites, the Dedanites, the Temanites, and others. The Israelites recognized their blood relationship with the Arabs. Most of these groups are linked with Abraham through his son Ishmael or through his second wife Keturah (Gen. 25).

The inhabitants of southern Arabia, in the mountains fringing the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, were town-dwellers with a sophisticated system of irrigation. They possessed considerable wealth from incenses and spices which they grew; from gold, silver, and precious stones, which they mined in their own territory; and from these and other products which they transported and traded to the Mediterranean world, Mesopotamia, and as far away as East Africa, India, and China.

New Testament The NT references to Arabia are fewer and less complex. The territory of the Nabatean Arabs is probably intended in each instance. The Nabateans controlled what is today southern Jordan and the Negev of Israel; for a time they controlled as far north as Damascus. Arabs heard the gospel at Pentecost (Acts 2:11). Paul went to Arabia after his conversion (Gal. 1:17).

Joseph Coleson

ARABIM [Ār' ā'bīm] NASB transliteration of name of waterway mentioned in Isa. 15:7. Other translations include: “brook of the willows” (KJV); “Ravine of the Poplars” (NIV); Valley of Willows (TEV); “Wadi of the Willows (NRSV). The water source indicated may be the Wadi elChesa at the southern end of the Dead Sea in Moab.

ARAD [Ār' rad] Two towns of significance to the OT and two OT men. One town is referred to in the Bible during the time of Moses, and another was inhabited during the period of the monarchy. Both are located in the dry, semi-desert region known as the Negev in the southern extreme of Judah's territory.

The Arad of Num. 21:1-3 (probably Tel Malhata) was a Canaanite city about 11 miles west southwest of Beersheba. Its king attacked the Israelites as they were moving on to Canaan after the wilderness wandering. He was successful temporarily, taking captives; but after vowing to God that they would destroy the city, Israel struck back effectively and renamed the devastated city Hormah. Victory over this king is recorded in Josh. 12:14.

Subsequently the Kenites settled in Arad near the tribe of Judah (Judg. 1:16-17).

The Citadel built by Solomon on the highest point on Arad, a hill about 130 feet high. Arad is some 18.5 miles northeast of Beersheba.

Another Arad location about 17 miles west northwest of Beersheba is not mentioned in the Bible but was an important fortress for Judah from Solomon's time to Josiah, over 300 years. A temple has been found there with architecture much like the biblical tabernacle and temple, having similar chambers including a holy of holies. Even the names of priestly families of Israel have been found here, Pashhur (Ezra 2:38; 10:22) and Meremoth (Ezra 8:33; Neh. 10:5). The temple may well have been destroyed during Josiah's reforms, which tolerated only the one temple in Jerusalem.

One of the men called “Arad” was one of six sons of Beriah the Benjaminite (1 Chron. 8:15-16), who was one of the major inhabitants of Aijalon. Another OT “Arad” was a Canaanite king who attacked the Israelites near Mount Hor and was defeated (Num. 21:1). See Aijalon.

Reconstruction of the stone altar at Arad.

Daniel C. Fredericks

ARAH [Ā' rāh] Personal name meaning “ox” or “traveler.” 1. Clan of 775 people who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel from Babylonian exile about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:5). Nehemiah 7:10 gives the number as 652. 2. Father of Schechaniah, father-in-law of Tobiah, who led opposition to Nehemiah (Neh. 6:18). May be identical with clan head of 1. above. 3. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:39).

ARAM [Ā' rām] Personal, ethnic, and geographical name. 1. Arameans. See Aramean. 2. Original ancestor of Arameans, the son of Shem and grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:22-23). 3. Grandson of Nahor, Abraham's brother (Gen. 22:21). 4. Member of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:34). See various compound names with “Aram”; Bethrehab; Paddan-aram; Geshur; Maacah; Tob; Zobah.

ARAMAIC [Ā-rā-mā' ic] North Semitic language similar to Phoenician and Hebrew. It was the language of the Arameans whose presence in northwestern Mesopotamia is known from about 2000 B.C.

Old Testament Although the Aramaeans never founded a great national state or empire, by the eleventh century they had established several small states in Syria, and their language came to be known from Egypt to Persia.

The oldest inscriptions in Old Aramaic are from Syria around 800 B.C. In the ninth century official or Royal Aramaic appeared. This was a dialect known from documents from Assyria and known best from documents from the Persian Empire, for which Aramaic had become the official court language. Before 700 B.C. Aramaic had begun to supplant Akkadian as the language of commerce and diplomacy (2 Kings 18:26). Important for biblical history are the fifth-century papyri from Elephantine, the site of a Jewish colony in Egypt. Official Aramaic continued to be used widely throughout the Hellenistic period.

A funerary inscription of the second burial of King Uzziah written in Aramaic during Herod's time.

Parts of the OT were written in Aramaic: Ezra 4:8-6:18; 7:12-26; Dan. 2:4b-7:28; Jer. 10:11. Two words in Gen. 31:47, Jegarsahadutha (heap of witness) are in Aramaic. A number of Aramaic words came into common Hebrew usage, and several passages in the Hebrew Bible show Aramaic influence. New Testament The wide diffusion of Aramaic, along with its flexibility and adaptability, resulted in the emergence of various dialects. In Syria-Palestine the western group includes Jewish Palestinian Aramaic, Samaritan, Palmyrene, and Nabataean. Jewish Palestinian Aramaic words and phrases occur in the NT, such as Abba (father) (Mark 14:36), talitha, qumi (maiden, arise) (Mark 5:41), lama sabachthani (why have You forsaken Me?) (Mark 15:34 HCSB). The Palestinian Talmud and the Targums (translations of OT books into Aramaic) also were written in Palestinian Jewish Aramaic. The eastern (Mesopotamian) group includes Babylonian Jewish Aramaic, Mandaean, and Syriac.

Thomas Smothers

ARAMEAN [Arāmē' ān] or ARAMAEAN Loose confederation of towns and settlements spread over what is now called Syria as well as in some parts of Babylon from which Jacob and Abraham came (Deut. 26:5). The Aramaeans were rarely gathered into a cohesive political group; rather they lived as independent towns and tribes settled by nomads prior to 1000 B.C. Although the Aramaeans were quick to form alliances with each one another or with other countries if threatened, once the crisis was ended they disbanded and often fought among themselves and against their former allies.

The OT records interactions between Israel and the Aramaeans on a number of occasions. Deuteronomy 26:5 contains what has become an important confession for Jews—"A wandering Aramean was my father." (RSV)—which claims Aramaean lineage for Jacob and by extension for Abraham. The first mention of Aramaeans outside of the Bible dates from the reign of Tiglath-pileser I of Assyria (1116-1076 B.C.). Thus roughly at the start of Israel's monarchy, the Aramaeans became a potent political force. They were able to seize large portions of Assyrian lands, defeating Tiglath-pileser I and II and Ashur-rabi II. At the same time they suffered losses to David on the western front (2 Sam. 8:9-10). He demanded tribute from Hadadezer, king of Zobah, and married Maacah the daughter of Talmui, king of Geshur. It was Maacah who bore Absalom (2 Sam. 3:3). Both Zobah and Geshur were Aramaean states.

The most important city of the Aramaeans was Damascus. Although the political influence of the Aramaeans was relatively unimportant, they made a lasting contribution with their language. See Aramaic; Assyria; Damascus.

ARAMITESS [Ār' ā-mīt-ēss] KJV translation in 1 Chron. 7:14 for an unnamed concubine from Aram, thus an Aramaean or Syrian. She was mother of Machir, son of Manasseh.

ARAM-MAACAH [Ā' rām-Mā'ā-cāh] Territory in Syria (1 Chron. 19:6), also called Syriamaachah, Maacah, Maachah. In 2 Sam. 10:6 only Aram-Zobah is named. See Maacah.

ARAM-NAHARAIM [Ā' rām-Nā-hā-rā' ım] Country name meaning “Aram of the two rivers.” Appears in title of Psalm 60 in KJV. Transliterated from Hebrew also in Gen. 24:10; Deut. 23:4; Judg. 3:8; and 1 Chron. 19:6 by NIV. It refers to the land between the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers. Nahor, Abraham's brother, lived there; and Rebekah, Isaac's wife, came from there. Balaam, the prophet Balak hired to curse Israel as they entered Moab from the wilderness, came from Aram-naharaim. So did Cushan-rishathaim, who oppressed Israel before Othniel delivered them. The Ammonites bought military help from Aram-naharaim to fight David.

ARAM-ZOBAH [Ā' rām-Zō' bah] Alternate name for the Aramaean town and kingdom of Zobah found in the superscription of Psalm 60. See Zorah.

ARAN [Ā' rān] Personal name, perhaps meaning “ibex.” A Horite descended from Seir (Gen. 36:28).

ARARAT [Ār' ā-rāt] Mountainous region in western Asia. 1. Area where the ark came to rest after the flood (Gen. 8:4). 2. Region where Sennacherib's sons fled for refuge after murdering their father (2 Kings 19:37). 3. Jeremiah included in a prophetic call for a war league as judgment against Babylon (Jer. 51:27). The references in Kings and Isaiah are rendered “Armenia” in KJV, following the Septuagint tradition. Geography The Errata of the OT is known as the land of Urartu in sources outside the Bible, especially Assyrian sources. The people of the region identified themselves as “children of Haldi” (the national god) and their land as Biainae. The country was southeast of the Black Sea and southwest of the Caspian, where the headwaters of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers were found. Near the center of the land was Lake Van; Lake Sevan lay on its northern border; and Lake Urmia was found in its southeast corner. Modern Turkey, Iran, and Soviet Armenia occupy parts of the ancient land area of Urartu. Mount Ararat is located to the northeast of Lake Van.

This mountain in modern Turkey may be part of the Mountains of Ararat where Noah's ark came to rest after the flood.

Ararat rises from the lowlands of the Aras River to a height of 17,000 feet. Considering the high elevation, the region is remarkably fertile and pasturable. Archaeologists believe that Ararat received more rainfall in biblical times than it does today, an observation which suggests that the area would have been even more productive as farmland in ancient times.

History of Ararat The height of Urartian political prominence was between 900 and 700 B.C. Culturally the Urartians were akin to the earlier Hurrians and to the Assyrians whose empire stretched to the south. From after 1100 until after 800 B.C., Urartu remained independent of Assyria and in many ways was a political rival. The rise of Tiglath-pileser III (745-727 B.C.) in Assyria, followed by Sargon II (721-705 B.C.), crushed any political ambitions Urartu might have had in the region. See Ark; Flood; Noah.

ARARITE [Ār' arit] NASB spelling of Hararite (2 Sam. 23:33) reflecting distinctive Hebrew spelling of written text, which has already been marked for change by early Hebrew scribes. See Hararite.

ARAUNAH [Ār' aū' nāh] Personal name of unknown meaning. A Jebusite whose threshing floor David purchased as a site for sacrifice, following the prophetic command of God, holding back a divine plague after David disobeyed by taking a census (2 Sam. 24:15-25). Second Chronicles 3:1 and 1 Chron. 21:15-30 refer to Araunah as Ornan.

ARBA [Ār' bā] Personal name meaning “four.” Father of Anak for whom Kiriath-arba was named (Josh. 14:15; 15:13). The city became known as Hebron. Arba was the outstanding warrior among the Anakim. See Anak, Anakim.

ARBATHITE [Ār' bāthit] Resident of Beth-ara-bah (2 Sam. 23:31). See Beth-arabah.

ARBITE [Ār' bit] Native of Arab, a village in Judah near Hebron (Josh. 15:52), identified as modern er-Rabiyeh. One of David's warriors in the 30 was Paarai, an Arbite (2 Sam. 23:35).

ARBITRATOR See Mediator.

ARCH KJV rendering of a Hebrew word in Ezek. 40:16-36. The KJV translates the word as “porch” elsewhere (e.g., 1 Kings 6:3; 7:12,19, 21). Other versions translate the word as “porch” (NASB), “portico” and “galleries (NIV), “vestibule” and “walls” (RSV), and “entrance room” and “galleries” (TEV). Aside from 1 Kings 7:6 (where the word describes a covered porch whose roof is supported by columns), the word refers to the entrance room to the main building of the temple just outside the holy place. The entrance was about 30 by 15 feet and 45 feet high (1 Kings 6:2-3; cp. 2 Chron. 3:4). In Ezekiel's vision of the temple, each gate leading into the court of the Gentiles also had a vestibule (40:7-26) as did the gates to the court of the Israelites (40:29-37). See Hall.

Greco-Roman arches in the ruins of Gerasa (modern Jerash, Jordan), a city in the Decapolis.

ARCHAEOLOGY AND BIBLICAL STUDY Archaeology is the study of the past based upon the recovery, examination, and explanation of the material remains of human life, thought, and activity, coordinated with available information concerning the ancient environment. Biblical archaeology, a discipline largely developing since 1800, searches for what can be learned about biblical events, characters, and teachings from sources outside the Bible. Dealing with what ancient civilizations left behind, its goal is to give a better understanding of the Bible itself.

The purpose of excavation is to reconstruct, insofar as is possible, the history and culture of an ancient site. Students of the Bible are particularly interested in the archaeology of ancient Canaan and its adjacent regions. Today this is the land forming the countries of Israel, Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan. In addition, the biblical world included other regions such as Egypt, Greece, Italy, Cyprus, the Arabian Peninsula, and the large areas occupied by present-day Turkey, Iraq, and Iran.

Limitations of Archaeology The student of archaeology must understand its limitations. First, little of what existed in antiquity still remains. Furthermore, the Bible lands have as yet been only partly investigated. Few mounds have been completely excavated, and many remain almost untouched. Thorough publication of archaeological investigations is a very slow process, and the significance of the objects found is often subject to diverse interpretation. Conclusions once held are many times abandoned in favor of new hypotheses. In using archaeological data, biblical students need to take precautions to be current. They also need to be conscious of what archaeology can and cannot do. The basic affirmations of the Bible—that God is, that He is active in history, and that Jesus is His Son raised from the dead—are not subject to archaeological verification. One can demonstrate from archaeological materials that Sennacherib invaded Judah in the time of Hezekiah, but that he was a tool in the hand of the Lord can only be known from biblical assertion.

Brief History of Archaeology The work of archaeologists in the biblical world in general, and in ancient Canaan in particular, can be divided into three overlapping periods.

Stage One In the earliest period, prior to about A.D. 1900, the practice of archaeology was primarily a “treasure hunt” with no organized, systematic way of going about the work. Individuals such as Heinrich Schliemann, Giovanni Belzoni, and A. H. Layard set forth to find spectacular items from the past. Pits and trenches dug into ancient cities often destroyed more than they revealed. Since the area occupied by ancient Israel was relatively poor in “treasure,” much of this work was carried out in Egypt and in Mesopotamia, the ancient homeland of the Assyrians and Babylonians (the present site of the country of Iraq).

The beginning of biblical archaeology in Egypt in 1798, under the sponsorship of Napoleon Bonaparte, was for the expressed purpose of disproving the Bible. The assumption was that the biblical record was not historical. The secrets of Egypt began coming to light following the discovery in 1799 of the Rosetta stone and its decipherment by Champollion. The secrets of Mesopotamia began to unfold following the copying and decipherment of the Behistun inscription by Rawlinson begun in 1835 and by the later discovery in 1852 of Ashurbanipal's library by Rassam. Architecture, art, and written sources recovered from numerous ancient sites began to cast light on the Bible, particularly on the OT. About the middle of the nineteenth century, English archaeologists excavated portions of the city of Nineveh, capital of the ancient Assyrian Empire at the height of its power.

Among the discoveries at Nineveh were two great palaces. The huge palace of the Assyrian king Sennacherib (704-681 B.C.) contained hundreds of feet of wall space lined with sculptured reliefs depicting the exploits of the king. Included is a striking picture of the siege of the important biblical fortress-city of Lachish that was captured by the Assyrians in 701 B.C. Also among the discoveries was the Taylor Prism, which contains a written Assyrian version of their invasion of the kingdom of Judah in 701 B.C. The biblical account of the siege of Jerusalem at this time is found in 2 Kings 18:13-19:37. It is interesting to compare the two records. Although Sennacherib does not claim to have captured Jerusalem, he makes no mention of the calamity suffered by his troops as described in the biblical account.

The palace of King Ashurbanipal (668-633 B.C.) was also uncovered. The most significant find here was a great library of written documents that the king had collected from many portions of the empire. These have provided the student of the Bible with much primary source material from this portion of the ancient world. Of particular interest are mythological stories relating traditions of creation and of a great flood.

Overview of the excavations at Tel Arad in Israel, showing the Citadel built by David (right background).

Numerous other sites such as Ur, Babylon, and Jerusalem were investigated during the first stage of archaeology. Archaeologists gradually learned, however, that they needed to approach their task in a more systematic and disciplined manner in order to extract greater information from ancient civilizations.

Stage Two Near the beginning of the 20th century, significant developments in the discipline of archaeology began to occur. In 1890, Sir Flinders Petrie, an English archaeologist who had done important works in Egypt, began excavations at Tell el-Hesi in southwestern Palestine.

The word “tell” refers to an ancient mound built up over a long period of time by the occupational debris of persons living at the site. In time a site was often abandoned, either briefly or for a long duration, perhaps after being destroyed by an enemy or by a natural catastrophe, such as an earthquake. A town might be deserted because of an epidemic of disease. Another important and probably common reason for people leaving a site was a weather change such as drought. Regardless of why people left, the reasons for settling there in the first place often drew them back. The debris of the earlier occupation was made smooth by leveling off and filling in, and a new village was built on top of the ruins. This process, along with the ordinary accumulation of debris and rebuilding that occurs in any area of human occupation, gradually over the centuries and millennia resulted in the site becoming higher and higher—a “tell” was formed, containing many strata (layers). A large number of these artificially formed mounds dot the biblical landscape.

The work of Petrie and his successor F. J. Bliss was highly significant in two interrelated ways. First, they tried very carefully to excavate Tell el-Hesi layer by layer. Second, they made careful notes of the style of pottery found in each layer. Since the way pottery was made changed through the years, the type found in any one layer permitted the archaeologist to assign an approximate date to that level. Almost a century of study of pottery now enables archaeologists to give almost an absolute date for each strata excavated. Petrie and Bliss's work marks the beginning of a scientific, disciplined approach to archaeology in Palestine. The principles of stratigraphic excavation (isolating each layer) and of pottery analysis are still basic to sound methodology, although many improvements have occurred since the beginning of the twentieth century. See Pottery.

Archaeologists attempt to determine when they are leaving one layer and entering another on the basis of such items as changes in the color, consistency, and content of the soil, or, in some cases, the presence of ashes between strata. A stratum may be very thin or quite thick depending on the nature of the occupation and how long it lasted.

During the first half of the 20th century, many archaeological expeditions from numerous countries were sent to the biblical world. Americans, for example, excavated at Megiddo, Bethshan, and Tell Beit Mirsim, and the British excavated at Jericho and Samaria. Stratigraphic excavation and pottery analysis became more precise and exact. Careful records (written reports, drawings, photographs) were kept.

Samaria was the capital of the Northern Kingdom of ancient Israel. The city was built by the Hebrew kings Omri and his son Ahab in the first half of the ninth century B.C. During the first third of the twentieth century, excavations partially recovered this old capital city of the Northern Kingdom.

Among the many interesting discoveries at Samaria was a group of over 60 ostraca, probably from the time of King Jeroboam II (782-743 B.C.). An ostrakon (plural, ostraca) is a piece of broken pottery that has been written upon. Ancient peoples often employed pieces of pottery as a writing surface and used these for records, lists, and letters. The ostraca from Samaria contain the records of supplies, including grain, oil, and wine, which had been sent for the support of the royal palace by persons living in various towns. From these some information can be deduced about the economy and the political organization of the land. In addition, the presence of names of several persons containing Baal as a component (e.g., Abibaal, Meribaal) reveal the continued influence of Baalism in the land.

A comparison of these ostraca with Amos 6:1-7 also suggests that the “tax” levied on the common people was being used to support a lifestyle of luxury and debauchery on the part of the high officials in the government. The passage in Amos also mentions “beds inlaid with ivory” (v. 4; 3:15; 1 Kings 22:39). Several hundred pieces of ivory were found in the excavations of Samaria. Many of these had been used as inlays in furniture.

Stage Three Whereas many remarkable discoveries were made in the first half of the twentieth century (e.g., the Code of Hammurabi, the Elephantine Papyri, the Hittite monuments at Boghazkoy, the tomb of King Tut, the Ras Shamra texts, the Mari Letters, Lachish ostraca, and the Dead Sea Scrolls), beginning about 1960 a new stage in the history of archaeology in the ancient Near East began to emerge. Archaeologists and others began to realize that it was not enough to make discoveries and to describe those discoveries. They needed synthesis of information and the explanation of data.

This stage of archaeology, sometimes called the “New Archaeology,” is characterized by a multidisciplinary team approach to the archaeological task, including botanists, geologists, zoologists, and anthropologists. The approach also emphasizes the use of volunteer help and a strong educational program. In the previous stage much of the labor of digging had been done by persons living in the region who were paid for their services. The third stage of archaeology also is characterized by a growing tendency to think in terms of a regional approach rather than concentrating exclusively on one site. Interest is growing in the investigation of small villages as opposed to an almost total concentration in the past on large, “important” cities.

In Israel, the modern approach was pioneered at Tell Gezer in the 1960s and early 1970s and was continued at numerous sites, such as Tell el-Hesi and Tell Halif in the 1970s and 1980s. The goal of the approach is to derive a complete picture of life in a particular region, in antiquity, and also an understanding of commerce and other cultural contacts between regions.

Contributions of Archaeology to Biblical Study The primary purpose of archaeology is not to prove the Bible true, although it does serve to affirm the accuracy of the Bible's portrayal of the ancient world. Archaeology especially serves to enhance our understanding of the Bible, opening many “windows” into the biblical world.

Archaeology and the Biblical Text Archaeology, through the recovery of ancient Hebrew and Greek copies of the Scripture, plus the discovery of other old literature written in related languages, has helped scholars to determine a more exact text of the Bible than was available previously. It has also demonstrated that the scribes were very careful in their work.

At the end of the last century in a rubbish room (now known as the Cairo Geniza) of an old synagogue in Cairo, Egypt, an invaluable find of Hebrew materials was made. In 1947 the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls in 11 caves moved knowledge of Hebrew manuscripts back from the Middle Ages to the period 250 B.C. to A.D. 70. See Bible Texts and Versions.

Knowledge of writing has greatly increased. The earliest documents now known from Syria-Palestine would be the Ebla texts (the first of which were found in 1975) dating about 2400 B.C., followed by the Ugaritic texts (found 1929-1937) from Ras Shamra on the coast of Syria and dating about 1400 B.C. Examples of eight different writing scripts in Palestine which antedate the time of Moses have answered the question debated in the last century of whether Moses could have known writing. Examples of decipherable Hebrew found by archaeologists begin at about the time of Solomon with the Gezer calendar.

In 1929 French archaeologists began to excavate the ancient city of Ugarit near the coast of Syria. Many clay tablets containing ancient writing were unearthed. Most of these were written in a previously unknown language, soon called Ugaritic. Ugaritic is a northwest Semitic language closely related to Hebrew. It is the earliest example of a language written in an alphabetical script. A study of Ugaritic has helped OT scholars better understand the nature and development of the Hebrew language, and it has been of particular value in the clarification of some of the ancient Hebrew poetry contained in the Bible.

Earlier scholars defined OT words by comparison with Arabic and by meanings derived from rabbinic tradition. Discovery and decipherment of previously unknown ancient Middle Eastern languages like Sumerian, Akkadian, Hittite, Ugaritic, Aramaic, and Eblite give a wider base for definition of words, making (by the study called Comparative Semitics) for a substantial reorientation of OT vocabulary.

In 1 Samuel 13:21 there is a Hebrew word, pim, which occurs nowhere else in the Bible. The meaning of this word was not known to early readers and translators of the Bible. Although the translators of the KJV of 1611 chose the word "file" to translate pim, there was no firm basis for the choice. Since that time archaeologists have found several small weights from ancient Israel bearing the word pim. A pim appears to have weighed a little less than a shekel. Now it is clear that the word pim refers to the charge made by the Philistines for working on the Hebrew's iron tools. Recent translations of the Bible reflect this new understanding.

With reference to the NT, during the last one to two centuries, numerous old papyrus manuscripts have been found, mainly in Egypt, which contain portions of the biblical text. At least a small portion of every book in the NT, except 1 and 2 Timothy, has been found in these ancient Greek papyri. The oldest of these is known as the Rylands Papyrus (P52), dated A.D. 100-125. It contains John 18:31-33,37-38. These papyri are useful to scholars involved in the task of determining the best textual base of the NT. The number of Greek manuscripts and fragments known to exist has increased from about 1,500 in 1885 to over 5,700 in 2002. Included are 116 papyrus items that carry knowledge of the text behind the fourth-century codices to the second century for the parts of the text covered. New Greek critical texts are being prepared to make all the material available to students, and already English translations are reflecting the new finds.

The nonbiblical-papyrus find made in Egypt at the end of the last century furnished new insights into everyday Greek usage and vocabulary which have now become the substance of NT language study.

Archaeology and Biblical Geography As late as A.D. 1800, the location of many of the places mentioned in the Bible was unknown. In 1838 an American explorer by the name of Edward Robinson, and his assistant, Eli Smith, made a trip through Palestine on horseback. On the basis of their study of geography and the analysis of place-names, they were able to identify over 100 biblical sites. Robinson returned for further exploration in 1852.

Since the time of Robinson, archaeologists have been able to identify a great many of the sites mentioned in the Bible, including the places visited by the Apostle Paul on his travels. Not only have villages and cities been identified, but entire kingdoms have been located. For example, excavations that began in 1906 by German archaeologists in what is now Turkey recovered the lost empire of the Hittites.

The location of places like Jerusalem and Bethlehem were never forgotten. Other places were destroyed and their location lost. Edward Robinson developed a technique by which literary information and travelers' reports, coupled with local historical memory, could give probable identities. Excavation of the ruins in the areas has helped. Twenty-eight jar handles found in the cistern at El Jib made certain the location of ancient Gibeon; six stone carvings with the name “Gezer” identify that place; and “Arad” seven times scratched on a potsherd confirms its location.

Archaeology and Biblical History Egyptian reports like “The Tale of Sinuhe” show how Palestine appeared to Egyptians about the time of Abraham. The Tell Amarna tablets found by a peasant woman in Egypt are letters from Palestinian rulers to the reigning pharaohs, but they show the unstable conditions in Palestine prior to the Israelite conquest which enabled Israel to conquer the enemy one by one.

The Egyptian Pharaoh Merneptah (1213-1204 B.C.) invaded Syria-Palestine during his brief reign. A monument found in his mortuary chamber at Thebes contains a record of this venture and includes the oldest reference to Israel outside of the Bible. Merneptah claimed to have utterly destroyed them. Here is clear evidence that Israelites were in the land of Canaan by no later than the 13th century B.C.

The discovery of the law code of Hammurabi in 1901 at Susa with its preamble and 282 laws opened the way for interesting comparisons with Israel's laws. Archaeologists now have five law codes that were written in cuneiform before the time of Moses: those of Ur-Nammu, Eshnunna, Lipit-Ishtar, Hammurabi, and the Hittites. Slightly later are the Middle Assyrian laws. Interesting comparisons can be made between these laws and those of Moses. Contrasts include the number of acts for which the accused is subjected to the ordeal (Num. 5) and the punishments of mutilation (Deut. 25:12). While these codes have both similarities and differences from the laws of Moses, the claim of borrowing cannot be established. The varieties of bodily mutilation prescribed by Hammurabi are absent in Israel's laws as are also the unlimited floggings.

Continuing archaeological excavations along the southern border of the Temple Mount in Jerusalem.

Interesting sidelights on the general period of the Judges and Kings include the Egyptian custom of counting the victims of a campaign from stacks of severed hands (cp. Judg. 8:6), the putting out of an eye (1 Sam. 11:1-11), or both eyes (2 Kings 25:7), and depiction of circumcised men on a Megiddo ivory (as well as on an Egyptian papyrus) where the subject described his ordeal.

After the death of Solomon (ca. 922 B.C.), the Hebrew kingdom divided into two portions, the Northern Kingdom (Israel) and the Southern Kingdom (Judah). One powerful nation thereby became two weak nations, and the Egyptian ruler Shishak took advantage of the situation by invading the land about 918 B.C. (1 Kings 14:25-28). The biblical account is very brief and only tells of an attack on Jerusalem. Shishak, however, recorded his exploits on a wall in the temple of the god Amun in Karnak, Egypt. He claims to have captured over 150 towns in Palestine, including places in the Northern Kingdom. The probability is that this invasion was a greater blow to the Hebrew kingdoms than is obvious from the brief account in 1 Kings. It is suggested not only by the Egyptian record, which may have been inflated to some degree, but also by the archaeological evidence that several of the cities named were indeed destroyed at about this time. Here is an example of archaeology helping to provide a larger historical context that enriches the study of Scripture.

Mesha, king of Moab, on the Moabite stone gave his account of his servitude to the Israelite kings and his effort to free himself that seems parallel to the record in 2 Kings 3. The names of Omri, of Mesha, of the Lord, of Chemosh, and of numerous Palestinian cities are listed on this stone. The policy of cherem by which a place is totally devoted to the deity as Jericho earlier was (Josh. 6:21) is illustrated. Other records enlarge our knowledge of biblical characters. Such are the records of Ahab's participation in the battle of Qarqar in 853 B.C. on a monument set up by Shalmaneser III and of Jehu's tribute to Shalmaneser III recorded on the black obelisk now in the British Museum. Neither episode is mentioned in the Bible.

Omri was king of the Northern Kingdom about 876-869 B.C. During his short reign he moved the capital from Tirzah to the newly built city of Samaria. He was an evil king, and the Bible devotes little space to him (1 Kings 16:15-28). The surrounding nations, however, perceived Omri as a very strong and able ruler. He made such an impression on the Assyrians that for over a hundred years their records continue to refer to Israel as “the House of Omri,” even after his dynasty no longer ruled. This reminds one that, from a biblical perspective, faithfulness to God is considered to be much more important than ability in warfare and government.

Assyrian records furnish information on Tiglath-pileser, Sargon, Sennacherib, and Ashurbanipal who are significant in the OT. They also mention the kings of Israel and Judah, chronicling the exchange of the last kings of Israel and the exiling of Samaria. Until the excavation of Sargon's palace by Emil Botta, Sargon was known only from the Bible. Sargon's invasion of Ashdod (Isa. 20) was recorded by Sargon, and a fragment of a stele set up in Ashdod was found there. Sennacherib depicted his siege of Lachish in his palace and told on a cylinder of his bringing Hezekiah to his knees. A water tunnel in Jerusalem is conjectured to be that which Hezekiah built at this time. Its inscription tells of the excavation required to build the tunnel. A record tells of Sennacherib's murder by his son. The Babylonians told of the downfall of Nineveh, of the battle of Carchemish, and of the capture of Jerusalem in a record that establishes March 15/16, 597 B.C., as its date.

The prophetic movement is one of the most distinctive features of OT life. Search for antecedents has looked at Ebla, where an occurrence of the equivalent of the Hebrew word is reported. More than 20 texts from Mari on the Euphrates report prophetic-like figures with visions and spoken messages given to the heads of state. The eleventh-century tale of Wen-Amon's mission to Byblos continues to be the classic example of ecstatic behavior. The eighth-century Zakir inscription from Afis, Syria, has the deity Bacal-sheman speak through his seers (chozim). The excavation of Tell Deir Alla yielded Balaam texts in Aramaic from the sixth century, the first prophetic text of any scope outside the OT (cp. Num. 22-24). Even at that date this "seer of the God" was still being revered at some places. None of these areas have a prophetic literature comparable to that of the writing prophets.

Nahum's description of the fall of Nineveh can be better understood by a study of the depiction of ancient warfare on the Assyrian monuments. These picture attacks of cities, war chariot charges, and the exiling of people. Nahum 3:8 compares the date of Nineveh to that of Thebes. The Assyrian records also depict the siege of an Egyptian city plus a description of the capture of Thebes.

The poignant statement in Jer. 34:6-7 that the Babylonian army had captured all the fortified cities in Judah except Jerusalem, Lachish, and Azekah is highlighted by a group of 21 ostraca found by archaeologists at Lachish. These ostraca are rough, draft copies of a letter the Hebrew commander at the doomed city of Lachish was preparing to send to a high official in Jerusalem. Among other things he wrote that signals were no longer being received from Azekah. Apparently he was writing shortly after the time of Jer. 34. Now only two major cities were still resisting the Babylonian onslaught—Azekah had fallen.

The fate of Israelite people in exile is illustrated in a list of rations found in excavations at the Ishtar Gate of Babylon which are for Yaukin (Jehoiachin) and his sons. Banking records found at Nippur show that people of Jewish names were doing business there while in exile. Although there is as yet no known text that specifically calls Belshazzar a king, this figure once known only from the Bible is abundantly known in texts.

The return from exile was accomplished by means of a decree of Cyrus. Cyrus's cylinder, now in the British Museum, though not mentioning the Jews or their temple, makes clear that such a project was in keeping with Cyrus's general policy. Papyri found at Elephantine Island in Egypt dating about the time of Nehemiah show the condition of Jews in that area but also permit a dating of Nehemiah's work. Sons of Sanballat are mentioned; and these documents together with Samaritan papyri found in a cave northwest of Jericho make clear that a series of figures bore this name.

Archaeology and Ancient Culture A vast gulf separates the cultures of today, especially those found in the Western Hemisphere, from those of the biblical period. One of the greatest contributions of archaeology lies in its ability to break down barriers of time and culture and to move the reader of the Bible back into its ancient context, providing fresh insight and increased understanding of the Scripture.

The list of biblical objects that has been found in excavations, allowing us to know exactly what a word means, is large. Examples of weights and measures, plow points, weapons, tools, jewelry, clay jars, seals, and coins are all included. Ancient art depicts clothing styles, weapons, modes of transportation, methods of warfare, and styles of life. Excavated tombs show burial customs that reflect beliefs about life and death. The Beni Hasan tomb in Egypt from around 1900 B.C. shows how Semites coming to Egypt would have been dressed. It is our nearest approach to what a patriarch might have looked like, and it moves students away from the Bedouin analogy previously made.

View of Baniyas palace complex.

Step trench cut into the tel of Old Testament Jericho by archaeologists to uncover levels of destruction.

Archaeology furnishes much knowledge of the cultures of Israel's neighbors—the Canaanites, Egyptians, Hittites, Philistines, Moabites, Assyrians, Arameans, Babylonians, and Persians. Finds reveal the gods they worshiped, their trade, wars, and treaties.

The tables found at Ugarit provide much primary source information about Canaanite faith and practice. They present a fairly clear picture of what life was like in the land where the Israelites settled down. See Canaan.

The Ugaritic texts reveal the Canaanite pantheon with the worship practices of the Canaanite people against which the Hebrew prophets like Elijah, Elisha, and Hosea struggled. The Kuntillet Ajrud inscription which speaks of “Yahweh and his Asherah” (female counterpart) reveal the syncretism into which Israel was drawn, confirming the denunciation of such practices by the prophets of Judah and Israel.

Genesis 15:1-6 indicates that Abraham and Sarah had made Eliezer, a member of their household staff, their official heir. They may have adopted him to do so, apparently in response to the long delay in the birth of a promised child. A bit later, as recorded in Gen. 16:1-16, Sarah took the further step of having a child by proxy. At her urging, Abraham fathered a son, Ishmael, by the Egyptian maid, Hagar. What was the stimulus for these actions? Clay tablets have been found at the ancient northeastern Mesopotamian city of Nuzi that cast some light on this question. The tablets came from a time a few centuries after Abraham but contain a record of customs practiced over a long period of time. These tablets reveal that both the adoption of a son and the birth of a son by proxy were common practices for a barren couple. Careful laws were enacted to safeguard the rights of all parties. Abraham's roots were in Mesopotamia (Gen. 11:27-32), and he must have known of these customs. Abraham and Sarah appear to have followed the generally accepted cultural norms of their day.

Genesis 15:7-21 greatly puzzles the modern reader. The passage is difficult to understand. At least partial light has been shed on this passage by the recovery of numerous clay tablets from the northern Mesopotamian city of Mari. The tablets are from the eighteenth century B.C. They indicate that the ceremony used at that time for sealing an agreement or covenant included the cutting of a donkey in half. The persons involved in the contract would then walk between the severed pieces of the animal. One sees that God gave Abraham instructions regarding the ceremony that would have been familiar to the patriarch. God met Abraham in his own cultural context. It is of interest that when people in later OT times made a covenant, they are said, in the Hebrew language, to have “cut a covenant.”

New Testament Archaeology confirms at many points the NT account of events and culture in the first-century Greco-Roman world of Palestine and beyond. This includes evidence regarding burial customs, crucifixion, synagogue worship, and the identity of several rulers.

The NT rightly presents Herod the Great as a ruthless and wicked king (Matt. 2:1-23). Very few details of his life are given. A more complete picture of this complex man is now available through the writings of the first-century A.D. Jewish historian, Josephus, and through the work of archaeologists. Herod was one of the greatest builders of the ancient world. A visitor to the Holy Land can now see numerous remains from Herod's building program. These include the temple platform in Jerusalem, the harbor city of Caesarea, the strong fortress of Masada, the striking ruins of Samaria, and the Herodium, the fortress palace where Herod was buried. These, and numerous other sites excavated by archaeologists, remind one that the world in which Jesus lived continued to be dominated to a large degree by Herod—not only through the rule of his sons but also by the monuments of stone that he left behind. In Jerusalem the 35-acre platform on which Herod built his temple still stands, and parts of the tower of David at the Citadel are Herodian. Inscription stones warning the Gentiles not to proceed into the court of Israel have been found.

Alleged relics of NT figures can never be demonstrated to be genuine. Claims for having located the house of Peter at Capernaum and for having located his tomb in Rome are based on pious assumptions. Pilgrims have been going to Palestine since the second century when Melito of Sardis went “to see the places.” Many have left records of what they were shown; but sites like the place of Jesus' birth, baptism, and burial have only long veneration to establish their claim.

Most Pauline cities and those of Revelation have been located, and many excavated. Corinth has supplied its inscription “synagogue of the Hebrews” and that of Erastus who laid the pavement at his own expense

(cp. Rom. 16:23). Papyrus documents from Egypt contain invitations to pagan dinners that are good illustrations of the Corinthian problem of being invited to a dinner where food has been offered to idols.

Recent Archaeological Discoveries Important archaeological discoveries which enhance our understanding of the Bible occurred late in the 20th century. The discovery and excavation of the city of Sepphoris, a cosmopolitan Roman city which can be seen from Nazareth, changed the perception that Galilee was a strictly rural, unsophisticated area. A fishing boat, dating to the first century A.D., similar to those used by Jesus' disciples was found intact beneath the banks of the Sea of Galilee. The stone ossuary (chest) bearing the name of the high priest Caiaphas and containing his bones was found in Jerusalem. Two small silver amulets bearing a quotation from the book of Numbers were recovered, which predate any other surviving Scripture portion by several centuries. Small clay bullae bearing the impression of the personal seals of Baruch, Jerusalem's scribe, and the kings of Judah, Ahaz and Hezekiah, have been found. A carved ivory pomegranate, which topped a staff and was inscribed as belonging to the service of Solomon's temple, has been authenticated. Recent evaluations of the excavations at Jericho demonstrate that the biblical account of the fall of the city is accurate in many of its particulars. Two inscriptions bear the term "House of David," one discovered in 1993 at Tel Dan and the other, the Mesha Stele, was discovered in 1868 but only translated and published in 1994. These are the only known extrabiblical mentions of the great king.

Conclusion We may expect more significant finds as archaeologists continue to work throughout the lands where biblical events took place. Though the idea that archaeology can prove the Bible is frowned on by many archaeologists, it has nevertheless confirmed biblical accounts in many cases. The main function of archaeology is illumination of past cultures. The great gulf in time, language, and culture between our day and biblical times makes knowledge of archaeological discoveries essential for thorough understanding of the Bible.

*J. Kenneth Eakins, Jack P. Lewis,
Charles W. Draper, and E. Ray Clendenen*

ARCHANGEL Chief or first angel. The English term “archangel” is a derivative of the Greek word archangelos, which occurs only twice in the NT.

Only one archangel is named in the Bible, though it is possible that there are others. In Jude's letter the archangel Michael is depicted as disputing with Satan over the body of Moses (Jude 9, see also Assumption of Moses). In the tenth chapter of the book of Daniel, this same Michael is described as one of the chief princes. This may imply that other chief princes (archangels) exist. Jewish apocalyptic literature of the postexilic period describes seven archangels who stand in the presence of God: Suruel, Raphael, Raguel, Michael, Gabriel, Remiel, and Uriel (Tobit 12:15; 1 Enoch 20:1-7; 9:1; 40:9). Some scholars speculate that these are the same angels who stand before God and blow the trumpets of God's judgment (Rev. 8:2-9:15). Although John does not refer to them as archangels, it is interesting to note the association of God's trumpet and the rapture of the Church with the voice of the archangel (1 Thess. 4:16). However, Paul uses the singular form of the noun, and this is probably a reference to the work of Michael at the end of the age (Dan. 12:1).

Archangels seem to command other angels, akin to an army general. Michael and his angels battle the dragon and his angels. It appears that Michael throws Satan down to Earth (Rev. 12:7-9), and it may be Michael who binds Satan for 1,000 years (Rev. 20:1-3), though the text does not say so. It may also be an archangel who holds the scroll which John is instructed to eat (Rev. 10:1). Michael is also described as the protector of God's people (Dan. 12:1).

Two angelic beings named in the Bible which are often thought to be archangels are Gabriel and Satan. The angel Gabriel is called an archangel in some of the apocryphal literature, but the biblical text describes him primarily as a messenger (Dan. 8:16; 9:21; Luke 1:19,26). Yet he also seems to possess some extraordinary powers. Daniel is strengthened by Gabriel on at least one occasion (Dan. 8:18; possibly 10:16, 18-19), and Zechariah loses his ability to speak because he did not believe Gabriel's message (Luke 1:20). Gabriel also seems to have a relationship to Israel similar to that of Michael. Gabriel is described by Daniel as looking like a man (Dan. 8:15-16), and it is likely that the man Michael aided in his war with the king of Persia is Gabriel (Dan. 10:13,21). Thus Gabriel may also be a protector of God's people. However, to move from this rather scant evidence to the conclusion that Gabriel is an archangel is to rely too heavily on speculation. See Gabriel.

The evidence in favor of the claim that Satan was an archangel is even scarcer. Although Satan is described as leading other angels into war against Michael and his angels (Rev. 12:7) and is referred to as the great dragon (Rev. 12:9), his being cast out of heaven (Rev. 12:8) and overpowered by another angel (Rev. 20:1-2) seem to stand against this claim. See Angel.

John Laing

ARCHELAUS [Ārch·ə·lā'ūs] Son and principal successor of Herod the Great (Matt. 2:22). When Herod died in 4 B.C., his sons Herod Antipas and Philip were named tetrarchs; but his son Archelaus was the principal successor. Aware of the hostility of the Jews toward his family, Archelaus did not attempt to ascend the throne immediately. First, he tried to win the Jews over. His efforts were not successful; as the Jews revolted, Archelaus ordered his army to retaliate.

Archelaus encountered opposition to his reign from his brothers, in particular Herod Antipas, who felt entitled to the throne. The brothers presented their case to the emperor Augustus, who gave Archelaus one-half of his father Herod's land and split the remainder between Antipas and Philip. Archelaus was given the title tetrarch but was promised the title of king if he reigned virtuously.

Archelaus interfered in the high priesthood, married against Jewish law, and oppressed the Samaritans and Jews through brutal treatment. In revolt the people sent deputations to Caesar to have Archelaus denounced. His rule was ended in A.D. 6 when the Roman government banished him to Gaul and added his territory to Syria.

Joseph was warned in a dream to avoid Judea because of Archelaus's rule. He decided to take Mary and the child Jesus to Galilee when they returned from Egypt rather than go to Judea (Matt. 2:22).

ARCHER One who shoots an arrow from a bow. Archery was used in ancient times for the hunting of both small and large game and in warfare. An archer trained from childhood until he could pull a 100-pound bow that would shoot an arrow a distance of 300-400 yards. Several OT passages mention archery in warfare (Gen. 49:23-24; 2 Sam. 11:24). See Arms and Armor.

ARCHEVITES [Ār' chə-vīts] Group who joined Rehum the commander in writing a letter to King Artaxerxes of Persia protesting the rebuilding of Jerusalem under Zerubbabel's leadership about 537 B.C. NASB, NIV, NRSV translate Archevites as people or men of Erech. See Erech.

ARCHI [Ār' chī], ARCHITE Unknown group of people who gave their name to a border point of the tribes of Ephraim and Benjamin (Josh. 16:2). They may have been a clan of Benjamin or more likely remnants of the ancient "Canaanite" inhabitants. Their only representative in the Bible was David's counselor Hushai. See Hushai.

ARCHIPPUS [Ār-chīp pūs] Personal name meaning "first among horsemen." A Christian whom Paul greeted in Col. 4:17 and Philem. 2, entreating him to fulfill the ministry God gave him. Some have suggested he was the son of Philemon and Appia, but this can be neither proved nor disproved. The nature of his ministry has also been widely discussed without firm conclusions. Paul's use of "fellow soldier" to describe him seems to indicate a strong participation in church leadership. Evidently, he preached in the church at Colossae.

ARCHITECTURE Construction, techniques, and materials used in building the structures of the ancient Near East.

Old Testament The people of the ancient Near East used many types of building materials. Utilizing natural resources, they most often exploited stone, wood, reeds, and mud. Used naturally, mud served as mortar. It also was formed into bricks and then sun dried. Religious or large public buildings used the more expensive lumber that came from cedar, cypress, sandalwood, and olive trees. The sycamore tree served as a less costly lumber. Limestone and basalt were common stones used in construction.

Reconstruction of a Roman archer's machine from first century A.D.

Public Structures As a basic element of city architecture, walls served three general purposes. Protective walls encircled the city to keep out enemy forces. These city walls usually did not support any load. Retaining walls had the purpose of keeping in place any weight that was behind them. In agricultural terracing, they prevented erosion and created a level place for farming on the sides of hills. This type of wall also was placed below city walls to stop any erosion of the soil, which ultimately might weaken the city walls. Lastly, buildings and houses used walls to bear loads or keep out the weather.

Walls were made of several layers or courses of stones placed one on top of the other with mud bricks often set on the stone courses. Composed of large fieldstones, the first few layers served as the foundation of the wall. The placing of the large stones into trenches gave the wall a more stable foundation. In houses and public buildings, the stone courses above the ground may have been given smooth surfaces so as to produce a uniform look, but this was not always done. Large public building projects commonly made use of a technique called headers and stretchers. The builders alternated laying the stones lengthwise and breadthwise to form the wall.

During the time of Solomon, a common type of city wall was the casemate wall. This was composed of two parallel walls with perpendicular walls placed at intervals in between the parallel ones. The empty spaces formed between the walls, called casemates, commonly were filled with stones, earth, or debris. Sometimes the people used the spaces for living quarters, guardrooms, or storehouses. The outer parallel wall averaged about five and one-half feet in width, while the inner parallel wall averaged about four feet. This type of wall had an advantage over a solid wall due to its greater strength and its saving of material and labor. Excavations at Gezer, Megiddo, and Hazor uncovered the remains of casemate walls.

The inset-offset wall came into use as a city wall after the time of Solomon. Its name came from the technique used to build it. After erecting one stretch of the wall, the next stretch was slightly recessed by about one-half yard. The following section then was built slightly forward with the next section placed slightly behind it. Each stretch of the wall was placed alternately, either slightly ahead or slightly behind the previous section. This “insetting” and “offsetting” of the city wall allowed the city's defenders to fire at any attackers from three angles: head on and to the right and left of the attackers. As a solid structure composed of stone or mud bricks placed on a stone foundation, this type of wall contrasts with the casemate wall. The remains of an inset-offset wall, 11 feet in thickness, were excavated at Megiddo.

The city gate was an important part of public architecture because it was the weakest part of the city's defenses. It also served as a meeting place for the various city activities. Remains of Solomonic gates at Megiddo, Gezer, and Hazor show that two square towers flanked the entrance into the gate. The gate complex was composed of three successive chambers or rooms on each side (six chambers in all). A gate separated each pair of chambers, and the six rooms probably served as guardhouses. At Dan, a later gate had the two towers but only four chambers instead of six. This gate complex measured 58 x 97 feet. The approach to the gate from outside the city usually was placed at an angle. This forced any attackers to expose their flanks to the defenders on the city walls. Should the attackers be able to get inside the gate area, the angle caused the attackers to move at a slower pace.

As a prominent public structure, the temple acted as the house of the god. Two types of temple structures were common in Palestine during the biblical period. The broad-room temple was a rectangular structure with its entrance in the middle of one of the long sides. The plan of the temple, therefore, was oriented around a room that was broader than it was long. The longroom temple likewise was a rectangular structure, but its entrance was in the middle of one of the short sides. This caused the building to be longer than it was broad.

As a long-room temple Solomon's sanctuary in Jerusalem consisted of three main sections. A courtyard with an altar preceded the building. The temple proper actually was one building divided into two parts, the holy place and the holy of holies. The main room, or the holy place, was entered from the courtyard. A partition separated the holy place from the holy of holies.

The Pantheon in Rome, built in the first century A.D., was the first large dome ever built.

Another Israelite temple dating from after 1000 B.C. was uncovered at Arad. It was a broadroom temple entered from the east. The holy of holies was a niche protruding out of the Western Wall opposite the entrance.

Private Structures Houses in the period of the OT usually were built around a central courtyard and entered from the street. They often were two stories high with access to the upper story coming from a staircase or a ladder. The walls of the house consisted of stone foundations with mud bricks placed on the stone layers or courses. They subsequently were plastered. Floors either were paved with small stones or plaster, or they were formed from beaten earth. Large wooden beams laid across the walls composed the supporting structure of the roof. Smaller pieces of wood or reeds were placed in between the beams and then covered with a layer of mud. Rows of columns placed in the house served as supports to the ceiling. Since the roof was flat, people slept on it in the hot seasons and also used it for storage. Sometimes clay or stone pipes that led from the roof to cisterns down below were used to catch rainwater.

The most common type of house was the so-called “four-room” house. This house consisted of a broad room at the rear of the house with three parallel rooms coming out from one side of the broad room. The back room ran the width of the building. Rows of pillars separated the middle parallel room from the other two rooms. This middle room actually was a small, unroofed courtyard and served as the entrance to the house. The courtyard usually contained household items such as silos, cisterns, ovens, and grinding stones and was the place where the cooking was done. The animals could have been kept under a covered section in the courtyard. The other rooms were used for living and storage.

Ovens were constructed with mud bricks and then plastered on the outside. One side of the oven had an air hole. A new oven was created whenever the old one filled up with ashes. By breaking off the top of the old oven and then raising the sides, a new oven was made.

Storage structures were common in the biblical period. Private and public grain silos were round and dug several feet into the ground. The builders usually erected circular mud brick or stone walls around the silo, but sometimes they did nothing to the pit or simply plastered it with mud. Rooms with clay vessels also served as storage space.

Atrium of the Roman villa of the poet Menander in Pompeii (destroyed in A.D. 79).

While the “four-room” house was the most common plan in Palestine, other arrangements existed. Some homes had a simple plan of a courtyard with one room placed to the side. Other houses had only two or three rooms; still others may have had more than four. The arrangement of the rooms around the open courtyard also varied. The broad room at the rear of the house seems to be common to all plans.

New Testament In this time period architecture in Israel was greatly influenced by Greek and Roman ideas. Some of the primary cities in Israel show this influence in their public buildings.

Public Structures Over 20 Roman theaters were built in Palestine and Jordan. At Caesarea the theater contained two main parts, the auditorium and stage, and the stage building. These two parts formed one building complex. Six vaulted passageways served as entrances. The auditorium was semicircular with upper and lower sections used for seating. The lower tier had six sections of seats, and the upper tier had seven for a total capacity of 4,500 people. A central box was reserved for dignitaries and important guests. The wall of the stage was as high as the auditorium. Other similar theaters were located at Scythopolis (Beth-shan), Pella, Gerasa, Petra, Dor, Hippos, and Gadara.

Arenas for chariot racing, called hippodromes, were long, narrow, and straight with curved ends. Gerasa, Caesarea, Scythopolis, Gadara, and Jerusalem had hippodromes. Erected in the second century A.D., the one at Caesarea was one-fourth of a mile long and 330 feet wide with a seating capacity of 30,000.

The temple in Jerusalem was destroyed in 586 B.C. and rebuilt in 515 B.C. Herod the Great refurbished it during the first century B.C. As a result, the temple became widely known for its beauty. It retained the same plan as its predecessor, but the area around it was doubled. Retaining walls that marked the boundaries of the temple complex were built, and marble porticos were added all around the temple mount. The stones of the temple mount's retaining walls were about four or five feet high and weighed three to five tons.

Private Structures Houses usually followed a plan that arranged the rooms around a courtyard. A stairway on the outside of the house led to the upper stories. A stone or timber projected out from the wall at intervals and supported the staircase. This architectural technique is known as corbeling. The walls and ceiling were plastered, and arches sometimes supported the roof. Houses at Avdat and Shivta used arches that came out from the walls to form the roof. After placing thin slabs of limestone over the arches, the builders plastered the entire roof. In the lower city of Jerusalem, houses constructed with small stones were crowded closely together. Yet they still maintained small courtyards.

Houses of the rich often had columns placed around a central court that had rooms radiating out from it. Kitchens, cellars, cisterns, and bathing pools may have been located underneath the ground. In Jerusalem one house covered about 650 square feet, a large house by first-century standards. In the courtyard, four ovens were sunk into the ground, and a cistern stored the house's water supply. Inside the house on one of the walls, three niches raised about five feet off the ground served as cabinets for storing the household vessels.

Scott Langsten

ARCHIVES See House of the Rolls.

ARCTURUS [Ār-ĕ-tū' rūs] Constellation of stars God created (Job 9:9; 38:32) of which exact identification was not clear to the earliest Bible translators and continues to be debated. Modern translations generally use “Bear” (NASB, NIV, NRSV). TEV uses “the Dipper.” Some scholars prefer “the lion.” Whatever the identification, the star points to the sovereign greatness of God beyond human understanding.

ARD [Ārd], ARDITE Personal name meaning “hunchbacked.” 1. Son of Benjamin and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:21). 2. Grandson and clan father of Benjamin (Num. 26:40). Apparently listed as Addar in 1 Chron. 8:3.

ARDON [Ār' dōn] Son of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:18).

ARELI [Ā-rē' li], ARELITES Son of Gad (Gen. 46:16) and original ancestor of clan of Arelites (Num. 26:17).

AREOPAGITE [Ār-ō-p' ā-gite] Member of the highly respected Greek council which met on the Areopagus in Athens. See Areopagus; Athens; Dionysius.

AREOPAGUS [Ār-ō-p' ā-gūs] Site of Paul's speech to the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers of Athens (Acts 17:19). It was a rocky hill about 370 feet high, not far below the Acropolis and overlooked the Agora (marketplace) in Athens, Greece. The word also was used to refer to the council that originally met on this hill. The name probably was derived from Ares, the Greek name for the god of war known to the Romans as Mars. See Mars Hill.

ARETAS [Ār' ē-tās] Personal name meaning “moral excellence, power.” The ruler of Damascus in NT times. He sought to arrest Paul after his conversion (2 Cor. 11:32). The name Aretas was borne by several Arabian kings centered in Petra and Damascus. Aretas IV ruled from Petra (9 B.c.- A.D. 40) as a subject of Rome. Herod Antipas married his daughter, then divorced her to marry Herodias (Mark 6:17-18). Aretas joined with a Roman officer to defeat Herod's army in A.D. 36.

ARGOB [Ār' gōb] Personal and geographical name meaning “mound of earth.”

1. Man who might have joined Pekah (2 Kings 15:25) in murdering Pekahiah, king of Israel (742-740 B.C.), or possibly was killed by Pekah. The Hebrew text is difficult to read at this point. Some scholars omit Argob as a copyist's error duplicating part of verse 29 here (TEV). NIV translation can be interpreted to mean Pekah also killed Argob. 2. Territory in Bashan in the hill country east of the Jordan River. Argob was probably in the center of the fertile tableland and was famous for its strong cities (Deut. 3:4). Moses gave this land of giants to Manasseh (3:13). Manasseh's son Jair conquered Argob (3:14) and changed the name to Bashan-havoth-jair.

ARIDAI [Ā-rīd' a-i] Persian personal name, perhaps meaning “delight of Hari” (a god). Son of Haman, Esther, and the Jews' archenemy. He died as the Jews reversed Haman's scheme and gained revenge (Esther 9:9).

ARIDATHA [Ā-rī-dā' thā] Persian personal name, perhaps meaning “given by Hari” (a god). Brother of Aridai who shared his fate. See Aridai.

ARIEH [Ā-rī' ēh] Personal name meaning “lion.” Paired with Argob in 2 Kings 15:25 with same text problems involved (cp. KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV). See Argob.

ARIEL [Ā' rī-ēl] Personal name meaning “God's lion.” 1. Jewish leader in captivity who acted as Ezra's messenger to the Levites to send people with Ezra to Jerusalem about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:16). 2. Code name for Jerusalem in Isaiah 29. Ariel apparently referred to the top of the altar on which the priests burned sacrifices. Jerusalem under Assyrian attack was like the altar. It did not burn but caused everything around it to burn. The sins of Jerusalem had led to the devastation of the rest of Judah in 701 B.C.

ARIMATHEA [Ā-rī-mā-thē' a] City of Joseph, the disciple who claimed the body of Jesus following the crucifixion and in whose own new tomb the body was placed (Matt. 27:57). The location of Arimathea is not certainly known. In Luke 23:51 Arimathea is described as a Jewish city. See Joseph 7.

ARIOCH [Är'î-òk] Personal, probably Human, name meaning “servant of the moon god.” 1. King of Ellasar, who joined alliance against Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 14) but was eventually defeated by Abraham. Parallel names have been found in early Akkadian documents and at Mari and Nuzi, but no other reference to the biblical Arioch can be shown. See Amraphel; Ellasar. 2. Commander of bodyguard of King Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 2:14-25). He confided in Daniel, who was able to interpret the king's forgotten dream and prevent the death of the wise counselors of Babylon.

ARISAI [Äris'î] Persian personal name. Son of Haman (Esther 9:9) who suffered his brothers' fate. See Aridai.

ARISTARCHUS [Äris-tär'küs] Personal name, perhaps meaning “best ruler.” Paul's companion caught by the followers of Artemis in Ephesus (Acts 19:29). Apparently the same person was the Thessalonian who accompanied Paul from Greece to Jerusalem as he returned from his third missionary journey (Acts 20:4). Aristarchus also accompanied Paul when he sailed for Rome (Acts 27:2). Paul sent greetings from Aristarchus, a fellow prisoner and worker, in his letters to the Colossians (4:10) and Philemon (24). Later church tradition said Nero put Aristarchus to death in Rome.

ARISTOBULUS [Äris-tò-bù' lüs] Head of a Christian household in Rome whom Paul greeted (Rom. 16:10).

ARK Boat or water vessel and in particular one built by Noah under God's direction to save Noah, his family, and representatives of all animal life from the flood.

Old Testament God warned Noah of His intentions to destroy the earth because of the wickedness of humanity. Noah was commanded to build an ark to God's specifications to save his family and representatives of all animals from the flood (Gen. 6:18-19). As such, the ark became both a symbol of a faith on the part of Noah and a symbol of grace on the part of God (Gen. 6:8,22).

The shape of the ark was unusual. Although the Bible does not give enough detail to enable a full model to be made, the ark was apparently not shaped like a boat, either ancient or modern. The shape more closely approximates a giant block. The length was 300 cubits (about 450 feet), the width was 50 cubits (about 75 feet), and the height was 30 cubits (about 45 feet), overall dimensions that resemble the dimensions of a giant house (Gen. 6:15). The ark had three floors filled with rooms (Gen. 6:14, 16) and one window and one door (Gen. 6:16).

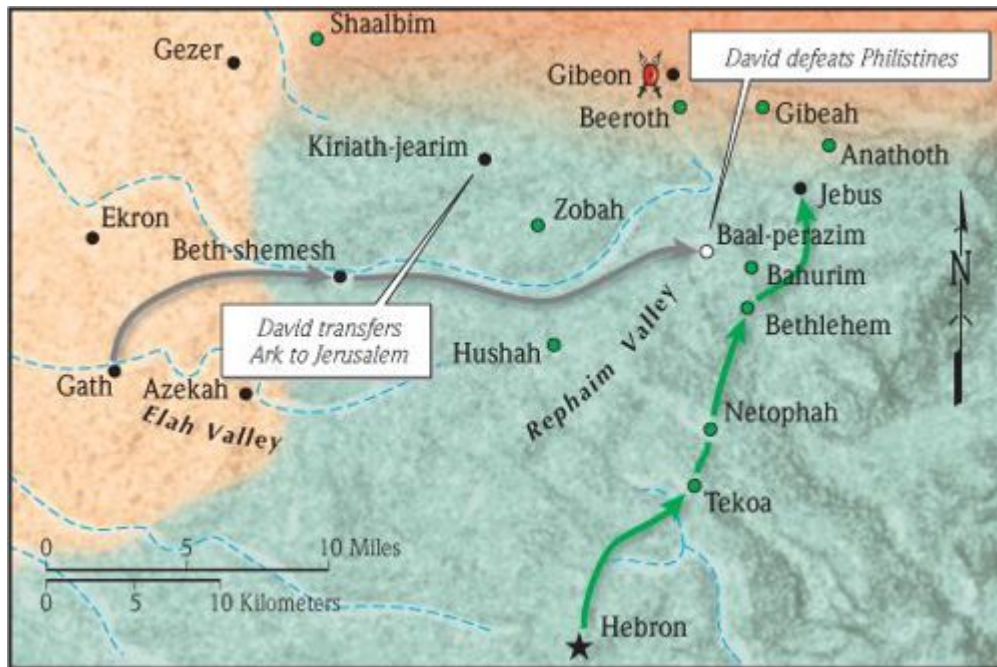

The ark was built of gopher wood (Gen. 6:14) which may have been a variety of cypress. It has also been suggested that gopher wood referred to a particular shape or type of plank or beam, rather than a type of wood. Our limited knowledge makes it impossible to make a final conclusion.

The ark was a testimony of Noah's faith because no large body of water stood nearby on which Noah could have floated such a large boat. Hence people could see no obvious or visible need for such a vessel.

The ark was also a symbol of God's grace. Obviously, the ark was intended by God as an instrument of deliverance to preserve both human and animal life upon the earth (Gen. 6:17-18). As such, it came to be understood as a symbol of His grace and mercy (Heb. 11:7a). New Testament The Gospel references to the ark are in connection with Jesus' teachings regarding the second coming. The expectancy of some at the second coming is likened to those who were destroyed by the flood. In the book of Hebrews, the preacher lists Noah as a man of faith who prepared an ark even though the danger was at that point unseen. The last NT reference to the ark points to the evil of humanity and God's patient salvation (1 Pet. 3:20). Extrabiblical Sources The Babylonian flood story, called the Gilgamesh epic, also tells of a large boat by which its hero survived the flood. There, however, the ark was not a symbol of the grace of the gods but of their folly and faulty planning. In the Sumerian and Babylonian traditions, we are given more details concerning the size and shape of the ark. These details may be of interest but are of far less significance than the message of the biblical ark itself as testimony to God's unmerited grace. See Flood; Noah.

Robert Cate

ARKITE [Ār' kit] Canaanite clan listed in the table of nations (Gen. 10:17). They apparently centered around Arqa, modern Tell Arqa in Syria, 80 miles north of Sidon. Thutmose III of Egypt conquered it. It appears in the Amarna letters. Tiglath-pileser III of Assyria conquered it in 738 B.C. Romans called it Caesarea Libani and noted its Astarte worship.

ARK OF BULRUSHES (KJV, Exod. 2:3-5) See Basket; Bulrush.

ARK OF THE COVENANT Original container for the Ten Commandments and the central symbol of God's presence with the people of Israel.

Old Testament The ark of ancient Israel is mysterious in its origins, its meanings, and its ultimate fate. Its many names convey the holy sense of God's presence. The Hebrew word for ark (tebah) means simply “box, chest, coffin,” as is indicated by its use for the coffin of Joseph (Gen. 50:26) and for the temple collection box of King Joash (2 Kings 12:9-10).

The names used for the ark define its meaning by the words that modify it. The word “covenant” in the name defines the ark from its original purpose as a container for the stone tablets upon which the Ten Commandments (sometimes called the “testimony”) were inscribed. Sometimes it is identified rather with the name of deity, “the ark of God,” or “the ark of the Lord” (Yahweh), or most ornately “the ark of the covenant of the Lord of hosts (Yahweh Sabaoth) who is enthroned on the cherubim” (1 Sam. 4:4).

The origin of the ark goes back to Moses at Sinai. The mysterious origin of the ark is seen by contrasting the two accounts of how it was made in the Pentateuch. The more elaborate account of the manufacture and ornamentation of the ark by the craftsman Bezalel appears in Exod. 25:10-22; 31:2,7; 35:30-35; 37:1-9. It was planned during Moses' first sojourn on Sinai and built after all the tabernacle specifications had been communicated and completed. The other account is found in Deut. 10:1-5. After the sin of the golden calf and the breaking of the original Decalogue tablets, Moses made a plain box of acacia wood as a container to receive the new tablets of the law.

A very ancient poem, the “Song of the Ark” in Num. 10:35-36, sheds some light on the function of the ark in the wanderings in the wilderness. The ark was the symbol of God's presence to guide the pilgrims and lead them in battle (Num. 10:33,35-36). If they acted in faithlessness, failing to follow this guidance, the consequences could be drastic (Num. 14:39-45). Some passages suggest the ark was also regarded as the throne of the invisible deity, or his footstool (Jer. 3:16-17; Ps. 132:7-8). These various meanings of the ark should be interpreted as complementary rather than contradictory.

The ark was designed for mobility. Its size (about four feet long, two and a half feet wide, and two and a half feet deep) and rectangular shape were appropriate to this feature. Permanent poles were used to carry the ark, since no one was allowed to touch it, and only priestly (Levitical) personnel were allowed to carry it. The ark was the most important object within the tabernacle of the desert period, though its relationship to the tabernacle was discontinued sometime after the conquest of Canaan.

Stone carving of what is thought to be the ark of the covenant in the synagogue ruins at Capernaum.

The ark played a prominent role in the “holy war” narratives of the crossing of the Jordan and the conquest of Jericho (Josh. 3-6). After the conquest, it was variously located at Gilgal, Shechem (Josh. 8:30-35; Deut. 11:26-32; 27:1-26), or Bethel (Judg. 20:26), wherever the people of the Israel were gathered for worship. Finally, it was permanently located at Shiloh, where a temple was built to house it (1 Sam. 1:9; 3:3).

Reconstruction of the ark of the covenant drawn in the Egyptian style, reflecting the 400 years of bondage in Egypt.

Shiloh, about 30 miles north of Jerusalem, was Israel's religious center for over a century after the conquest of Canaan and the place where the ark of the covenant was kept.

Because of the faithless superstition of the wicked sons of Eli, the Hebrew tribes were defeated in the battle of Ebenezer, and the ark was captured by the Philistines (1 Sam. 4). The adventures of the ark in the cities of Ashdod, Gath, and Ekron are told to magnify the strength and glory of the Lord of the ark. The Lord vanquished Dagon and spread bubonic plagues among the enemy until they propitiated the God of Israel by symbolic guilt offerings and a ritually correct sending away of the dread object (1 Sam. 5:1-6:12). The men of Beth-shemesh welcomed the return of the ark, until they unwisely violated its holiness by looking into it (1 Sam. 6:13-15,19-20). Then it was carried to Kiriathjearim, where it remained in comparative neglect, until David moved it to his new capital and sanctuary in Jerusalem (1 Sam. 6:21-7:2; 2 Sam. 6). Abinadab and his sons (2 Sam. 6:3) seemed to have served the Lord of the ark faithfully until one son, Uzzah, was smitten for his rash touching of the holy object during David's first attempt to transport the ark from its "hill" at Kiriath-jearim to his own city. In fear David left the ark with Obed-edom the Gittite, whose household was blessed by its presence. More cautiously and with great religious fervor, David succeeded the second time in taking the ark into his capital city (2 Sam. 6:12-19).

Recent scholarship has suggested that on coronation occasions or annually at a festival of enthronement this ark ceremony was reenacted. Such an occasion would reemphasize the promise to the Davidic dynasty, as well as the glory of the Lord of Hosts (Pss. 24:7-10; 103:21-22). Finally Solomon built the temple planned by David, to house the ark, which he then transported into the holy of holies with elaborate festival ceremonies (1 Kings 8; 2 Chron. 5).

The precise time of the theft or destruction of the ark is unknown. Some have suggested Shishak of Egypt plundered the temple of this most holy object (1 Kings 14:25-28), but it seems more likely, from Jer. 3:16-17, that the Babylonians captured or destroyed the ark in 587 B.C. with the fall of Jerusalem and the burning of the temple. As Jeremiah predicted, the ark was never rebuilt for the second temple, the holy of holies remaining empty.

Other mysteries of the ark are its relation to the cherubim, its ornate lid called the "mercy seat," and its precise ritual usage during the time of the monarchy. Because the ark of the covenant was the central symbol of God's presence with His people Israel, its mysteries remain appropriately veiled within the inner sanctuary of the living God. See Holy of Holies; Mercy Seat; Tabernacle; Temple.

New Testament Hebrews 9:1-10 shows the ark was a part of the old order with external regulations waiting for the new day of Christ to come with a perfect sacrifice able to cleanse the human conscience. Revelation 11:19 shows the ark of the covenant will be part of the heavenly temple when it is revealed.

M. Pierce Matheney, Jr.

ARM Upper limb of the human body used to symbolize power and strength. Such power can oppress people (Job 35:9), but such arms will be broken (Job 38:15). No human arm or power is comparable to God's (Job 40:9). In prayer the faithful can ask God to break the arm of the wicked (Ps. 10:15). Human arms cannot save (Ps. 44:3). God's outstretched arm saves (Exod. 6:6; 15:16; Deut. 5:15). People can trust in God's arm (Isa. 51:5). On seeing Mary as she waited for the birth of Jesus, Elizabeth confessed that in bringing Jesus, God had “done a mighty deed with His arm” (Luke 1:51 HCSB).

ARMAGEDDON [Ār-mā-géd' dōn] Middle East site of the final battle between the forces of good and evil (Rev. 16:16). The word “Armageddon” appears once in Scripture and is not found in Hebrew literature. Translators transliterate the term from Greek into English in several ways: Armageddon (KJV); Har Magedon (NASB); and Harmageddon (Moffatt). The Greek is an approximate transliteration of the Hebrew har megiddo, literally, “mountain of Megiddo.” Revelation promises that in the face of defeat of God's saints by military forces from the east, south, and the north, the Lord Jesus Christ will return to defeat His enemies and deliver His people. See Megiddo.

Kenneth Hubbard

ARMENIA [Ār-mē' nī-á] KJV translation for land of Ararat (2 Kings 19:37). See Ararat.

ARMLET Band or ring worn around the upper arm that should be distinguished from a bracelet worn around the wrist. The Hebrew word is translated as “chain” (Num. 31:50) and “bracelet” (2 Sam. 1:10). A related word is rendered as “ornaments of the legs” (Isa. 3:20) in the KJV.

Gold Persian armlet from the treasury of the Oxus.

ARMONI [Ār-mō' nī] Personal name meaning “born in Armon.” Son of Rizpah and Saul, whom David gave to the Gibeonites in revenge for Saul's earlier killing of Gibeonites (2 Sam. 21:7-9). See Rizpah.

ARMOR-BEARER See Arms and Armor.

ARMOR OF GOD See Arms and Armor.

ARMS AND ARMOR Instruments and body coverings for defense and/or protection.

Old Testament The offensive arms of the OT include long-, medium-, and close-range arms, and the defensive items include shields and armor.

Long-Range Arms The bow and arrow were effective arms from long range (300-400 yards) and were used widely by the nations of the Bible.

Israel had expert archers in men from Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:40; 2 Chron. 17:17) and the eastern tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh (1 Chron. 5:18). Jonathan and Jehu were individual marksmen. At least four Israelite kings were severely or fatally wounded by enemy arrows: Saul (1 Sam. 31:3), Ahab (1 Kings 22:34), Joram (2 Kings 9:24), and Josiah (2 Chron. 35:23). Bows were constructed with single pieces of wood, or more effectively with glued layers of wood, horn, and sinew, and possibly even with added bronze (2 Sam. 22:35; Job 20:24). The size varied from approximately three to six feet in length. Arrows were made of wood shafts or reeds, tipped with metal heads which were forged differently to meet the diverse defenses of the enemy. The arrow was guided by feathers, especially from the eagle, vulture, or kite. A leather quiver strapped to the back or hung over the shoulder carried between 20 and 30 of these arrows, or if strapped to a chariot, perhaps as many as 50. Frequently a leather arm guard was also used on the bow arm to protect it from the gut string that propelled the arrow.

One might be most familiar with the slingshot through reading about David's encounter with Goliath (1 Sam. 17:40-50), without realizing that it was a conventional artillery weapon for deadly long-range use by armies throughout the Middle East. Because of the long-range capabilities, expert slingers were stationed by the hundreds near the archers. It was especially valuable to have those who could sling from the left hand as well as from the right (Judg. 20:16; 1 Chron. 12:2). A patch of cloth or leather with two braided leather cords on either end would hold a smooth stone. The slinger then twirled the pocketed missile above his head. Release of one of the cords would eject the stone towards its victim. The blow would disarm, destabilize, knock out, or even kill the enemy. King Uzziah of Judah developed large catapults that projected arrows and stones long-range to defend Jerusalem (2 Chron. 26:15).

Medium-Range Arms A javelin is a spear thrown obviously a shorter distance than the archers could arch their arrows or slingers could sling their sling stones. However, as a hurled weapon, its medium range is to be differentiated from the close-range thrusting spear of the foot soldier (in a phalanx). David faced the javelin while successfully challenging Goliath (1 Sam. 17:6) and while peacefully attempting to soothe Saul's spirit. Twice the disturbed Saul hurled his javelin at David (1 Sam. 18:10-11; 19:9-10) and even once at his own son Jonathan (1 Sam. 20:33). Usually made of wood or reed, some javelins had one or both of two features that aided its flight: some had a leather cord wrapped around its shaft that caused the released weapon to spin when the cord was retained in the hand, and a counterweight was sometimes fixed on the butt of the shaft. The latter could be even sharp enough to be stuck in the ground to stand the javelin (1 Sam. 26:7) or even used to kill (2 Sam. 2:23). A quiver was used often to aid the soldier in carrying more than one javelin at a time.

Close-Range Arms Hand-to-hand combat brought different weapons to the fore: some sharp, some dull, some long, some short. The thrusting spear was longer and heavier than the javelin and could have been thrown if needed. The soldiers from the tribes of Judah and Naphtali carried spears as a tribal weapon (1 Chron. 12:24,34). Guards protected the temple with these arms (2 Chron. 23:9). Front battle lines often featured foot soldiers equipped with rectangular shields carrying spears jutting out beyond the walls of shields and pressing forward at the expense of the enemy front line.

Two types of swords were used in the biblical times, the single-edged and the two-edged sword (Ps. 149:6; Prov. 5:4). The single-edged was used most effectively by swinging it and hitting the enemy to lacerate the flesh. The blade could be straight or curved to a great degree. In the latter case the sharp edge of the sword was on the outside of the curve. The double-edged sword was used primarily for piercing rather than lacerating, though it could obviously be used either way if necessary. The sword was carried in a sheath attached to the belt. The varieties of the overall width and length of swords in proportion to the hilts were numerous. The difference between a straight sword and the dagger is simply the length. The earliest blades were more daggers than swords. They were lengthened gradually through the ages. Ehud probably used a long dagger in assassinating King Eglon of Moab, since it measured about 18 inches (one cubit, Judg. 3:16-26).

The mace and battle-ax are seldom mentioned in the Bible (Prov. 25:18; Jer. 51:20; Ezek. 9:2), yet they played a significant role in hand-to-hand combat in the biblical lands. The mace was a war club that was used to crush the head of the enemy. The heavy metal or stone head of the weapon would be of various shapes such as round, oval, or pear-shaped. Its wooden handle would fasten by going through the head like a modern hammer or ax. The handle was formed with some flaring at the bottom to keep the weapon from sliding out of the hand. With the pervasive introduction of armor, especially the helmet, the mace gave way in popularity to the piercing edge of the battle-ax. These axes with narrow heads could penetrate more easily a helmet or other armor with their elongated shape. Other blades were designed with wider edges to cut and open the flesh where less or no armor was worn.

Armor-bearers accompanied the military leaders to bring along extra weapons and defensive equipment that would be expended during a battle (arrows, javelins, shields). They sometimes aided the soldier as well by positioning their shields for them, as in the case of Goliath, and at times killing those enemy soldiers who were left helplessly wounded by preceding combatants.

Battering rams, as modeled by Ezekiel in his object lesson for the Israelites (Ezek. 4:2), were actually rolled on wheels and had metal ends attached to wooden shafts to withstand the collision force with city gates or stone walls.

Defensive Arms Defense against all these arms consisted of the shield that was carried or armor that was worn. Shields were made of wicker or of leather stretched over wooden frames with handles on the inside. These were much more maneuverable than heavier metal but obviously less protective. A cross between metal and leather was achieved by attaching metal disks or plates to the leather over a portion of the surface. Two different sizes are referred to in the Bible and in many ancient illustrations (2 Chron. 23:9). One was a round shield used with lighter weapons and covered half the body at most. The tribe of Benjamin preferred these along with the bow and arrow (2 Chron. 14:8). So did Nehemiah when he equipped his men for protection while rebuilding the city walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 4:16). The gold and brass shields made by Solomon and Rehoboam respectively were ceremonial and decorative in function (1 Kings 14:25-28) and were of this size. A larger shield was more rectangular and covered nearly, if not all, the body and was so large at times that a special shield bearer was employed to carry it in front of the weapon bearer. Both Goliath and one of these assistants faced David (1 Sam. 17:41). The tribes of Judah (2 Chron. 14:8), Gad (1 Chron. 12:8), and Naphtali (1 Chron. 12:34) used this type of shield with the long thrusting spear or lance as the offensive weapon in the other hand. Bowmen also stood behind standing shields while they flung their arrows.

Roman emperor Trajan in armor (cuirass, kilt, and boots).

Armor is essentially a shield that is worn directly on the body. Since the body is most fatally vulnerable in the head and chest regions, it was especially there where armor was worn. Saul and Goliath wore helmets (1 Sam. 17:5,38), as did the entire army of Judah, at least in the time of Uzziah (2 Chron. 26:14). The helmet was usually made of leather or metal and was designed with various shapes depending on the army and even on the unit within an army so that the commander could distinguish one unit from another from a higher vantage point. The differently decorated and constructed helmets helped the soldier tell whether he was near an enemy or comrade in the confusion of tight hand-to-hand combat.

With the rise in popularity of the arrow and with its speed of flight and imperceptible approach on its victim, the mail came to be more and more necessary to cover the torso. Fish scalelike construction of small metal plates sewn to cloth or leather was the breastplate for the ancient soldier. These scales could number as high as 700 to 1000 per “coat.” Each coat obviously could be quite heavy and expensive to produce in volume. The distant enemy units of archers who might find themselves firing on each other would wear mail especially, as well as those archers riding in chariots. While in a chariot, Ahab was hit and killed by an arrow exactly where the mail was least protective—at the seam where the sleeve and breast of the coat met (1 Kings 22:34). Leg armor, like the bronze shin protectors of Goliath (1 Sam. 17:6), was not regularly used in the OT times.

New Testament Arms and armor surface on only a few occasions in the NT. Of course, the NT times found Roman imperial soldiers equipped with metal helmets, protective leather and metal vests, leg armor, shields, swords, and spears. Christ accepted a legal, defensive use of the sword (Luke 22:36-38), but he rebuked Peter's illegal and more offensive strike against Malchus at a time of arrest (John 18:10-11). Often the NT uses “arms and armor” symbolically as in the OT poets and prophetic books. The Word of the Lord and its piercing, penetrating effect is referred to as a sword (Eph. 6:17; Heb. 4:12; Rev. 1:16; 2:16; 19:15, 21). Paul used both arms and armor of a soldier to express the virtues necessary to defend the believer against Satan (Eph. 6:10-17; cp. Isa. 59:16-17).

Metaphorical Use In the OT the devastating effect of a vicious tongue is compared with the destructive purpose of the sword and arrow (Pss. 57:4; 64:3; Prov. 12:18). However, when weapons are used metaphorically in the OT, it is usually to help convey the supreme sovereignty of God. For instance, one's primary dependence on military arms is considered foolish since they are not the ultimate source of deliverance, whether it be by the bow or sword (Josh. 24:12; Ps. 44:6; Hos. 1:7). This is because God overpowers and shatters the bow and arrow, spear, sword, and shield (Pss. 46:9; 76:3). In other places God's judgment is spoken of as a bow or sword (Ps. 7:12-13; Isa. 66:16; Jer. 12:12). He also uses the literal weapons of conquering nations to judge Israel (Isa. 3:25). Finally, that God is the faithful protector of His people is often expressed by referring to Him as “a shield to those who take refuge in Him” (Prov. 30:5 HCSB), just as He Himself encouraged Abraham, “Do not fear, Abram, I am a shield to you” (Gen. 15:1 NASB).

Daniel C. Fredericks

ARMY National military personnel organized for battle. Thus in Egypt, Israel could be referred to as having “armies” even when they did not have a political organization (Exod. 6:26; 7:4; 12:17). Goliath learned that to defy God's people was to defy the “armies of the living God” (1 Sam. 17:26,36), for God was “the God of the armies of Israel” (1 Sam. 17:45 NASB). Face to face with God, humans can only confess, “Is there any number to His troops?” (Job 25:3 NASB). Israel recognized God's anger when God did not go out with their armies (Ps. 44:9). To announce salvation the prophet proclaimed the fury of God upon all armies (Isa. 34:2).

In the NT the writer of Hebrews looked back on the heroes of faith and proclaimed that through faith they “put foreign armies to flight” (Heb. 11:34 HCSB). John's vision of the end time included the armies of heaven following the King of kings to victory over the beast and the false prophet (Rev. 19:11-21).

A sarcophagus relief depicting a battle scene between Greeks and Galatians.

Armies were organized in different ways during Israel's history. The patriarchs called upon servants and other members of the household (Gen. 14). In the wilderness Joshua led men he had chosen to defend against the Amalekites (Exod. 17:9-10). In the conquest Joshua led the tribes of Israel into battle after being commissioned by the “commander of the Lord's army” (Josh. 5:14 HCSB). At times tribes joined together to take territory (Judg. 1:3; 4:6).

Deborah summoned many of the tribes to battle, but some did not answer (Judg. 5). Other judges summoned clans (6:34) and tribes (6:35; 7:2-9). Saul first established a standing, professional army in Israel (1 Sam. 13:2), at first leading it himself with his son but then appointing a professional commander (1 Sam. 17:55). David apparently hired foreign troops loyal to him personally (2 Sam. 15:18). Solomon enhanced the foot soldiers with a chariot corps and calvary (1 Kings 10:26). The army was organized into various units with officers over each, but the precise chain of command cannot be determined (2 Chron. 25:5). Humanitarian laws determined who was excused from military service and how war was conducted (Deut. 20).

ARNAN [Ār' nān] Personal name meaning “quick.” Person in messianic line of King David after the return from exile (1 Chron. 3:21).

ARNI [Ār' nī] Ancestor of Jesus in difficult text of Luke 3:33. NASB, NIV read Ram, correlating with list in 1 Chron. 2:10.

The Arnon Valley in southern Jordan where the Israelites passed through, as one of their last barriers, before crossing the Jordan into the promised land.

ARNON [Ār' nōn] Place-name meaning “rushing river” or “river flooded with berries.” River forming border of Moab and Amorites (Num. 21:13). Sihon, the Amorite king, ruled from the Arnon to the Jabbok (Num. 21:24), land which Israel took under Moses. The Arnon then served as the southern limit of territory Israel took east of the Jordan River (Deut. 3:8). It became the southern border of the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:16). The king of the Ammonites tried to retake the Arnon in Jephthah's day, but God's Spirit led Jephthah to victory (Judg. 11:12-33). Hazael, king of Damascus, retook the territory from Jehu of Israel (841-814 B.C.). Isaiah pictured Moab as scattered baby birds trying to cross the Arnon (16:2). Jeremiah called for a messenger to announce Moab's defeat by the Arnon (48:20). Near the Dead Sea, the Arnon is large and deep, one of Palestine's impressive sights. The wide river valley rises 1,700 feet to the top of the cliffs above. The modern name is Wadi-el-Mojib.

AROD [Ā' rōd] or ARODI Personal name meaning “humpbacked.” Arodi (Gen. 46:16) or Arod (Num. 26:17) was son of Gad and grandson of Jacob. He was the original ancestor of the Arodite clan.

AROER [Ā-rō' er] Place-name meaning “juniper.” 1. City on north rim of Arnon Gorge east of Dead Sea on southern boundary of territory Israel claimed east of the Jordan River (Josh. 13:9). It figured in territorial claims of Reuben (Josh. 13:16), though the tribe of Gad originally built it (Num. 32:34; cp. Deut. 3:12). Sihon, king of the Amorites, ruled it prior to Israel's conquest (Deut. 4:48; Josh. 12:2). Israel claimed a 300-year history in the area (Judg. 11:26). Jehu's sins brought God's punishment on Israel, including the loss of Aroer to Hazael of Damascus (about 840 B.C.) (2 Kings 10:33; cp. Isa. 17:2). Jeremiah asked Aroer to witness God's coming judgment on Moab (Jer. 48:19). The Moabites had gained control of Aroer under King Mesha, as his inscription on the Moabite Stone witnesses (about 850 B.C.). Spanish excavations show Aroer to have been more of a border fortress than a major city. It is located at Khirbet Arair two-and-one-half miles east of the highway along the Arnon River. 2. City of the tribe of Gad (Josh. 13:25) near Rabbah, capital of the Ammonites. This may be the Aroer where Jephthah defeated the Ammonites (Judg. 11:33). 3. Town in southern Judah about 12 miles southeast of Beersheba with whose leaders David divided the spoil of battle (1 Sam. 30:28). This is located at modern Khirbet Arara. The text of Josh. 15:22 may have originally read “Aroer.” Two of David's captains hailed from Aroer (1 Chron. 11:44).

ARPACHSHAD [Ār-pāk' shād] or ARPHAXAD (NT) Third son of Shem, son of Noah, and ancestor of the Hebrew people (Gen. 10:22). He was born two years after the flood and was the grandfather of Eber. In the NT the name “Arphaxad” appears in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:36). Luke seems to identify Arphaxad as the great-grandfather, rather than the grandfather, of Eber. This suggests the possibility that the genealogy in Gen. 10 was not intended to be exhaustively complete.

ARPAD [Ār' pad] or ARPHAD City-state in northern Syria closely identified with Hamath. The Rabshakeh, representing Sennacherib, Assyria's king, taunted the people of Judah in 701 B.C. (2Kings 18:17-25; 19:13). He reminded the people walled up in Jerusalem that the gods of Arpad did not save it from Sennacherib. Isaiah mimicked such statements, saying Assyria was only a rod of Yahweh's anger and would soon face punishment for its pride (Isa. 10:5-19). Jeremiah noted Arpad's confusion as he pronounced doom on Damascus (Jer. 49:23). Arpad is modern Tell Erfad, about 25 miles north of Aleppo. Assyrian kings Adad-nirari (806 B.C.), Ashurninari (754 B.C.), Tiglath-pileser (740 B.C.), and Sargon (720 B.C.) all mention victories over Arpad.

ARTAXERXES [Ār-tā-zēr'k' sēz] Persian royal name meaning "kingdom of righteousness," belonging to four Persian rulers and forming a major piece of evidence in dating Ezra and Nehemiah. 1. Son of Xerxes I, Artaxerxes I ruled Persia from 465 to 424 B.C. He was called Longimanus or "longhanded." Most scholars place Ezra's trip to Jerusalem in the seventh year of his reign or 458 B.C. (Ezra 7:7). He had already received complaints from the inhabitants of Palestine who wanted to stop the returned exiles from rebuilding and had stopped the Jewish builders (Ezra 4:7-24). The temple had been completed under Darius II (522-486) and thus before Artaxerxes (Ezra 6:15). Artaxerxes supported Ezra's work (Ezra 7:6-26). Nehemiah served as cupbearer to Artaxerxes (Neh. 2:1), and the king proved sensitive to Nehemiah's mood (Neh. 2:2). He granted Nehemiah's request to go to Judah (Neh. 2:5-6), making him governor of Judah (Neh. 5:14). 2. Artaxerxes II ruled Persia 404 to 359 B.C. Some Bible students identify him as ruler under whom Ezra worked. 3. Artaxerxes III ruled 358-337 B.C. 4. Name assumed by Arses, who ruled Persia 337-336 B.C. See Ezra; Nehemiah; Persia.

ARTEMAS [Ār' tō-mās] Personal name probably shortened from Artemidoros, meaning "gift of Artemis." If this is the case, then the parents worshiped the Greek goddess Artemis. Paul promised to send Artemas or Tychicus to Titus, so Titus could join Paul in Nicopolis (Titus 3:12). Artemas would apparently take over Titus' pastoral duties in Crete. Tradition says Artemas became bishop of Lystra.

ARTEMIS [Ār' tē-mīs] Name for the Greek goddess of the moon, the daughter of Zeus and Leto, whose worship was threatened by Paul's preaching of the gospel. Artemis was the goddess who watched over nature for both humans and animals. She was the patron deity of wild animals, protecting them from ruthless treatment and at the same time regulating the rules of hunting activities for humans. She was considered the great mother image and gave fertility to humankind. In the Greek homeland she was usually portrayed by the statues as a young, attractive virgin, wearing a short tunic and having her hair pulled back on her head. In Ephesus and western Asia Minor, she was portrayed as a more mature woman. Her robe is draped in such a way as to expose her bosom, which is covered with multiple breasts, depicting her gift of fertility and nurture. Often standing beside her is a fawn or stag on each side representing her relation to the animal world. The official local statue was carefully housed in a temple honoring Artemis.

The most famous statue was located in the city of Ephesus, the official “temple keeper” for Artemis. Artemis was the chief deity of Ephesus, and her temple was one of the Seven Wonders of the ancient world. The temple ceremonies were carried out by priests who were eunuchs and priestesses who were virgins. They conducted the daily ceremonies caring for the deity and for the gifts brought by worshipers, as well as an annual festival on May 25, when numerous statues of the goddess were carried in procession to the amphitheater in Ephesus for a celebration of music, dancing, and drama. This could be the background of the outcry in Acts 19:28: “Great is Artemis of the Ephesians.”

The statues of the goddess, often miniature models of the temple with an image of the goddess within, were sold widely. In Acts, a silversmith named Demetrius rallied support against Paul's preaching of the gospel for fear that it might damage his business selling statues.

Diana was a Roman deity somewhat similar to the more popular Artemis. As the Roman and Greek divinities met, she was quickly identified with Artemis. See Ephesus.

ARUBBOTH [Ā·rūb' bōth] City name meaning “smoke hole” or “chimney.” One of Solomon's provincial officials made headquarters there and administered over Sochoh and the land of Hopher (1 Kings 4:10). This would be territory belonging to the clan of Hopher of the tribe of Manasseh in the northern part of the Plain of Sharon, southwest of Megiddo and southeast of Dor. Arubboth is modern Arabbah, nine miles north of Samaria.

Artemis (Diana), patron goddess of Ephesus, covered with eggs (or breasts) as symbols of fertility.

ARUMAH [Ā-rū' māh] Place-name meaning “exalted” or “height.” Abimelech, the judge, lived there while he fought to control Shechem (Judg. 9:41). It may be modern Khirbet el-Ormah south of Shechem.

ARVAD [Ār' vād], ARVADITE Place-name of unknown meaning and persons from that place. It provided sailors and soldiers for Tyre (Ezek. 27:8,11). It was probably the rocky island called Rouad today, off the coast of Syria. It is related to Canaan in the family of nations (Gen. 10:18).

ARZA [Ār' zā] Personal name meaning “woodworm” or “earthiness.” Steward in the house of King Elah (886-885 B.C.) in Tirzah. The king was drunk in Arza's house when Zimri killed Elah (1 Kings 16:8-10).

ASA [Ā' sá] Personal name meaning “doctor” or “healing.” 1. Son and successor of Abijam as king of Judah (1 Kings 15:8). He reigned for 41 years (913-873 B.C.). A pious man, he instituted several reforms to remove foreign gods and foreign religious practices from the land, even removing his mother from political power (1 Kings 15:13). After his death, apparently from natural causes, he was succeeded by his son Jehoshaphat or Josaphat (KJV). The prophet Hanani rebuked Asa (2 Chron. 16:7) for relying on the king of Syria rather than on the Lord (1 Kings 15:17-20). The chronicler further reported that when Asa developed a disease in his feet, he relied on physicians rather than on the Lord (2 Chron. 16:12). Matthew 1:7-8 lists Asa among Jesus' ancestors. See Chronology of the Biblical Period; Israel. 2. Levite who returned from the exile to Jerusalem. He was the head of a family in the villages of the Netophathites near Jerusalem (1 Chron. 9:16).

ASAHHEL [Ās' á-hèl] Personal name meaning “God acted” or “God made.” 1. Brother of Joab and Abishai, David's nephew (2 Sam. 2:18). He was a commander in David's army (2 Sam. 23:24). He was a fleet-footed individual who pursued Abner as the latter fled following his defeat at Gibeon. Unable to dissuade Asahel from pursuing him, Abner slew him. That act led at last to the murder of Abner by Asahel's brother Joab (2 Sam. 3:27-30). 2. Levite during the reign of Jehoshaphat, Asa's son. Asahel was sent out along with several princes, other Levites, and priests to teach the people of Judah the book of the law of God (2 Chron. 17:8). 3. A Levite under Hezekiah, the king of Judah following Ahaz. Asahel, along with 10 others, assisted the chief officers in charge of contributions, tithes, and dedicated objects. Asahel's title was that of overseer. 4. Father of Jonathan who along with Jahaziah opposed Ezra's direction for the men of Judah to separate themselves from the foreign wives they had married. Ezra indicated they had sinned in marrying foreign women (Ezra 10:15).

ASAHIAH [Ās-ā-hī' ah] or ASAI AH [Ā-sai' āh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh made.” 1. Servant of King Josiah sent with others to Huldah, the prophet, to determine the meaning of the book of the Law found in the temple about 624 B.C. 2. Leader of the tribe of Simeon who helped drive out the people of Ham from pastures of Gedor when Hezekiah was king of Judah (715-686 B.C.). See Gedor. 3. Musical Levite in line of Merari (1 Chron. 6:30). He is apparently the same as the chief of the sons of Merari, who led 220 of his clan in helping bring the ark of the covenant from the house of Obed-edom to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15). 4. Leader of clans from Shiloh who returned from Babylonian exile about 537 B.C. (1 Chron. 9:5).

ASAPH [Ā' sāph] Personal name meaning “he collected.” 1. Father of court official under King Hezekiah (715-686 B.C.), who in sadness reported the threats of Assyria to the king (2 Kings 18). 2. Levite musician that David appointed to serve in the tabernacle until the temple was completed (1 Chron. 6:39). Asaph was the father of the clan of temple musicians who served through the history of the temple. A member of the clan was among the first to return from exile in 537 B.C. (1 Chron. 9:15). Part of the musical responsibility included sounding the cymbal (1 Chron. 15:19). David established the tradition of delivering psalms to Asaph for the temple singers to sing (1 Chron. 16:7). Asaph and the singers ministered daily (1 Chron. 16:37). Their musical service could be called “prophesying” (1 Chron. 25:1-7). Descendants of Asaph delivered prophetic messages under God's Spirit (2 Chron. 20:14-19). Later generations sang the songs of Asaph “the seer” (2 Chron. 29:30). Psalms 50 and 73-83 are titled “Psalms of Asaph” or similar titles. This may refer to authorship, the singers who used the Psalms in worship, or to a special collection of psalms. See Psalms, Book of.

ASAREL [Ā-sā' rēl] or ASAREEL (KJV) Personal name meaning “God has sworn” or “God rejoiced.” A member of tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:16).

ASARELAH [Ās-ā-rē' lāh] KJV, NIV, NRSV spelling of Asharelah (NASB, RSV, TEV) in 1 Chron. 25:2. This appears to be a variant of Jesharelah or Jesarelah in 1 Chron. 25:14. The person is a descendant or son of Asaph among the temple singers.

ASCENSION Movement or departure from the lower to the higher with reference to spatial location. Both OT and NT record the events of human ascension in the lives of Enoch (Gen. 5:24), Elijah (2 Kings 2:1-2), and most importantly, Jesus Christ (Acts 1:9). The ascension concluded the earthly ministry of Jesus, allowing eyewitnesses to see both the resurrected Christ on earth and the victorious, eternal Christ returning to heaven to minister at the right hand of the Father.

The concept of ascension is secured in the return of the Son of Man to God (Acts 2:34; Rom. 10:6; Eph. 4:8-10). Christ, the preexistent Logos (John 1:1-5), bridges the gulf between the human and divine in His incarnation, and in the ascension Jesus reveals the Christian's common fatherhood under God and the brotherhood of the Son (John 20:17).

In His ascension Jesus returns to become the believer's advocate at the right hand of the Father (Rom. 8:34; 1 John 2:1; Heb. 7:25). Additionally, the ascension reminds believers of Christ's finished work of sacrifice (Heb. 10:9-18). As the King-Priest of His people, Jesus returns to God's throne fully God and fully man, finished with the work of His substitutionary atonement, and able to exercise His priestly office as the Mediator between God and man.

The return of the Son of Man to heaven (1) secures the resurrection of every believer to God (John 14:2); (2) sends the Holy Spirit to the church (John 16:7); (3) comforts those persecuted unto death (Acts 7:54-60); and (4) grants the strength to persevere for His glory (Col. 3:1-4).

Most importantly, the ascension exalted Christ above all creation (Phil. 2:9), which contrasts with His humbling incarnation and death on the cross (descent). The ascension is God's manifest act of exalting Jesus to the highest position in the universe, declaring Him Lord over everything that exists and all that happens (Phil. 2:9-11). In the ascension Jesus defeated death forever and made eternal life possible (Heb. 6:19-20). Having finished His work, the ascension demonstrates the nature of His authority, thus calling every human to bow in worship and obedience to the sovereign ascended one (Phil. 2:10).

ASCENTS, SONG OF See Degrees, Song of.

ASENATH [Ās' ē-nāth] Egyptian name meaning “Belonging to Neith” (a goddess). Wife of Joseph and daughter of a priest in Egyptian temple at On or Heliopolis. Asenath was Pharaoh's present to Joseph (Gen. 41:45). She was mother of Ephraim and Manasseh (Gen. 41:50-51). See Potipherah.

ASER (KJV, Luke 2:36; Rev. 7:6) See Asher.

ASH KJV in Isa. 44:14. Some manuscripts of the Hebrew text have the word for cedar, which is very similar to the word found in the text translated by the KJV. Modern versions differ. The word is translated fir (NASB), pine (NIV), cedar (NRSV, REB), and laurel tree (TEV).

ASHAN [Ā' shān] Place-name meaning “smoke.” City in western hills of tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:42) given to tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:7). The Aaronic priests claimed Ashan as one of their cities (1 Chron. 6:59; called Ain in Josh. 21:16). Ashan was located at modern Khirbet Asan just northwest of Beersheba. See Borashan.

ASHARELAH [Āsh-ā-rē' lāh] See Asarelah.

ASHBEA [Āsh-bē' ā] KJV, TEV translation. NIV, NASB, NRSV read Beth-ashbea. See Beth-ashbea.

ASHBEL [Āsh' bēl], ASHBELITES Personal name meaning “having a long upper lip.” Son of Benjamin, grandson of Jacob, and original ancestor of Ashbelite clan (Gen. 46:21).

ASHCHENAZ [Āsh' kə-nāz] or ASHKENAZ Personal and national name given two spellings in KJV but spelled Ashkenaz in modern translations. A son of Gomer (Gen. 10:3) and original ancestor of people called kingdom of Ashkenaz (Jer. 51:27). Usually identified with Scythians. See Scythians.

ASHDOD [Ash' dōd] One of five principal cities of the Philistines, where the Philistines defeated Israel and captured the ark of the covenant.

Ashdod was 10 miles north of Ashkelon and two and a half miles east of the Mediterranean Sea on the Philistine plain. It was the northernmost city of the Philistine Pentapolis recorded in Josh. 13:3. Ashdod occurs in written history first in the Late Bronze period where it is mentioned in the trade documents of the Ras Shamra tablets discovered at Ugarit (ancient trade center near the Mediterranean coast in northern Syria). Ashdod is described as a manufacturer and exporter of textiles, specifically purple wool. The city name also occurs in the Egyptian list of names, Onomasticon of Amanope (263).

Old Testament In the OT Ashdod was a place where some of the Anakim remained during the time of Joshua (Josh. 11:22). As one of the five chief cities of the Philistines, it stood yet to be possessed by Joshua (Josh. 13:3), who allocated it to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:46-47). David subdued the Philistines, implicitly including Ashdod (2 Sam. 5:25; 8:1), but it was not described as under Israel's control until Uzziah (783-742 B.C.) captured it (2 Chron. 26:8). Perhaps the most infamous contact between Ashdod and Israel is reported in 1 Sam. 4-6 when the Philistines defeated the army of Israel in battle, killed the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, and captured the ark of the covenant. See Anak, Anakim.

Although the city was captured by Uzziah, it did not remain long under Judah's control and regained enough strength to revolt from Sargon II in 711 B.C. The Assyrians were able quickly to subdue the Philistines, and they remained under Assyrian control until captured by the Egyptian Pharaoh Psammetichus I (664-610) after a 29-year siege as reported by Herodotus. Under Nebuchadnezzar (604-562 B.C.), Babylon soon captured this territory and took the king of Ashdod prisoner.

The prophets of Israel spoke about the city of Ashdod in various military, political and moral contexts (Neh. 13:23-24; Isa. 20:1-6; Jer. 25:20; Amos 1:8; Zech. 9:6). Throughout the Persian period the city remained a threat to Israel.

Extrabiblical Sources In the Greek period Ashdod was known as Azotus and was a flourishing city until being captured by Israel during the Maccabean period. Judas Maccabeus destroyed altars and images in Ashdod (1 Macc. 5:68), and Jonathan later burned the temple of Dagon, those who took refuge there, and ultimately the city itself (1 Macc. 10:84-87).

Josephus reported that Pompey separated Ashdod from Israel after his victory (63 B.C.), Gabinius rebuilt the city, and it was joined to the province of Syria. Augustus granted it to Herod the Great. Herod left it to his sister Salome, who in turn willed it to Julia, the wife of Augustus. Its greatness as a city ended with the Roman destruction of A.D. 67, although it was occupied at least through the sixth century.

Archaeological Evidence The major archaeological work on Ashdod was done from 1962 to 1972 under the direction of D. N. Freedman and others. Some evidence remains from Chalcolithic and Early Bronze times, but the major remains date from Middle Bronze and later including a walled city dating around 1625 B.C. A major destruction of the city was indicated by a three-foot layer of ash and debris dating about 1250 B.C. Two extensive Philistine occupation levels date from the 12th and 11th centuries B.C. The Iron Age showed a flourishing community, and an Iron II temple yielded many cultic artifacts.

George W. Knight

ASHDOTH-PISGAH [Āsh' dōth-Pis gah] KJV for “slopes of Pisgah” (Deut. 3:17; Josh. 12:3; 13:20). See Pisgah.

ASHER [Āsh' ʔr] or ASER (NT Gk.), ASHERITES Personal, place, and tribal name meaning “fortune,” “happiness.” 1. Eighth son of Jacob, born of Zilpah, the concubine (Gen. 30:13). His four sons and one daughter began the tribe of Asher (Gen. 46:17). Jacob's blessing said Asher would have rich food that he would give a king (Gen. 49:20), perhaps suggesting a period when the tribe would serve a foreign king. 2. The tribe of Asher numbered 53,400 in the wilderness (Num. 26:47), having grown from 41,500 (Num.

1:41). They formed part of the rear guard in the wilderness marches (Num. 10:25-28). Asher's territorial allotment was in Phoenicia in the far northwest reaching to Tyre and Sidon on the Mediterranean coast (Josh. 19:24-31). They could not drive out the Canaanites and had to live among them (Judg. 1:31 -32). When Deborah summoned the tribes to action, Asher did not respond but “continued on the sea shore” (Judg. 5:17 KJV). Apparently Asher was working for the Canaanites in the ports of the Mediterranean. Moses' blessing gives another view of Asher, calling the tribe “most blessed,” “favorite of his brothers,” and strong (Deut. 33:24-25 NRSV). Asher produced no judge in the book of Judges; nor did it have a tribal leader in the chronicler's list (1 Chron. 27:16-22). Asher did provide troops for Gideon (Judg. 6:35; 7:23) and 40,000 for David at Hebron (1 Chron. 12:36). Some people from Asher made the pilgrimage to Jerusalem to keep Hezekiah's Passover (2 Chron. 30:11). Perhaps Asher's greatest hero was Anna, the prophetess who bore witness to the baby Jesus (Luke 2:36-38). Twelve thousand from Asher are among the 144,000 sealed out of great tribulation to be fed by the Lamb (Rev. 7). 3. Apparently a border town in Manasseh (Josh. 17:7) but possibly a reference to the border joining the tribal territories of Manasseh and Asher. See Tribes of Israel.

ASHERAH [Ā·shêr' rāh], ASHERIM (pl.) or

ASHEROTH (pl.) Fertility goddess, the mother of Baal, whose worship was concentrated in Syria and Canaan and the wooden object that represented her. The KJV translated Asherah “grove” and the proper noun “Ashtaroth.”

The writers of the OT referred to the image of Asherah as well as to “prophets” belonging to her and to vessels used in her worship (1 Kings 15:13; 18:19; 2 Kings 21:7; 23:4; 2 Chron. 15:16). Over half of the OT references to Asherah can be found in the books of Kings and Chronicles. Deuteronomy 7:5; 12:3 instructed the Israelites to cut down and burn up the Asherim (plural form of Asherah). Deuteronomy 16:21 prohibited the planting of a tree as an “Asherah.”

The writers of the OT did not provide an actual description of an “Asherah” or the origin of the worship of Asherah. Other religious writings from the ancient Near East indicate that “Asherah” was the Hebrew name for an Amorite or Canaanite goddess who was worshiped in various parts of the ancient Near East. The biblical writers sometimes did not make a clear distinction between references to Asherah as a goddess and as an object of worship. According to ancient mythology, Asherah, the mother goddess, was the wife of El and mother of 70 gods, of whom Baal was the most famous. Asherah was the fertility goddess of the Phoenicians and Canaanites. She was called “Lady Asherah of the Sea.” See Canaan; Gods, Pagan.

Scholars who have studied artwork from the ancient Near East have suggested that some figures in drawings could be representations of the fertility goddess Asherah. Drawings of plain and carved poles, staffs, a cross, a double ax, a tree, a tree stump, a headdress for a priest, and several wooden images could be illustrations of an Asherah. Passages such as 2 Kings 13:6; 17:16; 18:4; 21:3; and 23:6,15 have been interpreted as a definition of an Asherah as a wooden object constructed or destroyed by man. The object stood upright and was used in the worship of a goddess of the same name.

The Asherah existed in both the Southern and Northern Kingdoms of Israel. Jezebel of Tyre apparently installed Asherah worship in the north when she married King Ahab (1 Kings 18:18-19). The principle cities in which the objects were located were Samaria, Bethel, and Jerusalem. According to 1 Kings 14:23 (NASB) the people “built for themselves high places, and sacred pillars and Asherim (plural) on every high hill and beneath every luxuriant tree.” See Baal; Idol.

James Newell

ASHES Often associated with sacrifices, mourning, and fasting. Grief, humiliation, and repentance were expressed by placing ashes on the head or by sitting in ashes. Dirt, sackcloth, fasting, the tearing of clothing, and ashes visibly demonstrated the person's emotions. At times the ashes that remained from a sacrifice were kept and used for ritual purification. They also symbolized the results of divine destruction. The use of ashes to express grief and repentance continued into the NT period. Their use in purification rites is contrasted with the cleansing brought by Christ's blood. They also represent the devastating effect of God's wrath on Sodom and Gomorrah (2 Pet. 2:6).

Scott Langston

ASHHUR [Āsh' hūr] Modern translation spelling of Ashur (KJV, TEV). Personal name meaning “to be black,” or “belonging to Ishara.” Son of Hazron, born after his father's death (1 Chron. 2:24). He had two wives, each of whom bore him children (1 Chron. 4:5-7). His title, “Father of Tekoa,” may indicate he founded the city later famous for native son Amos, the prophet. Some Bible students understand Caleb to be Ashhur's father in 1 Chron. 2:24 (TEV, RSV, but not NRSV). See Tekoa.

ASHIMA [Āsh' mā] Syrian god made and worshiped in Hamath (2 Kings 17:30). The Hebrew word ‘asham means “guilt.” Hebrew writers may have deliberately written a word associated with guilt instead of the name of the god or goddess. Hamath's goddess may have been Asherah. Amos 8:14 says Israel swore by or made oaths by the “sin” (KJV) “guilt” (NASB) or “shame” of Samaria. REB, CEV, and NRSV read, “Ashimah of Samaria” (NIV footnote). Samaria worshiped falsely. They may have incorporated the god of Hamath into their worship. The exilic Elephantine papyri from a Jewish community in Egypt mention an “Ashim-bethel” who may have been worshiped by Egyptian Jews as a counterpart to Yahweh. See Asherah; Hamath.

ASHKELON [Āsh' kə lōn] One of five principal cities of the Philistines (Pentapolis), located on the Mediterranean coast on the trade route, Via Maris, and designated for Judah in the conquest. Ashkelon was a Mediterranean coastal city 12 miles north of Gaza and 10 miles south of Ashdod. It is the only Philistine city directly on the seacoast. Its history extends into the Neolithic Period. The economic importance came from both its port and its location on the trade route, the Via Maris.

The location in southern Palestine put Ashkelon under considerable Egyptian influence throughout much of its history. The first mention of the city was in the nineteenth century B.C. Execration Texts, where a curse on the ruler and his supporters was written on pottery, then smashed, symbolizing breaking his power. A 15th century B.C. papyrus speaks of Ashkelon's loyalty to Egypt, and the 14th century Amarna Letters confirm that relationship with the ruler Widia claiming submission to the Pharaoh, although the ruler of Jerusalem claimed that Ashkelon had given supplies to the 'Apiru. In this period the goddess Astarte was worshiped here by the Canaanites. The city revolted from Egypt and was subsequently sacked by Rameses II (1282 B.C.). Later that same century Pharaoh Merneptah captured the city.

The OT record concerns the city after it had come under Philistine control. It was ruled by a ruler or seren supported by a military aristocracy. Joshua had not taken Ashkelon in the conquest of the land (Josh. 13:3), but it was included in the territory designated for Judah. It appears that Judah did take the city (Judg. 1:18), but it belonged to the Philistines in the Samson account (Judg. 14:19) and under Saul and David (1 Sam. 6:17; 2 Sam. 1:20). Ashkelon subsequently was independent or under the control of Assyria, Egypt, Babylon, and Tyre. Amos 1:8 and Jer. 47:5,7 refer to Ashkelon and her evils. With the coming of the Greeks, Ashkelon became a Hellenistic center of culture and learning. During the Maccabean Period the city flourished and apparently did not have hostilities with the Jews (1 Macc. 10:36; 11:60). In fact, many Jews lived there. Rome granted the status "free allied city" in 104 B.C. A tradition was known in Christian circles that Herod the Great, the son of a temple slave of Apollo, was born in Ashkelon. Herod did have family and friends there and gave the city some beautiful buildings, built a palace there, and left the city to his sister, Salome, at his death. The city was attacked by the Jews in the first Roman Revolt (A.D. 66) but survived and was faithful to Rome.

George W. Knight

ASHKENAZ See Ashchenaz; Scythians.

ASHNAH [Āsh' nāh] Place-name. 1. City in the valley of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:33), possibly modern Aslin. 2. City in the valley or shephelah of Judah (Josh. 15:43), possibly modern Idna, about eight miles northwest of Hebron.

ASHPENAZ [Āsh' pēn āz] Chief eunuch guarding the family of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon (605-562 B.C.) (Dan. 1:3). He administered the diet and lifestyle of Daniel and his three friends, giving them new Babylonian names (Dan. 1:7). Daniel developed a close, loving relationship with him.

ASHRIEL [Āsh' rī ēl] (KJV) See Asriel.

ASHTAROTH [Āsh' tarōth] is the plural form of Ashtoreth, a Canaanite goddess of fertility, love, and war and the daughter of the god El and the goddess Asherah. 1. OT uses the plural form, Ashtaroth, more than the singular form, Ashtoreth. The only references to Ashtoreth come in 1 Kings 11:5,33; 2 Kings 23:13. The Hebrew scribes replaced the vowels of the name 'Ashtart or 'Ashteret with the vowels from the Hebrew word for shame, boshet, to bring dishonor to the memory of the goddess. This exchanging of vowels formed the word Ashtoreth. The Greek form of the name is Astarte.

In Canaanite mythology she appears to be the sister of the goddess Anath and the spouse of the god Baal. Anath also was the spouse of Baal, as well as the goddess of love and war. Some confusion, therefore, exists regarding Ashtaroth's relationship to Anath. Anath and Ashtaroth may have referred to the same goddess, or they may have been two separate deities. Among the people of Palestine Ashtaroth may have taken over Anath's role. The Egyptians gave the title "Lady of Heaven" to Astarte, Anath, and another goddess, Qudshu. In Moab, Astarte was the spouse of the major god, Chemosh. The Babylonians and Assyrians called her Ashtar and worshiped her as goddess of fertility and love. The people of the ancient Near East during the Hellenistic and Roman periods referred to her as AphroditeVenus.

Apparently the word "ashtaroth" at one time meant "womb" or "that which comes from the womb." This word, "ashtaroth," appears in Deut.

7:13 and 28:4,18,51 to describe the young of the flock. This use may demonstrate the link between the goddess Ashtaroth and fertility.

The biblical writers often coupled Baal with Ashtaroth as a designation of pagan worship (Judg. 2:13; 10:6; 1 Sam. 7:3-4; 12:10). In addition to her worship by the Canaanites, the OT mentions the people of Sidon (1 Kings 11:5) and the Philistines (1 Sam. 31:10) as reverencing her. At Beth-shan, the Philistines erected a temple to Ashtaroth (1 Sam. 31:10). The reference to the Queen of Heaven (Jer. 7:18) may have Ashtaroth in mind, but this is uncertain. The Israelites worshiped her, and the biblical writers specifically refer to Solomon's leadership in promoting the worship of Ashtaroth (1 Kings 11:5). She was only one of many foreign deities revered by the Israelites. Josiah destroyed the shrines built to her (2 Kings 23:13).

2. Egyptian documents dating from the 18th century B.C. onward refer to a city called Ashtartu or Ashtarot in the region of Bashan. Joshua 21:27 mentions a city with the name Beeshterah in Bashan, while a man named Uzzia is called an Ashterathite (1 Chron. 11:44). Og, king of Bashan, reigned in the city of Ashtaroth (Deut. 1:4; Josh. 9:10; 12:4, 13:12,31). The sons of Machir received it as a part of their inheritance in the land (Josh. 13:31; 1 Chron. 6:71).

Once the city is called Ashteroth-karnaim (Gen. 14:5) or “Ashtaroth of the two horns.” A 17th-century B.C. stone mold for making bronze figurines of Astarte was uncovered at Nahariyah. She was represented as a woman with two horns on her head. Many other clay figurines of Astarte have been found at sites throughout Palestine. The city's name, Ashtaroth, may reflect that she was worshiped by the citizens of this settlement.

The city is located at modern Tel Ashtarah about 20 miles east of the Sea of Galilee. It was located on a major branch of the Via Maris, or Way of the Sea and in the King's Highway, the major highway for traffic east of the Jordan.

Scott Langsten

ASHTEROTH KARNAIM [Āsh' tərōth Kār' na'im] See Ashtaroth.

ASHTORETH [Ash' tó-réth] See Ashtaroth.

ASHUR (KJV) See Ashhur.

ASHURBANIPAL [Ä' shūr-bān' i-pāl] Assyria's last great king who is identified in Ezra 4:10 as the king of Assyria who captured Susa, Elam, and other nations and settled their citizens in Samaria.

The son of a king, Esarhaddon, he was the heir apparent from about 673 B.C. He actually ruled from 668 to 629 B.C. Ashurbanipal's legacy is his famous library that contained more than 20,000 clay tablets. The library was located in the Assyrian capital of Nineveh and was discovered in 1853. Ashurbanipal's copyists not only transcribed Assyrian books but also preserved Sumerian and Akkadian literature. Most of what we know about the Assyrian Empire is derived from his library.

Ashurbanipal was also known by the name Osnapper and appears in the KJV as Asnapper. His name appears only once in the Bible (Ezra 4:10), the only report of such a settlement in Samaria. The Greeks called him Sardanapalus. His reign was contemporary with the reigns of Manasseh, Amon, and Josiah, Kings of Judah. See Assyria; Osnapper.

M. Stephen Davis

Ashurbanipal (668-629 B.C.) was ruler of Assyria during its years of decline. This relief is from an earlier period in Assyrian history—the reign of Ashurnasirpal II (883-859).

ASHURITE [Ash' ūr-it] or ASHURI (NIV) Apparently a tribe or clan over which Ishbosheth, Saul's son, ruled (2 Sam. 2:9). The textual tradition among the earliest translations is not clear here with some evidence that the tribe of Asher or the city-state of Geshur is meant. In KJV of Ezek. 27:6 Ashurites made “benches of ivory” for Tyre. Most modern translations use a different division of words in the Hebrew text and see a type of wood used: boxwood (NASB), cypress (NIV), pine (TEV, RSV), cedar (Jerusalem). If people from Ashur are meant in either of the original texts, we know nothing else about them.

ASHVATH [Ash' vāth] Personal name meaning “that which has been worked” (as iron). Descendant of Asher (1 Chron. 7:33).

ASIA New Testament refers to a Roman province on the west of Asia Minor whose capital was Ephesus. The Roman province of Asia comprised generally the southwest portion of Anatolia. Its first capital was Pergamum, but the capital was later changed to Ephesus. Asia residents were in Jerusalem at Pentecost (Acts 2:9). Paul the apostle traveled and preached extensively in Asia (Acts 19:10,22), especially in the neighborhood of Ephesus, but God forbade him to preach there prior to his Macedonian call (Acts 16:6). Men of Asia led to Paul's arrest in Jerusalem (Acts 21:27). The first letter from Peter was addressed to Christians in Asia. Asia was the location of the seven churches to which the book of Revelation was addressed. Asia was known for its worship of Artemis (Acts 19:27). See Rome and the Roman Empire. in the Apostle Paul's missionary journeys, several of the churches receiving epistles. Among those listed are the "Seven Cities" of the Revelation.

ASIA MINOR, CITIES OF Cities located on the Anatolian peninsula (modern-day Turkey). Cities of Asia Minor important to the NT accounts included Alexandria, Troas, Assos, Ephesus, Miletus, Patara, Smyrna, Pergamum, Sardis, Thyatira, Philadelphia, Laodicea, Colossae, Attalia, Antioch, Iconium, Lystra, Derbe, and Tarsus. The cities figured prominently

Geography and History The geography of Asia Minor greatly influenced the development of settlements in the area. The region can be described as the point where "East meets West," linking the continent of Europe with the Near East. The peninsula is a high plateau surrounded by steep mountain ranges. The mountains isolate Asia Minor from much of the outside world. Narrow passes through the mountains connect the interior with the Near East. Deep ravines cut by numerous and often navigable rivers linked the cities of the plateau with the western coastline. Cities developed in locales vital to trade and commerce, such as near the mouths of rivers and mountain passes.

The history of Asia Minor reflects the region's unstable position between the east and west. The Hittite Empire thrived in the eastern portion of the peninsula during the second millennium B.C. (before 1000). Exposed on the west to the Aegean Sea, the coastal area became the home to numerous Greek colonies beginning about 1200 B.C. Centered in Sardis, the Lydian Empire began to expand about 600 B.C. but was soon conquered by the Persians. Control passed to Alexander the Great about 333 B.C. Upon his death Asia Minor fell under the rule of the Seleucids. Beginning about 200 B.C., Roman control of the peninsula increased until all of Anatolia was absorbed into the Roman provincial system. At this time "Asia" designated the provinces of only western Anatolia. Galatia, Cappadocia, and Cilicia comprised the eastern provinces, while Bitnia and Pontus bordered the Black Sea to the north. The Anatolian peninsula was probably first termed "Asia Minor" after A.D. 400.

Coastal Cities The name Troas described both the northwest region of Asia Minor as well as the port city. Located 10 miles south of the site of ancient Troy, Alexandria Troas was founded as a Roman colony during the period of Augustus and served as a primary port for trade passing between Asia Minor and Macedonia. Remains of the ruined city wall and a bath complex of the second century A.D. are still visible. As with many ancient ports, the once busy harbor became filled with silt and became unusable. Paul once set sail from Troas to Greece in response to his vision of the “Macedonian Man” (Acts 16:11). On his third journey Paul's companions embarked on a ship sailing toward the port of Assos, 20 miles south (Acts 20:13). A bustling port city surrounded by a wall dating to the fourth century B.C., Assos' temple of Athena sat high on the acropolis overlooking the harbor. At Assos, Paul joined the ship carrying Luke and several others after journeying on foot from Troas.

Ephesus served as the primary trading center of all Asia Minor. The large port facility provided ample anchorage for ships carrying goods east from Greece and Italy, as well as for those which took to Rome the wares brought overland from Asia and the Far East. A well-laid road linked the post facilities at Ephesus with Tarsus to the east. The road approached the city from the southeast, entering a monumental gateway near the public baths. Remains of the city's immense theater, capable of seating 24,000 spectators, stand today as a reminder of the great crowd which in protest to Paul filled the seats and for several hours shouted, “Great is Diana of the Ephesians!” (Acts 19:34). The city's temple honoring Diana was one of the Seven Wonders of the World. Known as the Artemision to the Greeks, the temple possessed 127 pillars 60 feet high which held up the roof of the largest all-marble structure in the Hellenistic world. The city's harbor, built around the outlet of the Cayster River, gradually filled with silt; and the site now lies some six miles away from the sea. As the chief port and city of Asia, Paul's choice of Ephesus as a center of ministry provided the perfect base from which the Gospel could be spread throughout the Roman world.

During the early period of Greek colonization, Miletus exercised extensive control over southwestern Anatolia. As a major sea power, the city remained independent throughout the time of Lydian rule in the region. The city was able to withstand attempted incursions by the Persians until 494 B.C. Once a wealthy port for the wool industry, Miletus was a city of little significance during the NT era (Acts 20:15).

*Trajan's Temple in Pergamum. Trajan was Emperor of Rome A.D. 98-117.
The Temple was built by his successor Hadrian.*

Acts 21 recounts how Paul sailed for Tyre from Patara. The city served as a popular port for ships traveling eastward during the early autumn months when favorable winds made travel to Egypt and the Phoenician coast easier. The harbor sat near the outlet of the Xanthus River and was the main shipping facility of provincial Lydia.

Smyrna surrounded a well-protected harbor on the Aegean coast at the outlet of the Hermus River. Extensive trade into and out of Asia passed through the city. During the first century A.D. Smyrna reigned as one of the grandest cities of all Asia. A large temple dedicated to the Emperor Tiberius boasted the close alliance of the city with the Empire. Numerous other temples dedicated to a widerange of Roman deities as well as scores of beautifully adorned public buildings decorated the city.

Cities of the Interior Located 15 miles inland overlooking the Caicus River, Pergamum contained the first temple in Asia dedicated to a Roman Emperor, Augustus, in 29 B.C. The city possessed a commanding position on a hill high above the valley. Located on the Upper Acropolis were a large theater, library, agora, palace, barracks, and altar of Zeus. The large altar area may be that referred to by John as “Satan's throne” (Rev. 2:13 HCSB). The city was well-known as a center of worship for the gods Asklepios, Zeus, Demeter and Persephone, Serapis, Isis, as well as the cult of the emperor.

The greatest city in Lydia, Sardis is remembered as the first municipality to mint coins of silver and gold. Set in the fertile Hermus valley, Sardis served as the capital of the Lydian king Croesus, a name synonymous with wealth. The city fell to the Persian armies of Cyrus in 549 B.C. and to the Romans in 188 B.C. A tremendous earthquake in A.D. 17 struck Sardis, a blow from which it never was able to recover fully.

Following the Hermus River inland from Sardis, one reached Philadelphia, the name commemorating the brotherly love between Attalus Philadelphus and Eumenes. Founded during the second century B.C., the city was set amidst vast vineyards and led in the worship of Dionysius. The terrible earthquake of A.D. 17 was followed by dangerous tremors for the next 20 years, each one debilitating the city further. The Apostle John's reference to the giving of a “new name” (Rev. 3:12) may be a wordplay on the proposed dedication of the city as “Neocaesarea” in honor of aid sent by Tiberius.

Journeying inland from Miletus, a traveler followed the course of the Meander River until it joined the Lycus. In the center of the valley sat Laodicea. Situated along the major east-west trade route, the city prospered greatly. As the chief city of the wealthy province of Phrygia, Laodicea boasted of a large number of banks. In 51 B.C. Cicero recounted how he stopped to cash drafts at one of the city's banks. The great wealth of Laodicea allowed it to finance its own rebuilding after a destructive earthquake in A.D. 60, refusing help from the Senate of Rome. The city was also known for clothes and carpets woven from the rich, glossy black wool raised in the valley. Laodicea served as home to a medical school renowned for production of collyrium, an eye salve. Revelation mentions the riches of the city, admonishing believers to seek instead spiritual gold of eternal worth, and to anoint their eyes with a spiritual salve. John's description of “white garments” to cover their nakedness contrasts the Laodicean preference for “homegrown” black wool, a symbol of worldly prosperity (Rev. 3:14-18).

Eleven miles south of Laodicea lay Colossae. The city was well-known as early as about 450 B.C. as a commercial center, famous for red-dyed wool. The establishment of Laodicea, however, led to the decline of Colossae's prosperity. Several remains are still visible, including a small theater on the city's southeast side. The Apostle Paul never personally evangelized the city. Instead, the church was established by Epaphras during Paul's third missionary journey (Col. 1:7; 4:12-13). Paul wrote to the church during his Roman imprisonment, complementing the work of Philemon's servant Onesimus (Col. 4:9).

Cities of Eastern Asia Minor Much of Paul's Asian ministry centered around the provinces of Galatia and Lycaonia. On his first journey, Paul and Barnabas most likely arrived by sea at Attalia, a relatively small and unimportant harbor. Moving northward from the port and crossing Pamphylia, the group arrived at Antioch in the province of Galatia (Acts 13:14). Luke's “Antioch of Pisidia” carried the title of Colonia Caesarea Antiocheia, a colony established in 25 B.C. upon a much earlier Hellenistic city. Antioch had been renovated by Rome to provide for the defense of Galatia. A temple to Augustus dominated the central plaza, and the official inscription telling of his victories and of achievements was displayed in the city. Wagons bearing Anatolian marble passed through Antioch on their way to ships at Ephesus to be used in the decoration of the empire.

Moving southeast from Antioch, Paul and his companions traveled to Iconium (Acts 13:51). Located in a fertile, well-watered plain, Iconium supplied large amounts of fruit and grain for the surrounding provinces. Several years after Paul's visit, the Emperor Claudius allowed the town to be renamed Claudiconium in his honor, a reminder of the strong ties it shared with Rome.

Lystra lay 20 miles to the south of Iconium along the Via Sebaste. About 6 B.C. Augustus conferred the title of Julia Felix Gemina Lustra upon this Roman colony. Connected by a fine road with Antioch to the west, the city honored Zeus and Hermes as patron gods. A statue dedicated to the two was discovered in the 1800s, reminiscent of the city's identification of Paul and Barnabas with the gods (Acts 14). Timothy was a native of Lystra. The ruins of the city are today near the small Turkish town of Katyn Serai.

Derbe was situated 60 miles from Lystra at the present-day site of Kerti Huyuk. Although a large city of Lycaonia, Derbe was relatively unimportant. Paul's decision to visit the city infers a large Jewish population in the region. It is possible that some believers had already advanced the gospel to Derbe, having been earlier expelled from Iconium.

The boyhood home of the Apostle Paul, Tarsus of Cilicia lay on the eastern end of the eastwest trade route beginning at Ephesus. At Tarsus merchants had the option of going south into Syria and Palestine, or continuing across the mountains on to Zeugma and the East. The Cydnus River provided Tarsus with an outlet to the Mediterranean Sea, 10 miles away. Lumber and linen were the main industries of Tarsus, but the related manufacture of goat's-hair cloth was practiced by many, including Paul. This skill served as his main source of income wherever he traveled. Tarsus also housed a university and school of philosophy, an academic atmosphere that formed the basis of Paul's latter rabbinic career.

David C. Maltsberger

ASIARCHS [Ä'si-ärks] Somewhat general term for public patrons and leaders named by cities in the Roman province of Asia. They used their wealth for the public good, especially for supporting worship of the emperor and of Rome. They underwrote expenses of games sponsored in connection with religious festivals. Having served in the position, a person seemed able to continue to use the title. Paul won friends among this elite class (Acts 19:31), and they helped protect him from a religious riot in Ephesus. Note that some versions transliterate Asiarchs from Greek while others translate it to chiefs or officials.

ASIEL [Ās' 1-ē] Personal name meaning “God has made.” A descendant of Simeon and clan leader who settled in Gedor in rich pasturelands (1 Chron. 4:35-40).

ASKELON (KJV) See Ashkelon.

ASNAH [Ās' nāh] Proper name possibly with Egyptian origins relating to the god Nah. One of the Nethanims or temple servants who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel from exile about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:50).

ASNAPPER [Ās-nāpēr] KJV reading in Ezra 4:10. Modern translations read Osnappar (NASB, RSV) or Ashurbanipal (TEV, NIV). See Ashurbanipal; Osnappar.

ASP KJV translation for a dangerous, poisonous snake (Deut. 32:33; Job 20:14,16; Isa. 11:8; Rom. 3:13). Other translations use “serpent,” “viper,” or “cobra” at some or all of these places. The Hebrew term peten occurs also in Ps. 58:4, where KJV translates “adder.” Some works point to the cobra naja chaje, but this identification is not certain. Whatever the specific identification, they serve as symbols of dangerous poison (Deut. 32:33). They can be described as deaf (Ps. 58:4) either as a natural characteristic or as an unusual case. The deafness makes them immune to the snake charmer and thus even more dangerous with their poison. Riches that become the center of life turn out to be as poisonous as asps (Job 20:14,16). The prophetic vision is God's restoration of the world order so that small children can play around the holes of poisonous snakes without fear (Isa. 11:8). Until that day sin continues to dominate humanity, turning speech into poisonous lies (Rom. 3:13). See Reptiles.

ASPATHA [Ās-pā' thā] Persian personal name. Son of Haman killed by Jews (Esther 9:10).

ASRIEL [Ās' ri-ē], ASRIELITES Personal name meaning “God has made happy.” A son of Gilead and clan in the tribe of Manasseh (Num. 26:31). They received a land allotment (Josh. 17:2). In 1 Chron. 7:14 KJV spells it Ashriel.

ASS “Beast of burden” and “wild animal” in KJV but translated “donkey” in most modern translations. Six different Hebrew words and two Greek words lie behind the English translations. This animal appears more than 120 times in the Bible.

Aton is a female animal used for riding (Gen. 49:11; Num. 22:21-33; Judg. 5:10; 2 Kings 4:22) and as a beast of burden (Gen. 45:23). Saul's father lost his female asses (1 Sam. 9:3). This indicated loss of pride and prestige, for asses were apparently the riding animals for leaders and for the nobility (cp. Judg. 10:4; 12:14; see below on ayir). Warriors rode female asses (Judg. 5:10). Wealthy persons owned numbers of asses (Gen. 12:16; 32:15; 1 Chron. 27:30; Job 1:3). They grazed the grasslands for food (Job 1:14). God used a talking ass to teach the prophet Balaam a lesson in obedience (Num. 22:21-41). Zechariah pictured the Messiah as riding on “a colt the foal of an ass” (aton), thus emphasizing the animal was a purebred ass and not a crossbred mule (Zech. 9:9 KJV).

Chamor is the male ass, probably a reddish color according to the basic meaning of the Hebrew term. The original homeland of the ass (equus asinus) was probably Africa. It was both a riding animal (Gen. 22:3) and a beast of burden (Gen. 42:26), which could be used for plowing (Deut. 22:10, which forbids yoking an ass with an ox). For his hard work Issachar was pictured as a donkey (Gen. 49:14). An ass was valuable enough that the firstborn ass had to be ritually redeemed through sacrifice of a lamb (Exod. 13:13; 34:20) or by killing the newborn ass. In extreme famine conditions people would go so far as to pay astronomical prices for the head of an ass which they could eat (2 Kings 6:25). The ass was used to illustrate rampant sexual lust (Ezek. 23:20). A donkey's burial was an unceremonious dumping on the garbage heap for the vultures and scavengers to eat up (Jer. 22:19). The rich possessed herds of donkeys (Gen. 24:35; 30:43) though the Egyptian farmers suffering under the famine also had asses to bring to Joseph in exchange for food (Gen. 47:17; cp. Exod. 9:3; 20:17). The Messiah would ride on a donkey (Zech. 9:9), the animal of the nobility in days when Israel did not have a king. The animal contrasted to the horse used in the kings' military exploits after Solomon's time (1 Kings 10:26) in violation of Deut. 17:16. The picture in Zech. 9 thus joins the humble suffering servant and the royal Messiah.

The donkey, or ass, is still used as a beast of burden and mode of transportation in the Middle East.

Ayir refers to the stallion or young, vigorous male ass. These were apparently riding animals reserved for nobility (Judg. 10:4; 12:14; Zech. 9:9). Isaiah described an unusual caravan on the way to Egypt including young donkeys and camels. The older donkeys would have been the more usual caravan members (Isa. 30:6). Nomads in the desert often led caravans of donkeys and camels loaded with wares to sell. The day of God's salvation would include luxurious food for the donkeys who pulled the plows (Isa. 30:24).

Arod refers to the wild ass (asinus hemippus) that God created for freedom in the wilderness rather than to do slave labor for humans (Job 39:5). Such animals explore mountain pastures for food (Job 39:8).

Pere'is a wild donkey or onager which some Bible students identify with the zebra, but no evidence exists for zebras in Palestine. The Hebrew in Gen. 16:12 calls Ishmael “a wild ass of a man” (NRSV, NIV, TEV, NASB), because he would live in opposition to all other people. The wild donkey was known for its braying and for eating grass (Job 6:5). Such a wild animal can never be human (Job 11:12; cp. various translations). It lives in the wilderness searching for food and helpless before the cold and rain (Job 24:5-8; cp. 39:5). Without pastures it breathes its last dying gasp (Jer. 14:6). They ventured into cities only when the cities were forsaken ruins (Isa. 32:14). God had created them to be accustomed to life in the Judean wilderness (Jer. 2:24), where they freely pursued natural instincts and lusts (cp. Hos. 8:9).

Onarion refers to a small donkey and appears only in John 12:14 to show the promise of Zech. 9:9 was being fulfilled.

Onos can refer either to a male or female donkey. John 12:15 sees the ass as the parent of the colt on which Jesus rode, while Matt. 21:2 sees both an ass and a colt involved. These animals were kept in stalls and watered as a natural part of peasant life (Luke 13:15). They could easily get loose and fall into a pit (Luke 14:5). Jesus showed care for the animals, which stricter Jews were prone to let lie in pits in order to obey religious rules.

Hupozugion literally means “one under a yoke.” This is Matthew's term for the parent of the “foal of an ass” predicted in Zech. 9:9 (Matt. 21:5). Peter used the term to refer to the animal which spoke to Balaam (2 Pet. 2:16).

The precise difference in meaning of the various words for “ass” is not always evident to modern Bible students, though the differences were surely clear to the original writers and readers.

ASSASSINS Organized Jewish group who attempted to win freedom from the Romans. The word in Greek is derived from the Latin term Sicarii and literally means “dagger men.” Josephus described them as hiding small daggers in their clothing, which they used in crowded situations to kill their victims. Sicarii was used by the Romans to refer to those Jews who engaged in the organized killing of political figures. Perhaps this group should be associated with the Zealots of the NT. The Sicarii were often called robbers, and it is likely that the thieves crucified with Jesus were suspected of belonging to this group. In Acts 21:38 Paul was mistaken as a leader of 4,000 Sicarii. KJV calls them murderers; REB and TEV, terrorists. See Zealot.

ASSAYER One who tests ore for its silver and gold content. According to modern versions of Jer. 6:27, the calling of Jeremiah was to be an assayer of the people. He did not find them to be a precious metal. The KJV takes the word from the Hebrew root for tower, which is spelled the same as the root word for assayer. Modern versions, however, seem to make the best sense of the Hebrew text (Jer. 6:27-30). See Bellows.

ASSEMBLY Official gathering of the people of Israel and of the church. See Congregation.

ASSHUR [Ās' shūr], ASSHURIM, ASSHURITES (NIV) Personal and national name. 1. Son of Shem and thus a Semite, as were the Hebrew people (Gen. 10:22). 2. Unknown Arabian tribe (Gen. 25:3). This tribe may also be meant in Balaam's oracle (Num. 24:22-24), but a reference to Assyria is more likely. 3. The nation Assyria and its inhabitants are generally meant by the Hebrew term Asshur. This is the likely meaning in Gen. 10:11; Ezek. 27:23; 32:22; Hos. 14:3. See Assyria.

ASSIR [Ās' sīr] Personal name meaning “prisoner.” 1. Son of Korah (Exod. 6:24), the leader of the rebellion against Moses (Num. 16:1-35). 2. Great grandson of 1. above (1 Chron. 6:23) or grandson of 1. above with Elkanah and Ebiasaph being brothers (cp. 1 Chron. 6:37). 3. Son of King Jeconiah (or Jehoiachin) in KJV of 1 Chron. 3:17, but this should probably be interpreted as a common noun, “captive,” referring to Jehoiachin (NIV, NASB, NRSV).

ASSOS [Ās' sōs] Seaport city on the Gulf of Adramyttium, an offshoot of the east coast of the Aegean Sea. Paul visited there briefly and met Luke and others there as he sailed to Jerusalem from his third missionary journey (Acts 20:13-14).

ASSUR [Ās' sūr] (KJV, Ezra 4:2; Ps. 83:8) See Assyria.

ASSURANCE See Security of the Believer.

ASSURBANIPAL See Ashurbanipal.

ASSYRIA [Ās-sīr'ī-ā] Nation in northern Mesopotamia in OT times that became a large empire during the period of the Israelite kings. Assyrian expansion into the region of Palestine (about 855-625 B.C.) had enormous impact on the Hebrew kingdoms of Israel and Judah.

History Assyria lay north of the region of Babylonia along the banks of the Tigris River (Gen. 2:14) in northern Mesopotamia. The name Assyria (Hb., Ashshur) is from Asshur, its first capital, founded about 2000 B.C. The foundation of other Assyrian cities, notably Calah and Nineveh, appears in Gen. 10:11-12.

The history of Assyria is well documented in royal Assyrian annals, building inscriptions, king lists, correspondence, and other archaeological evidence. By 1900 B.C. these cities were vigorously trading as far away as Cappadocia in eastern Asia Minor. An expanded Assyria warred with the famous King Hammurabi of Babylon shortly before breaking up into smaller city-states about 1700 B.C.

Beginning about 1300 B.C., a reunited Assyria made rapid territorial advances and soon became an international power. Expanding westward, Tiglath-pileser I (1115-1077 B.C.) became the first Assyrian monarch to march his army to the shores of the Mediterranean. With his murder, however, Assyria entered a 166-year period of decline.

Assyria awoke from its dark ages under Adadnirari II (911-891 B.C.), who reestablished the nation as a power to be reckoned with in Mesopotamia. His grandson, Ashurnasirpal II (883-859 B.C.) moved Assyria toward the status of an empire. Ashurnasirpal II used a well-deserved reputation for cruelty to extort tribute and taxes from states within the reach of his army in predatory campaigns. He also rebuilt the city of Calah as the new military and administrative capital. Carved stone panels in Ashurnasirpal's palace there show violent scenes of the king's vicious campaigns against unsubmitive enemies.

Ashurnasirpal's son Shalmaneser III (858-824 B.C.) continued a policy of Assyrian expansion through his annual campaigns in all directions. These were no longer mere predatory raids. Rather, they demonstrated a systematic economic exploitation of subject states. As always, failure to submit to Assyria brought vicious military action. The results, however, were not always a complete victory for Assyria. In such a context Assyria first encountered the Hebrew kingdoms of the Bible. In 853 B.C. at Qarqar in north Syria, Shalmaneser fought a coalition of 12 kings including Hadad-ezer (Ben-Hadad, 1 Kings 20:26, 34) of Aram-Damascus and Ahab of Israel. This confrontation is not mentioned in the Bible, but it may have taken place during a three-year period of peace between Israel and Aram-Damascus (1 Kings 22:1). In his official inscriptions Shalmaneser claims victory, but the battle was inconclusive. In 841 B.C. he finally defeated Hazael of Damascus and on Mount Carmel received tribute from Tyre, Sidon, and King Jehu of Israel. A scene carved in relief on the Black Obelisk of Shalmaneser, unearthed at Calah, shows Jehu groveling before Shalmaneser, the only known depiction of an Israelite king.

Ruins of the ancient seaport city of Assos on the Gulf of Adramyttum.

These human-faced monumental bulls from Assyria date from the time of Ashumastrpal II (ninth century B.C.)

With the death of Shalmaneser, Assyria entered another period of decline during which she was occupied with the nearby kingdom of Urartu. For the next century only one Assyrian king seriously affected affairs in Palestine. Adadnirari III (810-783 B.C.) entered Damascus, taking extensive tribute from Ben-hadad III. He is probably the “savior” of 2 Kings 13:5, who allowed Israel to escape domination by Aram-Damascus. Nevertheless, Adad-nirari also collected tribute from Jehoash of Israel.

Assyrian preoccupation with Urartu ended with the reign of Tiglath-pileser III (744-727 B.C.). The true founder of the Assyrian Empire, he made changes in the administration of conquered territories. Nations close to the Assyrian homeland were incorporated as provinces. Others were left with native rule, but subject to an Assyrian overseer. Tiglath-pileser also instituted a policy of mass deportations to reduce local nationalistic feelings. He took conquered people into exile to live in lands vacated by other conquered exiles (cp. 2 Kings 17:24).

As Tiglath-pileser, also called Pul, arrived on the coast of Phoenicia, Menahem of Israel (2 Kings 15:19) and Rezin of Aram-Damascus brought tribute and became vassals of Assyria. An anti-Assyrian alliance quickly formed. Israel and Aram-Damascus attacked Jerusalem about 735 B.C. in an attempt to replace King Ahaz of Judah with a man loyal to the anti-Assyrian alliance (2 Kings 16:2-6; Isa. 7:1-6) and thus force Judah's participation. Against the protests of Isaiah (Isa. 7:4, 16-17; 8:4-8), Ahaz appealed to Tiglath-pileser for assistance (2 Kings 16:7-9). Tiglath-pileser, in response, campaigned against Philistia (734 B.C.), reduced Israel to the area immediately around Samaria (2 Kings 15:29; 733 B.C.), and annexed Aram-Damascus (732 B.C.), deporting the population. Ahaz, for his part, became an Assyrian vassal (2 Kings 16:10; 2 Chron. 28:16, 20-22).

Little is known of the reign of Tiglath-pileser's successor, Shalmaneser V (726-722 B.C.), except that he besieged Samaria for three years in response to Hoshea's failure to pay tribute (2 Kings 17:3-5). The city finally fell to Shalmaneser (2 Kings 17:6; 18:9-12), who apparently died in the same year. His successor, Sargon II (722-705 B.C.), took credit in Assyrian royal inscriptions for deporting 27, 290 inhabitants of Samaria.

Sargon campaigned in the region to counter rebellions in Gaza in 720 B.C. and Ashdod in 712 (Isa. 20:1). Hezekiah of Judah was tempted to join in the Ashdod rebellion, but Isaiah warned against such action (Isa. 18).

Meanwhile, unrest smoldered in other parts of the empire. A rebellious king of Babylon, Merodach-baladan, found support from Elam, Assyria's enemy to the east. Though forced to flee Babylon in 710 B.C., Merodach-baladan returned some years later to reclaim the throne. He sent emissaries to Hezekiah in Jerusalem (2 Kings 20:12-19; Isa. 39), apparently as part of preparations for a concerted anti-Assyrian revolt.

A colossal stylized bull with human face from the time of Sargon II of Assyria.

News of Sargon's death in battle served as a signal to anti-Assyrian forces. Sennacherib (704-681 B.C.) ascended the throne in the midst of widespread revolt. Merodach-baladan of Babylon, supported by the Elamites, had inspired the rebellion of all southern Mesopotamia. A number of states in Phoenicia and Palestine were also in rebellion, led by Hezekiah of Judah. After subduing Babylon, Sennacherib turned his attentions westward. In 701 B.C., he reasserted control over the city-states of Phoenicia, sacked Joppa and Ashkelon, and invaded Judah where Hezekiah had made considerable military preparations (2 Kings 20:20; 2 Chron. 32:1-8, 30; Isa. 22:8b-11). Sennacherib's own account of the invasion provides a remarkable supplement to the biblical version (2 Kings 18:13-19:36). He claims to have destroyed 46 walled cities (2 Kings 18:13) and to have taken 200,150 captives. Sennacherib's conquest of Lachish is shown in graphic detail in carved panels from his palace at Nineveh. During the siege of Lachish, an Assyrian army was sent against Jerusalem where Hezekiah was “made a prisoner...like a bird in a cage.” Three of Sennacherib's dignitaries attempted to negotiate the surrender of Jerusalem (2 Kings 18:17-37), but Hezekiah continued to hold out with the encouragement of Isaiah (2 Kings 19:1-7, 20-35). In the end the Assyrian army withdrew, and Hezekiah paid an enormous tribute (2 Kings 18:14-16). The Assyrian account claims a victory over the Egyptian army and mentions Hezekiah's tribute but is rather vague about the end of the campaign. The Bible mentions the approach of the Egyptian army (2 Kings 19:9) and tells of a miraculous defeat of the Assyrians by the angel of the Lord (2 Kings 19:35-36). The fifth century B.C. Greek historian Herodotus relates that the Assyrians suffered defeat because a plague of field mice destroyed their equipment. It is not certain whether these accounts can be combined to infer an outbreak of the plague. Certainly, Sennacherib suffered a major setback, for Hezekiah was the only ruler of the revolt to keep his throne.

On a more peaceful front, Sennacherib conducted some major building projects in Assyria. The ancient city of Nineveh was rebuilt as the new royal residence and Assyrian capital. War continued, however, with Elam, which also influenced Babylon to rebel again. An enraged Sennacherib razed the sacred city in 689 B.C. His murder, at the hands of his own sons (2 Kings 19:37) in 681 B.C., was interpreted by Babylonians as divine judgment for destroying their city.

Esarhaddon (681-669 B.C.) emerged as the new king and immediately began the rebuilding of Babylon, an act which won the allegiance of the local populace. He warred with nomadic tribes to the north and quelled a rebellion in Phoenicia, while Manasseh of Judah remained a loyal vassal. His greatest military adventure, however, was an invasion of Egypt conducted in 671 B.C. The Pharaoh Taharqa fled south as Memphis fell to the Assyrians but returned and fomented rebellion two years later. Esarhaddon died in 669 B.C. on his way back to subjugate Egypt.

After conducting a brief expedition against eastern tribes, Esarhaddon's son, Ashurbanipal (668-627 B.C.), set out to reconquer Egypt. Assisted by 22 subject kings, including Manasseh of Judah, he invaded in 667 B.C. He defeated Pharaoh Taharqa and took the ancient capital of Thebes. Some 1,300 miles from home, Ashurbanipal had no choice but to reinstall the local rulers his father had appointed in Egypt and hope for the best. Plans for revolt began immediately; but Assyrian officers got wind of the plot, captured the rebels, and sent them to Nineveh. Egypt rebelled again in 665 B.C. This time Ashurbanipal destroyed Thebes, also called No-Amon (Nah. 3:8, NASB). Phoenician attempts at revolt were also crushed.

Ashurbanipal ruled at Assyria's zenith but also saw the beginning of her swift collapse. Ten years after the destruction of Thebes, Egypt rebelled yet again. Assyria could do nothing because of a war with Elam. In 651 B.C. Ashurbanipal's brother, the king of Babylon, organized a widespread revolt. After three years of continual battles Babylon was subdued but remained filled with seeds of hatred for Assyria. Action against Arab tribes followed, and the war with Elam continued until a final Assyrian victory in 639 B.C. That same year the official annals of Ashurbanipal came to an abrupt end. With Ashurbanipal's death in 627 B.C., unrest escalated. By 626, Babylon had fallen into the hands of the Chaldean Nabopolassar. Outlying states, such as Judah under Josiah, were free to rebel without fear. War continued between Assyria and Babylon until, in 614 B.C., the old Assyrian capital Asshur was sacked by the Medes. Then, in 612 B.C., Calah was destroyed. The combined armies of the Babylonians and the Medes laid siege to Nineveh. After two months the city fell.

A basalt statue of the Assyrian king Shalmaneser III.

An Assyrian general claimed the throne and rallied what was left of the Assyrian army in Haran. An alliance with Egypt brought a few troops to Assyria's aid, but in 610 B.C. the Babylonians approached, and Haran was abandoned. In 605 B.C. the last remnants of the battered Assyrian Empire, along with their recent Egyptian allies, were defeated on The Battle of Carchemish. Assyria was no more.

Religion Assyrian religion, like that of most Near Eastern nations, was polytheistic. Essentially the same as Babylonian religion, official Assyrian religion recognized thousands of gods; but only about 20 were important in actual practice.

Younger gods were usually associated with a newer city or none at all. Adad, the Canaanite Hadad, was the god of storms and thus both beneficial and destructive. Ninurta, the god of war and hunting, became a fitting patron for the Assyrian capital Calah. Most important, however, is the unique figure of Asshur. As patron god and namesake of the original Assyrian capital Asshur and the state itself, Asshur rose in importance to be lord of the universe and the supreme god. Since the god Asshur stood above all others, the Assyrian king was dutybound to show his corresponding dominance on earth. Most Assyrian military campaigns were initiated “at the command of Asshur.” See Babylon.

Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

ASTAROTH, ASTARTE See Ashtaroth.

ASTROLOGER Person who “divided the heavens” (literal translation of Hebrew phrase, Isa. 47:13) to determine the future. Particularly the Babylonians developed sophisticated methods of reading the stars to determine proper times for action. The prophet mocked Babylon's tireless and tiring efforts in astrology. Daniel shows repeatedly that Babylon's well-educated, professional magicians could not match Daniel and his friends. Daniel apparently has magicians and masters of incantations and spells rather than astrologers. The “Chaldeans” of Dan. 2:2; 4:7; 5:7,11 may be the nearest reference to astrologers in the book. The Bible does not seek to describe the skills, tactics, or methods of foreign personnel engaged in various practices to determine the opportune time. Rather the Bible mocks such practices and shows that God's word to the prophets and the wise of Israel far surpasses any foreign skills.

ASUPPIM [Ā-sūp' pīm] KJV interpretation in 1 Chron. 26:15, 17. Modern translations read “storehouse.”

ASWAN [Ā' swān] NIV, TEV in Ezek. 29:10; 30:6 for Syene. See Syene.

ASYLUM See Avenger.

ASYNCRITUS

ASYNCRITUS [Äs'in' erī-tūs] Personal name meaning “incomparable.” Roman Christian whom Paul greeted (Rom. 16:14).

ATAD [Ä' tād] Personal name meaning “thorn.” Owner of threshing floor, or part of name of Bramble Threshing Floor, east of the Jordan River where Joseph stopped to mourn the death of his father before carrying Jacob's embalmed body across the Jordan to Machpelah for burial. The place was named Abel-mizraim (Gen. 50:10-11). See Abel-mizraim.

ATARAH [Ät' ä-räh] Personal name meaning “crown” or “wreath.” Second wife of Jerahmeel and mother of Onam (1 Chron. 2:26).

ATAROTH [Ät' ä-röth] Place-name meaning “crowns.” 1. Town desired and built up by tribe of Gad (Num. 32:3,34). Mesha, king of Moab, about 830 B.C. claims he captured Ataroth but admits it belonged to Gad “from of old” and had been built by an Israelite king. It is located at modern Khirbet Attarus, eight miles northwest of Dibon and eight miles east of the Dead Sea. 2. Village on border of Benjamin and Ephraim (Josh. 16:2,7) It may be modern Khirbet el-Oga in the Jordan Valley.

ATAROTH-ADDAR [Ät' ä-röth-äd' där] Place-name meaning “crowns of glory.” A border town in Ephraim (Josh. 16:5), bordering Benjamin (Josh. 18:13), probably modern Khirbet Attara at the foot of Tell en-Nasbeh or possibly identical with Tell en-Nasbeh and thus with biblical Mizpah.

ATER [Ä' ter] Personal name meaning either “crippled” or “left-handed.” Clan of which 98 returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:16). They were temple gatekeepers (Ezra 2:42). The head of the clan signed Nehemiah's covenant to keep God's Law (Neh. 10:17).

ATHACH [Ä' thäk] Place-name meaning “attack.” Town in southern Judah to which David sent spoils of victory while he fled Saul among the Philistines

(1 Sam. 30:30). May be the same as Ether (Josh. 15:42), a small copying change causing the difference. See Ether.

ATHAIAH [Ā·thā'·āh] Leader of tribe of Judah who lived in Jerusalem in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:4).

ATHALIAH [Āth·ā·lī'·āh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh has announced His exalted nature” or “Yahweh is righteous.” 1. Wife of Jehoram, king of Judah, and mother of Ahaziah, king of Judah. She was either the daughter of Ahab and Jezebel of Israel (2 Kings 8:18) or of Omri, king of Israel (2 Kings 8:26; according to a literal reading of text as in KJV; an interpretation of text extends Hebrew word for “daughter” to mean female descendant and thus “granddaughter” as in NASB; NIV; RSV). Some have suggested Omri was her father, but her brother Ahab raised her at court and thus functioned as her father. She brought the northern court's devotion to Baal to the court of Judah. She exercised great political influence during her son's reign of one year (2 Kings 8:27-28). At her son's death from battle wounds, she tried to gain power for herself by having all male heirs killed. She managed to rule Judah for six years (2 Kings 11:1-3), being the only woman to do so. Finally, Jehoiada the priest led a revolt, crowning the child Joash as king and bringing about Athaliah's death (2 Kings 11:5-20). 2. Son of Jeroham in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:26). 3. Father of Jeshaiiah, who led 70 men back to Jerusalem from exile with Ezra (Ezra 8:7).

The Parthenon on the Acropolis at Athens.

ATHARIM [Āth' á-rim] Hebrew word of uncertain meaning. It names a roadway the king of Arad took to attack Israel under Moses. After an initial setback, Israel prayed and found victory under God (Num. 21:1-3). KJV translates “spies” following the Septuagint, the earliest Greek translation. Modern translations simply transliterate the Hebrew. The site may be Tamar a few miles south of the Dead Sea.

ATHENS [Āth' əns] Capital of Attica, an ancient district of east central Greece, where Paul preached to the Greek philosophers (Acts 17:15-34). Paul saw that the Athenians were very religious and even had an altar to an unknown God. He based his sermon on this. Though some converts were won to faith in Christ, no biblical record exists of a viable church being established. The city, which probably was named for the wisdom goddess Athene, was already an ancient place by the time Paul visited it. Indeed, human occupation of the area seems to date before 3000 B.C. In the sixth century B.C. Athens became the scene of the world's first great experiment with democratic government. It was destroyed by the Persians early in the fifth century B.C., but during the administration of Pericles the city was rebuilt into an architectural wonder. The higher part of the city, known as the Acropolis, is where the Parthenon and other temples were built. (See Reconstruction on pp. 150-51)

ATHLAI [ˈʌθˌlɑɪ] Personal name meaning “Yahweh is exalted.” A man who agreed (Ezra 10:28) under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife and return to faithfulness to Yahweh.

ATONEMENT [ˈɑːtənˈmənt] Biblical doctrine that God has reconciled sinners to Himself through the sacrificial work of Jesus Christ. The concept of atonement spans both Testaments, everywhere pointing to the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus for the sins of the world.

Atonement as Penal The biblical concept of atonement cannot be understood except in the context of the wrath of God against sin. The need for atonement arises in the earliest stages of the biblical narrative, as the newly created humans rebel against the command of God. For their treasonous disobedience against their Creator, Adam and Eve are told that they face death and have brought the curse of God upon themselves and the entire created order (Gen. 3:13-19).

As a result of this primeval mutiny, the entire world-system stands at enmity with the purposes of God (Eph. 2:2) and is blinded by the deception of Satan (2 Cor. 4:4). Not only did human beings chafe at the command God had given in the garden, they have rebelled against the law He revealed to them within their hearts (Rom. 2:14-16) and in specific revelation (Rom. 3:19-20). As such, each individual human has turned to idolatry (Rom. 1:18-32) and stands guilty before the tribunal of God (Rom. 3:9-18).

The Hebrew prophets warned that the world was kindling the wrath of God against unrighteousness. There would come, they foretold, a great day of cataclysmic judgment against all rebellion. The secrets of human hearts would be exposed, and none would be able to stand against the fury of God's righteous justice (Ps. 1:5; Nah. 1:6; Mal. 3:2). The wrath of God would tear down every citadel of opposition in a fiery revelation of His retribution against sin (Isa. 2:12; 61:2).

The OT prophets, however, also spoke of One who would bear in His own body the condemnation of God against sinners. By His suffering under the wrath of God, the Prophet Isaiah wrote, the coming Servant of God would save many from condemnation (Isa. 53). The NT writings identify these Suffering Servant passages with Jesus' death on a cross outside the gates of Jerusalem (Acts 8:32-35).

First-century Athens, Greece, as it appeared during the time of Paul. The view is from the northwest of the Agora of the lower city, which is in the foreground. The Acropolis (upper city) with the famous Parthenon dedicated to the goddess Athena is in the background. The Areopagus (Mars Hill) where Paul addressed the citizens of Athens is at right.

Jesus Himself recognized the penal nature of the atonement, speaking of the cross as a fiery “baptism” He was to undergo (Mark 10:38; Luke 12:49-50). He expressed anguish at the prospect of the cross (John 12:27) and even pleaded to be delivered from it, if such were possible (Luke 22:42). The gospels picture vividly the penal nature of the atonement by describing the agony of Jesus on the cross, crying out as One forsaken by God (Matt. 27:46). They describe the crucifixion as accompanied by signs of eschatological judgment—darkness, natural disturbances, and the raising of dead from their graves (Matt. 27:45-54).

The apostles and NT writers spoke of Jesus' atonement as absorbing the wrath of God due to sinners. They described Jesus' death as a propitiation that turns aside the wrath of God (Rom. 3:25; 1 John 4:7). The Apostle Paul wrote to the Corinthians that Jesus was counted as a sinner in order that sinners might be counted as righteous in Him (2 Cor. 5:21). Jesus bore the curse of the law in order to bring the blessings of the Abrahamic covenant to the Gentiles (Gal. 3:10-14). Peter similarly spoke of Jesus bearing sins "in His body on the tree" (1 Pet. 2:24 HCSB).

The sin-bearing work of Christ at Golgotha cannot be understood, however, apart from His resurrection. Peter preached to onlookers at Pentecost that Jesus' resurrection is proof God did not abandon Him to the grave but has exalted Him as the triumphant Messiah to whom are due the covenant promises of the OT (Acts 2:22-36). Although Jesus was considered "smitten of God" on the cross (Isa. 53:4), in the resurrection He is "established as the powerful Son of God" (Rom. 1:4 HCSB). Having borne fully the penalty of death due for sin, Jesus is now raised from the dead as the righteous One in whom God is well pleased. Because Jesus has satisfied the penalty for sin, believers wait expectantly for the One who "rescues us from the coming wrath" (1 Thess. 1:10 HCSB).

Atonement as Sacrificial The NT sets the atonement in the context of the OT sacrificial system. The concept of sacrifice emerges in even the earliest passages of the biblical narrative, with the sacrifice of Abel from his flock (Gen. 4:4-5). Sacrifice played a crucial role in the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt as the sacrifice of the Passover lamb saved the Hebrew children from the dark visitation of the angel of death (Exod. 12:1-32). The Mosaic covenant brought with it a detailed sacrificial system to be followed by the Israelite nation (Lev. 1:1-7:38).

The NT asserts that the animal sacrifices of the old covenant pointed to Jesus' sacrificial offering of Himself at Golgotha. In the identification of Jesus with the Suffering Servant of Isaiah, the prophet describes the Messiah as a "guilt offering" (Isa. 53:10), pointing back to the Mosaic sacrificial code (Lev. 5-7). John the Baptist emphasizes the sacrificial nature of the mission of Christ by calling Him the "Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world” (John 1:29). Jesus Himself speaks of voluntarily “laying down His life” for His sheep as a sacrificial offering to God (John 10:11).

Paul spoke of Christ as “our Passover,” directly tying the atoning work of Christ to the sacrifice of the Passover lamb (1 Cor. 5:7). He uses OT sacrificial language to speak of Jesus' atonement as a “sweet-smelling aroma” offered to God (Eph. 5:2). Similarly, Peter uses sacrificial lamb imagery to speak of believers as being purchased by the “precious blood” of Jesus (1 Pet. 1:18-19) who, like the OT sacrificial animals, is “spotless.” In his vision on the Isle of Patmos, John sees Jesus being worshiped by the redeemed multitudes because He is the sacrificial Lamb who purchased them with His blood (Rev. 5:1-14).

The sacrificial nature of the atonement is perhaps most clearly explained in the book of Hebrews. For the writer of Hebrews, the crucified Jesus is the ultimate sacrifice, which permanently deals with sin and thus ends the sacrificial system (Heb. 10:11-12). The writer asserts that the blood of animals was never sufficient to take away human sin but merely pointed to the coming sacrifice of Messiah (Heb. 10:4).

Hebrews explains, perhaps to Jewish Christians contemplating a return to the Mosaic sacrificial system, that Jesus is the priest (Heb. 7:23-28) who appears before God to offer His own blood for the sins of the people as a once-for-all sacrifice (Heb. 9:11-28). Alluding to the animals sacrificed “outside the camp” in the old covenant, the writer points to Jesus' suffering outside the gates of Jerusalem (Heb. 11-13). His resurrection from the dead is proof that God has heard the cries of this final Priest and has accepted His sacrifice (Heb. 5:7).

Atonement as Substitutionary The penal and sacrificial language describing the atonement makes clear that Jesus' death was substitutionary. Just as the Israelites of the OT were to offer animals in the place of sinners, so Jesus' death is described as being offered in the place of those who deserved the wrath of God. Jesus spoke of His death as a shepherd laying down His life for His sheep (John 10:11). He describes His mission as offering Himself as a “ransom” for sinners (Mark 10:45). The night before His betrayal Jesus told His disciples that the bread He broke before them represented “My body, which is given for you” (Luke 22:19 HCSB).

After speaking of the universal condemnation deserved by sinners, Paul wrote of Jesus' blood being set forth as a propitiation for sin so that God might remain just in His punishment of sin while justifying those who have faith in Jesus (Rom. 3:2-26). Paul anchors the assurance of God's people that they will not face God's wrath in the fact that God “did not even spare His own Son, but offered Him up for us all” (Rom. 8:31-34 HCSB). The apostle spoke of the substitutionary nature of the atonement as being at the heart of his gospel proclamation (1 Cor. 15:3-4). Jesus' suffering the penalty for sin, Paul asserts, was “on our behalf” (2 Cor. 5:21). He contends that Jesus' bearing the curse of God was “for us” (Gal. 3:13). The apostle employs ransom language to speak of Jesus' mediatorial work (1 Tim. 2:5-6). Similarly, Peter speaks of Jesus' death for sins as being the righteous dying in the place of the unrighteous, thereby accomplishing reconciliation with God (1 Pet. 3:18).

The substitutionary nature of the atonement emphasizes the importance of the humanity of Jesus. As noted above, the Bible points to Jesus' role as a God-appointed Mediator between God and humanity (1 Tim. 2:5). In taking on human nature, Jesus identified Himself with sinful humanity in suffering and ultimately in death. As the second Adam, Jesus represents humanity by overcoming the temptations of the world and the devil (Matt. 4:1-11). He suffers on the cross, not as a detached demigod, but as a human being born under the law (Gal. 4:4-5). In bearing God's wrath in the place of sinful humanity, Jesus is the “forerunner” (Heb. 6:20) who triumphs over death's hold on the human race (Heb. 2:14). As such, He is able to present to God the redeemed “brothers” for whom He suffered, died, and was resurrected to life (Heb. 2:10-13).

The biblical doctrine of substitutionary atonement causes the biblical writers to marvel at God's love for the world (1 John 2:2), but it also impels them to wonder at the profoundly personal nature of the atonement. The kingdom community is thus reminded that Jesus gave His life because He loves His church (Eph. 5:25-27). The Apostle Paul can proclaim with vigor not only that in the atonement God “was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself” (2 Cor. 5:19) but also that the Lord Jesus “loved me and gave Himself for me” (Gal. 2:20).

Atonement as Cosmic It cannot be said that Jesus died for the “sins” of animals, rocks, or trees. Indeed, the Scripture explicitly notes that Jesus did not die even for angelic beings (Heb. 2:16). He stood in the place of human beings, moral agents who have brought upon themselves the condemnation of God. This does not mean, however, that the atoning work of Jesus' death and resurrection does not have implications for the entire cosmic order.

Paul reminds the church at Rome that because of the Adamic curse the “whole creation has been groaning together with labor pains until now” (Rom. 8:22 HCSB). The curse, which was brought into the cosmos by the sin of humanity, ultimately will be reversed through the atoning work of the Second Adam who accomplishes a cosmic reconciliation through the blood of His cross (Col. 1:20). Because of the atonement, the universe awaits a cosmic renovation into a glorious new heavens and a new earth in which all opposition to God is swept away by the triumphant Messiah (2 Pet. 3:13; Rev. 21:1-22:9).

The Bible reveals that God's original intention for humanity was for the creatures made in His image to rule over the earth (Gen. 1:27-28; Ps. 8:3-8). The fall seemed to derail these purposes. Through the atonement accomplished by Jesus, however, God will place all things under the feet of the triumphant Second Adam (1 Cor. 15:27-28; Heb. 2:5-9).

In Adam's fall the serpent set himself up as the “god of this age” (2 Cor. 4:4), holding humans captive to their own corrupted passions (2 Tim. 3:6). Humanity was given an ancient promise from the Creator, however, of the serpent's impending doom (Gen. 3:15). In Jesus' atoning work, He triumphs over the dark powers (Col. 1:15), destroying the purposes of Satan (1 John 3:8).

Scripture also reveals that God's original purposes for His creation included His dwelling in fellowship with humanity, a situation disrupted by sin (Gen. 3:8). In the atoning work of Jesus, God reclaims a people for Himself (Titus 2:14) and pledges to be with them forever in the redeemed cosmos (Rev. 21:3).

Atonement and the Message of the Gospel The Bible makes clear that the central thrust of the church's proclamation should be the atoning work of God in Christ (1 Cor. 1:22-25). The Scripture presents the truth of the atonement as the gospel itself (1 Cor. 15:3-4), which alone can save a sinner from the wrath of God (Acts 2:13-21).

In the atonement God has revealed to humanity His saving love. He does not wish to condemn the world but to save it through His Son (John 3:17). The sinner must recognize that He is living under a sentence of death, awaiting the coming judgment (John 3:36). The sinner must look to Jesus as bearing the just penalty for sin on the cross (John 3:14-16). The sinner must trust that God has accepted this sacrifice on his behalf by God's raising Jesus from the dead (Rom. 10:9).

When the sinner abandons all hope of his own righteousness before God and trusts in the provision of God in the death and resurrection of Jesus, he finds refuge in Christ (Phil. 3:9). The sinner is now at peace with God (Rom. 5:1). In fact, by the power of the Spirit, he is now a "new creation" awaiting the redemption of the created universe (2 Cor. 5:17). The believer is assured that he no longer faces condemnation because he is united to the One who has already borne and satisfied the wrath of God (Rom. 8:31-39).

The message of the atonement is presented in strikingly universal terms. All are invited to find refuge in the atonement of Christ (Luke 14:16-17). The apostles plead with sinners to trust in the atoning work of Jesus (Acts 2:40; 2 Cor. 5:20). All human beings are not only invited but commanded to believe the gospel (Acts 17:30-31). This does not mean, however, that the objective accomplishment of the atonement brings about universal salvation. Jesus is Himself the One who is the propitiation of God's wrath against the world (1 John 2:2). Those who are redeemed are saved from God's judgment because they are united to Christ through faith (Eph. 1:7). On the final day of judgment, those who are not “in Christ” will bear the eternal penalty for their own sins (2 Cor. 5:10) and for the dread transgression of rejecting God's provision in Christ (John 3:19; Heb. 10:29).

Atonement and the Life of the Church The Bible speaks of the church as itself a visible manifestation of the atoning work of Christ (Acts 20:28). In the sacrifice of Jesus on the cross, God's purposes were not simply to rescue so many units of individual souls. Instead, He purposes to bring forth a new community, the church (Eph. 5:25-27). The NT writers, therefore, constantly anchor their admonitions for church life to the narrative of Jesus' death, burial, and resurrection.

Because Jesus died for the world, the church is not to identify itself in terms of racial, ethnic, or national boundaries (Eph. 2:11-22) but is to reflect in its internal relationships the peace of God in Christ. The makeup and activity of the church should reflect the harmonious end result of the atonement—a vast multinational multitude of redeemed sinners praising the crucified and exalted Messiah (Rev. 5:1-14). Similarly, mature believers are to be careful not to offend weaker believers “for whose sake Christ died” (1 Cor. 8:11). Instead, believers are to bear with one another, forgiving one another “just as God also forgave you in Christ” (Eph. 4:32 HCSB).

The atonement likewise serves to instruct the church on how to relate to the outside world. Jesus instructed His disciples that the cross means both that they will face tribulation from the world and that He has overcome the world through the cross (John 16:33). Jesus' crucifixion is to remind believers to refuse to respond to the world's hostility (Heb. 12:3) by engaging in vengeful counterattacks (1 Pet. 2:21-25). Rather, the cross of Christ reminds believers that God is just (Rom. 3:26) and that vengeance comes not at their hand but at His (Heb. 10:30-31). See Christ, Christology; Day of Atonement; Expiation; Propitiation; Redeem; Salvation. Russell D. Moore

ATROTH (KJV) or ATROTH-BETH-JOAB [Ät' rōth-bēth-Jō' ab] Place-name meaning “crowns of the house of Joab.” A “descendant” of Caleb and Hur

(1 Chron. 2:54), the name apparently refers to a village near Bethlehem.

ATROTH-SHOPHAN [Āt' rōth-shō' phān] Town built by tribe of Gad of unknown location (Num. 32:35). Earliest translations spelled name various ways: Shophar, Shaphim, Shopham, Etroth Shophan.

ATTAI [Āt' a] Personal name meaning “timely.” 1. Member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:35-36). 2. Warrior of tribe of Gad who served David in the wilderness as he fled from Saul (1 Chron. 12:11). 3. Son of Maachah (2 Chron. 11:20), the favorite and beloved wife of King Rehoboam of Judah (931-913 B.C.).

ATTALIA [Āt-tā-lī' a] Seaport city on northern Mediterranean coast in Asia Minor where Paul stopped briefly on first missionary journey (Acts 14:25). Modern Antalya continues as a small seaport with some ancient ruins.

AUGUSTAN COHORT Unit of the Roman army stationed in Syria from about A.D. 6. The cohort's place among the rest of the Roman army is indicated by the fact that it was named after the emperor. This special unit was given charge of Paul on his way to Rome (Acts 27:1). In Luke's eyes this demonstrated the importance of Paul and, more importantly, the gospel that Paul preached.

AUGUSTUS [Au-gūs' tūs] Title meaning “reverend” that the Roman Senate gave to Emperor Octavian (31 B.C.-A.D. 14) in 27 B.C. He ruled the Roman Empire, including Palestine, when Jesus was born and ordered the taxation that brought Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem (Luke 2:1). He was the adopted son of Julius Caesar. Born in 63 B.C. he first gained power with Antony and Lepidus at Julius Caesar's death in 44 B.C. He gained sole control at the Battle of Actium in 31 B.C., where he defeated Antony and Cleopatra, who both committed suicide. This brought Egypt into the system of Roman provinces. He thus founded the Roman Empire and ruled with popular acclaim. At his death the Senate declared him a god. Herod the Great ruled as appointed by Augustus, even though Herod originally supported Antony. Herod built temples to Augustus as a god in Caesarea and Samaria. The title Augustus passed on to Octavian's successors as emperors of Rome. Thus it is applied to Nero in Acts 25:21,25, when Paul appealed to Caesar. Note the various translations: the Emperor (NIV, NASB, HCSB), his Imperial Majesty (NRSV).

Cameo of Augustus Caesar.

AUTHOR, AUTHOR OF LIFE See Prince of Life.

AUTHORITY, DIVINE AUTHORITY Greek term for authority, in both the NT and the Septuagint, is exousia. Although sometimes translated “power,” exousia referred primarily not to physical strength or power (as in dunamis), but to the rightful and legitimate exercise of power. A person has authority primarily by virtue of the position one holds, not by physical coercion or might.

All authority could be characterized as either intrinsic or delegated. Intrinsic authority is dominion one exercises because it is innate in that person or inherent in the office held by that person. Because He is God and Creator of the universe, God has sovereignty and dominion over all things. Only the triune God has purely intrinsic authority. Delegated authority is given from one who has intrinsic authority to one serving in an office or carrying out a function. Delegated authority is not in itself innately or inherently authoritative; it is authority derived from one whose authority is intrinsic. All authority is properly God's. All other authority is derived from Him (Matt. 9:8; John 19:11; Rom. 13:1-3; Jude 25).

Jesus possesses the same intrinsic authority as God the Father because He is coequal with the Father (John 1:1; 10:30; 16:15; Phil. 2:6; Col. 1:16; 2:9-10; Rev. 12:10). Because of the unique pattern of relationships within the Trinity, however, especially during Jesus' incarnation, there is also a sense in which His authority is given to Him by the Father (Matt. 9:8; 28:18; John 5:22,27; 17:2; Eph. 1:20-22; Phil. 2:9-10; Rev. 2:27). God has given Jesus authority over all things in heaven and earth (Matt. 28:18). Jesus' authority was manifested in His incarnation by His authority to forgive sin, provide salvation, heal sickness, cast out demons, and judge humanity (Matt. 9:6-8; Mark 2:10-12; Luke 4:36; 5:24-25; John 5:22-27). As Jesus carried out His teaching ministry, He spoke with an authority which was immediately recognized by His hearers as being absent in the teachings of the scribes and Pharisees (Matt. 7:28-29; Mark 1:22; Luke 4:32). Such authority recognized by others on the basis of actions or performance may be called earned authority.

Human Authority Since all authority is derived from God, Christians should submit to the structures of authority that God has established. Submission to authorities ordained by God flows from submission to God Himself. Patterns of authority are necessary in any set of human relationships. Some such authority is positional, in that the authority is by virtue of a position held by an individual, not by any innate authority of the individuals themselves. God ordained civil government to have authority over citizens (Luke 19:17; Rom. 13:1-7; 1 Tim. 2:2; Titus 3:1; 1 Pet. 2:13-14). He established patterns of authority within family relationships (1 Cor.

7:4; Eph. 5:21-25; 6:1-4). Scripture also sanctions a pattern of authority in work and social relationships (Matt. 8:9; Luke 7:8; Eph. 6:5-9; 1 Tim. 2:12).

God established an order of authority in spiritual matters as well. Since the Bible is God's Word, Scripture speaks with divine authority (2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Pet. 1:21-22; 1 Thess. 4:1-2). The Bible affirms the apostolic authority of the first disciples (Matt. 10:1 ; Mark 3:15; 6:7; Luke 9:1; 2 Cor. 10:8; 13:10; 1 Thess. 2:6) and the authority of other church leaders (Heb. 13:7,17). God also established the authority of certain spiritual beings including angels and Satan and beings in the endtime (Luke 4:6; Eph. 2:2; 3:10; 6:11-12; Col. 1:16; 2:15; Rev. 6:8; 9:3,10,19; 14:18; 16:9; 18:1).

Christians have an obligation to submit to the authority of those whom God has ordained to serve as leaders. To rebel against God's appointed authorities is to rebel against God. Humans who wield authority should do so with humility, cognizant of the fact that all temporary human authority flows from God and will be returned to God (1 Cor. 15:24-28). Christian leaders should not flaunt their authority over others but should practice the servant leadership exemplified by Jesus Christ (Matt. 20:25-28; Mark 10:42-45, Luke 22:25-26; 1 Pet. 5:1-3).

Steve W. Lemke

AVA [Ā' vā] or AVVA People that the Assyrians conquered and settled in Israel to replace the people they took into exile (2 Kings 17:24). Their gods did not help them against the Assyrians and could be used as an example to call Jerusalem to surrender (2 Kings 18:34, where Ivvah refers to the same people; cp. 2 Kings 19:13). Avva was apparently in Syria, but their homeland is unknown. Some would suggest Tell Kafr Ayah on the Orontes River. The Avites who made the god Nibhaz (2 Kings 17:31) may refer to these people.

AVEN [Ā' vēn] Hebrew noun meaning “wickedness,” used in place-names to indicate Israel's understanding of the place as a site of idol worship. 1. Referred to On or Heliopolis in Egypt (Ezek. 30:17). 2. Referred to major worship centers of Israel such as Bethel and Dan (Hos. 10:8). 3. Referred to a valley, perhaps one in place of popularly known names such as Bethaven for Beth-el (Josh. 7:2; 18:12). See Bethaven.

AVENGER Person with the legal responsibility to protect the rights of an endangered relative. Avenger translates Hebrew go'el, which in its verbal form means to redeem. Redemption applies to repossessing things consecrated to God (Lev. 27:13-31) or to God's actions for His people (Exod. 6:6; Job 19:25; Ps. 103:4; Isa. 43:1). Ultimately God is the go'el (Isa. 41:14).

The human avenger is tied closely to the institutions of cities of refuge, land ownership, and levirate marriage. Cities of refuge offered people who killed without intention or hatred a place of escape from the avenger of blood (Exod. 21:12-14; Num. 35:6-34; Deut. 4:41-43; 19:1-13; Josh. 20:1-9). The human go'el may be a brother, an uncle, a cousin, or another blood relative from the family (Lev. 25:48-49). An established order among these determined the one legally responsible to act as go'el (Ruth 3:12-13). The avenger or go'el is responsible to take the life of one who killed a family member (Num. 35:12), to receive restitution for crimes against a deceased relative (Num. 5:7-8), buy back property lost to the family (Lev. 25:25), redeem a relative who sold himself into slavery (Lev. 25:48-49), or marry the widow of a relative without sons and perpetuate the family (Deut. 25:5-10). Avenging the death of a relative is placed under strict limits. The murderer must have intentionally waited to kill the relative (Exod. 21:13) or willfully attacked the relative (Exod. 21:14). Vengeance could be exercised only before the murderer reached the city of refuge or after the court either at the victim's hometown or at the murder site judged the case (Num. 35:12). The avenger was free to act if an iron object was used to commit the murder (Num. 35:16) or if a stone or wood object was used (Num. 35:17-18). Pushing a person to death because of hatred made one liable to the avenger (Num. 35:20-21). Unintentional acts could not be punished (Num. 35:22-24).

A killer judged to have committed the crime without hatred or intentional planning was sent to the city of refuge until the death of the high priest. The avenger could not touch the killer in the city of refuge, but if the killer left the city of refuge for any reason, the avenger could reap vengeance even against the unintentional killer (Num. 35:22-28). This shows that even unintentional murder involved sin for which a penalty had to be paid. The law of the avenger thus prevented the shedding of innocent blood while also purging the guilt of murdering the innocent (Deut. 19:11-13). The law maintained the reverence for human life created in the image of God (Gen. 9:5-7).

The NT sets up government to avenge evil doing (Rom. 13:4), while noting God's role in avenging wrong against a brother (1 Thess. 4:6).

AVIM [Ā' vim], AVIMS, AVITES, AVVIM, AWITE 1. People who lived on the Philistine coast before the Philistines invaded about 1200 B.C. (Deut. 2:23). 2. City in the tribal territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:23).

AVITH [Ā' vith] City name meaning "ruin." Capital city of Hadad, king of Edom, before Israel had a king (Gen.36:35). Its location is unknown.

AWE, AWESOME Appears in different passages in different English translations as the translation of different Hebrew and Greek words. Of 10 occurrences in the NASB, it translates eight distinct Hebrew and Greek words. It appears only three times in KJV translating three different Hebrew words. NIV uses "awe" 16 times, repeating only six of the NASB usages. The term refers to an emotion combining honor, fear, and respect before someone of superior office or actions (Pss. 4:4; 33:8; 119:161 KJV) (Gen. 28:17; 1 Sam. 12:18; Matt. 9:8; Heb. 12:28 NIV). It most appropriately applies to God. See Fear; Reverence.

AWL Instrument or tool made of flint, bone, stone, or metal to bore holes. Biblical references refer to using the awl to pierce a servant's ear (Exod. 21:6; Deut. 15:17). Perhaps a ring or identification tag was placed in the hole. This marked the slave as a permanent slave for life. Excavators in Palestine unearth many such boring tools.

AWNING Usage in Ezek. 27:7 suggests a deck covering to protect the ship's passengers from the sun. It may be similar to the covering of Noah's ark (Gen. 8:13) and the tabernacle (Exod. 26:14).

AX, AX HEAD English translation of several Hebrew terms indicating cutting instruments used in normal small industry and in war. 1. Barzel is the Hebrew term for iron and is used for the iron portion of an ax (Isa. 10:34; 2 Kings 6:5). The ax was used to fell trees. Elisha was able through miraculous power to make the ax head float. 2. Garzen is a hatchet or a tool for cutting stone (Deut. 19:5; 20:19; 1 Kings 6:7; Isa. 10:15). It was made of iron and could be used to cut trees. The iron head was attached to a wooden handle. It was not to be used to destroy a city's trees in war. 3. Chereb is a weapon or tool used to destroy enemies' towers in battle (Ezek. 26:9). The term also is used for flint knives that Joshua used in circumcision (John 5:2), for two-sided daggers (Judg. 3:16), a tool to shape stone (Exod. 20:25), and of battle swords (Judg. 7:20). 4. Magzerah was a tool used in brickwork. David apparently forced the Ammonites to tear down their own city walls and then to produce bricks for Israel (2 Sam. 12:31). 5. Ma'atsad is the craftsman's tool (Jer. 10:3; NIV "chisel") produced by the blacksmith working with iron (Isa. 44:12 NASB, NRSV). It was apparently used to trim or prune trees or lumber. 6. Qardom was an iron tool which has to be sharpened (1 Sam. 13:20) and was used for cutting trees (Judg. 9:48). Skillful use of this tool made a person famous (Ps. 74:5). 7. Keylaph appears only in Ps. 74:6 and is variously translated: hammer (KJV, NASB, NRSV), hatchet (NIV), sledgehammer (TEV), or crowbar (some lexicons). 8. Kashshil appears only in Ps. 74:6 in combination with 7. above. It is variously translated as ax (KJV, NIV, TEV) or hatchet (NASB, NRSV). Whatever the precise nature of these tools, they could be used for destruction as well as construction. 9. Axine was used to chop down trees (Matt. 3:10).

AYYAH [Āy' yah] Place-name meaning "ruin." In the unclear Hebrew text of 1 Chron. 7:28, modern translations read Ayyah as a city on the border of Ephraim. Some identify this with Ai. Others follow a Greek text tradition that apparently read Gaza. See Ai.

AZAL [Ā' zāl] (KJV) See Azal.

AZALIAH [Āz-á-lī' áh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh has reserved.” Father of Shaphan, Josiah's scribe (2 Kings 22:3). See Shaphan.

AZANIAH [Āz-á-nī' áh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh listened.” Father of Levite who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:9).

AZARAEL [Āz-á-rá' ʾēl] (KJV, Neh. 13:36), AZAREEL [Āz' á-rē-ʾēl] (KJV), or AZAREL [Āz' á-rēl] Personal name meaning “God helped.” 1. David's soldier at Ziklag, skilled with bow and arrow and able to sling stones with either hand (1 Chron. 12:6). 2. Leader of a course of priests selected by lot under David (1 Chron. 25:18). 3. Leader of tribe of Dan under David (1 Chron. 27:22). 4. Priest who had married a foreign wife under Ezra (Ezra 10:41). 5. Father of Amashai, head of a priestly family who lived in Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh. 11:13). 6. Priest who played a musical instrument in time of Nehemiah (Neh. 13:36), probably the same as 5. above.

AZARIAH [Āz-á-rī' áh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh has helped.” 1. Son and successor of Amaziah as king of Judah (792-740 B.C.). Also called Uzziah. See Uzziah. 2. High priest under Solomon (1 Kings 4:2) listed as son of Zadok (1 Kings 4:2) or of Ahimaaz (1 Chron. 6:9), the son of Zadok (2 Sam. 15:27). If the latter is accurate, then son in 1 Kings 4:2 means descendant. 3. Son of Nathan in charge of the system of obtaining provisions for the court from the 12 government provinces (1 Kings 4:5). He would have supervised the persons listed in 1 Kings 4:7-19. 4. Great grandson of Judah (1 Chron. 2:8). 5. Member of the clan of Jerahmeel in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:38-39). 6. High priest, son of Johanan (1 Chron. 6:10). 7. High priest, son of Hilkiah (1 Chron. 6:13-14) and father of Seraiah, who is listed as Ezra's father (Ezra 7:1). The list in Ezra is not complete. Apparently some generations have been omitted. 8. Member of family of Kohath, the temple singers (1 Chron. 6:36). Apparently called Uzziah in 6:24. 9. A priest, son of Hilkiah (1 Chron. 9:11) may be same as 7. above. 10. Prophet, son of Oded, whose message gave King Asa (910-869 B.C.) courage to restore proper worship in Judah (2 Chron. 15:1-8). 11. Two sons of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah (873-848 B.C.) according to 2 Chron. 21:2. Perhaps the boys had different mothers, each of whom gave the son the common name Azariah. 12. Son of Jehoram, king of Judah (852-841) according to 2 Chron. 22:6, but the correct name is probably Ahaziah as in 2 Kings 8:29. Azariah represents a copyist's error in Chronicles. 13. Two military commanders of 100 men who helped Jehoiada, the high priest, depose and murder Athaliah as queen of Judah and install Joash as king (835-796). 14. High priest who led 80 priests to oppose King Uzziah of Judah (792-740) when he tried to burn incense in the temple rather than let the priests. God struck Uzziah with a dreaded skin disease (2 Chron. 26:16-21). 15. A leader of the tribe of Ephraim under Pekah, king of Israel (752-732 B.C.), who rescued captives Pekah had taken from Judah, cared for their physical needs, and returned them to Jericho (2 Chron. 28:5-15).

16. Levite whose son Joel helped cleanse the temple under Hezekiah, king of Judah (715-686) (2 Chron. 29:12-19). 17. A Levite who helped cleanse the temple (2 Chron. 29:12-19). See 16. above. 18. Chief priest under King Hezekiah who rejoiced with the king over the generous tithes and offerings of the people (2 Chron. 31:10-13). 19. Son of Meraioth in the list of high priests and father of Amariah (Ezra 7:3) Since the list in Ezra is incomplete, this Azariah may be the same as 6. above. 20. Helper of Nehemiah in rebuilding the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:23). 21. Man who returned from exile with Zerubbabel (Neh. 7:7) about 537 B.C. He is called Seraiah in Ezra 2:2. 22. Man who helped Ezra interpret the law to the people in Jerusalem (Neh. 8:7). 23. Man who put his seal on Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:2). 24. A leader of Judah, possibly a priest, who marched with Nehemiah and others on the walls of Jerusalem to celebrate the completion of rebuilding the city defense walls (Neh. 12:33). He may be identical with any one or all of 20-23. above. 25. Friend of Daniel renamed Abednego by Persian officials. God delivered him from the fiery furnace (Dan. 1:7; 4:1-30). See Abednego; Daniel. 26. Son of Hoshai and leader of Jewish people who tried to get Jeremiah to give them a word from God directing them to go to Egypt after the Babylonians destroyed Jerusalem. When Jeremiah said not to go, they accused him of lying (Jer. 42:1-43:7). Hebrew text reads Jezaniah in 42:1.

AZARIAHU [Āz-ā-ri' ā-hū] Long form of Azariah used by NASB, NIV in 2 Chron. 21:2 to differentiate two men named Azariah. See Azariah.

AZAZ [Ā' zāz] Personal name meaning “he is strong.” A descendant of tribe of Reuben (1 Chron. 5:8).

AZAZEL [Ā-zā-zēl] See Atonement; Scapegoat.

AZAZIAH [Ā-zā-zī' āh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh is strong.” 1. Levite David appointed to play the harp for the temple worship (1 Chron. 15:21). 2. Father of leader of tribe of Ephraim under David (1 Chron. 27:20). 3. Overseer among the priests under Hezekiah (715-686 B.C.) (2 Chron. 31:13).

AZBUK [Āz' bōk] Father of a Nehemiah who repaired Jerusalem under the leadership of Nehemiah, son of Hachaliah (Neh. 3:16).

AZEKAH [Ā-zē' kāh] Place-name meaning “cultivated ground.” City where Joshua defeated southern coalition of kings led by Adonizedek of Jerusalem (Josh. 10:10-11), as God cast hailstones from heaven on the fleeing armies. In the battle Joshua commanded the sun and moon to stand still (Josh. 10:12). Joshua allotted Azekah to Judah (Josh. 15:35). Near it the Philistines lined up their forces for battle against Saul (1 Sam. 17:1), resulting in the David and Goliath confrontation. Rehoboam, king of Judah (931-913 B.C.), built up its fortifications (2 Chron. 11:9). The tribe of Judah occupied it in Nehemiah's day (Neh. 11:30), after it had been one of the last cities to fall to Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon in 588 B.C. (Jer. 34:7). One of the letters found at Lachish tells of searching for signal lights from Azekah but not being able to see them. This can be dated to 588 B.C. An earlier Assyrian inscription, perhaps from 712 B.C. speaks of Azekah's location on a mountain ridge, being inaccessible like an eagle's nest, too strong for siege ramps and battering rams.

Later tradition connected Azekah with the tomb of the prophet Zechariah and then with Zachariah the father of John the Baptist, to whom a large church was dedicated. Thus the Madaba map from about 550 A.D. calls Azekah, “Beth Zechariah,” or “house of Zechariah” and pictures a large church there.

Azekah is located at Tell Zakariya five and one-half miles northeast of Beth Govrin above the Valley of Elah. Excavations show the site was occupied before 3000 B.C. and had a strong fortress in the period of the judges.

AZEL [Ā' zəl] Personal and place-name meaning “noble.” 1. Descendant of Saul in tribe of Benjamin and father of six sons (1 Chron. 8:37-38). 2. Unclear word in Hebrew text of Zech. 14:5 which may be a place-name, perhaps near Jerusalem, or a preposition meaning “near to,” “beside,” or a noun meaning “the side.” Translations vary: “Azal” (KJV, NRSV), “the other side” (TEV), “Azel” (NASB, NIV), “the side of it” (RSV).

AZEM [Ā' zəm] (KJV) See Ezem.

AZGAD [Āz' gād] Personal name meaning “Gad is strong.” 1. Clan of which 1,222 (Neh. 7:17 says 2,322) returned from exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel to Jerusalem in 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:12). One hundred ten more returned with Ezra about 458 B.C. (Ezra 8:12). 2. Levite who signed the covenant Nehemiah made to keep God's law (Neh. 10:15).

AZIEL [Ā-zī' əl] Short form of Jaaziel in 1 Chron. 15:20. See Jaaziel.

AZIZA [Ā-zī' zā] Personal name meaning “strong one.” Israelite who agreed under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife to help Israel remain true to God (Ezra 10:27).

AZMAVETH [Āz-mā' veth] Personal and place-name meaning “strong as death” or “death is strong.” 1. Member of David's elite 30 military heroes (2 Sam. 23:31). He lived in Barhum or perhaps Baharum (NRSV). See Baharum. 2. Descendant of Saul in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:36). 3. Father of two of David's military leaders (1 Chron. 12:3), probably identical with 1. above. 4. Treasurer of David's kingdom (1 Chron. 27:25). He, too, may be identical with 1. above. 5. City probably the same as Beth-azmaveth. Forty-two men of the city returned to Jerusalem from exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel in 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:24). Levites on the temple staff as singers lived there. It apparently is near Jerusalem, perhaps modern Hizmeh, five miles northeast of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:29). See Beth-azmaveth.

AZMON [Āz' mōn] Place-name meaning “bones.” Place on southern border of promised land (Num. 34:4). Joshua assigned it to Judah (Josh. 15:4). It is located near Ain el-Quseimeh, about 60 miles south of Gaza. Some would identify it with Ezem.

AZNOTH-TABOR [Āz' nōth-Ta' bōr] Place-name meaning “ears of Tabor.” A border town of the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. 19:34). It may be modern Umm Jebeil near Mount Tabor.

AZOR [Ā' zōr] Personal name of an ancestor of Jesus (Matt. 1:13-14).

AZOTUS [Ā-zō' tūs] See Ashdod; Philistines.

AZRIEL [Āz' rī-ēl] Personal name meaning “God is my help.” 1. Head of a family of eastern part of tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 5:24). 2. Head of tribe of Naphtali under David (1 Chron. 27:19). 3. Father of royal officer commanded to arrest Baruch, Jeremiah's scribe (Jer. 36:26).

AZRIKAM [Āz-rī' kām] Personal name meaning “my help stood up.” 1. Descendant of David after the exile (1 Chron. 3:23). 2. Descendant of Saul of tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:38). 3. Father of a Levite who led in resettling Jerusalem after the exile (1 Chron. 9:14). 4. Officer in charge of palace for Ahaz, king of Judah. Zicri, a soldier in Israel's army, killed him when Israel attacked Judah about 741 B.C. (2 Chron. 28:7).

AZUBAH [Ā-zū' bah] Personal name meaning “forsaken.” 1. Queen mother of Jehoshaphat (1 Kings 22:42), king of Judah (873-848 B.C.). 2. First wife of Caleb, son of Hezron (1 Chron. 2:18-19).

AZUR [Ā' zūr] (KJV, Jer. 28:1; Ezek. 11:1) See Azzur.

AZZAH (KJV, Deut. 2:23; 1 Kings 4:24; Jer. 25:20). See Gaza.

AZZAN [Āz' zān] Personal name meaning “he has proved to be strong.” Father of representative of tribe of Issachar in assigning territorial lots to the tribes after God gave Israel the promised land (Num. 34:26).

AZZUR [Äz' zur] Personal name meaning “one who has been helped.” 1. Jewish leader who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:17). 2. Father of Hananiah, the prophet, in Jeremiah's days (Jer. 28:1). 3. Father of Jaazaniah, Jewish leader in Jerusalem who plotted evil in Ezekiel's day (Ezek. 11:1).

Sea of Galilee from the Church of the Beatitudes.

BAAL [Ba' al] Lord of Canaanite religion and seen in the thunderstorms, Baal was worshiped as the god who provided fertility. He proved a great temptation for Israel. "Baal" occurs in the OT as a noun meaning "lord, owner, possessor, or husband," as a proper noun referring to the supreme god of the Canaanites, and often as the name of a man. According to 1 Chron. 5:5 Baal was a descendant of Reuben, Jacob's firstborn son, and the father of Beerah. Baal was sent into exile by Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria. The genealogical accounts of Saul's family listed in 1 Chron. 9:35-36 indicates that the fourth son of Jehiel was named Baal.

The noun comes from a verb that means to marry or rule over. The verb form occurs in the Hebrew text 29 times, whereas the noun occurs 166 times. The noun appears in a number of compound forms which are proper names for locations where Canaanite deities were worshiped, such as Baal-peor (Num. 25:5; Deut. 4:3; Ps. 106:28; Hos. 9:10), Baal-hermon (Judg. 3:3; 1 Chron. 5:23), and Baal-gad (Josh. 11:17; 12:7; 13:5). See Canaan.

James Newell

BAALAH [Ba' a-lah] Place-name meaning "wife, lady," or "residence of Baal."
1. City on northern border of tribe of Judah equated with Kirjath-jearim (Josh. 15:9-11). David kept the ark there before moving it to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 13:6). It is located at modern Deir el-Azar, eight miles west of Jerusalem. It is called Baale of Judah (2 Sam. 6:2) and may be the same as Kirjath-baal (Josh. 15:60). See Kirjath-jearim. 2. Town on southern border of Judah (Josh. 15:29) that may be same as Balah (Josh. 19:3) and as Bilhah (1 Chron. 4:29). Tribe of Simeon occupied it. Its location is unknown. 3. Mountain on Judah's northern border between Jabneel and Ekron. It may be the same as Mount Jearim.

BAALATH [Ba' a-lath] Place-name meaning "feminine Baal." City in original inheritance of tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:44). Same or different town which Solomon rebuilt (1 Kings 9:18). It may have been near Gezer on the road to Bethhoron and Jerusalem. Some would identify Solomon's town with Simeon's Balah, with Kirjath-jearim, or with Baalath-beer.

Statuette of Baal, the Canaanite weather god, from Minet-el-Beida (15th-14th century B.C.).

BAALATH-BEER [Ba' a-lath-be' er] Place-name meaning “the baal of the well” or the “lady of the well.” A city in the tribal allotment of Simeon (Josh. 19:8), identified with Ramath of the south (KJV) or Ramah of the Negev (NASB, NIV, NRSV). It may be identical with Baal (1 Chron. 4:33) and/or with Bealoth (Josh. 15:24).

BAALBEK See Heliopolis.

BAAL-BERITH [Bá' ál-beríth] In Judg. 8:33 a Canaanite deity whom the Israelites began to worship following the death of Gideon. The name means “lord of covenant,” and the god's temple was located at Shechem. The precise identity of this deity cannot be determined. The designation, “lord of covenant,” may mean that a covenant between the Israelites and the Shechemites was agreed to and annually renewed in his shrine. See Shechem.

BAALE (KJV), BAALE-JUDAH (NASB, NRSV) [Bá' á-le-jú' dáh] Place-name meaning “Baals of Judah” or “lords of Judah.” Second Samuel 6:2 may be read as “from the lords of Judah” or as “went from Baale-judah.” If the latter reading is correct, then Baale-judah is place-name where the ark of the covenant was before David took it to Jerusalem. First Chronicles 13:6 calls the place Baalah of Judah and identifies it with Kirjath-jearim. See Kirjath-jearim.

BAAL-GAD [Bá' ál-gád] Place-name meaning “Baal of Gad” or “lord of Gad.” Town representing northern limit of Joshua's conquests (Josh. 11:17) in Valley of Lebanon at foot of Mount Hermon. It has been variously located at modern Hasbeya and at Baalbek, over 50 miles east of Beirut where imposing ruins of Greek and Roman worship remain.

BAAL-HAMON [Bá' ál-há' món] Place-name meaning “lord of abundance.” Location of Solomon's vineyard according to Song 8:11.

BAAL-HANAN [Bá' ál-há' nán] Personal name meaning “Baal was gracious.” 1. King of Edom prior to any king ruling in Israel (Gen. 36:38). 2. Official under David in charge of olive and sycamore trees growing in Judean plain or Shephalah(1 Chron. 27:28).

BAAL-HAZOR [Bá' ál-há' zôr] Place-name meaning “Baal of Hazor.” Village where David's son Absalom held celebration of sheepshearing (2 Sam. 13:23). During festivities Absalom had his employees kill his brother Amnon, who had violated his sister Tamar. The village is modern Jebel Asur, five miles northeast of Bethel.

BAAL-HERMON [Bá' ál-hēr-mōn] Place-name meaning “Baal of Hermon” or “lord of Hermon.” A mountain and village Israel could not take from the Hivites, whom God left to test Israel (Judg. 3:3). It marked the Hivites' southern border and Manasseh's northern border (1 Chron. 5:23). Its location is unknown. Some would equate it with Baal-gad, others with modern Baneas or Caesarea Philippi.

BAALI [Bá' áli] Form of address meaning “my lord,” or “my Baal.” Hosea used a play on words to look to a day when Israel would no longer worship Baal (Hos. 2:16). He said Israel, the bride, would refer to Yahweh, her God and husband, as “my man” (Hb. ishi) but not as “my lord” (Hb. baali). Even though “baal” was a common word for lord or husband, Israel could not use it because it reminded them too easily of Baal, the Canaanite god. See Baal; Canaan.

BAALIM [Bá' álim] Hebrew plural of Baal. See Baal; Canaan.

BAALIS [Bá' ális] Personal name of king of Ammon who sent Ishmael to kill Gedaliah, governor of Judah immediately after Babylon captured Jerusalem and sent most of Judah's citizens into the exile (Jer. 40:14).

BAAL-MEON [Bá' ál-mē' on] Place-name meaning “lord of the residence” or “Baal of the residence.” City tribe of Reuben built east of Jordan (Num. 32:38), probably on the tribe's northern border. Mesha, king of Moab about 830 B.C., claims to have rebuilt Baal-meon, meaning he had captured it from Israel at that date. Ezekiel 25:9 pronounces judgment on Baal-meon as a city of Moab about the time of the exile in 587. Baal-meon is located at modern Main, 10 miles southwest of Heshbon and 10 miles east of the Dead Sea.

BAAL-PEOR [Bá' ál-pē' ór] In Num. 25:3 a Moabite deity that the Israelites worshiped when they had illicit sexual relations with Moabite women. The guilty Israelites were severely punished for this transgression, and the incident became a paradigm of sin and divine judgment for later generations of Israelites (Deut. 4:3; Ps. 106:28; Hos. 9:10). See Moab; Peor.

BAAL-PERAZIM [Bá' ál-pēr' á-zim] Place-name meaning “Lord of the breakthroughs” or “Baal of the breaches.” Place of David's initial victory over the Philistines after he became king of all Israel at Hebron, then captured and moved to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:20). The location is not known. It is probably identical with Mount Perazim (Isa. 28:21).

BAAL-SHALISHAH [Bá' ál-shāl' Y' sháh] Place-name meaning “Baal of Shalishah” or “lord of Shalishah.” Home of unnamed man who brought firstfruits to Elisha, who used them to feed a hundred men (2 Kings 4:42-44). The “land of Shalishah” was evidently in the tribal territory of Ephraim (1 Sam. 9:4). Baal-shalishah may be modern Kefr Thilth, 20 miles southwest of Shechem. See Shalishah.

BAAL-TAMAR [Bá' ál-tá' mār] Place-name meaning “Baal of the palm tree” or “lord of the palm tree.” Place where Israelites attacked and defeated tribe of Benjamin for killing concubine of traveling Levite (Judg. 20:33). It must have been near Gibeah. It may be Ras et-Tawil north of Jerusalem.

BAAL-ZEBUB [Bá' ál-zè' búb] Deity's name meaning “lord of the flies.” In 2 Kings 1:2 a Philistine deity from which the Israelite King Ahaziah sought help after injuring himself in a fall. Though the Philistines themselves may have used this name, it is more probable that it is intentionally used to distort the god's actual name. The problem of identification is further complicated by references in the NT. Jesus is reported to have used the name Beel-zebub in reference to the prince of demons (Matt. 10:25). Beel-zebub is clearly a variation of Baal-zebub. However, the Greek text of the NT has Beelzebul. The meaning of Beelzebul is disputed. One suggestion is “lord of the dwelling.” A second and more likely possibility is “lord of dung.” Regardless of the exact meaning of the name, Jesus clearly used it in reference to Satan. See Baal; Philistines; Satan.

BAAL-ZEPHON [Bá' ál-zè' phón] Place-name meaning “lord of the north” or “Baal of the north.” Place in Egypt near which Israel camped before miracle of crossing the sea (Exod. 14:2,9). The exact location is not known. Some suggest Tell Defenneh known in Egypt as Tahpanhes in the eastern Nile Delta. See Exodus.

BAANA [Bá' á-ná] or BAANAH Personal name of uncertain meaning. Some have suggested “son of grief” or “son of Anat.” English spelling variations reflect similar Hebrew spelling variations. 1. One of Solomon's district supervisors to provide food one month a year for the court. His territory encompassed the great central plain with the famous cities of Beth-shean, Taanach, and Megiddo (1 Kings 4:12). 2. Another district supervisor over Asher, the western slopes of Galilee in the north. His father Hushai may have been “David's friend” (2 Sam. 15:37). 3. Father of Zadok, who repaired walls of Jerusalem under Nehemiah (Neh. 3:4). 4. A captain of Ishbosheth's army after Saul died and Abner deserted to David and was killed by Joab. Baanah and his brother killed Ishbosheth and reported it to David, who had them killed (2 Sam. 4). 5. Father of Heleb, one of David's 30 heroes (2 Sam. 23:29). 6. Man who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylonian captivity about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:2). 7. One who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:27).

BAARA [Bá' á-rá] Personal name meaning “burning” or a name intentionally changed from one honoring Baal. Wife of Shaharaim in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:8).

BAASEIAH [Bá-á-sē' ah] Personal name of unknown meaning. A Levite ancestor of Asaph (1 Chron. 6:40).

BAASHA [Bá' á-shá] King of Israel who was at war against Asa, king of Judah (1 Kings 15:16). Baasha gained the throne of Israel by violence. He conspired against and killed his immediate predecessor Nadab, the son of Jeroboam I (1 Kings 15:27). Furthermore, he exterminated the entire line of Jeroboam (15:29). Baasha reigned over Israel for 24 years (908-886 B.C.). His capital was at Tirzah. He died, apparently from natural causes, and was succeeded by his son Elah. See Chronology of the Biblical Period; Israel; Tirzah.

BABBLER Common translation of a derogatory term the Epicureans and Stoics used against Paul in Athens (Acts 17:18). The Greek word literally means “seed picker” and was used of birds (especially crows) that lived by picking up seeds. It was applied to people who lived parasitically by picking up pieces of food off the merchants' carts. In the field of literature and philosophy the term was applied to those who plagiarize without the ability to understand or properly use what they had taken. The philosophers referred to Paul as a babbler because they considered Paul an ignorant plagiarist.

Another Greek word bebelos refers to something outside the religious sphere. It appears in 1 Tim. 4:7; 6:20; 2 Tim. 2:16; Heb. 12:16, usually in reference to chatter or babbling talk about worldly things, an activity Christians should avoid. In Hebrews it refers to a godless person.

BABEL [Ba' bel] Hebrew word meaning "confusion," derived from a root which means "to mix." It was the name given to the city that the disobedient descendants of Noah built so they would not be scattered over all the earth (Gen. 11:4, 9). Babel is also the Hebrew word for Babylon.

The tower and the city which were built were intended to be a monument of human pride, for they sought to "make a name" for themselves (Gen. 11:4). It was also a monument to mankind's continued disobedience. They had been commanded to fill up the earth but were seeking to avoid being scattered abroad (Gen. 9:1 ; 11:4). Further, it was a monument to human engineering skills, for the techniques of its building described the use of fired clay bricks as a substitute for stone. Bitumen, found in relative abundance in the Mesopotamian Valley, was used to bind the bricks together.

Ruins of numerous temple towers, called ziggurats, have been found in the region of Babylon. It is possible that ruins of the great temple tower to Marduk found in the center of ancient Babylon is the focus of this narrative.

To bring the people's monumental task to an end, God confused their language. The inspired writer apparently considered this to be the basis for the origin of the different human languages. When the builders were no longer able to communicate with one another, they then fled from one another in fear. The city of Babylon became to the OT writers the symbol of utter rebellion against God and remained so even into the NT (Rev. 17:1-5). See Babylon.

Robert L. Cate

BABOON NIV translation of tukkiyim (1 Kings 10:22; 2 Chron. 9:21). TEV and REB translate the same word as “monkeys.” KJV, NASB, and NRSV give the translation “peacocks” (but see NRSV margin). There is a similarity between tukkiyim and the Egyptian word for “ape” that leads many to accept baboon or monkey as the correct translation.

BABYLON City-state in southern Mesopotamia during OT times, which eventually became a large empire that absorbed the nation of Judah and destroyed Jerusalem.

History The city of Babylon was founded in unknown antiquity on the river Euphrates, about 50 miles south of modern Baghdad. The English names “Babylon” and “Babel” (Gen. 10:10; 11:9) are translated from the same Hebrew word [babel]. Babylon may have been an important cultural center during the period of the early Sumerian city-states (before 2000 B.C.), but the corresponding archaeological levels of the site are below the present water table and remain unexplored.

Relief of Nabonidus, king of Babylonia (556-539 B.C.) when Babylon fell to Cyrus. Here Nabonidus stands before emblems of the moon god, sun god, and war/love god.

Babylon emerged from anonymity shortly after 2000 B.C., a period roughly contemporary with the Hebrew patriarchs. At that time an independent kingdom was established in the city under a dynasty of Semitic westerners, or Amorites. Hammurabi (1792-1750 B.C.), the sixth king of this First Dynasty of Babylon, built a sizable empire through treaties, vassalage, and conquest. From his time forward, Babylon was considered to be the political seat of southern Mesopotamia, the region called Babylonia. The Amorite dynasty of Babylon reached its apex under Hammurabi. Subsequent rulers, however, saw their realm diminished, and in 1595 B.C. the Hittites sacked Babylon. After their withdrawal members of the Kassite tribe seized the throne. The Kassite Dynasty ruled for over four centuries, a period of relative peace but also stagnation. Little is known up to about 1350 B.C. when Babylonian kings corresponded with Egypt and struggled with the growing power of Assyria to the north. After a brief resurgence the Kassite dynasty was ended by the Elamite invasion in 1160 B.C.

When the Elamites withdrew to their Iranian homeland, princes native to the Babylonian city of Isin founded the Fourth Dynasty of Babylon. After a brief period of glory in which Nebuchadnezzar I (about 1124-1103 B.C.) invaded Elam, Babylon entered a dark age for most of the next two centuries. Floods, famine, widespread settlement of nomadic Aramean tribes, and the arrival of Chaldeans in the south plagued Babylon during this time of confusion.

During the period of the Assyrian Empire, Babylon was dominated by this warlike neighbor to the north. A dynastic dispute in Babylon in 851 B.C. brought the intervention of the Assyrian king Shalmaneser III. Babylon kings remained independent, but nominally subject to Assyrian “protection.”

A series of coups in Babylon prompted the Assyrian Tiglath-pileser III to enter Babylon in 728 B.C. and proclaim himself king under the throne name Pulu (Pul of 2 Kings 15:19; 1 Chron. 5:26). He died the next year. By 721 B.C. the Chaldean Marduk-apal-iddina, Merodach-baladan of the OT, ruled Babylon. With Elamite support he resisted the advances of the Assyrian Sargon II in 720 B.C. Babylon gained momentary independence, but in 710 B.C. Sargon attacked again. Merodach-baladan was forced to flee to Elam. Sargon, like Tiglath-pileser before him, took the throne of Babylon. As soon as Sargon died in 705 B.C., Babylon and other nations, including Judah under King Hezekiah, rebelled from Assyrian domination. Merodach-baladan had returned from Elam to Babylon. It is probably in this context that he sent emissaries to Hezekiah (2 Kings 20:12-19; Isa. 39). In 703 B.C. the new Assyrian king, Sennacherib, attacked Babylon. He defeated Merodach-baladan, who again fled. He ultimately died in exile. After considerable intrigue in Babylon, another Elamite-sponsored revolt broke out against Assyria. In 689 B.C. Sennacherib destroyed the sacred city of Babylon in retaliation. His murder, by his own sons (2 Kings 19:37) in 681 B.C., was interpreted by Babylonians as divine judgment for this unthinkable act.

Esarhaddon, Sennacherib's son, immediately began the rebuilding of Babylon to win the allegiance of the populace. At his death the crown prince Ashurbanipal ruled over Assyria, while another son ascended the throne of Babylon. All was well until 651 B.C. when the Babylonian king rebelled against his brother. Ashurbanipal finally prevailed and was crowned king of a resentful Babylon.

Assyrian domination died with Ashurbanipal in 627 B.C. In 626 B.C. Babylon fell into the hands of a Chaldean chief, Nabopolassar, first king of the Neo-Babylonian Empire. In 612, with the help of the Medes, the Babylonians sacked the Assyrian capital Nineveh. The remnants of the Assyrian army rallied at Haran in north Syria, which was abandoned at the approach of the Babylonians in 610 B.C. Egypt, however, challenged Babylon for the right to inherit Assyria's empire. Pharaoh Necho II, with the last of the Assyrians (2 Kings 23:29-30), failed in 609 to retake Haran. In 605 B.C. Babylonian forces under the crown prince Nebuchadnezzar routed the Egyptians at the decisive Battle of Carchemish (Jer. 46:2-12). The Babylonian advance, however, was delayed by Nabopolassar's death that obliged Nebuchadnezzar to return to Babylon and assume power.

Painted relief of a bull from the famous Ishtar Gate of Babylon.

Reconstruction of ancient Babylon.

In 604 and 603 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar II (605-562 B.C.), king of Babylon, campaigned along the Palestinian coast. At this time Jehoiakim, king of Judah, became an unwilling vassal of Babylon. A Babylonian defeat at the border of Egypt in 601 probably encouraged Jehoiakim to rebel. For two years Judah was harassed by Babylonian vassals (2 Kings 24:1-2). Then, in December of 598 B.C., Nebuchadnezzar marched on Jerusalem. Jehoiakim died that same month, and his son Jehoiachin surrendered the city to the Babylonians on March 16, 597 B.C. Many Judeans, including the royal family, were deported to Babylon (2 Kings 24:6-12). Ultimately released from prison, Jehoiachin was treated as a king in exile (2 Kings 25:27-30; Jer. 52:31-34). Texts excavated in Babylon show that rations were allotted to him and five sons.

Nebuchadnezzar appointed Zedekiah over Judah. Against the protests of Jeremiah, but with promises of Egyptian aid, Zedekiah revolted against Babylon in 589 B.C. In the resultant Babylonian campaign, Judah was ravaged and Jerusalem besieged. An abortive campaign by the Pharaoh Hophra gave Jerusalem a short respite, but the attack was renewed (Jer. 37:4-10). The city fell in August of 587 B.C. Zedekiah was captured, Jerusalem burned, and the temple destroyed (Jer. 52:12-14). Many more Judeans were taken to their exile in Babylonia (2 Kings 25:1-21; Jer. 52:1-30).

Apart from his military conquests, Nebuchadnezzar is noteworthy for a massive rebuilding program in Babylon itself. The city spanned the Euphrates and was surrounded by an 11-mile long outer wall that enclosed suburbs and Nebuchadnezzar's summer palace. The inner wall was wide enough to accommodate two chariots abreast. It could be entered through eight gates, the most famous of which was the northern Ishtar Gate, used in the annual New Year Festival and decorated with reliefs of dragons and bulls in enameled brick. The road to this gate was bordered by high walls decorated by lions in glazed brick behind which were defensive citadels. Inside the gate was the main palace built by Nebuchadnezzar with its huge throne room. A cellar with shafts in part of the palace may have served as the substructure to the famous "Hanging Gardens of Babylon," described by classical authors as one of the wonders of the ancient world. Babylon contained many temples, the most important of which was Esagila, the temple of the city's patron god, Marduk. Rebuilt by Nebuchadnezzar, the temple was lavishly decorated with gold. Just north of Esagila lay the huge stepped tower of Babylon, a ziggurat called Etemenanki and its sacred enclosure. Its seven stories perhaps towered some 300 feet above the city. No doubt Babylon greatly impressed the Jews taken there in captivity and provided them with substantial economic opportunities.

The ruins of the Hanging Gardens of Babylon (modern Iraq), one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

Nebuchadnezzar was the greatest king of the Neo-Babylonian Period and the last truly great ruler of Babylon. His successors were insignificant by comparison. He was followed by his son Awel-marduk (561-560 B.C.), the Evil-Merodach of the OT (2 Kings 25:27-30), Neriglissar (560-558 B.C.), and Labashi-Marduk (557 B.C.), murdered as a mere child. The last king of Babylon, Nabonidus (556-539 B.C.), was an enigmatic figure who seems to have favored the moon god, Sin, over the national god, Marduk. He moved his residence to Tema in the SyroArabian Desert for 10 years, leaving his son Belshazzar (Dan. 5:1) as regent in Babylon. Nabonidus returned to a divided capital amid a threat from the united Medes and Persians. In 539 B.C. the Persian Cyrus II (the Great) entered Babylon without a fight. Thus ended Babylon's dominant role in Near Eastern politics.

Babylon remained an important economic center and provincial capital during the period of Persian rule. The Greek historian Herodotus, who visited the city in 460 B.C., could still remark that "it surpasses in splendor any city of the known world." Alexander the Great, conqueror of the Persian Empire, embarked on a program of rebuilding in Babylon that was interrupted by his death in 323 B.C. After Alexander, the city declined economically but remained an important religious center until NT times. The site was deserted by A.D. 200.

In Judeo-Christian thought Babylon the metropolis, like the Tower of Babel, became symbolic of man's decadence and God's judgment. "Babylon" in Rev. 14:8; 16:19; 17:5; 18:2; and probably in 1 Pet. 5:13 refers to Rome, the city which personified this idea for early Christians.

The site of the ancient city of Babylon in modern Iraq.

Religion Babylonian religion is the best known variant of a complex and highly polytheistic system of belief common throughout Mesopotamia. Of the thousands of recognized gods, only about 20 were important in actual practice. The most important are reviewed here.

Anu, Enlil, and Ea were patron deities of the oldest Sumerian cities and were each given a share of the universe as their dominion. Anu, god of the heavens and patron god of Uruk (biblical "Erech," Gen. 10:10) did not play a very active role. Enlil of Nippur was god of the earth. The god of Eridu, Ea, was lord of the subterranean waters and the god of craftsmen.

After the political rise of Babylon, Marduk was also considered one of the rulers of the cosmos. The son of Ea and patron god of Babylon, Marduk began to attain the position of prominence in Babylonian religion in the time of Hammurabi. In subsequent periods Marduk (Merodach in Jer. 50:2) was considered the leading god and was given the epithet Bel (equivalent to the Canaanite term Baal), meaning “lord” (Isa. 46:1; Jer. 50:2; 51:44). Marduk's son Nabu (the Nebo in Isa. 46:1), god of the nearby city of Borsippa, was considered the god of writing and scribes and became especially exalted in the Neo-Babylonian Period.

Astral deities—gods associated with heavenly bodies—included the sun god Shamash, the moon god Sin, and Ishtar, goddess of the morning and evening star (the Greek Aphrodite and Roman Venus). Sin was the patron god of Ur and Haran, both associated with Abraham's origins (Gen. 11:31). Ishtar, the Canaanite Astarte/ Ashtaroth (Judg. 10:6; 1 Sam. 7:3-4; 1 Kings 11:5), had a major temple in Babylon and was very popular as the “Queen of Heaven” (Jer. 7:18; 44:17-19).

Other gods were associated with a newer city or none at all. Adad, the Canaanite Hadad, was the god of storms and thus both beneficial and destructive. Ninurta, god of war and hunting, was patron for the Assyrian capital Calah.

A number of myths concerning Babylonian gods are known, the most important of which is the Enuma elish, or Creation Epic. This myth originated in Babylon, where one of its goals was to show how Marduk became the leading god. It tells of a cosmic struggle in which, while other gods were powerless, Marduk slew Tiamat (the sea goddess, representative of chaos). From the blood of another slain god, Ea created mankind. Finally, Marduk was exalted and installed in his temple, Esagila, in Babylon.

The Enuma elish was recited and reenacted as part of the 12-day New Year Festival in Babylon. During the festival statues of other gods arrived from their cities to “visit” Marduk in Esagila. Also, the king did penance before Marduk and “took the hand of Bel” in a ceremonial procession out of the city through the Ishtar Gate.

The gods were thought of as residing in cosmic localities but also as present in their image, or idol, and living in the temple as a king in his palace. The gilded wooden images were in human form, clothed in a variety of ritual garments, and given three meals a day. On occasion the images were carried in ceremonial processions or to visit one another in different sanctuaries. It is very difficult to know what meaning the images and temples of the various gods had for the average person and even more difficult to ascertain what comfort or help he might expect through worship of them. It seems clear, however, that beyond the expectations of health and success in his earthly life, he was without eternal hope. See Babel; Hammurabi.

Daniel C. Browning, Jr.

BACA [Bá' cá] Place-name meaning “Balsam tree” or “weeping.” A valley in Ps. 84:6 which reflects a poetic play on words describing a person forced to go through a time of weeping who found God turned tears into a well, providing water.

BACHRITE [Bäch' rit] KJV spelling of Becherites (NASB, NRSV) or Bekerite (NIV). See Becher.

BACKSLIDING Term used by the prophets to describe Israel's faithlessness to God (Isa. 57:17 RSV; Jer. 3:14, 22; 8:5; 31:22; 49:4; Hos. 11:7; 14:4). In these passages it is clear that Israel had broken faith with God by serving other gods and by living immoral lives. See Apostasy.

BADGER Burrowing mammal; largest of the weasel family. It is a carnivore with claws on toed feet and considered unclean by the Israelites. The KJV uses “badger skins” in Exod. 26:14; 36:19 and other passages, but other translations disagree. This animal has also been identified as the rock hyrax or coney. See Badger Skins; Coney.

BADGER SKINS KJV translation of the skin used to cover the tabernacle (Exod. 26:14; 36:19; 39:34), the ark, and other sacred objects (Num. 4:6-14). The leather was also used for shoes (Ezek. 16:10). Bible students do not agree on the kind of skin intended. The KJV translation of “badger skin” seems doubtful, as the word used is not the normal word for badger. The badger was considered an unclean animal making it very doubtful that the skin of the badger would have been used as a covering for sacred objects. Additionally, it is doubtful that the badger was plenteous enough to provide the necessary hides. The translation of “goatskin” (RSV) also fails on the grounds that the word used is not a normal word for goat. Thus NRSV reads “fine leather” with a note that the meaning of the Hebrew is uncertain. Some have proposed the simple translation “leather,” noting the similarity of the Hebrew and Egyptian words for leather (TEV). Others have proposed dolphin or “porpoise skins,” noting the similarities between the Hebrew and Arabic words for dolphin or porpoise (NASB). Still others have proposed “hides of sea cows” (that is, dugongs, REB)—sea creatures that have been found in the Red Sea (NIV). See Sea Cow.

Phil Logan

BAG Flexible container that may be closed for holding, storing, or carrying something. 1. Large bags in which large amounts of money could be carried (2 Kings 5:23; Isa. 3:22; KJV, “crisping pins”). 2. Small bag (purse) used to carry a merchant's weights (Deut. 25:13; Prov. 16:11; Mic. 6:11) or smaller sums of money (Prov. 1:14; Isa. 46:6). This may be the same as the purse mentioned in the NT (Luke 10:4; 12:33; 22:35-36). 3. Cloth tied up in a bundle is translated as “bag” (Job 14:17; Prov. 7:20; Hag. 1:6) or “bundle” (Gen. 42:35; 1 Sam. 25:29; Song 1:13). The size of the bundle would depend on its use. This type of bag was used to hold money (Gen. 42:35; Prov. 7:20; Hag. 1:6; see 2 Kings 12:10 where the verb form, “to tie up in bags,” is used) or “something loose” such as myrrh (Song 1:13). This term for bag is used figuratively to speak of one's sins being bundled up (and perhaps sealed, “bag of transgressions,” Job 14:17) and one's life being bundled up and protected by God (“bundle of the living,” 1 Sam. 25:29). 4. The shepherd's bag (KJV “scrip” or “vessel”). Used by shepherds and travelers to carry one or more days' supplies, it was made of animal skins and slung across the shoulder. Joseph's brothers carried grain in such a bag (Gen. 42:25). Saul's bag was empty of bread when he went to meet Samuel (1 Sam. 9:7), and David collected stones in his shepherd's bag when confronting Goliath (1 Sam. 17:40,49). An Israelite traveler whose bag of provisions was empty could eat from a fellow Israelite's vineyard but was not permitted to fill his bag for the rest of the journey (Deut. 23:24). Jesus commanded His disciples not to carry a bag when He sent them out to preach (Matt. 10:10; Mark 6:8; Luke 9:3; 10:4). They were to be totally dependent on God and the hospitality and support of God's people (cp. Num. 18:31; 1 Cor. 9:3-14). The disciples learned from this experience that they would be cared for, but because of the critical nature of what they were about to face, Jesus later instructed His disciples to begin carrying a purse, bag, and—very curiously—a sword (Luke 22:35-36). The Hebrew word for shepherd's bag is also translated as “carriage.” See Carriage. 5. Large sack used to carry grain (Gen. 42:25,27,35; Josh. 9:4; Lev. 11:32). The same Hebrew word is translated as sackcloth worn during times of mourning or humiliation. See Sackcloth. 6. KJV translates glossokomon as “bag” in John 12:6; 13:29. The glossokomon was actually a money box. Phil Logan

BAGGAGE See Carriage.

BAGPIPE Modern translation of a musical instrument translated as “dulcimer” by the KJV (Dan. 3:5,10,15). See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

BAHARUM [Bá-há' rŭm] NRSV reading of Baharumite (KJV, NASB, NIV). A person from Bahurim. See Bahurim.

BAHURIM [Bá-hŭ' rĭm] Place-name meaning “young men.” Village on road from Jerusalem to Jericho in tribal territory of Benjamin. David demanded Ishbosheth, Saul's son, to send back Michal, Saul's daughter and David's wife. Ishbosheth took her from her husband Phaltiel, who followed her weeping to Bahurim until Abner, the general, forced him to return home (2 Sam. 3:16). When David fled from his son Absalom, a kinsman of Saul named Shimei met him at Bahurim, cursed him, and threw stones at his party. David prevented immediate punishment (2 Sam. 16:5; 19:16). Two messengers taking secret messages about Absalom from the priests hid from Absalom's servants at Bahurim (2 Sam. 17:18). Solomon followed David's orders and had Shimei of Bahurim killed (1 Kings 2:8-9,36-46). Azmaveth, one of David's valiant soldiers, was from Bahurim (1 Chron. 11:33). Second Samuel 23:31 lists the city as Barhum, due to a copyist's mistake. Bahurim was probably located at modern Ras et-Tmim, east of Mount Scopus near Jerusalem.

BAJITH [Bā' jīth] (KJV, Isa. 15:2) Modern translations read “temple.” KJV interprets as name of Moabite worship place.

BAKBAKKAR [Bāk-bāk' kār] Levite living in Judah after the exile (1 Chron. 9:15).

BAKBUK [Bāk' būk] Personal name meaning “bottle.” Levite who was a temple servant after returning from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:51 ; Neh. 7:53).

BAKBUKIAH [Bāk-bū-kī' āh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh's bottle.” Leader among the Levites in Jerusalem after the exile (Neh. 11:17; 12:9,25).

BAKEMEATS Old English term for any food prepared by a baker.

BAKER'S STREET Jerusalem street known as “baker's street” where most, if not all, the bakeries of the city were located. It was common in ancient cities for trades and crafts to locate near others of the same kind. In all likelihood the baker's residence was part of the bakery. Zedekiah promised Jeremiah, whom he had imprisoned, that he would have food for as long as bread was available on baker's street (Jer. 37:21).

BAKING OT speaks most often of the baking of bread and cakes, which were the main part of the meal for Hebrews and Canaanites alike (Gen. 19:3; Exod. 12:39; Lev. 26:26; 1 Kings 17:12-13; Isa. 44:15). The bread of the presence (Lev. 24:5) and other offerings (Lev. 2:4-6) were also baked. See Bread; Bread of the Presence; Cooking and Heating; Food; Kneading, Kneading Bowl.

The village baker prepares dough for baking in the stone oven on his left.

BALAAM [Ba' lam] Non-Israelite prophet whom Balak, king of Moab, promised a fee if he would curse the invading Israelites.

Old Testament Balaam was one of many prophets of eastern religions who worshiped all the gods of the land. Many of these false teachers had great power and influence. When they pronounced a blessing or a curse, it was considered as true prophecy. When Moses led his people across the wilderness, God commanded him not to attack Edom or Moab (Deut. 2:4-9). He did not. When Edom attacked, "Israel turned away from him" (Num. 20:21). As the great nation journeyed north on the east side of Jordan, King Balak of Moab faced the invasion of Israel. Balak sought a strategy other than battle to stop Moses. He decided to use a prophet to curse Israel. Balaam was chosen; Balak sent his messengers with fees to secure Balaam's services. Balaam asked God's permission to curse Israel. Permission was refused, but Balaam journeyed to confer further with Balak. On this journey Balaam's donkey talked with him as he traveled a narrow trail (Num. 22:21-30; 2 Pet. 2:16). Here Balaam clearly understood that an angel's drawn sword enforced his obedience to speak only God's message to Balak. Later in four vivid messages Balaam insisted that God would bless Israel (Num. 23-24). God used Balaam to preach truth. He even spoke of a future star and scepter (Num. 24:17), a prophecy ultimately fulfilled in the coming of Jesus as the Messiah. Balak's actions brought God's anger upon Moab (Deut. 23:3-6). In a battle against the Midianites, Balaam died (Num. 31:8; Josh. 13:22). Balaam could not curse Israel, but he taught the Moabites to bring the men of Israel into Baal worship with its immorality. For this God would punish Israel. What Balaam could not accomplish with a curse he did through seductive means.

New Testament Peter warned against false teachers and described their destruction. He referred to the fallen angels, the watery destruction of the unbelievers in Noah's time, and the fiery judgment on lawless Sodom and Gomorrah in Lot's day. Peter described his generation of false leaders as those with eyes full of adultery, who never stop sinning by seducing the unstable. He further said that they bore a curse as experts in greed. Peter wrote that they left the straight way and followed the way of Balaam (2 Pet. 2:15). In Rev. 2:14 the church at Pergamum was complimented for faithfulness under persecution but also warned that some followed after Balaam in offering meat to idols and in immorality.

Lawson G. Hatfield

BALAC [Bá' lác] (KJV) See Balak.

BALADAN [BáI' á-dán] Akkadian personal name meaning "God gave a son." Father of Merodach-baladan, king of Babylon (722-711; 705-703 B.C.). See Merodach-baladan.

BALAH [Bá' láh] Place-name meaning "used, worn out." City in tribal territory of Simeon (Josh. 19:3), apparently the same as Baalah (Josh. 15:29) and Bilhah (1 Chron. 4:29). Location in southwest Judah is unknown.

BALAK [Bá' lák] In Num. 22:2 the king of Moab who sent for Balaam the prophet to pronounce a curse on the Israelites. Balaam, however, spoke no curse; and Balak was denied a military victory over Israel. See Balaam; Moab.

BALANCES Used to measure weights early in the development of civilization. Balances were well-known to the Hebrews and in common use in the OT (Lev. 19:36; Job 6:2; Hos. 12:7). They consisted of two pans hung on cords attached to a balancing beam. The beam was suspended by a cord in its center. Sometimes the beam was suspended by a ring or hook. Sometimes balances were held in the hand. The Hebrews probably used the common balances of Egypt, which are shown in Egyptian tomb reliefs and papyri writings.

Balances were the basis of economic life. Money came in weighted units of gold and silver. These had to be weighed in the balance for every business transaction or purchase (Jer. 32:9-10). Balances could be easily manipulated, especially by having weights that did not measure up to the proper amount or by having two sets of weights, one for buying and one for selling. God called on Israel for economic justice that began with proper weights and balances (Prov. 11:1; 16:11; 20:23; Ezek. 45:9-12; Hos. 12:7; Amos 8:5; Mic. 6:10-11). In a figurative sense the balance was employed to ask for a fair trial or judgment for the persecuted (Job 31:6; Ps. 62:9).

Balances help teach about God. Only He can weigh the mountains in a balance (Isa. 40:12-13). Just balances show a person belongs to Him (Prov. 16:11), while foolish people weigh out lavish amounts of gold to make idols to worship (Isa. 46:6). Jimmy Albright

BALD LOCUST (KJV, Lev. 11:22) See Insects; Locust.

BALDNESS Natural baldness was apparently rare in Israel. It is mentioned only in the Levitical laws on leprosy (Lev. 13:40-43), where the bald man is declared “clean” unless the bald area has evidence of redness or swelling. Archaeology has uncovered no depictions of bald men from Israel. Elisha was ridiculed for being bald, but he may have shaved his head to mourn Elijah's departure (2 Kings 2:23). Shaving the head for appearance or in grieving for the dead was prohibited by law (Lev. 21:5; Deut. 14:1, and especially for priests (Ezek. 44:20). However, Isaiah told of God's calling the people to acknowledge their sin with baldness and the wearing of sackcloth (Isa. 22:12). A shorn head is frequently mentioned in conjunction with shaving the beard and wearing sackcloth to signify loss of loved ones or loss of hope (Isa. 3:24; 15:2-3; Jer. 48:37). Deuteronomy 21:11-13 may refer to a practice of making captives bald, possibly to baldness in mourning, or to a symbol of a change in lifestyle. Ezekiel described men made to work so hard “every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled” (Ezek. 29:18), but there is no evidence that slaves were forced to shave their heads. See Grief and Mourning; Hair; Leprosy.

Tim Turnham

BALLAD SINGERS Refers to the makers and repeaters of proverbs (Num. 21:27). KJV “they that speak in proverbs” gives that sense.

BALM Aromatic resin or gum widely used in the ancient Near East for cosmetic and medical purposes. Egyptians used them for embalming. Despite the widespread usage, balm is difficult to identify. Ancient writers refer to balm by a variety of names, which adds to the difficulty of identification. Most ancient references seem to be to the resin from Balsamodendron opobalsamum or balm of Gilead. At times the reference seems to be to Balanites aegyptiaca Delile—a small shrub that still grows in North Africa and exudes a sticky resin used for medicinal purposes (Gen. 37:25; Jer. 8:22; 46:11; 51:8). In another place the mastic tree (Pistacia lentiscus) seems to be referred to (Gen. 43:11). A yellow aromatic resin was extracted from the mastic tree by cutting the branches.

BALM OF GILEAD Substance known in the ancient world for its medical properties. Exported from Gilead to Egypt and Phoenicia (Gen. 37:25; Ezek. 27:17). See Balm.

BALSAM Translation of two Hebrew words. Baka'is translated as “balsam trees” in the modern versions (2 Sam. 5:23-24; 1 Chron. 14:14-15 NASB, NIV, NRSV, TEV). The KJV reads “mulberry trees,” while REB has “aspens.” Neither the balsam nor mulberry tree has been known to grow around Jerusalem, making the identification of the tree uncertain. Poplar and mastic tree have also been suggested as translations. Balsam is also a translation of basam in the NASB, where other versions have “spice” and “spices” (Song 5:1,13; 6:2).

BAMAH [Bá' mäh] Hebrew noun meaning “back, high place.” Word is used frequently to describe places of worship, usually false worship of Yahweh containing Canaanite elements. In Ezek. 20:29 a particular place is named Bamah in a wordplay ridiculing high places. If a location was intended for Bamah, it can no longer be found. See High Place.

BAMOTH [Bá' mōth] Place-name and common noun meaning “high places.” A place in Moab where Israel stayed during the wilderness wanderings (Num. 21:19-20). Some would equate it with Bamoth-baal.

BAMOTH-BAAL [Bá' mōth-bá' al] Place-name meaning “high places of Baal.” Mesha, king of Moab about 830 B.C., mentioned it in the Moabite stone. Numbers 22:41 speaks of Bamoth or high places of Baal near the Arnon River. There Balak and Balaam could see all Israel. Joshua 13:17 lists it as a city Moses gave the tribe of Reuben. It may be modern Gebel Atarus.

BAN See Accursed; Anathema.

BAND (KJV, Matt. 27:27; Mark 15:16) See Battalion; Cohort.

BAND, MAGIC See Magic Bands.

BANGLES See Anklet.

BANI [Bá' ní] Personal name meaning “built.” 1. Man from tribe of Gad in David's special 30 warriors (2 Sam. 23:36). 2. Levite descended from Merari (1 Chron. 6:46). 3. Ancestor of Uthai of tribe of Judah who was among first Israelites to return to Palestine from Babylonian exile about 537 B.C. (1 Chron. 9:4). 4. Original ancestor of clan of whom 642 returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:10). Nehemiah 7:15 spells the name Binnui and says 648 returned. Same clan apparently had members who had married foreign wives and agreed to divorce them to avoid bringing religious temptation to the covenant community (Ezra 10:29, 34, 38). 5. Father of Rehum, a Levite who helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:17). May be same man who helped Ezra interpret the law to the people (Neh. 8:7), led the worship service of repentance leading to Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 9:4-5; a second Bani was also involved here), sealed Nehemiah's covenant along with the second Bani (Neh. 10:13-14). His son Uzzi was leader (chief officer) of the Levites (Neh. 11:22).

BANKING Ancient Israel had no lending institutions or banks in the modern sense. Commercial transactions and the lending of credit were entirely in the hands of private individuals, landowners, and merchants. Contemporary cultures in Mesopotamia lent money or produced at interest (in some cases as much as 33 1/3 percent per annum). The temptation among the Israelites to do this was suppressed by laws forbidding the charging of interest on loans (Exod. 22:25; Lev. 25:36-37; Ezek. 18:8). According to these statutes, only foreigners could be charged interest on a debt (Deut. 23:20).

Pledges were sometimes required to guarantee a loan (Gen. 38:17), but essential items, like a cloak, could not be kept past nightfall (Deut. 24:12; Amos 2:8). A strict protocol of debt collection was also to be followed with the lender forbidden to enter the home of the debtor to “fetch his pledge” (Deut. 24:10-11). In periods of famine or high taxation a man might mortgage his home and fields, pledging his labor as a debt-slave or the labor of his family to satisfy the loan (Neh. 5:1-5; Ps. 109:11). Abuse of this system occurred often enough that the prophets condemned it (Neh. 5:6-13; Ezek. 22:12). Proverbs called it folly (17:18; 22:26).

The widespread introduction of coined money after 500 B.C. and the expansion of travel and commerce in the Roman Empire aided the establishment of banking institutions in the NT period. Money lending (Gk., trapezites, from the table trapeza where business was conducted) was a common and acceptable activity in the cities. Jesus' parables of the talents (Matt. 25:14-30) and the pounds (Luke 19:11-27) lend credence to the practice of giving sums to the bankers to invest or to draw interest. The older custom of burying one's money for safekeeping (Josh. 7:21) Jesus condemned as “wicked and slothful” (Matt. 25:25-27 KJV).

Some who were involved in finance, however, took advantage of the large number of currencies in circulation in Palestine. Farmers and merchants came to them to weigh coinage and exchange it for the Tyrian drachma favored in the city. The regulations regarding the temple tax in Jerusalem also worked in the financiers' favor. The “money changers,” known as kollubistes, charged a fee of 12 grains of silver (a kollubos) and set up their tables in the Court of the Gentiles. They exchanged foreign currency for the silver didrachma required by the law (Matt. 17:24). Jesus' cleansing of the temple may have been in part a response to the unfair practices of these money changers (Matt. 21:12-13; Mark 11:15-17; John 2:14-16).

With sums coming into the temple from Jews throughout the empire, the temple itself became a bank, lending money to finance business, construction, and other programs. Pilate raised a storm of protest when he tapped one of the temple funds (Corban), which was to be used exclusively for religious purposes, to build an aqueduct. After the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70, the Roman emperor Vespasian ordered the continued payment of the tax and its deposit in the temple of Jupiter.

Victor H. Matthews

BANKRUPTCY Declaring bankruptcy as a legal means of escaping debt was not an option during the biblical period. If a person could not repay his debts, his creditors could seize his property (Neh. 5:3-4; Ps. 109:11) or children (Exod. 21:7-11; 2 Kings 4:1-7; Neh. 5:5; Job 24:9) until sufficient payment was deemed to have been made, or the debtor himself could be sold into slavery (Lev. 25:39-43; cp. Prov. 22:7) or imprisoned (Luke 12:58-59).

The regular remission of debts in ancient Israel (Deut. 15:1-3) was never intended to encourage irresponsible borrowing. Rather, the writers of the Bible simply expected that God's people would repay their debts, even if by doing so they would incur great loss (Exod. 22:14; cp. Ps. 15:4). Those who did not repay their debts were considered to be wicked (Ps. 37:21) and foolish (cp. Luke 14:28-29).

Paul H. Wright

BANNER Sign carried to give a group a rallying point. Hebrew terms translated with the English word “banner” are degel and nes. A third term, 'ot (sign), seems related to these, as degel and 'ot appear in the same verse (Num. 2:2), “Every man of the children of Israel shall pitch by his own standard (degel), with the ensign ('ot) of their father's house.” The terms may describe two different banners, or the terms may be in parallel, expressing the same thing in different words. A banner was usually a flag or a carved figure of an animal, bird, or reptile. It may have been molded from bronze, as was the serpent in Num. 21:8-9. Each tribe of Israel may have had some such animal figures as their standard, or banner. The banner was used as a rallying point for groups with a common interest, such as a call for an army to assemble, or as a signal that a battle was to begin. When the Israelites left Sinai for the land of Canaan, they marched under the banner of four major tribes: Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan (Num. 10). The prophet Isaiah used the term in reference to a signal God would raise against Babylon as a warning of impending destruction (Isa. 13:2). In Isa. 49:22 God's upraised hand is a signal (nes) for the nations to bring the sons of the exiles home to the land of Canaan. The practice of using banners, or standards, was widespread in ancient times in many cultures and lands. Israel probably borrowed the custom from her neighbors.

Bryce Sandlin

BANQUET Elaborate meal, sometimes called a “feast.” In the OT and NT banquets and feasts are prominent in sealing friendships, celebrating victories, and for other joyous occasions (Dan. 5:1; Luke 15:22-24). The idea of hospitality ran deep in the thought of those in the Near East (Gen. 18:1-8; Luke 11:5-8).

Most banquets were held in the evening after the day's work. Usually only men were invited. The women served the food when no servant was present. Hosts sent invitations (Matt. 22:3-4) and sometimes made elaborate preparations for the guests. Those who dined reclined on bedlike seats and lay at right angles to the table. Even though our English translations usually speak of “sitting down” at a meal, the Greek actually means “recline” (Mark 6:39; Luke 12:37).

Typical foods served at banquets were fish, bread, olives, various kinds of vegetables, cheeses, honey, dates, and figs. Beef or lamb was used only by the rich or on special occasions (Mark 14:12; Luke 15:23). Wine was also an important part of the feasts, so that they were sometimes called “a house of drinking” in the Hebrew (KJV, “banqueting house,” Song 2:4) or “drinkings” in the Greek (KJV, “banquetings,” 1 Pet. 4:3).

Some “seats” at the banquet table were preferred over others (Mark 10:37; Luke 14:7-11; John 13:23). In Luke 14:8-10 Jesus referred to these “lowest” and “highest” places. He often used banquets and feasts to present His message to various people (Matt. 9:9-10; Mark 14:1-9; Luke 7:36-50; 19:1-6; John 2:1-11; 12:1-8). The image of the feast as an occasion of celebrating victory is seen in Jesus' reference to the messianic banquet (Matt. 8:11; Luke 13:29). Also, in Revelation, the final victory day is described in terms of a “marriage feast of the Lamb” of God (Rev. 19:9 HCSB).

W. Thomas Sawyer

BAPTISM The Christian rite of initiation practiced by almost all who profess to embrace the Christian faith. In the NT era persons professing Christ were immersed in water as a public confession of their faith in Jesus, the Savior. This was accomplished in direct obedience to the explicit mandate of the Lord (Matt. 28:16-20).

Jewish Background Among Palestinian Jews of the first century, a form of ritual cleansing was practiced, one which undoubtedly constituted the foreshadowing of Christian baptism. The unearthing of hundreds of mikvaot (ritual cleansing pools) in various locations from the Temple Mount to the fortress of Masada and the community of Qumran testify to the widespread practice of both proselyte baptism and ritual cleansings. The existence of deep pools accessed by stairs provides sufficient evidence that the Jewish practice employed a form of self-baptism or self-immersion. A typical use of the mikveh would find a Gentile who had embraced Judaism and accepted circumcision walking into the mikveh, citing the shema, “Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God, the Lord is one” (Deut. 6:4), and then immersing himself in the pool.

John's Baptism Consequently, when John the Baptist began baptizing in the Jordan River, the practice of baptism per se was hardly shocking to the Jews. The introduction of an administrator who immersed others was John's novel addition. The church maintained this development in its post-resurrection worship and elevated it to prominence as the first public act of identification with Christ. John insisted that those who sought baptism at his hand give testimony to a radically changed life, evidenced by repentance. Those who thus acquiesced formed a purified community awaiting the advent of Messiah. That Jesus of Nazareth was among those who sought John's baptism puzzled the church through the ages and seems to have mystified John at the time (Matt. 3:14). John's protest suggests that he observed no need for repentance in Jesus. He relented and immersed Jesus in response to the Lord's assurance that in so doing this act would “fulfill all righteousness” (Matt. 3:15). In addition to identifying with the ministry of John, the act declared the nature of the Messiah's mission. He would be a crucified, buried, and resurrected Messiah. Additionally, the event provided one of the most important declarations of the Trinitarian nature of God with the baptism of the Son, the voice of the Father, and the descent of the Spirit in the form of a dove (Matt. 3:16-17).

Baptism in the New Testament The word “baptism” has several uses in the NT. In addition to its usual sense of faith-witness initiation, the Bible speaks of a baptism of fire (Matt. 3:11-12), baptism by/in the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 12:13), baptism for the dead (1 Cor. 15:29), and even the baptism of the Hebrew people into Moses and the Sea (1 Cor. 10:2). But overwhelmingly the most prominent use of the word refers to the first response of obedience by a new follower of Jesus. The word “baptize” is itself a loanword borrowed from the Greek term baptizo. Few scholars contest that the meaning of the term is “immerse,” and not “to pour” or “to sprinkle.” In classical Greek, the word is used, for example, to describe the sinking of a ship that is, therefore, “immersed” or totally enveloped in water. Five important issues about baptism are: (1) the meaning of the ordinance, (2) the appropriate candidate for baptism, (3) the proper mode of baptism, (4) the right time for baptism, and (5) the correct authority for baptism.

Ancient Byzantine baptistry at Avdat, Israel, showing the importance given baptism by the early church.

Meaning In its simplest form baptism is a public identification with Jesus the Christ. As such it pictures the death of Jesus for the sins of the world, His subsequent burial, and His triumphant resurrection. There is also a reenactment of the believer's death to sin, the burial of the old man, and a resurrection to walk in newness of life with Christ (Rom. 6:4). There is also an eschatological hint, a prophetic look to the future in baptism. Though we die and are interred in the ground, we shall rise again at the coming of the Lord. There are those who see baptism as a sacrament, bestowing grace or even bringing salvation. In this view baptism effects the removal of original sin in infants and/or secures salvation for the one baptized. Advocates of such a position cite Acts 2:38 and a few other verses as supporting texts. The believers' church tradition understands baptism to be symbolic of salvation, a public profession of faith, and a witness to the work of salvation. The Bible clearly teaches that salvation is appropriated solely by faith based on the grace of God. Baptism, being an act of man, can never cleanse a person of sin or procure God's forgiveness (Rom. 4:3).

Proper Candidate for Baptism Accordingly, the only appropriate candidate for the witness of baptism is someone who has something about which he can bear witness (Acts 2:38; 8:12-13,36-38; Eph. 4:5). There is no precedent for infant baptism in the NT; in addition, only one who has experienced regeneration can give genuine witness to that experience. Only one sufficiently mature to have recognized, confessed and repented of his sin, and made a conscious commitment of faith in Christ should be baptized (Acts 2:41).

Correct Time for Baptism In certain areas of the world, baptism is delayed, sometimes as much as two years, during which time candidates "prove themselves" and/or are carefully taught, but the NT knows no such practice. Baptism is a public confession of faith, an initiatory ordinance of a new believer desiring to be obedient to Christ (Acts 8:35-38). The accompanying safeguard is a scriptural program of church discipline. Therefore, as soon as one is saved, he should be baptized.

The Proper Form of Baptism The correct form of baptism is determined by the meaning of the act. While it is true that baptizo means "immerse," and while it is further the case that Jewish and first-century Christian baptisms were all by immersion, it is the significance of death, burial, and resurrection that determines the form. The new believer is buried in a watery grave and raised up as a symbol of his trust in the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ for the atonement of sins. Only immersion adequately pictures a burial and a resurrection (Rom. 6:4-6). Immersionist baptistries dating from early Christian churches are common in Europe and the Middle East. Not a few contemporary Roman Catholic churches have even recognized the antiquity of the practice of immersion and have begun constructing immersionist pools. Eastern Orthodoxy has always practiced immersion.

The Correct Authority for Baptism Who has the authority to administer or perform baptism? Here the Scriptures are not explicit. However, in the NT, wherever people professed Christ and were baptized, they were assimilated into local assemblies of believers. The possible exception to this is the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:35-38). Lacking more precise instruction, it seems safe to say that to identify with Christ as the head of the church without also identifying with the church, which is the body of Christ, would be unfathomable. The local church is the proper authority to administer baptism.

Finally, it should be noted that the two ordinances given to the church—baptism and the Lord's Supper—together tell the story of Christ's atoning work. In the Supper the death of Christ is acknowledged and proclaimed; whereas in baptism His burial and resurrection are depicted. These comprise the only rituals assigned to the church by Jesus. See Baptism with/in the Holy Spirit; Infant Baptism; Ordinances.

Paige Patterson

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD The only biblical mention of this is 1 Cor. 15:29. Paul refers to something being practiced without commenting on it. He does not commend, condone, or condemn it. Baptism for the dead is not Paul's point but is used to bolster his argument for the reality of the resurrection that some are denying (1 Cor. 15:12). He argues on the basis of Christ's resurrection (vv. 13-16) and the Corinthians' salvation (vv. 17-19). The order of resurrection is that first Christ was raised (v. 20), then those who are Christ's at His coming (v. 23), and finally death itself is abolished (v. 26). Paul reinforces his logic by pointing to their practice; if there is no resurrection, then “what will they do who are being baptized for the dead?” (v. 29 HCSB).

No explanation of this practice is given. A straightforward reading of “baptism for the dead” is that people were being baptized vicariously on behalf of someone already dead. Some have suggested a symbolic understanding. If “baptism” is symbolic, it would parallel Jesus' use in Mark 10:38 (“Are you able...to be baptized with the baptism I am baptized with?”), a metaphorical reference to His crucifixion and death. Paul's words could then refer to martyrdom. If “death” is symbolic, it could refer to the believer's death to his old nature, self, and sin as symbolized by baptism (Rom. 6:4).

Other suggestions understand the preposition to mean baptism “over” the graves of believers, baptism “with reference to” the converts' own future deaths, or baptism “with a view towards” being reunited with fellow believers already dead. Another possibility is “Why be baptized if there is no resurrection from the dead?”

These symbolic or syntactic suggestions have little to support them. The natural reading is preferable, that this is vicarious baptism on behalf of the dead. No information is provided concerning how this was done or what it was believed to accomplish. We simply cannot know. Nevertheless, any idea that a living person could be baptized and impact the salvation of one already dead contradicts the clear teaching of Scripture on both salvation and baptism. It could not be a practice of which Paul approved.

David R. Beck

BAPTISM OF FIRE Central to the message of John the Baptist was the teaching that the Messiah whose coming he announced would also baptize but in a manner that superceded John's baptism. The Messiah would baptize “with [or “in”; the Greek can be translated either way] the Holy Spirit (Mark 1:8; John 1:33; Acts 1:5; 11:16) and fire” (Matt. 3:11; Luke 3:16). The fact that there is only one Greek article governing the two nouns, “Spirit” and “fire” indicates that only one baptism is in view and the addition of “and fire” further defines the character of the Messiah's baptism. Whereas water temporarily cleanses the outside, fire permanently purifies the whole.

BAPTISM WITH/IN THE HOLY SPIRIT Phrase used in one form or another by John the Baptist, Jesus, Simon Peter, and Paul. John the Baptist proclaimed, “I baptize you with [Gk., en] water for repentance. But the One who is coming after me is more powerful than I; I am not worthy to take off His sandals. He Himself will baptize you with [Gk., en] the Holy Spirit and fire” (Matt. 3:11 HCSB). All four Gospels carry this prediction, though John and Mark leave out the words “and fire” (Mark 1:8; Luke 3:16; John 1:33). Jesus referred to the words of John just before His ascension, affirming to the disciples that they would soon (“not many days from now”) receive this baptism (Acts 1:5). The promise was then fulfilled on the Day of Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit came upon the 120 disciples in the upper room (Acts 2:4) and tongues of fire rested on each of them (Acts 2:3). To demonstrate publicly that He had given the Spirit, God miraculously enabled the 120 to speak in the foreign languages of the pilgrims present in Jerusalem that day (Acts 2:4-12).

In Acts 10 God sent Simon Peter to the house of the Gentile, Cornelius. There the Lord poured out the Spirit on the Gentiles, enabling them to speak in tongues, thus showing Peter that the Gentiles had received the same gift as the Jews. When he made his report to the Jerusalem church about this matter, Peter quoted the words of Jesus about Spirit-baptism from Acts 1:5, causing the disciples present to affirm, “So God has granted repentance resulting in life to even the Gentiles” (Acts 11:18 HCSB). These first six references to Spirit-baptism all point to the fulfillment of the promise of the gift of the Spirit (John 14:25-27; 15:26-27; 16:7-11), first to the Jews in Jerusalem, then to the Gentiles. Christian Jews and Gentiles are now one not only because they have a common Savior but because they have the same gift of the Spirit (Eph. 2:11-3:6; Gal. 3:28; Rom. 2:9-29; Col. 1:26-27).

Paul also speaks of being Spirit baptized (1 Cor. 12:13 HCSB). “For we were all baptized by one Spirit into one body—whether Jews or Greeks, whether slaves or free—and we were all made to drink of one Spirit.” Similar to the earlier references, this text notes the unity of both Jews and Gentiles as having the Spirit, emphasizing that by referring to the Spirit as “one Spirit.” There are, however, some unique features in Paul's statement. First, it refers to a past experience shared by Paul and the Corinthians, while the other references have a future orientation. Second, it is significant that none of these persons was present in the events found in the two texts in Acts, yet Paul asserts that they also have been baptized in the one Spirit. Third, Paul says that this Spirit baptism has the result of incorporating believers into the body of Christ (cp. 1 Cor. 12:14-27; Eph. 1:23; 4:12; Col. 1:24).

Over the last century Bible interpreters have differed over the interpretation of these texts in three specific ways. First, the question has been asked, is Spirit-baptism an experience subsequent to conversion, or does it happen at the same time as conversion? Second, should the Spirit-baptized person speak in tongues as “evidence” of the experience? Third, is Paul talking about the same essential experience in 1 Cor. 12:13 as John, Jesus, and Peter are talking about in the other texts? The questions do yield a fairly certain response.

Taking the last item first, it is clear that Paul is speaking about essentially the same kind of experience as did John, since he uses the same construction in the Greek, with the only difference being the addition of the word “one” [Spirit] and the past tense. He also uses the passive voice, but that is to be expected with the subject shifting from “He” [Jesus] to “we” [Christians]. If we conclude that Paul is speaking of the same experience as the other texts, then it should be clear that Spirit baptism could not be subsequent to conversion, since Paul says it is the means by which believers are incorporated into the body of Christ. It must happen at conversion, as was the case in Acts, as one of the constellations of Spirit blessings bestowed on believers at that moment—they are born of the Spirit (John 3:5), sealed in the Spirit (Eph. 1:13), and receive the gift of the indwelling Spirit (Rom. 8:9-11). What of the matter of tongues as initial evidence of Spirit baptism? At Pentecost and at the house of Cornelius, the Spirit-baptized believers spoke in tongues, but this was to show that both Jews and Gentiles alike had received the promised gift of the Spirit. Nowhere in Scripture are believers told that tongues is the evidence of Spirit baptism outside of these initial moments in salvation history, and nowhere are believers commanded to be baptized in the Spirit or to speak in tongues.

The initial promise of John the Baptist about Spirit baptism is fulfilled in the Jew and Gentile “ Pentecosts “ (Acts 2; 10). Since Paul tells the Corinthians that they have been Spirit-baptized, the blessing of the pentecostal gift is applied to all disciples at the moment of conversion. The seven texts assembled together make clear that Jesus is the one who baptizes believers, the Spirit is the element into or with which they are baptized, and incorporation into the body of Christ is the result. See Holy Spirit; Tongues, Gift of.

Chad Brand

BAPTIST See John.

BAR Aramaic translation of the Hebrew word ben. Both words mean “son of.” “Bar” is often used in the NT as a prefix for names of men telling whose son they were: Barabbas (Matt. 27:16-26), Bar-Jesus (Acts 13:6), Bar-jona (Matt. 16:17 KJV), Barnabas (Acts 4:36; 9:27; etc.), Barsabbas (Acts 1:23; 15:22), Bartholomew (Matt. 10:3; Acts 1:13), and Bartimaeus (Mark 10:46). See Ben.

BARABBAS Name means “Son of the Father.” A murderer and insurrectionist held in Roman custody at the time of the trial of Jesus (Mark 15:15). All four Gospels record that when Pilate offered to release Jesus or Barabbas, the crowd demanded the release of Barabbas. Pilate gave in to the demand, ordered Jesus crucified, and set Barabbas free. Nothing is known of his subsequent history.

The current critical text of the Greek NT, following Origen, various ancient versions of the NT, and a number of Greek manuscripts, has Pilate calling him Jesus Barabbas (Matt. 27:16-17). The reading is not certain but is likely. If it is correct, Pilate offered the crowd a choice between “Jesus Messiah” (Jesus Christ) and “Jesus, son of the father” (Jesus Barabbas). See Christ; Christology; Cross; Crucifixion.

BARACHEL [Bār' á-kèl] Personal name meaning “God blessed.” Father of Job's friend Elihu (Job 32:2).

BARACHIAH [Bār' á-kí' áh] (NRSV, NT) See Berechiah.

BARACHIAS [Bār-á-kí' ás] (KJV, NT) See Berechiah.

BARAK [Bá' rák] Son of Abinoam whom the Prophetess Deborah summoned to assume military leadership of the Israelites in a campaign against Canaanite forces under the command of Sisera (Judg. 4:6). Barak mustered Zebulunite and Naphtalite troops and set out to engage the Canaanites in battle near Mount Tabor. Though the Canaanites were routed, Sisera escaped. He was subsequently killed by Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite. In 1 Sam. 12:11, where he is called Bedan, Barak is mentioned as one who delivered the Israelites from their enemies. See Judges.

BARAKEL [Bār' á-kèl] (NIV, TEV) See Barachel.

BARBARIAN Originally referred to stammering, stuttering, or any form of unintelligible sounds. Even the repeated syllable “bar-bar” mimics this. The term “barbarian” came to be synonymous with “foreigner,” one who did not speak Greek, or one who was not a Greek. The Septuagint or earliest Greek translation translated Ps. 114:1 using “barbarian” for “a people of strange language.” In the NT “barbarian” occurs six times. Paul uses the term twice in 1 Cor. 14:11 where he deals with the problem of unintelligible speech in the church. The more common use of “barbarian” seems related to those who spoke a foreign language, especially other than Greek. Paul's description of the islanders of Melita (Acts 28:2,4) as barbarians meant only that they did not speak Greek. With the rise of the Greek Empire, there was the tendency to include all who were not privy to this language and culture as barbarians. Thus, Paul makes the distinction between Greek and non-Greek in Rom. 1:14. Also, in Col. 3:11, “barbarians” are distinguished from the Greeks. As the Romans came to power and absorbed the Greek culture, they removed themselves from barbarian classification. The term came to be a reproach during the Persian wars and in time was associated with those who were crude and contemptible. See Gentile; Greeks; Hellenist.

C Kenny Cooper

BARHUMITE [Bār-hū' mit] Variant Hebrew spelling for Baharumite. See Bahurim.

BAR-JESUS [Bār-jē' sūs] Jewish magician and false prophet at Paphos (Acts 13:6). Paul the apostle denounced him, and he was struck blind. In Acts 13:8 he is called Elymas.

BAR-JONA [Bār-jō' ná] Surname of Simon Peter (Matt. 16:17). The meaning is “son of John.”

BAR-KOCHBA [Bār-Kök' bá] Means “son of the star” and was the title given by Jewish rebels to Simeon bar Kosevah, the leader of their revolt in A.D. 132-135. The title designated him as the Messiah (Num. 24:17). The revolt erupted because the Roman Emperor Hadrian had begun to rebuild Jerusalem as a pagan city with plans to replace the ruined Jewish temple with one dedicated to Jupiter. Circumcision was also forbidden. At first the Jews prepared for war secretly. When Hadrian left Syria, they openly revolted. By using guerrilla tactics they were able to overpower the Roman forces and liberate Jerusalem in A.D. 132. Bar-Kochba was the civil leader of the people, and Eleazar was the high priest. Their initial success led to such widespread rebellion that even some Gentiles and Samaritans joined them. Hadrian had to recall Severus from Britain to suppress them. It was a long and costly war for the Romans. Severus avoided direct confrontation, weakening the rebels instead by capturing them in small groups, cutting supply lines, besieging fortresses, and starving them. Bar-Kochba made his last stand at Betar, where most of the remaining insurgents died in 135. Some retreated to caves in the Judean desert and had to be starved to death. (See map on page 182.)

Ricky L Johnson

BARKOS [Bār' kōs] Aramaic name possibly meaning “son of Kos” (a god). The original ancestor of a clan of Nethinim or temple employees who returned to Jerusalem from exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:53).

BARLEY Grain for which Palestine was known (Deut. 8:8). Failure of the barley crop was a disaster (Joel 1:11). Barley was the food of the poor (Lev. 23:22; Ruth 3:15,17; 2 Sam. 17:28; 2 Kings 4:42; 7:1,16,18; 2 Chron. 2:10,15; 27:5; Jer. 41:8). Barley flour was used to make bread (Judg. 7:13; Ezek. 4:12) and was the kind of bread Jesus used to feed the multitude (John 6:9,13). Barley was also used as feed for horses, mules, and donkeys (1 Kings 4:28). There was a spring variety (Hordeum vulgare) and a winter variety (Hordeum hexastichon).

BARLEY HARVEST Began in late April or early May and preceded the wheat harvest by about two weeks (Exod. 9:31-32). At the beginning of the barley harvest (Ruth 2:23), the firstfruits were offered as a consecration of the harvest (Lev. 23:10).

BARN Storage place for seed (Hag. 2:19) or grain (Matt. 13:30). A full barn is a sign of prosperity (Deut. 28:8; Prov. 3:10; Luke 12:18) while an empty barn is a sign of calamity of some kind (drought, war, etc; Joel 1:17). Equivalent to modern granaries or silos.

BARNABAS [Bār' ná-bás] Name appears 23 times in Acts and five times in Paul's letters and probably means "son of prophecy" or one who prophesies or preaches ("son of exhortation," Acts 4:36). Barnabas was a Levite and native of the island of Cyprus, named Joseph (Joses), before the disciples called him Barnabas. He sold his property and gave the proceeds to the Jerusalem church (Acts 4:36-37). He introduced Saul of Tarsus to the Jerusalem church (9:26-27). The church chose Barnabas to go to Syrian Antioch to investigate the unrestricted preaching to the Gentiles there. He became the leader to the work and secured Saul as his assistant. They took famine relief to the Jerusalem church (11:19-30). On Paul's "first missionary journey," Barnabas at first seems to have been the leader (chaps. 13-14). Paul and Barnabas were sent to Jerusalem to try to settle the questions of how Gentiles could be saved and how Jewish Christians could have fellowship with them (15:1-21). They agreed to go on another missionary journey but separated over whether to take John Mark with them again (15:36-41). Barnabas (Gal. 2:1-10) went with Paul to Jerusalem and the apostles approved of their Gentile mission (probably the same event as Acts 15). In Gal. 2:13, however, Paul indicated that on one occasion Barnabas wavered on the issue of full acceptance of Gentile Christians. In 1 Cor. 9:6 Paul commended Barnabas for following his (Paul's) practice of supporting himself rather than depending upon the churches. Colossians 4:10 simply states that Mark was Barnabas's cousin. In the third century Barnabas was identified by Clement of Alexandria as one of the 70 of Luke 10:1; Tertullian referred to him as the author of Hebrews; and the Clementine Recognitions stated he was the Matthias of Acts 1:23,26. All of these are most unlikely. In the second century an epistle bearing Barnabas's name appeared, became quite popular, and even received some consideration for a place in the NT. Later an apocryphal Acts of Barnabas and perhaps even a Gospel of Barnabas were circulated.

James A. Brooks

BARREL KJV translation found in 1 Kings 17:12-16; 18:33. Modern versions translate the same word as “jar.” Jars were used for carrying water and storing flour. See Pottery.

BARREN, BARRENNESS Term used to describe a woman who is unable to give birth to children: Sarai (Gen. 11:30), Rebekah (Gen. 25:21), Rachel (Gen. 29:31), Manoah's wife (Judg. 13:2), Hannah (1 Sam. 1:5), and Elizabeth (Luke 1:7,36). Also described as “solitary” (Job 3:7), “desolate” (2 Sam. 13:20; Isa. 49:21; 54:1), or “dead, deadness” (Rom. 4:19). Barrenness was considered a curse from God (Gen. 16:2; 20:18; 1 Sam. 1:5), which explains Elizabeth's statement that God had taken away her “disgrace among the people”—that she was a sinner and cursed by God as evidenced by her barrenness (Luke 1:25). The barrenness of Sarai, Rebekah, and Rachel (the mothers of the Israelite nation) is significant in that their ability finally to bear children is a sign of the grace and favor of God toward His elect people.

BARSABAS [Bār' sá-bás] (KJV) or BARSABBAS Personal name meaning “son of the Sabbath.” 1. Name given Joseph Justus, candidate not elected when church chose replacement for Judas, the traitor (Acts 1:23). 2. Last name of Judas, whom the Jerusalem church chose to go with Paul and Silas to Antioch after the Jerusalem council (Acts 15:22). See Apostle; Disciple; Judas; Joseph; Justus.

BARTHOLOMEW [Bār-thōl' ō-mēw] One of the 12 apostles (Mark 3:18). The name Bartholomew means “son of Talmai” and may have been a patronymic, a name derived from that of the father or a paternal ancestor. It occurs in all four lists of the apostles in the NT (Matt. 10:2-4; Mark 3:16-19; Luke 6:14-16; Acts 1:13); in each of the Synoptic Gospels it immediately follows the name of Philip. The name does not occur at all in John's Gospel. In the first chapter of John, however, the account of Philip's call to discipleship is closely related to the call of a person named Nathanael (vv. 43-51). This circumstance has led to the traditional identification of Bartholomew with Nathanael. See Apostle; Disciple; Nathanael.

BARTIMAEUS [Bār-ti-má' ūs] or BARTIMEUS (KJV) Blind beggar near Jericho who cried to Jesus for mercy despite efforts to silence him. Jesus said that his persistent faith had made him whole. Able to see, he followed Jesus (Mark 10:46-52). The name means "son of Timaeus." His blindness had reduced him to anonymity, the witnesses not even knowing his personal name. The story demonstrates the value Jesus placed on all persons, even the lowliest and seemingly least significant.

Charles W. Draper

BARUCH [Bá' rók] 1. Son of Neriah who served as Jeremiah's scribe and friend. He helped Jeremiah purchase a field from the prophet's cousin Hanameel and used the purchase as a symbol of hope (Jer. 32:12). Baruch, whose name means "blessed," served Jeremiah as an amanuensis or scribe. He appears, moreover, to have had a close personal association with the prophet and to have exercised a significant influence in the ministry of Jeremiah. He wrote down Jeremiah's preaching and read it to the king's counselors who took it to the king. Jehoiakim burned it, but Jeremiah dictated it again (Jer. 36). Jeremiah was even accused of being a mere instrument of Baruch's enmity (Jer. 43:3). The prophet counseled Baruch to place his confidence wholly in the Lord and not to seek great things for himself (Jer. 45). A wide range of later literature was attributed to Baruch in Jewish tradition. See Jeremiah. 2. A priest, son of Zabbai, during the time of Nehemiah. He "diligently" repaired part of the eastern wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:20). It is usually assumed that he is the same Baruch who was a signer (Neh. 10:6) of the covenant described in Neh. 8-10 in which the postexilic community officially recommitted itself to the law of God as authoritative in their lives (see especially 10:28-29). 3. Baruch mentioned in Neh. 11:5 is from the tribe of Judah. Nothing else is known of him but that his son Maaseiah volunteered to endure danger as a settler in postexilic Jerusalem.

BARZILLAI [Bār-zil' ī] Personal name meaning “made of iron.” 1. Man from Gilead east of the Jordan who met David at Mahanaim as he fled from Absalom. Barzillai and others gave needed supplies for David's company (2 Sam. 17:27-29). When David returned to Jerusalem, the 80-year-old Barzillai accompanied him across the Jordan but refused to go to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 19:31-39). Barzillai may have served as David's host while he stayed east of the Jordan. His sons went to Jerusalem, and the dying David ensured their welfare (1 Kings 2:7). 2. Father of Adriel whose sons David delivered to the Gibeonites for execution in payment for Saul's inhumane slaying of Gibeonites (2 Sam. 21:8). This Barzillai could be the same as 1. above. 3. Priestly clan whose ancestor had married the daughter of 1. above and taken his name. Some of these priests returned from exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:61).

BASEMATH [Bās' ē-māth] Personal name meaning “balsam.” 1. Hittite woman whom Esau married, grieving his parents, Isaac and Rebekah (Gen. 26: 34-35; 27:46). Some differences in her name and ancestors appear. In Gen. 28:9 Esau married Mahalath, daughter of Ishmael and sister of Nebajoth. In Gen. 36:3 Basemath is Ishmael's daughter and Nebajoth's sister. Apparently, all three passages refer to the same woman. How one explains the complexity of names, relationships, and backgrounds is not certain. Some talk of literary sources; others of new names given women at marriage; others of copyists' changes of the text. Reuel, Basemath's son, became father of four clans in Edom (Gen. 36:10,13,17). 2. Daughter of Solomon who married Ahimaaz, district supervisor providing supplies for the royal court from Naphtali (1 Kings 4:15).

BASHAN [Bā' shān] Northernmost region of Palestine east of the Jordan River. Though its precise extent cannot be determined with certainty, it was generally east of the Sea of Galilee. In the time of Moses, it was ruled over by a king named Og, whom the Israelite army defeated (Num. 21:33-35). It was assigned to the tribal area of Manasseh (Deut. 3:13; Josh. 13:29-31). Probably on account of its frontier location, it changed hands several times during the course of Israelite history. It was known as a particularly fertile area (Deut. 32:14; Ezek. 39:18). See Palestine.

BASHAN-HAVOTH-JAIR [Bá' shán-há' vóth-jáir] (KJV) See Havoth-jair.

BASHEMATH [Básh' é-máth] (KJV) See Basemath.

BASIN (KJV, “bason”) Used interchangeably with “bowl” to refer to various sizes of wide hollow bowls, cups, and dishes used for domestic or more formal purposes (John 13:5). The most common material used to make such instruments was pottery. However, basins were also made of brass (Exod. 27:3), silver (Num. 7:13), and gold (2 Chron. 4:8). The largest basins were usually banquet bowls or mixing bowls for wine, although one of the largest was used in the sacrificial ritual at the great altar of the temple (Zech. 9:15). Generally, the largest basins were also used as lids for other vessels. The basin used by Jesus to wash the disciples' feet (John 13:5) was of a special sort. The Greek word is found nowhere else in Scripture but from the context is understood to mean a vessel specifically suited for washing a particular part of the body, such as the hands or the feet, and is therefore used with a definite article, “the basin.” See Laver; Sacrifice and Offering.

C. Dale Hill

BASKET Five kinds of baskets are mentioned in the OT. The precise distinctions of size and shape are not clear. Some had handles, others lids, some both, others neither. The most common term always refers to a container for carrying food (Gen. 40:16-18). Another term is used to signify a cage or “bird net” (Jer. 5:27). A third term for basket is the common household utensil used in harvesting grain (Deut. 26:2; 28:5). A fourth term refers to a larger basket used for heavy burdens such as clay for bricks or even the heads of the 70 sons of Ahab delivered to Jehu (2 Kings 10:7). The final term was used to describe both the basket (ark) in which Moses was placed as an infant (Exod. 2:3,5) and the ark which Noah built (Gen. 6:14-16). The NT uses two words for basket. The smaller basket is referred to in the story of the feeding of the 5,000 (Matt. 14:20). The larger basket is mentioned in the feeding of the 4,000 (Matt. 15:37). The Apostle Paul also used the larger basket as a means of escape over the wall of Damascus (Acts 9:25). It might logically be considered a hamper.

C.Dale Hill

BASMATH [Bās' mǎth] (KJV, 1 Kings 4:15) See Basemath.

BASON (KJV) See Basin.

BASTARD KJV translation of a word for the offspring of an illegitimate union. The term could refer to an incestuous union or of a marriage that was prohibited (Lev. 18:6-20; 20:11-20). Illegitimate children were not permitted to enter the assembly of the Lord (Deut. 23:2). According to Hebrews, those who do not have the discipline of the Lord are illegitimate children (12:8). Also translated as “a mongrel people” (Zech. 9:6 NRSV).

BAT Order (Chiroptera) of nocturnal placental flying mammals; quadruped with wings. The Hebrew word translated “bat” is the generic name for many species of this mammal found in Palestine (Isa. 2:20). Although the bat is listed among unclean birds in the Bible (Lev. 11:19; Deut. 14:18), it belongs to the mammals because it nurses its young. It is nocturnal and lives in caves (Isa. 2:20). Modern zoologists have cited at least 20 different species in the area of Palestine.

BATH Liquid measure roughly equivalent to five and one-half gallons (U.S.). It was used to measure the molten sea in the temple (1 Kings 7:26,38) as well as oil and wine (2 Chron. 2:10; Ezra 7:22; Isa. 5:10; Ezek. 45:11,14). The bath was 1/10th of a homer. See Weights and Measures.

Second-century Roman baths in the upper agora at Ephesus.

BATHING Biblical languages make no distinction between washing and bathing primarily because the dry climate of the Middle East prohibited bathing except on special occasions or where there was an available source of water (John 9:7). Therefore, where “bathe” occurs in the biblical text, partial bathing is usually intended. However, two notable exceptions are that of Pharaoh's daughter in the Nile River (Exod. 2:5) and that of Bathsheba on her rooftop (2 Sam. 11:2). Public baths of the Greek culture were unknown in Palestine before the second century. The chief use of the word has to do with ritual acts of purification (Exod. 30:19-21). It is probably safe to say that the masses of people in both the OT and NT had neither the privacy nor the desire for bathing, as we know it today. Priests washed clothes, hands, feet, or bodies before approaching the altar for sacrifice. Ceremonial defilement was removed by bathing the body and washing the clothes (Lev. 14:8). During a time of mourning or fasting the face and clothes were left unwashed (2 Sam. 12:20), a practice forbidden by Jesus (Matt. 6:17). Lambs were washed at shearing time (Song 4:2), babies after birth (Ezek. 16:4), and bodies in preparation for burial (Acts 9:37). Sometimes other elements such as wine and milk were used to symbolize washing in a metaphorical sense. According to Josephus, the Essene community practiced daily bathing for ceremonial reasons, a practice which excavations at Qumran appear to confirm. See Clean, Cleanness.

Bathing room in the baths at Roman Herculaneum (modern Italy) showing mosaics and shelves.

BATH-RABBIM [Bāth-rāb' bīm] Place-name meaning “daughter of many.” A gate of Heshbon, which was near pools of fish. Song of Songs 7:4 uses its beauty as comparison for the beauty of the beloved lady's eyes. See Heshbon.

BATHSHEBA [Bāth-shē' bā] Daughter of Eliam and the wife of Uriah the Hittite (2 Sam. 11:3). She was a beautiful woman with whom David the king had an adulterous relationship (2 Sam. 11:4). When David learned that she had become pregnant as a result of the intrigue, he embarked on a course of duplicity that led finally to the violent death of Uriah. David then took Bathsheba as his wife. She was the mother of Solomon and played an important role in ensuring that he be made king (1 Kings 1:11-2:19). See David.

BATHSHUA [Bāth' shū-ā] Personal name meaning “daughter of nobility.” 1. Canaanite wife of Judah and mother of Er, Onan, and Shelah (1 Chron. 2:3 NASB, TEV, NRSV). KJV, NIV read “daughter of Shua.” Genesis 38:2 says her name was Shuah, while Gen. 38:12 calls her daughter of Shuah or Bath-shua. See Shuah. 2. Name for Bathsheba in 1 Chron. 3:5. See Bathsheba.

BATTALION RSV translation of 1/10 th of a Roman legion, about 600 men. KJV translates “band,” HCSB uses “whole company.” When Pilate handed Jesus over to be crucified, the whole battalion assembled together before Jesus (Matt. 27:27; Mark 15:16). This battalion would have been the Second Italian Cohort. See Cohort

BATTERING RAM See Arms and Armor.

BATTLE See Arms and Armor; Army.

BATTLE-AX See Arms and Armor.

BAVAI [Ba' vi] (KJV) or BAVVAI (NASB, TEV, RSV) Government official in Keilah who helped Nehemiah rebuild wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:18). NRSV, NIV read Binnui on basis of Neh. 3:24 and other textual evidence. See Binnui; Keilah.

BAY KJV translation of a term referring to horses in Zech. 6:3,7. KJV took the term as referring to the color of the horses. The earliest translators had trouble with the word, as do modern versions. Recent interpreters take the Hebrew word as referring to the strength of the horses (NIV, NASB), though NRSV reads “gray” in verse 3 and “steeds” in verse 7, while REB omits the word in verse 3 and emends the text in verse 7.

BAY TREE KJV translation in Ps. 37:35. The Hebrew word ('ezrach) means “native” or “indigenous.” While the bay tree is native to Palestine, Ps. 37:35 gives no indication when referring to “that tree.” NRSV and TEV hardly come closer to a correct translation with “cedar tree.” NASB, NIV, and REB are closer to the meaning of the Hebrew text when they speak of a “tree in its native soil.”

BAZAAR Section of a street given over to merchants. Ben-hadad of Damascus gave Ahab permission to set up bazaars in Damascus as Ben-hadad's father had done in Samaria (1 Kings 20:34).

BAZLITH [Báz' lîth] or BAZLUTH [Báz' lûth] Personal name meaning “in the shadow” or “onions.” Original ancestor of clan of temple employees who returned from exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel in 537 B.C. (Neh. 7:54). Name is spelled Bazluth in Ezra 2:52, which NIV reads in Neh. 7:54. Name is spelled Bazluth in Ezra 2:52, which NIV reads in Neh 7:54.

BDELLIUM Translation of bedolach, a word of uncertain meaning. It has been identified as a gum or resin, pearl, or stone. Genesis 2:12 (KJV) mentions bdellium, gold, and onyx as products of Havilah. Numbers 11:7 likens manna to bdellium in appearance. Terms in other languages using words very similar to bedolach favor the identification with a resinous gum. In droplet form the gum may have the appearance of a pearl or stone.

BEADS RSV translation of a term for articles of gold jewelry (Num. 31:50). The exact identification of these objects is uncertain. They are variously identified as tablets (KJV), armlets, pendants (REB, NRSV), necklaces (TEV, NIV, NASB), and breastplates.

BEALIAH [Bè-á-li' ah] Personal name meaning “Yahweh is Lord.” Literally, “Yahweh is baal.” Soldier who joined David at Ziklag while he fled from Saul and served the Philistines (1 Chron. 12:5).

BEALOTH [Bè' á-lôth] Place-name meaning “female Baals” or “ladies.” 1. Town on southern border of tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:24). This may be the same as Baalath-beer (19:8). 2. Region with Asher making up a district to supply food for Solomon's court (1 Kings 4:16). KJV, NIV read “in Aloth.” This could be a common noun meaning “in the heights.” If a town is meant, its location is unknown.

BEANS Leguminous plant (Faba vulgaris) grown in the ancient world as food. Beans mentioned in 2 Sam. 17:28 and Ezek. 4:9 were the horse or broad bean. These beans were sown in the autumn and harvested sometime in mid-April just before the barley and wheat. They were cooked green in the pods or cooked after being dried. Dried beans were threshed and winnowed like other grains.

BEAR Large, heavy mammal with long, thick, shaggy hair. It eats insects, fruit, and flesh. The bear of the Bible has been identified with a high degree of certainty as the Syrian bear. They may grow as high as six feet and weigh as much as 500 pounds. In biblical times the bear was a threat to vineyards and to herds of sheep and goats (1 Sam. 17:34-35). The two largest and strongest beasts of prey—the bear and the lion—are often listed together (1 Sam. 17:37). A narrative about Elisha pictures the ferocity of the bear (2 Kings 2:23-24). Within the last century the Syrian bear has disappeared from the Holy Land, with the last bear being killed in Galilee just before World War II. It still survives in Syria, Persia, and Turkey. For the constellation, See Arcturus.

Modern Middle Eastern market on the island of Crete reminiscent of an ancient bazaar.

BEARD Hair growing on a man's face often excluding the mustache. Ancient Hebrews are often depicted in ancient Near Eastern art with full, rounded beards. This is in contrast to Romans and Egyptians who preferred clean-shaven faces and to other desert nomads and others living in Palestine who often clipped or cut their beards (on the latter see Jer. 9:26; 25:23; 49:32). Israelites were forbidden to mar the edges of their beards by cutting them (Lev. 19:27), and priests were forbidden to cut the corners of their beards (Lev. 21:5). To have one's beard shaved was an insult (2 Sam. 10:4-5; Isa. 50:6) or used as a sign by the prophets of coming destruction (Isa. 7:20; 15:2; Jer. 41:5; 48:37; Ezek. 5:1). The regular Hebrew word for "beard" (zaqan) also means "old" and was applied to men (Judg. 19:16), slaves (Gen. 24:2), women (Zech. 8:4), and elders (Exod. 19:7). The word translated as "beard" in 2 Sam. 19:24 (sapham) probably means "mustache." The same word is also translated "lip" (Lev. 13:45; Ezek. 24:17,22; Mic. 3:7 KJV, NRSV), "[lower part of the] face" (NIV, TEV), "mouth" (Mic. 3:7 NASB, REB), "mustache" (Lev. 13:45; Ezek. 24:17,22 NASB), "upper lip" (Lev. 13:45 REB), and "beard" (Ezek. 24:17,22 REB).

BEAST Several Hebrew and Greek words and phrases are translated as "beast." "Beast" may refer to any animal in distinction from people (Eccles. 3:18-21), reptiles (Gen. 1:24), and sometimes cattle (Gen. 1:30). Beasts were divided into categories of clean and unclean (Lev. 11:1-8) and wild and domesticated (Gen. 1:24; 2:20; Exod. 19:13; 22:10; Num. 3:13; etc.).

Apocalyptic literature such as Daniel and Revelation utilize beasts of various sorts in their symbolism. The OT used "beast" as a symbol for an enemy, and the writers of Daniel and Revelation may have built on that (Ps. 74:19; Jer. 12:9). Daniel saw four great beasts who represented four great kings arise out of the sea (Dan. 7:2-14). These four beasts would threaten God's kingdom, but God's people would prevail over them (Dan. 7:18). See Apocalyptic.

The book of Revelation speaks of two beasts. The first beast arises out of the sea (Rev. 13:1), is seven headed, and derives its authority from the dragon (Rev. 12:3; 13:4). This beast has several of the characteristics of the four beasts of Dan. 7. The second beast arises out of the earth (Rev. 13:11). It serves the first beast by seeking devotees for it and is referred to as the "false prophet" (Rev. 16:13; 19:20; 20:10). Both the beast and the false prophet persecute the church but are finally judged by Christ (Rev. 19:20; 2 Thess. 2:6-12). See Behemoth; Leviathan.

BEATEN GOLD Thin sheets of gold produced by hammering; used to overlay objects of lesser value. Several objects were overlaid with gold in this manner: the golden shields of Solomon (1 Kings 10:16-17), the lampstands of the tabernacle (Exod. 25:18,31,36; 37:7,22; Num. 8:4), and idols (Isa. 40:19).

BEATEN OIL Highest grade of olive oil produced by crushing ripe olives in a mortar. The second grade of oil was produced by pressing the olives. The third grade of oil was produced by further crushing and pressing the pulp. Beaten oil was used in the lamps of the sanctuary (Exod. 27:20; Lev. 24:2) and with the daily sacrifices (Exod. 29:40; Num. 28:5). Solomon also used beaten oil in his trade with Hiram (1 Kings 5:11).

BEATEN SILVER Thin sheets of silver produced by hammering and used to overlay objects of lesser value such as the wooden core of an idol (Jer. 10:6-10).

BEATING See Scourge.

BEATITUDES Beatitudes or “blessed sayings” are so designated because they begin with the expression “blessed is” or “happy is” (Hb. ashre; Gk. makarios; Lat. beatus). “Happy,” however, may not be the best rendering since it has been spiritually devalued in modern usage. The idea is that of a fortunate, blissful state based not on worldly circumstances but on divine conditions. These conditional blessings are frequent in OT wisdom literature, especially the Psalms (Job 5:17; Pss. 1:1; 32:1-2; 33:12; 41:1; 106:3; Prov. 8:34; 28:14).

Church of the Beatitudes on the traditional site of the Sermon on the Mount by the Sea of Galilee.

The most widely known and extensive collection of such blessings introduces Jesus' Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:3-12; cp. Luke 6:20-26). The Beatitudes set the tone for the Sermon by emphasizing man's humility (5:3-5,7,9) and God's righteousness (5:6,8,10). Each of the eight Beatitudes (5:11-12 is an expansion on 5:10) portrays the ideal heart condition of a kingdom citizen—a condition that brings abundant spiritual blessing. “Poor in spirit” refers to an awareness of spiritual bankruptcy apart from Christ (5:3). To “mourn” is to be grieved and broken over sin (5:4; Isa. 61:1-3; 2 Cor. 7:10). The “meek,” like Christ, exemplify gentleness and self-control (5:5; 11:29). “Hunger and thirst” is a vivid description of those who crave God's righteousness (5:6; Ps. 42:1-2). The “merciful” are both forgiving and compassionate (5:7; 6:12-15). To be “pure in heart” refers to that internal cleansing necessary for entering God's presence (5:8; Ps. 24:3-4). The “peacemakers” are those who invite men to be reconciled to God and to one another (5:9; Rom. 10:15; 12:18; 2 Cor. 5:20). Finally, there is a blessing for those who are “persecuted for righteousness.” It is normal for the world to oppose kingdom citizens (5:10-12; 1 Pet. 3:14; 4:14). See Sermon on the Mount.

Pete Schemm

BEAUTIFUL GATE Scene of the healing of a lame man by Peter and John (Acts 3:2,10). Neither the OT nor other Jewish sources mention a “Beautiful Gate.” Christian tradition has identified the gate with the Susa (or Shushan) or Golden Gate on the east side of the temple leading from outside into the Court of the Gentiles. Modern scholars, however, identify the gate as the one on the east side of the Court of Women leading from the Court of the Gentiles. Others place it east of the Court of the Men. Josephus, a Jewish historian in the first century, described a gate of “Corinthian bronze” outside the sanctuary. Jewish sources refer to this gate as Nicanor's Gate. See Jerusalem; Temple.

Mount of Beatitudes as viewed from the Sea of Galilee. Church of the Beatitudes is in center of photo.

BEBAI [Bē' bā-i] Babylonian personal name meaning “child.” 1. Original ancestor of clan of whom 623 (628 in Neh. 7:16) returned with Zerubbabel from exile in Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:11). His son, or at least a member of the clan, led 28 men from Babylon to Jerusalem with Ezra (Ezra 8:11). Members of the clan had married foreign wives (Ezra 10:28). 2. Signer of Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:15).

BECHER [Bè' kër] or BEKER (NIV) 1. Personal name meaning “firstborn” or “young male camel.” Son of Benjamin and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:21). He had nine sons (1 Chron. 7:8). 2. Original ancestor of clan in tribe of Ephraim (Num. 26:35). First Chronicles 7:20 spells the name “Bered.”

BECHERITE [Bè' kër-it] Member of clan of Becher. See Becher.

BECHORATH [Bè-kò' rãth] (KJV) or BECORATH [Bè-cò' rãth] Personal name meaning “firstborn.” Ancestor of King Saul (1 Sam. 9:1).

BED, BEDROOM Place to sleep or rest. A bed may be a simple straw mat or an elaborate frame of wood, metal, stone, or ivory. A bedroom is a designated room designed for sleep or rest.

A bed for the very poor was a mere thin straw mat or cloth pad rolled out on the ground with no more than a stone for a pillow (Gen. 28:10-11; John 5:9) and an outer garment for cover. For the more fortunate poor, a multipurpose, one-room, mud house served as protection from the elements, and as a kitchen, workspace, and sleeping quarters. For the very few affluent, households and palaces contained many rooms including kitchens, living rooms, libraries, and bedrooms with elaborately decorated beds (Esther 1:6; Prov. 7:16-17; Amos 6:4). A bed of iron attracted attention (Deut. 3:11). Sometimes the bed was a symbol of both the highest and the lowest moral codes of mankind. The bed is a symbol that there is no secret place secure from deception (2 Kings 6:12). In Isa. 28:20 the bed that is too short and the cover too narrow is a symbol that there is no escape from judgment. The Scripture teaches that marriage is honorable among all people, that the marriage bed should be kept undefiled, and that God will judge the adulterer and the sexually immoral (Heb. 13:4; Rev. 2:22).

Lawson G. Hatfield

Bedroom in Herulaneum showing the Roman-style bed and walls originally decorated with frescoes.

BEDAD [Be' dād] Personal name meaning “scatter” or “be alone.” Father of Hadad, king of Edom (Gen. 36:35).

BEDAN [Be' dān] Personal name of uncertain meaning. 1. Listed as a judge in 1 Sam. 12:11. Usually seen as the work of a copyist, but the original reading is uncertain. The closest name of the judges would be Barak (Judg. 4-5). Bedan is a son of Gilead in 1 Chron. 7:17 and could be another name for Jephthah, a son of Gilead (Judg. 11:1). Early Jewish rabbis read ben-Dan, “son of Dan,” and thought Samson was intended (Judg. 13:2,24). Others read “Abdon” (Judg. 12:13-15). NIV, TEV, NRSV read “Barak” for Bedan. 2. Descendant of Machir and Manasseh (1 Chron. 7:17).

BEDEIAH [Be-de' ah] Personal name meaning “Yahweh alone” or “branch of Yahweh.” Man with foreign wife who divorced her under Ezra's leadership to prevent tempting Israel with foreign gods (Ezra 10:35).

BEE See Insects.

BEELIADA [Be-li' á-dá] Personal name meaning “Baal knows” or “the Lord knows.” Son of David born in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 14:7). In 2 Sam. 5:16 the Baal part of the name is replaced with “El,” a Hebrew word for God, becoming “Eliada.”

BEELZEBUB [Bē-ēl' zē-būb] (KJV, NIV) or BEELZEBUL (NASB, TEV, NRSV, HCSB) Name for Satan in NT spelled differently in Greek manuscripts. The term is based on Hebrew Baalzebub, “lord of the flies.” See Baal-zebub.

BEER See Strong Drink.

BEER [Bē' ēr] Place-name meaning “well.” It frequently occurs in compound constructions of place-names. For example, Beer-sheba means “well of seven.” The generally arid climate of much of Palestine made wells particularly significant locations. 1. One of the camps of the Israelites during the wilderness wandering (Num. 21:16). 2. Jotham fled to Beer when he feared his brother Abimelech would kill him (Judg. 9:21). This may be modern Bireh.

BEERA [Bē-ē' rā] Personal name meaning “a well.” A descendant of the tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:37).

BEERAH [Bē-ē' rāh] Personal name meaning “a well.” A leader of the tribe of Reuben taken captive by Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, about 732 B.C. (1 Chron. 5:6).

BEER-ELIM [Bē' ēr-ē' līm] Place-name meaning “well of the rams, the heroes, the terebinths, or the mighty trees.” Place involved in mourning according to Isaiah's lament over Moab (Isa. 15:8). It is probably the same as Beer (Num. 21:16), where Israel sang the song of the well. The location may be in the Wadi et-Temed, northeast of Dibon.

BEERI [Bē-ē' rī] Personal name meaning “well.” 1. Hittite father of girl Esau married, grieving his parents Isaac and Rebekah (Gen. 26:34-35; 27:46). 2. Father of Hosea, the prophet (Hos. 1:1).

BEER-LAHAIROI [Bē' ēr-lā-hāi' rōi] Place-name meaning “well of the Living One who sees me.” Interpretation of the name and location of the place are difficult. After Sarai had Abraham put Hagar out of the house, an angel appeared to Hagar announcing the birth of a son. Hagar interpreted this as a vision of the living God and named the well where she was Beer-lahairoi (Gen. 16:14). Isaac passed there as he went to meet and wed Rebekah (Gen. 24:62). Isaac lived there after his father Abraham died (Gen. 25:11).

BEEROTH [Bē-ē' rōth] Place-name meaning “wells.” 1. Wells of the sons of Jaakan, where Israel camped in the wilderness (Num. 33:31; Deut. 10:6). 2. City of the Gibeonites to which Joshua and his army came to defend the Gibeonites after making a covenant with them (Josh. 9:17). The city was allotted the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:25). Ishbosheth's army captains came from Beeroth (2 Sam. 4:2), whose citizens had fled to Gittaim when Israel, possibly under Saul, conquered Beeroth (2 Sam. 4:3). Compare 2 Sam. 21:1-9 for Saul's dealing with the Gibeonites. Joab's armor bearer, one of David's 30 heroes, came from Beeroth (2 Sam. 23:37). Citizens of Beeroth returned with Zerubbabel from exile in Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:25). The city had to be close to Gibeon, but its exact location is debated. Among suggestions are: el-Bireh, Tell en-Nasbeh, Nebi Samwil, Khirbet el-Bur], Biddu, Khirbet Raddana, Ras et-Tahune.

BEEROTH-BENE-JAAKAN [Bē-ē' rōth-bē' nē-jā' á-kān] (NASB, NRSV, Deut. 10:6) See Beeroth.

BEER-SHEBA [Bē' ēr-shē' ba] Beer-sheba and its surrounding area factors significantly in the OT from the earliest sojourns of the patriarchs (Gen. 21; 22; 26) to the return of the Hebrew exiles with Nehemiah (Neh. 11:27,30). Since it was an important crossroad to Egypt in the geographic center of the dry, semidesert region known as the Negev, Beer-sheba also served as the administrative center of the region. Settlement of the Beer-sheba area began before 3000 B.C.

Abraham and a nearby king, Abimelech, swore to protect Abraham's right to the water of this region (Gen. 21:22-33). Abraham then named the place “Beer-sheba,” meaning “well of the oath” or preferably “well of the seven,” referring to seven lambs involved in the agreement. Here he called on the Lord (Gen. 21:33) and lived for some time (Gen. 22:19). The Lord confirmed His promises with Isaac at Beer-sheba (Gen. 26:23-25), where Isaac renamed his father's well “Shibah.” A well is found today outside the ruins of biblical Beer-sheba (Tell esSaba'); however, it cannot be the patriarchal well since it is dated much later, around the twelfth century. Isaac also lived in the area of Beer-sheba, and his son Jacob left there for Haran to seek a wife (Gen. 28:10). A crossroad to Egypt, Beersheba was a stopping place for Jacob many years later when he was encouraged by the Lord to continue on to Egypt where Joseph was awaiting him (Gen. 46:1-5). Because of these patriarchal events at Beer-sheba, it is thought that the city eventually and unfortunately became a pilgrimage destination for idolatry later during the monarchy (Amos 5:5; 8:14).

Joshua gave Beer-sheba to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:28) and then to the tribe of Simeon whose territory lay within Judah's boundaries (Josh. 19:1-2,9). Samuel's sons Joel and Abiah were unfair judges in Beer-sheba right before the monarchy began with Saul (1 Sam. 8:1-3).

Beer-sheba is mentioned idiomatically 12 times to indicate the northern and southern extremes of Israel, "Dan to Beersheba" (2 Sam. 24:2, 1 Kings 4:25). This type of phrase served to speak of Israel in its entirety and its unity, for instance, in its resolve to punish the tribe of Benjamin (Judg. 20:1) and its recognition of Samuel as a true prophet (1 Sam. 3:20). This idiom also served to show the extent of the reforms of three southern kings: Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 19:4 KJV, "Beer-sheba to mount Ephraim"), Hezekiah (2 Chron. 30:5 KJV, "Beer-sheba even to Dan"), and Josiah (2 Kings 23:8 KJV, "from Geba to Beer-sheba").

Various millstones and stone mortars from the area around Beer-sheba.

Archaeology has shown Beer-sheba to be the administrative center of the Negev by uncovering its large commercial storerooms and fortifications that were superior to the lesser cities in the area. The fortifications were inadequate, however, against the Assyrians who sacked the city and left it in ruins until the Persian period. After the punitive exile of Judah, the people returned to Beer-sheba and its surrounding satellite towns with Nehemiah in the fifth century (Neh. 11:27,30).

Tel Beer-sheba well.

As the “gateway to the desert,” Beer-sheba was in a precarious place climatically, which is the backdrop of two persons' prayers concerning death. Hagar pleaded at a distance not to see her son die (Gen. 21:14-16), and Elijah prayed for death in the desert rather than at the order of Queen Jezebel (1 Kings 19:3-4).

Daniel C Fredericks

BEESHTERAH [Bē-əsh' tərāh] Place-name meaning “in Ashtaroth” or representing a contraction of “Beth Ashtaroth,” which means “house of Ashtaroth.” Place east of the Jordan from territory of tribe of Manasseh set aside for the Levites (Josh. 21:27). First Chronicles 6:71 spells name “Ashtaroth.” See Ashtaroth.

BEGINNING AND END See Alpha and Omega.

BEHEADING See Capital Punishment; Crimes and Punishments.

A well found at Beer-sheba which may date as early as the 14th or 13th century B.c.

BEHEMOTH [Be' ha-mōth] Large beast known for its enormous strength and toughness. Described in detail in Job 40:15-24, this animal has been variously identified as an elephant, a hippopotamus, and a water buffalo, with the hippopotamus the most likely. Identification as a hippopotamus is based on the description in Job 40 of its size and strength, where it lived, and its manner of eating. The modern Hebrew word for the animal means “beast” or “cattle.” In Lev. 11:2 the word translated “beasts” (KJV) is translated “animals” in the NIV. See Hippopotamus; Leviathan.

Excavated storerooms at the site of ancient Beer-sheba in the Negev.

BEKA or BEKAH One-half a shekel. The amount contributed by each Israelite male for the use of the temple (Exod. 38:26). See Weights and Measures.

BEKER (NIV) See Becher.

BEL [Bēl] Name of Babylonian god, originally as city patron of Nippur but then as a second name for the high god Marduk of Babylon. Isaiah mocked Babylon by describing their gods burdening down donkeys in procession out of the city into captivity. People did not bow before them. The idols bowed down to get out of the city gates (Isa. 46:1). Similarly, Jeremiah prophesied shame coming on Bel (Jer. 50:2). Bel would have to spit out the nations he had swallowed up (Jer. 51:44). An apocryphal book is called Bel and the Dragon. See Apocrypha; Babylon.

BELA [Bē' lā] or BELAH Personal and place-name meaning “he swallowed.”
1. Name for Zoar. Its king joined coalition to fight off attacks from eastern kings (Gen. 14:2). See Zoar. 2. King of Edom who ruled in city of Dinhabah before Israel had a king (Gen. 36:32). 3. Son of Benjamin and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:21). He became original ancestor of clan of Belaites (Num. 26:38; 1 Chron. 7:7). 4. Descendant of Reuben (1 Chron. 5:8).

BELAITES Descendants of Bela (Num. 26:38). See Bela.

BELIAL [Be' li-al] Transliteration of a Hebrew common noun meaning “useless” or “worthless.” KJV interprets it as a proper name 16 times, but modern translations translate it as a common noun, “worthless” or “wicked.” It is a term of derision (Deut. 13:13). In Nah. 1:15, where the KJV translates it as “the wicked,” Belial appears to be the name of some specific malevolent power.

In the NT the word occurs one time (2 Cor. 6:15), where Paul the apostle declared the mutual irreconcilability of Christ and Belial, who thus appears to be equated with Satan. See Antichrist; Satan.

BELIEF, BELIEVE See Faith.

BELL Golden object fastened to the garments of the high priest that served as a signal or warning of the high priest's movements (Exod. 28:33-35; 39:25-26).

BELLOWS Instrument that blows air on a fire, making it burn hotter. The term is used only in Jer. 6:29. God appointed Jeremiah as the assayer of His people to test their purity. God's people remained like impure metal despite the fact that the bellows had blown fiercely on the fire, making it hot enough to consume lead. The refining process was in vain; the wicked remained; the people were like refuse silver. The idea of a bellows is alluded to elsewhere (Job 20:26; 41:21; Isa. 54:16; Ezek. 22:20-21). See Assayer.

BELOVED DISCIPLE Abbreviated expression used to refer to a disciple for whom Jesus had deep feelings. He has been variously identified as Lazarus, an anonymous source or author of the Gospel, an idealized disciple, or John's reference to himself without using his own name. Church tradition and interpretation of biblical evidence appear to point to John. Modestly he declined to put his name on his literary works. For this reason the one-time “son of thunder” referred to himself as the other disciple whom Jesus loved (John 20:2; 21:7 HCSB). See John.

Lawson G. Hatfield

BELSHAZZAR [Bēl-shāz' zār] Name meaning “Bel's prince.” Babylonian king whose drunken feast was interrupted by the mysterious appearance of the fingers of a human hand that wrote a cryptic message on the palace wall (Dan. 5:1). When the Babylonian seers were unable to interpret the writing, Daniel the Hebrew was called. He interpreted the message for the king, explaining that it meant the kingdom would be taken from Belshazzar and given to the Medes and Persians (Dan. 5:28). According to Dan. 5:30, Belshazzar was slain on the very night of this incident. See Babylon.

BELTESHAZZAR [Bēl-tē-shāz' zār] Babylonian name meaning “protect the king's life.” Name the prince of eunuchs under Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, gave to Daniel (Dan. 1:7). See Daniel.

BEN [Bēn] Hebrew noun meaning “son of.” A Levite who became head of a clan of temple porters under David (1 Chron. 15:18 NASB, KJV). Other translations follow the Septuagint or earliest Greek translation and some Hebrew manuscripts that omit Ben. See Bar.

BEN-ABINADAB [Bēn-ā-bin' ā-dāb] Personal name meaning “son of Abinadab.” The district supervisor over Dor in charge of provisions for Solomon's court one month a year. He married Solomon's daughter, Taphath (1 Kings 4:11). KJV reads “son of Abinadab.”

BENAIAH [Bē-nī' ah] Personal name meaning “Yahweh has built.” 1. Captain of David's professional soldiers (2 Sam. 8:18; 20:23), known for heroic feats such as disarming an Egyptian and killing him with his own sword as well as killing a lion in the snow (2 Sam. 23:20-23). Still he was not among the top three military advisors of David (2 Sam. 20:23). His unquestioned loyalty to David led Adonijah not to include him as he attempted to replace David as king instead of Solomon (1 Kings 1:8-26). He followed David's orders and helped anoint Solomon as king (1 Kings 1:32-47). He became Solomon's executioner (1 Kings 2:25-46) and army commander (1 Kings

4:4). 2. A Pirathonite who is listed among the 30 elite warriors of David (2 Sam. 23:30). 3. In 1 Chron. 4:36 a Simeonite prince who was involved in a defeat of the Amalekites. 4. In 1 Chron. 15:18 a Levitical musician involved in the processional when the ark of the covenant was brought to Jerusalem. 5. In 1 Chron. 15:24 a priest who sounded a trumpet when the ark was brought to Jerusalem. 6. In 2 Chron. 20:14 an Asaphite, the grandfather of Jahaziel. 7. In 2 Chron. 31:13 one of the overseers who assisted in the collection of contributions in the house of the Lord during the reign of Hezekiah. 8. In Ezek. 11:1 the father of Pelatiah. 9. In Ezra 10 the name of four Israelite men who put away their foreign wives.

BEN-AMMI [Bĕn-ām' mi] Personal name meaning “son of my people.” Son of Lot and his younger daughter after his two daughters despaired of marriage and tricked their father after getting him drunk (Gen. 19:38). Ben-ammi was the original ancestor of the Ammonites. See Ammon.

BENCHES KJV translation for the planks of a ship's deck (Ezek. 27:6). Modern translations give the wood of the deck variously: boxwood (NASB), pine (NRSV, TEV), or cypress (NIV, REB). These translations understand the deck to be inlaid with ivory rather than made of ivory as the KJV suggests.

BEN-DEKER [Bĕn-dē' kēr] Personal name meaning “son of Deker” or “son of bored through.” Solomon's district supervisor in charge of supplying the royal court for one month a year. His district bordered the Philistine territory on the west, reached to Aphek in the north, and to Beth-shemesh in the south (1 Kings 4:9).

BENE-BERAK [Bĕn-ā-bo-rāk'] Place-name meaning “sons of Barak” or “sons of lightning.” City of tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:45). It is located at modern Ibn Ibraq, four miles southeast of Joppa. Sennacherib, king of Assyria, in 701 B.C. claims he conquered Bene-berak.

BENEDICTION Prayer for God's blessing or an affirmation that God's blessing is at hand. The most famous is the priestly benediction (or Aaronic blessing) in Num. 6:24-25. Most NT epistles close with benedictions as well (Rom. 15:13; 16:25-27; 1 Cor. 16:23; 2 Cor. 13:14; Gal. 6:18; Eph. 3:20-21; 6:23-24; Phil. 4:23; 1 Thess. 5:28; 2 Thess. 3:18; 1 Tim. 6:21b; 2 Tim. 4:22; Titus 3:15b; Philem. 25; Heb. 13:20-21,25; 1 Pet. 5:14b; 2 Pet. 3:18; 3 John 15a; Jude 24-25). See Blessing and Cursing.

BENEDICTUS Latin word meaning “blessed.” The first word in Latin of Zacharias' psalm of praise in Luke 1:68-79 and thus the title of the psalm. See Magnificat; Nunc Dimittis.

BENEFACTORS Honorary title bestowed on kings or other prominent people for some meritorious achievement or public service. The title in Greek is Euergetes and was held by some of the Hellenistic kings of Egypt. One would not earn the title “benefactor” from service rendered in the kingdom of God. In contrast to the conspicuous work needed to earn the title “benefactor,” the members of the kingdom are to devote themselves to humble, obscure, and perhaps menial service (Luke 22:24-27).

BENE-JAAKAN [Bēn' ə-já' á-kan] Place-name meaning “sons of Jaakan.” Same as Beerothbene-jaakan. See Beeroth-bene-jaakan.

BEN-GEBER [Bēn-gē' bēr] Personal name meaning “son of Geber” or “son of a hero.” Solomon's district supervisor in the towns class="noind">northeast of the Jordan River around Ramothgilead (1 Kings 4:13). He provided supplies for the royal court one month a year. KJV reads “son of Geber.”

BEN-HADAD [Bēn-há' dād] Personal name or royal title meaning “son of (the god) Hadad.” References to Israel's interaction with Damascus and other city-states in Syria show the power of the kings of Damascus. The kings either bore a title, “ben-hadad,” son of the God, much like Israel's kings seem to have been called “son of God” at their coronation (Ps. 2:7) and as emperors of Rome were called caesars, or Ben-hadad was the personal name of several kings. See Damascus; Syria.

BEN-HAIL [Bēn-há' il] Personal name meaning “son of strength.” Official under King Jehoshaphat of Judah (873-848 B.C.), who sent him to help teach God's law in the cities of Judah (2 Chron. 17:7).

BEN-HANAN [Bĕn-hā' nān] Personal name meaning “son of the gracious one.” Son of Shimon in lineage of Judah (1 Chron. 4:20).

BEN-HESED [Bĕn-hè' sĕd] Personal name meaning “son of mercy.” Solomon's district supervisor over the Mediterranean coastal region between Aphek on the south and Hopher. He supplied the royal court one month a year (1 Kings 4:10).

BEN-HINNOM [Bĕn-hīn' nōm] Place-name meaning “son of Hinnom.” A valley south of Jerusalem serving as northern border of tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:8) and southern boundary of tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:16). Pagan child sacrifices occurred here, some kings of Judah included (Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28:3; Manasseh, 2 Chron. 33:6). Jeremiah announced God's judgment on the valley because of such practices (Jer. 19:1-15). The valley would be renamed “valley of slaughter” (Jer. 19:6). The sin of the valley gave God reason to bring the Babylonians to destroy Jerusalem (Jer. 32:35). King Josiah defiled and did away with the altars there (2 Kings 23:10). The valley served as the northern boundary of the Judean villages where the returning exiles settled (Neh. 11:30).

BEN-HUR [Bĕn-hūr] Personal name meaning “son of a camel” or “son of Horus.” Solomon's district supervisor over Mount Ephraim in charge of supplying the royal court one month a year (1 Kings 4:8).

BENINU [Bĕ-nī' nū] Personal name meaning “our son.” A Levite who sealed the covenant Nehemiah made to obey God's law (Neh. 10:13).

BENJAMIN [Bĕn' jā mīn] Personal name meaning “son of the right hand” or “son of the south.” The second son Rachel bore to Jacob (Gen. 35:17-18). He became the forefather of the tribe of Benjamin. His birth was difficult, and his mother named him Ben-oni, which means “son of my sorrow.” She died giving him birth. His father Jacob, however, did not let that name stand. He gave the child the name Benjamin.

The tribe of Benjamin occupied the smallest territory of all the tribes. Yet it played a significant role in Israelite history. Saul, Israel's first king, was a Benjamite. Furthermore, the city of Jerusalem was near the border between the territories of Benjamin and Judah and may have been in Benjamin originally (Josh. 18:16; Judg. 1:21). Benjamin's appetite for territory may be seen in Jacob's blessing (Gen. 49:27). Moses' blessing highlights Benjamin's special place in God's care (Deut. 33:12). Late in the period of the judges Benjamin almost disappeared from history when they mistreated a Levite and his concubine (Judg. 19-21).

In the NT the Apostle Paul proudly proclaimed his heritage in the tribe of Benjamin (Rom. 11:1; Phil. 3:5). See Patriarchs; Tribes of Israel.

BENJAMIN GATE Jerusalem gate (Jer. 37:13; 38:7). Identified by some with Nehemiah's Sheep Gate or with the Muster Gate, it could indicate a gate that led to tribal territory of Benjamin. See Jerusalem.

BENO [Bē' nō] Proper name meaning "his son." A Levite under David (1 Chron. 24:26-27).

BEN-ONI [Bēn ō' nī] Personal name meaning "son of my sorrow." See Benjamin.

BEN-ZOHEHETH [Bēn-zō' hēth] Personal name meaning "son of Zoheth." Son of Ishi in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:20).

BEON [Bē' ōn] Place-name of uncertain meaning. Probably a copyist's change from original Meon (Num. 32:3), a short form of Beth-meon or Beth-baal-meon. See Beth-baal-meon.

BEOR [Bē' ōr] Proper name meaning "burning." 1. Father of Bela, king of Edom centered in Dinhabah, before Israel had a king (Gen. 36:32). 2. Father of prophet Balaam (Num. 22:5). See Balaam.

BERA [Bē' rā] Personal name, perhaps meaning "with evil" or "victory." King of Sodom in days of Abraham and Lot (Gen. 14:2). He joined coalition of local kings against group of invading eastern kings.

BERACAH [Bēr' ā-kāh] or BERACHAH (KJV) Personal name meaning "blessing." 1. Skilled soldier able to use right or left hand with slingshot and with bow and arrows. He joined David's band in Ziklag, when David fled from Saul and joined the Philistines (1 Chron. 12:3). 2. Valley where King Jehoshaphat of Judah (873-848 B.C.) and his people blessed God after He provided miraculous victory over Ammon, Moab, and Edom (2 Chron. 20:26). A valley near Tekoa and a modern village retain the name: Wadi Berekut and Khirbet Berekut.

BERACHIAH [Bĕr-á-kî' áh] (KJV, 1 Chron. 6:39) See Berechiah.

BERAIAH [Bĕ-rai' áh] Personal name meaning "Yahweh created." A descendant of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:21).

BERAKIAH [Bĕr-á-kî' áh] (NIV, Matt. 23:35) See Berechiah.

BEREA [Bĕ-rĕ' á] Place-name meaning "place of many waters." City in Macedonia to which Paul escaped after the Jews of Thessalonica rioted (Acts 17:10). See Macedonia.

BERECHIAH [Bĕr-ĕ-kî' áh] Personal name meaning "Yahweh blessed." 1. Descendant of David in period after Jews returned from exile in Babylon (1 Chron. 3:20). 2. Father of Asaph (1 Chron. 6:39). See Asaph. 3. Leader of the Levites after the return from exile who lived around the city of Netophah (1 Chron. 9:16). 4. Levite in charge of the ark when David moved it to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:23). He could be identical with 2. above. 5. Leader of the tribe of Ephraim who rescued prisoners of war that Pekah, king of Israel (752-732 B.C.), had taken from Ahaz, king of Judah (735-715) (2 Chron. 28:12). 6. Father of Meshullam, who repaired the wall with Nehemiah (Neh. 3:4). His family was tied in marriage to Tobiah, Nehemiah's enemy (Neh. 6:17-19). 7. Father of the prophet Zechariah (Zech. 1:1; Matt. 23:35).

BERED [Bĕ' rĕd] Personal name meaning "cool." 1. Place used to locate Beer-lahai-roi (Gen. 16:14) but a place that cannot be located today. 2. Son of Ephraim (1 Chron. 7:20). Numbers 26:35 spells the name "Becher."

BERI [Bĕ' ri] Personal name of unknown meaning. A descendant of Asher (1 Chron. 7:36). Many Bible students think a copyist has changed original text that may have read bene (sons of).

BERIAH [Bə-ri' ah] Personal name meaning “Yahweh created.” 1. Son of Asher and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:17). He thus became original ancestor of clan of Beriites (Num. 26:44). 2. Son of Ephraim born after his sons Ezer and Elead died in battle against Gath. Beriah's name is explained here not as a compound of bara' + Yah (Yahweh created) but as a compound of b + ra'ah (with evil). His daughters built the two cities named Beth-horon (1 Chron. 7:20-25). 3. Clan leader of the tribe of Benjamin in the area of Aijalon. He helped drive out the inhabitants of Gath (1 Chron. 8:13). 4. Levite under King David (1 Chron. 23:10).

BERIITE [Bə-ri' it] Member of clan descended from Beriah. See Beriah.

BERITE [Bə' rit] Word of unknown meaning (2 Sam. 20:14). Some Bible students think original text read Bichrites, referring to clan to which Sheba, son of Bichri belonged (2 Sam. 20:13; see TEV, NRSV). Some would identify the Berites as residents of a town called Biria in northern Palestine.

BERITH [Bə' rith] Hebrew word meaning “covenant.” See Baal-berith; Covenant.

BERNICE [Bēr nēs'] Name meaning “gift.” Companion of Herod Agrippa II (Acts 25:13). She was the daughter of Herod Agrippa I, born probably about A.D. 28. Prior to her appearance in Acts, she had been married first to a person named Marcus, then to her own uncle, Herod. Two sons were born as a result of the latter union before Bernice was widowed in A.D. 48. In the following years an incestuous relationship is suggested between Agrippa II and her. Later she was married again, to Polemo, the king of Cilicia. According to the Roman historian Tacitus, she was also the mistress of the Roman emperor Titus. See Herod.

BERODACH-BALADAN [Bə-rō' dāk-bāl' ā-dān] King of Babylon who wrote Hezekiah, king of Judah (2 Kings 20:12). Parallel passage in Isa. 39:1 reads Merodoch-baladan, so most Bible students think Berodach resulted from a copyist's change in the text (cp. NIV, TEV, NRSV). See Merodach-baladan.

BEROEA [Bə-rə' ă] (NRSV) See Berea.

BEROTHAH [Bə-rə' thāh] Place-name meaning “wells.” Northern border town in Ezekiel's vision of restored promised land (Ezek. 47:16). It may be located east of the Jordan River about seven miles south of Baalbeck at Bereiten. See Berothai.

BEROTHAI [Bə-rə' thī] Place-name meaning “wells.” City in Syria from which David took brass as tribute after he defeated King Hadadezer (2 Sam. 8:8). The parallel passage (1 Chron. 18:8) reads Chun or Cun and says Solomon used the brass for temple vessels. The exact relationship of Berothah, Berothai, and Cun cannot be determined. The three are usually identified as the same place, but some Bible students dispute this. At the date when Chronicles was written, Cun may have been better known than nearby Berothai. See Cun.

BEROTHITE [Bə' rōth-īt] Person from Beeroth (1 Chron. 11:39). See Beeroth.

BERYL Light-green precious stone closely related to emeralds and aquamarines. See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

BESAI [Bə' sī] Personal name of unknown meaning. A clan of temple employees who returned from exile in Babylon with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:49).

BESODEIAH [Bēs-ō-dī' ah] Personal name meaning “in Yahweh's counsel.” Father of Meshullam, who helped Nehemiah repair the gate of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:6).

BESOM Broom made of twigs (KJV, Isa. 14:23).

BESOR [Bə' sôr] Place-name, perhaps meaning “wadi of the good news.” Brook where David left 200 weary soldiers while he and the remaining 400 pursued the Amalekites after they had burned Ziklag and captured David's wives (1 Sam. 30:9-10). David rewarded those who stayed as well as those who fought (1 Sam. 30:21-24). The Besor is probably Wadi Ghazzeah about 15 miles south of Ziklag.

BESTIALITY Sexual intercourse between a human and an animal, punishable by death in OT legal codes (Exod. 22:19; Lev. 18:23; 20:15-16; Deut. 27:21). Israel's neighbors practiced bestiality in fertility worship and worship of animal gods.

BETAH [Bē' tāh] Place-name meaning "security." City from which King David took brass after defeating King Hadadezer (2 Sam. 8:8). First Chronicles 18:8 lists Betah as Tibhath. NIV reads Tebah in 2 Sam. 8:8. See Berothai; Tibhath.

BETEN [Bē' tēn] Place-name meaning "womb." Border town of tribe of Asher (Josh 19:25). It may be located at Khirbet Abtun, 11 miles south of Acco.

BETH-ABARA [Bēth-āb' ā-rā] Place-name meaning "house of crossing." KJV reading for Bethany in John 1:28 following some Greek manuscripts. See Bethany.

BETH-ANATH [Bēth-ā' nāth] Place-name meaning "house of Anath." A fortified city in the territory of the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. 19:38). The tribe could not drive out the Canaanites from the city (Judg. 1:33). Bethanath was apparently a worship center for the Canaanite goddess Anath. It may have been located at modern Safed el-Battik, 15 miles east of Tyre.

BETH-ANOTH [Bēth-ā' nōth] Place-name meaning "house of Anath" or "house of being heard." A city of Judah (Josh. 15:59), a temple to the Canaanite goddess Anath may have been here. The modern location may be Khirbet Beit Ainur, one and a half miles southeast of Halhul.

BETHANY [Bēth' ā nē] Known primarily in the Gospels as the home of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus. Ancient Bethany occupied an important place in the life of Jesus. Jesus often found Himself staying in Bethany at the home of his closest friends as He ministered in Jerusalem.

Located on the Mount of Olives' eastern slope, Bethany sat "about two miles" (John 11:18 HCSB) southeast of Jerusalem. Bethany became the final stop before Jerusalem just off the main east-west road coming from Jericho. Being at the foot of the mountain, the people could not see Jerusalem, thus giving Bethany a sense of seclusion and quietness. The road between Bethany and Jerusalem provided a ready avenue for travel across Olivet with the journey taking about 55 minutes to walk.

The primary event in the NT taking place in Bethany involved the raising of Lazarus from the dead (John 11-12). This magnificent miracle by Jesus demonstrated His authority, prepared for His resurrection, and was even magnified through the name of His friend, Lazarus (an abbreviation of Eleazar, “God has helped”).

Another significant event in Jesus' life occurred in Bethany at the home of Simon the Leper (Matt. 26:6; Mark 14:3). Late on the Tuesday night of Jesus' last week, a woman (recognized as Mary in John 12:3) gave Jesus His “burial anointing.” Coming to Jesus in the sight of all, she brought a costly alabaster vial of perfume and emptied its contents upon Jesus' head (“feet” in John 12:3).

Besides a number of smaller references to Bethany, one final event took place there. Bethany provided the location for Jesus' final blessing to His disciples and His subsequent parting. This encounter made up the final scene of ascension in Luke's Gospel (24:50-53).

Larry McGraw

View of the ancient city of Bethany, the hometown of Mary, Martha, and Lazarus.

BETH-ARABAH [Bēth-ār' ā-bāh] Place-name meaning “house of the desert.” A border town of tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:6,61) also claimed as a city of Benjamin (Josh. 18:22). It may be modern Ain el-Gharbah southeast of Jericho.

BETH-ARAM (KJV) See Beth-haram.

BETH-ARBEL [Bēth-ār' bēl] Place-name meaning “house of Arbel.” Site of infamous battle that Hosea could use as example of what would happen to Israel (Hos. 10:14). The battle is unknown to us. The site may be Irbid in Gilead, four miles northwest of Tiberias. See Shalman.

BETH-ASHBEA [Bēth-āsh' bə-ā] Place of unknown location in Judah known for clans of linen workers, thus giving evidence of craft guilds in Israel (1 Chron. 4:21).

BETH-AVEN [Bēth-ā' vēn] Place-name meaning “house of deception” or “of idolatry.” 1. City near Ai east of Bethel (Josh. 7:2). It formed a border of Benjamin (Josh. 18:12) and was west of Michmash (1 Sam. 13:5). Saul defeated the Philistines here after God used his son Jonathan to start the victory (1 Sam. 14:23). The exact location is not known. Suggestions include Burqa, south of Bethel; Tell Maryam; and Ai. 2. Hosea used the term as a description of Bethel. Instead of a house of God, Beth-el had become a house of deception and idolatry. Thus he commanded worshipers to refuse to go there (Hos. 4:15), to prepare for battle against an army marching from the south against Benjamin (5:8), and to be afraid of the golden calves in the worship place of Beth-el, not because they represented the fearful presence of God but because they brought disaster on the nation (10:5). All the worship places were Aven, deception and idolatry (10:8).

BETH-AZMAVETH [Bēth-az-mā' vēth] Place-name meaning “house of the strength of death.” Hometown of 42 people who returned to Palestine with Zerubbabel from exile in Babylon about 537 B.C. (Neh. 7:28). Ezra 2:24 calls the town Azmaveth. It may be modern Hizmeh about two miles north of Anathoth.

BETH-BAAL-MEON [Bēth-bā' āl-mē' ōn] Place-name meaning “house of Baal's residence.” City allotted tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:17). Same as Baal-meon. See Baal-meon.

BETH-BARAH [Bēth-bār-ah] Place-name meaning “house of God.” A ford over the Jordan River and/or the village there if text of Judg. 7:24 is correct. Many Bible scholars think copyists have changed the original text, introducing a place-name not in the text.

BETH-BIREI [Bēth-bir' ē-i] (KJV) or BETHBIRI [Bēth-bir' ī] Place-name meaning “house of my creation.” Town allotted tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:31). It is apparently the same as Lebaoth (Josh. 15:32) and Beth-lebaoth (Josh. 19:6). The location is uncertain.

BETH-CAR [Bēth' cār] Place-name meaning “house of sheep.” Final site of battle where God thundered from heaven to defeat the Philistines for Samuel (1 Sam. 7:11). The location is not known unless copyists changed an original Bethhoron, as some Bible students think.

BETH-DAGON [Bēth-da' gōn] Place-name meaning “house of Dagon.” Apparently the name indicates a worship place of Philistine god Dagon. 1. Town in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:41). It is probably modern Khirbet Dajun on the road connecting Ramalleh and Joppa. 2. Town in Asher (Josh. 19:27) without certain present location.

BETH-DIBLATHAIM [Bēth-dīb-lā-thā' im] Place-name meaning “house of the two fig cakes.” Town in Moab on which Jeremiah prophesied judgment (Jer. 48:22). About 830 B.C., Mesha, king of Moab, bragged that he built the city, as recorded on the Moabite Stone. It may be present-day Khirbet et-Tem. See Almondiblathaim.

BETH-EDEN [Bēth-ē' dēn] Place-name meaning “house of bliss.” Amos announced God's threat to take the royal house out of Beth-eden or the “house of Eden” (KJV) (Amos 1:5). He was obviously referring to a place in Syria. Assyrian records refer to Bit-adini, a city-state between the Euphrates and Balik rivers, somewhat north of Syria proper. Ashurbanipal II conquered it in 856 B.C. An Assyrian representative bragged about conquering Beth-eden, urging Hezekiah to surrender about 701 B.C. (2 Kings 19:12). Ezekiel included Eden as one of the states who had traded with Tyre (Ezek. 27:23).

BETH-EKED [Bēth-ē' kod] Place-name meaning “house of shearing” (KJV, “shearing house”). Place where Jehu, after slaughtering all members of King Ahab's house in Jezreel, met representatives from King Ahaziah of Judah and killed them (2 Kings 10:12-14). It is traditionally located at Beit Qad, four miles northeast of Jenin, but recent studies question this location. Whatever its location, it must have been a meeting place and perhaps a marketplace for shepherds.

BETHEL [Bēth' el] Name meaning “house of God.” 1. Bethel was important in the OT for both geographic and religious reasons. Because of its abundant springs, the area was fertile and attractive to settlements as early as 3200 B.C., and first supported a city around the time of Abraham. Today the village of Beitin rests on much of the ruins of Bethel. Located at the intersection of the main north-south road through the hill country and the main road from Jericho to the coastal plain, Bethel saw much domestic and international travel. Bethel became a prominent border town between tribes and the two kingdoms later. Religiously, Bethel served as a sanctuary during the times of the patriarchs, judges, and the divided kingdom, hence was second only to Jerusalem as a religious center.

Entering Canaan, Abraham built an altar at Bethel, calling on “the name of the Lord” (Gen. 12:8), and returned here after his time in Egypt (Gen. 13:3). His grandson, Jacob, spent the night here on his way to Syria to find a wife. In a dream the Lord confirmed the Abrahamic covenant, and Jacob responded by renaming this locale, which was previously called Luz, “Bethel” (“house of God”; Gen. 28:10-22). Probably the name “Bethel” is referred to but out of chronological sequence in the earlier Abraham passages. When he returned with his large family, Jacob came to Bethel again to hear the Lord's confirmation of the covenant and his name was changed to “Israel.” Here again Jacob set up a stone monument (Gen. 35:1-16; Hos. 12:4-5). Extensive fortification of Bethel came after this patriarchal period.

At the time of the conquest, Bethel and Ai were taken together (Josh. 7:2; 8:3-17; 12:9,16), but the definitive defeat of Bethel is recounted later in Judg. 1:22-26. It was a Benjamite border town initially (Josh. 16:1-2; 18:13,22). Later it was a part of the Northern Kingdom (1 Chron. 7:28), only briefly annexed to Judah by Abijah (2 Chron. 13:19).

The ark of the covenant was kept in Bethel during a period of the judges (Judg. 20:27), so the tribes converged there upon Benjamin to avenge the moral atrocity at Gibeah (Judg. 20:18-28), offering sacrifices and seeking the Lord's direction (Judg. 21:1-4). Bethel also was a place where both Deborah (Judg. 4:5) and Samuel (1 Sam. 7:16) judged the civil and religious affairs of the Israelites in the area. Bethel was evidently vulnerable at the time of the judges, since archaeology shows it to have been destroyed several times in this period.

David considered the city significant enough to send it gifts during his flight as a fugitive from Saul, hoping to establish a friendship of diplomatic value in the future (1 Sam. 30:27). When he eventually named Jerusalem his capital, Bethel grew and prospered.

Whereas Bethel had been a place of orthodox worship from Abraham to the judges, Jeroboam I made it a religious center of his innovative, apostate religion of the Northern Kingdom. He erected a golden calf both here and in Dan with non-Levitic priests and an illegitimate feast to compete with the celebrations and religion of Jerusalem, 10.5 miles to the south in Judah (1 Kings 12:29-33). Bethel was the prominent site over Dan. There an anonymous prophet from Judah found and rebuked Jeroboam I and brought destruction to the king's altar (1 Kings 13:1-10). Another anonymous prophet from Bethel entrapped the first prophet into disobedience. Because of his disobedience, the Lord caused a lion to kill the first prophet (1 Kings 13:11-25).

Other true prophets seem to have been attached to Bethel even during the time of northern apostasy, since Elijah encountered a group of them there as he traveled (2 Kings 2:2-3). Amos was sent to Bethel to rebuke the kingdom of Jeroboam II in the eighth century (Amos 7:10-13) since it was the center of northern idolatry and a royal residence. He met the resistance of Amaziah, the priest, who vainly ordered him to leave the city. In addition to Amos's prophetic charges against those who sacrificed there (Amos 4:4), he predicted the destruction of Bethel and its false altars (Amos 3:14, 5:5-6), as did Hosea (Hos. 10:14-15). Hosea seems to have played with the name of Bethel (“city of God”), by referring to it as “Beth-aven” (“city of a false [god],” Hos. 5:8-9; 10:5).

The religious significance of Bethel is confirmed also by Assyria's appointment of a priest to this city to teach the new residents of the north who displaced the Israelites (2 Kings 17:28). Later, Josiah desecrated another false altar of Bethel during his reforms (2 Kings 23:4-19) and perhaps annexed the city to his Southern Kingdom. Bethel was destroyed in the sixth century during the exile; however, some returned there when released by the Persians (Ezra 2:28; Neh. 7:32; 11:31). Since it was a late first-century Roman garrison town, it was probably a city of importance at the time of Christ.

2. Another city variously spelled Bethul (Josh. 19:4), Bethuel (1 Chron. 4:30), and Bethel (1 Sam. 30:27). This may be modern Khirbet el Qaryatein north of Arad. 3. Bethel was apparently the name of a West Semitic god. Many scholars find reference to this deity in Jer. 48:13. Others would find the mention of the deity in other passages (especially Gen. 31:13; Amos 5:5).

Daniel C. Fredericks

BETHEL-SHAREZER See Sharezer,

BETHELITE [Bēth' el-īt] Resident of Bethel (1 Kings 16:34). See Bethel.

BETH-EMEK [Bēth-ē' mēk] Place-name meaning “house of the valley.” A border town in the tribal territory of Asher (Josh. 19:27). Located at modern Tel Mimas, six and a half miles northeast of Acco.

BETHER [Bē' thēr] Place-name meaning “division.” A mountain range used as an emotional image in Song 2:17. NIV reads “rugged hills.”

BETHESDA [Bē thēs' dá] Name of a pool in Jerusalem where Jesus healed a man who had been sick for 38 years (John 5:2). The name, appropriately means “house of mercy.” Most ancient manuscripts identify Bethesda as the place of the pool. Some ancient manuscripts name it Bethzatha or Bethsaida. The third edition of the United Bible Societies Greek New Testament places Bethzatha in the text and the other readings in footnotes. The waters of the pool were popularly believed to possess curative powers. Truly, the man who was healed after 38 years experienced the outpouring of God's mercy on the Sabbath. The references to the pool being stirred by angels (John 5:3b-4) are not found in either the oldest or the majority of manuscripts. However, regardless of the disagreement among manuscripts on the name of the pool or the angel passage, the pool did exist. Today this pool is identified with the series of pools found near the church of St. Anne. See Healing, Divine.

BETH-EZEL [Bēth-ē' zēl] Proper name meaning “house of the leader” or “house at the side.” City Micah used in a wordplay to announce judgment on Judah about 701 B.C. All support would be taken away from the house of the leader or the house beside (Mic. 1:11). The location may be Deir el-Asal two miles east of Tell BeitMirsim.

BETH-GADER [Bēth-gā' der] City founded by or controlled by descendants of Hareph, a descendant of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:51). It is probably the same as Geder (Josh. 12:13), if that is the proper reading. Some students of Joshua suggest the original text read Gezer or Gerar.

BETH-GAMUL [Bēth-gā' mūl] Place-name meaning “house of retaliation.” City in Moab on which Jeremiah announced judgment (Jer. 48:23). Its location was modern Khirbet elJemeil about seven miles east of Dibon.

BETH-GILGAL [Bēth-gil' gāl] Place-name meaning “house of the wheel or circle.” A village of Levitical singers near Jerusalem whose occupants participated in the dedication of the newly built city wall under Nehemiah (Neh. 12:29). It is probably the same as Gilgal. See Gilgal

BETH-HACCEREM [Bēth-hāk' ē-rēm] or BETH-HACCHEREM Place-name meaning “house of the vineyard.” City used to signal that enemies approached from the north (Jer. 6:1). Its leading official helped Nehemiah repair the Dung Gate (Neh. 3:14). It is probably modern Ramat Rahel halfway between Jerusalem and Bethlehem. Archaeological excavations show it was founded about 800 B.C. It sits high on a hill surveying the surrounding countryside. One of the later kings of Judah built a grand palace there. Apparently Jehoiakim (609-597) built the palace, which fits the description of Jer. 22:13-19. After the return from exile, it served as an administrative center.

The Pool of Bethesda at Jerusalem, a spring-fed pool near the Sheep Gate where the sick used to come to receive healing. Jesus healed a man there who had been stricken with an unidentified infirmity for 38 years.

BETH-HAGGAN [Bēth-hāg' gān] Place-name (NIV, TEV, NRSV) or common noun (KJV, NASB) meaning “house of the garden.” King Ahaziah of Judah (841 B.C.) fled there from Jehu, but Jehu finally caught up and killed him (2 Kings 9:27). It is probably modern Jenin, southeast of Tanaach.

BETH-HANAN [Bēth-há' nán] Place-name meaning “house of grace.” A city in Solomon's second district (1 Kings 4:9 TEV). See Elon.

BETH-HARAM [Bēth-há' rām] Place-name meaning “house of the exalted one” or “house of height” (KJV, Beth-aram). A city Moses allotted to the tribe of Gad (Josh. 13:27). It is probably Tell er-Rameh though others suggest Tell Iktanu. It is probably the same as Beth-haran. See Beth-haran.

BETH-HARAN [Bēth-há' rān] Place-name meaning “house of height.” Town east of the Jordan that the tribe of Gad strengthened after Moses gave it to them (Num. 32:36). It is probably the same as Beth-haram. See Beth-haram.

BETH-HOGLAH [Beth-hōg' lāh] Place-name meaning “house of the partridge.” Border city between tribes of Judah and Benjamin (Josh. 15:6; 18:19,21). It is probably modern Ain Hajlah, four miles southeast of Jericho.

BETH-HORON [Bēth-hō' rōn] Place-name of uncertain meaning. Suggestions include “house of caves,” “house of anger,” “house of the hollow,” “house of (the god) Hauron.” Twin cities, one higher than the other, were called Upper and Lower Beth-horon. An important road here dominates the path to the Shephelah, the plain between the Judean hills and the Mediterranean coast. Joshua used the road to chase the coalition of southern kings led by the king of Jerusalem (Josh. 10:10). Here God cast hailstones on the enemies. The border between the tribes of Ephraim and Benjamin was at Beth-horon (Josh. 16:3,5; 18:13-14). The city belonged to Ephraim but was set aside for the Levites (Josh. 21:22). The Philistines sent one unit of their army the way of Beth-horon to attack Saul and Jonathan (1 Sam. 13:18). Solomon rebuilt the lower city as a stone city and as a defense outpost (1 Kings 9:17). The chronicler preserved an even earlier tradition of a descendant of Ephraim, a woman named Sheerah, building the two cities (1 Chron. 7:22-24). When King Amaziah of Judah (796-767 B.C.) followed a prophet's advice and sent home mercenary soldiers he had hired from Israel, those soldiers fought the cities of Judah, including Beth-horon (2 Chron. 25:13). Upper Beth-horon is modern Beit Ur el-Foqa, five miles northwest of Gibeon and 10 miles northwest of Jerusalem. It is 1,750 feet above sea level. Lower Beth-horon is two miles to the east and only 1,050 feet above sea level. It is modern Beit Ur et-Tahta.

BETH-JESHIMOTH [Bēth-jēsh' ɪ-mōth] or BETH-JESIMOTH (KJV) Place-name meaning “house of deserts.” A town in Moab where Israel camped just before Moses died and Joshua led them across the Jordan (Num. 33:49). Joshua 12:3 lists it as land Israel took from Sihon, king of the Amorites. Moses gave it to the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:20). Ezekiel described it as one of three frontier cities of Moab, these being “the glory of the country” (Ezek. 25:9), but one facing God's judgment. It is usually located at modern Tell el-Azeme, 12 miles southeast of Jericho.

BETH-LE-APHRAH [Bēth-lē-aph' rāh] Place-name meaning “place of dust.” Town Micah used in a wordplay to announce judgment on Judah. The house of dust would roll in dust, a ritual expressing grief and mourning (Mic. 1:10). The location is uncertain, perhaps et-Taijibe between Beit Gibrin and Hebron. KJV reads “house of Aphrah”; NIV, “Beth Ophrah.”

BETH-LEBAOTH [Bēth-lēb' ā-ōth] Place-name meaning “house of lionesses.” City in territorial allotment of tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:6). It is apparently the same as Lebaoth in Judah's inheritance (Josh. 15:32). This is called Beth-birei in the parallel passage (1 Chron. 4:31). Its location is not certain.

BETHLEHEM [Bēth' lə hēm] Place-name meaning “house of bread,” “fighting,” or “Lahamu” [god]. 1. Approximately five miles southwest of Jerusalem just off the major road from Jerusalem to the Negev lies the modern Arabic village Bethlehem. The popular understanding is that the name, beth-lechem, means “house of bread.” Perhaps the first mention of the village occurred before 1300 B.C. in the Amarna letters (No. 290) where the ruler of Jerusalem complained to the Egyptian pharaoh that the people of Bit-Lahmi had gone over to the side of the “Apiru,” apparently a people without local citizenship who caused disturbances in Canaanite society.

Traditional site of the manger of the infant Jesus, inside the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem.

In the OT the parenthetical reference to Bethlehem in Gen. 35:19 is perhaps derived from a traditional burial site for Rachel near the village. Bethlehem appears in Judg. 17:7-13 as the home of the Levite who became priest to Micah. The concubine of the Levite of Ephraim was from the village of Bethlehem (Judg. 19). The book of Ruth takes place in the region of Bethlehem (Ruth 1:1-2,19,22; 2:4; 4:11). This story leads to the events that gave major importance to the village as the home and place of anointing of David (1 Sam. 16:1-13; 17:12,15).

Small entrance to the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem. Archway was filed to keep out horsemen.

Other OT references to the village include the mention of a Philistine garrison being there during David's early kingship (2 Sam. 23:14), Elhanan's home (2 Sam. 23:24), the burial place of Asahel (2 Sam. 2:32), and a fort of Rehoboam (2 Chron. 11:6). Bethlehem is also mentioned with reference to the Babylonian exile (Jer. 41:17; Ezra 2:21).

View of Bethlehem with Herodium in the background.

Stained glass window depicting the nativity scene at the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem.

It is the relationship of Bethlehem to Christ that has ensured its place in Christian history. Micah 5:2 was understood to indicate that the Messiah, like David, would be born in Bethlehem not Jerusalem. Matthew (2:1-12), Luke (2:4-20), and John (7:42) report that Jesus was born in that humble village. It appears that early Christians believed that some caves east of the village were the holy site of the birth. A field southeast of town has been identified as the place where the shepherds had the vision of the angels.

2. Town in the territory of Zebulun, about seven miles northwest of Nazareth (Josh. 19:15), which was the burial site of Ibzan (Judg. 12:10), in modern Beit Lahm. 3. Personal name as in 1 Chron. 2:51,54.

George W. Knight

BETHLEHEM-EPHRATAH (KJV) or BETHLEHEM-EPHRATHAH (NASB, NIV, NRSV) Place-name used by Mic. 5:2 to designate birthplace of new David who would come from Bethlehem, David's birthplace, and of the clan of Ephratah, that of Jesse, David's father (1 Sam. 17:12). See Bethlehem.

BETHLEHEMITE Citizen of Bethlehem. See Bethlehem.

BETH-MAACAH [Bēth-mā' ā-cāh] (NASB, NRSV) or BETH-MAACHAH (KJV) Place-name meaning "house of Maacah" or "house of pressure." Usually appears as Abel Beth-Maacah (always so in NIV). Beth-Maacah apparently appears as final stop on Sheba's trip through Israel to gain support against David (2 Sam. 20:14). See Abel-Beth-Maacah.

BETH-MARCABOTH [Bēth-mār' cā-bōth] Place-name meaning "house of chariots." City allotted to tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:5). Its location is uncertain.

BETH-MEON [Bēth-mē' ōn] Place-name meaning "house of residence." City in Moab on which Jeremiah pronounced judgment (Jer. 48:23). Apparently the same as Beth-baal-meon and Baal-meon. See Beth-baal-meon; Baalmeon.

BETH-MILLO [Bèth-míl' ló] Place-name meaning “house of fulness.” 1. Part of Shechem or a fortress guarding Shechem, where the citizens of Shechem proclaimed Abimelech king. Jotham, Jerubbaal's (or Gideon's) son asked citizens to overthrow Abimelech at Beth-millo (Judg. 9:6,20). 2. Fortification in Jerusalem where two of his servants killed King Joash (835-796 B.C.; 2 Kings 12:19-20). It is also called “Millo.” See Jerusalem; Millo; Shechem.

BETH-NIMRAH [Bèth-ním' räh] Place-name meaning “house of the panther.” City east of the Jordan that tribe of Gad rebuilt after Moses allotted it to them (Num. 32:36). It provided good grazing land (Num. 32:3). It is located at either Tell Nimrin or nearby at Tell el-Bleibil, about 10 miles northeast of the mouth of the Jordan.

BETH-OPHRAH [Bèth-òph' räh] (NIV) See Beth-le-aphrah.

BETH-PALET [Bèth-pá' lét] (KJV, Josh. 15:27) See Beth-pelet.

BETH-PAZZEZ [Bèth-páz' zéz] Place-name meaning “house of scattering.” Town in tribal allotment of Issachar (Josh. 19:22). It may be modern Kerm el-Hadetheh.

BETH-PELET [Bèth-pé' lét] Place-name meaning “house of deliverance.” Southern town in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:27). After the return from exile in Babylon, the Jews lived there (Neh. 11:26). KJV spellings are Beth-palet and Beth-phelet. The location is not known.

BETH-PEOR [Bèth-pé' ór] Place-name meaning “house of Peor.” A temple for the god Peor or Baal Peor probably stood there. Town in whose valley Israel camped as Moses delivered the sermons of the book of Deuteronomy (Deut. 3:29). It had belonged to Sihon, king of the Amorites (Deut. 4:46). Moses died and was buried near there (Deut. 34:6). It belonged to tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:20). It was located at modern Khirbet Uyun Musa, 20 miles east of the north end of the Dead Sea. Numbers does not use the place-name, but evidently at least part of the shameful worship of Baal Peor (Num. 25:1-5) occurred at Beth-peor. Hosea described the actions of Peor as a turning point in Israel's blissful honeymoon with God (Hos. 9:10). See Baalpeor; Peor.

BETHPHAGE [Bēth' phá-gē] Place-name meaning “house of unripe figs.” A small village located on the Mount of Olives near Bethany on or near the road between Jerusalem and Jericho. Reference is made to the village in each of the Synoptic Gospels (Matt. 21:1; Mark 11:1; Luke 19:29). In each account Bethphage was where Jesus gave instruction to two disciples to find the colt on which he would ride into Jerusalem for His triumphal entry. This may also be the place where the fig tree was cursed (Matt. 21:18-22; Mark 11:12-14,20-26). Today one may still find rolling stone tombs in Bethphage, such as our Lord was buried in. See Olives, Mount of; Triumphal Entry.

William H. Vermillion

BETH-PHELET [Bēth-phē' lēt] See Beth-pelet.

BETH-RAPHA [Bēth-rá' phá] Place-name meaning “house of a giant.” First Chronicles 4:12 says the otherwise unknown Eshton “became the father of Beth-rapha” (NASB). This apparently describes the beginning of a clan who lived at the town whose name is not known. The name could have distant relationships to the Rephaim (Deut. 3:11), though the Bible nowhere makes such relationships.

BETH-REHOB [Bēth-rē' hōb] Place-name meaning “house of the market.” Town near where tribe of Dan rebuilt Laish and renamed it Dan (Judg. 18:28). Rehob was the father of Hadadezer, the Syrian king of Zobah (2 Sam. 8:3). Beth-rehob may have been their hometown. When the Ammonites made David angry by humiliating his officials, Ammon sent to Bethrehob for Syrian soldiers, evidently indicating that Syria controlled the city. The town lay at the southern foot of Mount Hermon. See Rehob.

BETHSAIDA [Bēth sá' 1 dá] Place-name meaning “house of fish.” The home of Andrew, Peter, and Philip (John 1:44; 12:21), located on the northeast side of the Sea of Galilee. This town was rebuilt under Philip the tetrarch, one of the sons of Herod the Great, who named it Julius in honor of the Emperor Augustus' daughter. Near here Jesus fed the 5,000 (Luke 9:10) and healed a blind man (Mark 8:22). Jesus pronounced judgment upon Bethsaida for its lack of response to His message and miracles (Matt. 11:21; Luke 10:13). The site of Bethsaida has yet to be identified archaeologically. Some scholars do propose two sites named Bethsaida: the one northeast of the Sea of Galilee, as already discussed; and another, west of the Sea of Galilee, close to Capernaum. This postulation is based on Mark 6:45, where following the feeding of the 5,000 outside Bethsaida, Jesus tells His disciples to sail to Bethsaida. However, there is no contemporary mention of two Bethsaidas, and the Mark 6 text can just as easily refer to a short trip to the known city of Bethsaida-Julias as to an unknown town.

William H. Vermillion

BETH-SHAN, BETHSHAN [Bêth-Shân], or BETH-SHEAN [Bêth-shè' ân] Place-name meaning “house of quiet.” Beth-shean stood at the crossroad of the Jezreel and Jordan Valleys, commanding the routes north-south along the Jordan and east-west from Gilead to the Mediterranean Sea. Tell el-Husn, site of ancient Bethshean, stands above the perennial stream of Harod, the city's primary water supply, giving the city a commanding view of the two valleys.

The University of Pennsylvania in several campaigns from 1921 to 1933 carried on excavation of Tell el-Husn and its surroundings. Settlements at Beth-shean were found to date back to the Neolithic and Chalcolithic periods. The city became an important Canaanite site in the early and middle Bronze Ages (3300-1500 B.C.) but came under the domination of Egypt's 18th dynasty in the late Bronze Age. The name Bethshean (or -shan) is mentioned in the Egyptian texts of Thutmose III (1468 B.C.), the Amarna letters (1350 B.C.), Seti I (1300 B.C.), Rameses II (1280 B.C.), and Shishak (925 B.C.). Excavations have confirmed the Egyptian role in the life of Beth-shean in these periods (for example, through the discovery of scarabs and a cartouche bearing the name Thutmose III).

Biblical references to Beth-shean relate to the period from Joshua until the United Monarchy. The city is listed among the allocations of the tribe of Manasseh, though the city was within the territory of Issachar (Josh. 17:11). Yet Manasseh was unable to control Beth-shean until the Canaanites were subdued in the reign of David (Josh. 17:16; Judg. 1:27). After the defeat of Saul and the Israelite army by the Philistines (ca. 1006 B.C.), the bodies of Saul and his sons were hung on the walls of Beth-shean, where a temple to the Ashtaroth was located. Some valiant men from Jabesh-gilead rescued the bodies from this sacrilege and disposed of them in Jabesh (1 Sam. 31). Later David's men brought the bodies to the land of Benjamin to be buried (2 Sam. 21:12-14). The city is listed among those under the administration of Baana (fifth district) during Solomon's reign (1 Kings 4:12). Though the city is not specifically mentioned in the 1 Kings 14:25-28 account of the invasion of Shishak from Egypt, Beth-shean is listed among the cities plundered. Afterward, the city played little role in Israelite history, though the city was occupied by Israelites of the Northern Kingdom from 815-721 B.C.

The city remained abandoned for the most part until the Hellenistic period (third century B.C.), when it was rebuilt and renamed Scythopolis ("city of Scythians"). This city formed the foundation of a significant Hellenistic and Roman occupation that included temples, theater, amphitheater, colonnaded street, hippodrome, tombs, and many public buildings, which had spread to the northern, eastern, and southern quadrants around the earlier "tell." Scythopolis was the largest city of the Decapolis (Matt. 4:25; Mark 5:20), and the only city of the league west of the Jordan River. The city continued to flourish in the Byzantine period until Arabs destroyed it in A.D. 636. The modern village of Beisan preserves the ancient name of the city. R. Dennis Cole

The Greco-Roman theater at Beth-shean (Tel el-Husn) in Israel.

Beth-shean.

BETH-SHEMESH [Bēth-shē' mēsh] Place-name meaning "house of the sun." Beth-shemesh is a name applied to four different cities in the OT. The name probably derives from a place where the Semitic god Shemesh (Shamash) was worshiped. 1. Beth-shemesh of Issachar was situated on the tribal border with Naphtali between Mount Tabor and the Jordan River (Josh. 19:22). Present scholarship identifies the city with either el-Abeidiyeh, two miles south of Galilee, or Khirbet Shemsin, east of Tabor. 2. Beth-shemesh of Naphtali was probably located in central upper Galilee because of its association with Beth-anath (Josh. 19:38; Judg. 1:33). This Canaanite town remained independent and unconquered until the time of David. The site Khirbet er-Ruweisi has been suggested as a possible location. 3. Beth-shemesh of Egypt is to be identified with Heliopolis (five miles northeast of Cairo) according to the Septuagint or early Greek translation (Jer. 43:13). Jeremiah told of the Lord's judgment upon the gods of Egypt by depicting the destruction of the worship centers. 4. Beth-shemesh of Dan is located on the south tribal border with Judah (Josh. 15:10; 19:41) overlooking the Sorek Valley about 24 miles west of Jerusalem. The ancient name was preserved in the Arab village of Ain Shems, and the "tell" is identified with Tell erRumeilah. Beth-shemesh guarded the lush farmlands of the Sorek Valley at the point at which the Shephelah (foothills) borders the Judean hill country. It was also situated in the strategic "buffer zone" between the Philistines and the Israelites during the period of the judges.

Excavations at Beth-shemesh showing what appears to be a portion of the massive city walls.

The Danite tribe was unable to control the lands of its inheritance because of the Amorites (Judg. 1:34-35) and/or the Philistines. Some were forced into the hills near Zorah and Eshtaol (as was Samson's family, Judg. 13:1-2). Bethshemesh was apparently controlled by Israel (ca. 1050 B.C.) when the ark of the covenant passed through the city upon returning from the Philistines (1 Sam. 6:13). Around 795 B.C. the city was the scene of a battle in which Jehoash of Israel was victorious over Amaziah of Judah, resulting in the pillaging of the temple (2 Kings 14:11-14; 2 Chron. 25:21-24). Beth-shemesh is last mentioned in Scripture during the decadent reign of Ahaz. The Philistines captured Bethshemesh from Judah (ca. 734), seen as judgment from God (2 Chron. 28:18-19).

Beth-shemesh was excavated by D. Mackenzie in 1911-1912 and Haverford College in 1928-1931, 1933. The city was first settled about 2200 B.C. by a relatively small group. The city achieved importance after being conquered and rebuilt by the Hyksos about 1720 B.C. A huge city wall, three defensive towers, and several tombs were uncovered. The Hyksos city was captured by the Egyptians of the Eighteenth Dynasty about 1550 B.C. Beth-shemesh flourished in the late Bronze Age under Egyptian and Canaanite rule, evidenced by imported wares from Mycenae and Egypt, as well as quality Canaanite finds, including inscriptions. Iron Age I (Judges) finds show that Beth-shemesh was heavily influenced by the Philistines, but the city was in general decline. After David defeated the Philistines, the city was rebuilt. Excavations indicate the Israelite city had olive oil, wine, copper, fabric dyeing, and wheat production industries. After Beth-shemesh was destroyed by the Babylonians (588-587 B.C.) under Nebuchadnezzar, the city was largely unoccupied, except for remnants of the Roman/Byzantine city at Ain Shems (monastery on the corner of the tell).

R. Dennis Cole

BETH-SHEMITE [Bēth-shē' mit] Resident of Beth-shemesh. See Beth-shemesh.

BETH-SHITTAH [Bēth-shīt' tāh] Place-name meaning “house of Acacia.” Battle scene when Gideon and his 300 men defeated the Midianites (Judg. 7:22). It may be modern Tell es-Saidiya or Tell Umm Hamad. It may be east of the Jordan River.

BETH-TAPPUAH [Bēth-tāp' pū-āh] Place-name meaning “house of apples.” Town assigned tribe of Judah in Judean hills (Josh. 15:53). It is modern Taffah, about four miles west of Hebron.

BETH-TOGARMAH [Beth-tō-gār' māh] Place-name meaning “house of Togarmah.” Listed in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:3) as son of Gomer and great grandson of Noah, Togarmah is a city mentioned in Assyrian and Hittite texts. It was north of Carchemish on an Assyrian trade route. It may be related to modern Gurun between the Halys and Euphrates Rivers. Ezekiel notes Togarmah's trading relations in horses and mules with Tyre (Ezek. 27:14) and warned it of judgment along with Gog (Ezek. 38:6).

BETHUEL [Bē-thū' ēl] or BETHUL [Bē' thūl] Place-name and personal name meaning “house of God.” 1. Nephew of Abraham and son of Nahor (Gen. 22:22). His daughter Rebekah married Isaac (Gen. 24:15,67). He was an Aramean or Syrian from Paddan-aram (Gen. 25:20). His relationship to Rebekah's brother Laban (Gen. 24:29) is not clear, since Laban takes the chief role protecting Rebekah (Gen. 24:55; 27:43), and Nahor is Laban's father (Gen. 29:5). Genesis 28:5 says Laban was the son of Bethuel. Nahor was actually Bethuel's father (Gen. 22:22-23). 2. Town where the children of Shimei lived (1 Chron. 4:30). Joshua 19:4 apparently reads the same town as Bethul. It may be modern Khirbet el-Qarjeten, three miles north of Tell Arad.

BETHZATHA [Bèth-zà' tha] TEV, NSRV reading of place-name in John 5:2 based on different Greek manuscripts than those followed by other translators. See Bethesda.

BETH-ZUR [Bèth' zûr] Place-name meaning "house of the rock." 1. City allotted to tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:58). Rehoboam, Solomon's son and successor as king of Judah (931-913 B.C.), built it up as a defense city (2 Chron. 11:7) in view of the threat of Shishak of Egypt (2 Chron. 12:2). A city official of Beth-zur helped Nehemiah repair Jerusalem and its wall (Neh. 3:16). It played a significant role in the wars of the Maccabees in the period between the Testaments. It is located at Khirbet et-Tubeiqeh, 18 miles southwest of Jerusalem and four miles north of Hebron on a major highway intersection. This is one of the highest sites above sea level in Palestine. 2. Son of Maon in line of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:45), apparently indicating the clan that settled the city.

BETONIM [Bèt' ò-nîm] Place-name meaning "pistachios." A border town in tribal allotment of Gad (Josh. 13:26). It is located at Khirbet elBatne, two and a half miles southeast of es Salt on Mount Gilead.

BETROTHAL Act of engagement for marriage in Bible times and was as binding as marriage.

Old Testament The biblical terms, betrothal and espousal, are almost synonymous with marriage and as binding. Betrothal and marriage comprised a moral and spiritual principle for the home and society. The penalty under the law of Moses for disrupting this principle by adultery, rape, fornication, or incest was death by stoning (Deut. 22:23-30). Later under some circumstances the Jewish legal system allowed divorce. The forgiving love and grace of God for his adulterous people is demonstrated by Hosea's buying back his adulterous wife and restoring her to his home and protection (Hos. 2:19-20). This means that forgiveness takes precedence over stoning or divorce.

New Testament Mary and Joseph were betrothed but did not live together until their wedding. When Mary came to be with child during betrothal, Joseph decided to quietly divorce her. In a dream from God, the apparent unfaithfulness of Mary was explained to Joseph as a miracle of the Holy Spirit. This miracle gave emphasis to the unique human and divine nature of Jesus Christ. Paul used the betrothal concept to explain the ideal relationship that exists between the church as a chaste virgin being presented to Christ (2 Cor. 11:2).

Lawson G. Hatfield

BEULAH [Bo' lah] Symbolic name meaning "married," used in reference to Jerusalem (Isa. 62:4 KJV). The other name, Hephzibah, means "my delight is in her." Both names connote good fortune. The name symbolizes the closeness of Zion and her sons and that Zion is restored to her God. The name suggests fertility in the Messianic Age based on righteousness, with the Lord as husband (Isa. 62:1-2).

BEVELED WORK NRSV translation describing scrollwork on the bronze stands of the laver in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 7:29; KJV, "thin work"; NASB, "hanging work"; REB, NIV, "hammered work"). It was wreathlike in appearance and may have been gold plating.

BEWITCH KJV translation of two Greek words. In Gal. 3:1 Paul criticized the Galatians for being "captivated by the falsehood" (baskaino) of the Judaizers to the point of straying from the gospel. The Greek word used here has a history in magical evil and the casting of spells. "Bewitch" is also used as a translation of another word (existemi) that modern versions translate as "amazed," "astonish," or "astound" (Acts 8:9,11).

BEYOND THE JORDAN Often used to describe the territory on the east side of the Jordan River (also referred to as the Transjordan). Five times the phrase describes the territory on the west side of the Jordan (Gen. 50:10-11; Deut. 3:20,25; 11:30).

BEYOND THE RIVER Refers to the Euphrates River in Mesopotamia. From the perspective of those living in Palestine, “beyond the river” meant on the east side of the Euphrates River. The expression is often used when speaking of the ancestral home of the patriarchs (Josh. 24:3,14-15; KJV has “on the other side of the flood”). From the perspective of those living in Persia, “beyond the river” meant on the west side of the Euphrates River. Darius I, the great organizer of the Persian Empire, named his fifth satrapy “Beyond the River” (Ebir-nari). This satrapy included Syria and Palestine. The official Persian usage is reflected in the books of Ezra (4:10-20; 5:3,6; 6:6,8,13; 7:21,25; 8:36) and Nehemiah (2:7,9; 3:7).

BEZAI [Bē' zā-i] Contraction of Bezaleel. 1. Clan of 323 (Ezra 2:17) who returned from Babylonian exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. 2. Man who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:18).

BEZALEEL [Bēz' ā leēl] or BEZALEL [Bēz' ā-lel] Personal name meaning “in the shadow of God.” 1. Son of Uri, a member of the tribe of Judah (Exod. 31:2) and great grandson of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:20). He and another man, the Danite Aholiab, were skilled craftsmen who were responsible for making the tabernacle, its furnishings, and trappings. His skill derived from his being filled with the Spirit of God. Most modern translations render the names of these men Bezalel and Oholiab. 2. Man who followed Ezra's leadership and divorced his foreign wife (Ezra 10:30).

BEZEK [Bē' zēk] Place-name meaning “lightning.” Place where Judah and Simeon defeated Canaanites who were led by Adoni-bezek (literally “lord of Bezek”) (Judg. 1:4). In Bezek Saul numbered the Israelites to rally an army against Nahash the Ammonite and deliver Jabesh-gilead (1 Sam. 11:8). Bezek was located at Khirbet Ibziq, 12 miles northeast of Shechem and 13 miles from Jabesh-gilead, six miles north of Tirzah, though the Judges' site may be a distinctive city. If so, it would be at Tell Bezqah near Gezer.

BEZER [Bē' zēr] Place-name meaning “inaccessible.” A city of refuge in tribal territory of Reuben (Deut. 4:43; Josh. 20:8), set aside as a city for the Levites (Josh. 21:36). It may be Umm elAmad, eight miles northeast of Medeba. Mesha, king of Moab about 830 B.C., claimed to have rebuilt Bezer as a Moabite city.

BIBLE FORMATION AND CANON “Bible” derives from the Greek term for “books” and refers to the OT and NT. The 39 OT books and 27 NT books form the “canon” of Holy Scripture. “Canon” originally meant “reed” and came to signify a ruler or measuring stick. In this sense the Bible is the rule or standard of authority for Christians. The concept of “canon” and process of “canonization” refers to when the books gained the status of “Holy Scripture,” authoritative standards for faith and practice.

Organization of the Bible The OT was written primarily in Hebrew, with some portions of Ezra-Nehemiah and Daniel in Aramaic. The Hebrew OT is divided into three sections: the Law or Torah, (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy); the Prophets, divided into Former Prophets (Joshua, Judges, 1-2 Samuel, and 1-2 Kings) and Latter Prophets (Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the book of the Twelve—Hosea through Malachi); and the Writings. The Writings fall into three groups: Poetic Books (Job, Psalms, Proverbs), the Festival Scrolls or Megilloth (Ruth, Esther, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, and Lamentations), and the Historical Books (1-2 Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah, and Daniel). Our current order of OT books is based upon the Septuagint, the Greek translation of the OT.

The NT, written in Greek, is organized with the narrative books (the four Gospels and Acts) followed by the epistles (Pauline Epistles and General Epistles) and concluding with Revelation. In many Greek NT manuscripts, the General Epistles (James, 1-2 Peter, 1-3 John, and Jude) precede the Pauline Epistles (Romans through Philemon, plus Hebrews), likely due to the more direct links between Jesus and James, Peter, John, and Jude.

Development of the Old Testament Canon The common critical view, which may be traced to Hebert E. Ryle (1892, rev. 1895), is that the three-fold designation of the OT books—Law (Torah), Prophets (Neviim), and Writings (Kethubim)—is based on the gradual acceptance of each of these three “collections” as canon. This view is based largely upon the premises that Moses could not have authored the Pentateuch and that the OT historical books would have been compiled after the reign of King Josiah (Judah, 640-609). Recognition of the Torah (Law) by the fifth century B.C. is based on the fact that the Samaritans, whose canon comprised only the Torah, split from the Jews just after the exile. The Prophets is thought to have been closed by 200 B.C., explaining why the Prophet Daniel was not included (his book is in the Writings in the Hebrew canon)—critical scholars date his book to the second century B.C. The Writings are usually said to have been set at a meeting of rabbis at Jamnia (Jabneh) sometime between A.D. 70 and 135.

Roger Beckwith (1985), benefiting from the work of Jack P. Lewis (1964), S. Z. Leiman (1976), and others, addressed and refuted many issues raised by the liberal-critical school and concluded that the OT collection could have been settled as early as the fourth century B.C., although it was more probably settled by the second century B.C. For example, the Samaritans' acknowledgment of only the Torah may not be a clue to the canon's history but rather involved a rejection of the previously recognized prophets. Second, the rabbis at Jamnia were concerned not with canonization but with interpretation. Finally, although the designation of Law, Prophets, and Writings was known and important (as noted in the prologue to Ecclesiasticus; Luke 24:44; Josephus, Against Apion I:8; DSS mss.; and the writings of Philo), Beckwith proved this is not a credible guide to the process of canonization.

Oldest complete Coptic Psalter.

When God chose to reveal Himself to His people and to establish a permanent relationship with them, He used the principle of the covenant, a concept familiar from ancient Near Eastern culture. The formation of a covenant commonly involved the creation of a covenant document. Furthermore, the history of the covenant would naturally be reflected in updating that covenant document. Therefore with the Mosaic covenant came the Mosaic document, and as each book of the OT was written, its authority as the revealed word of God evoked the immediate embracing of it as sacred and binding upon the emerging Israelite community. Moses, as the covenant mediator, wrote the Torah under divine leadership. The remainder of Scripture, the early and latter prophets, the poetry and wisdom literature, and the postexilic books, were likewise accepted immediately as each one was delivered and received into the Israelite community. The closure of this process would have come as the last book was accepted as authoritative and binding (referred to as “defiling the hands”). This may have been Malachi (usually acknowledged as the last prophet) or Chronicles (the last book in the Hebrew canonical order). In any case, what Protestants attest as the 39 books of the OT canon (same as the 22 or 24 books in the Jewish community [e.g., minor prophets were counted as one book; Jeremiah and Lamentations as one; Ezra and Nehemiah as one, etc.]) was settled very close to the time of the last book's writing. See Covenant.

Development of the New Testament Canon The canonization process for the NT is easier to trace, even though some questions cannot be fully answered. The Pauline Epistles were collected and considered authoritative at least during the first half of the second century, as evidenced by Marcion's canon (ca. A.D. 140) of 10 Pauline Epistles and Luke. The four Gospels became a canonical unit during the second half of the second century, with Irenaeus (A.D. 180) defending the fourfold Gospel canon. By the end of the second century, the core of the NT canon was fixed, with the four Gospels, Acts, 1 Peter, 1 John, and 13 Pauline Epistles all accepted as authoritative texts by the leading churches. Revelation enjoyed early acceptance as well but later, near the middle of the third century, began to be questioned both on content and authorship. Hebrews was debated likewise due to authorship doubts. James, 2 Peter, 2-3 John, and Jude came to be accepted by many churches during the late third century, but they were not fully canonical until the fourth century. The first mention of a 27-book NT canon was made by Athanasius, the bishop of Alexandria, who in his Easter letter of 367, instructed the churches about the NT, listing exactly the 27 books we have. Even at that point, however, some groups such as Syriac churches used a 22-book NT canon (lacking 2 Peter, 2-3 John, Jude, and Revelation) or a 26-book canon (lacking Revelation). However, over time, the 27-book NT canon prevailed in virtually all of the churches.

The early church's task of ascertaining God's will regarding the NT canon was not easy. Marcion promoted a very limited canon in Rome (see above) that represented an extreme reaction against Judaism. He rejected the OT as well as NT writings that were “too Jewish,” keeping only Paul and Luke (the only Gentile NT writer). In reaction the church defended the OT and began defining its own NT canon, much broader than Marcion's.

In the late second century Montanism promoted an ongoing “prophetic” voice in the church. This assertion of new revelation caused the church to become more restrictive in defining the canon, limiting the NT to books that could be traced to the apostolic authorship or influence.

As the task continued, the Spirit-led process was guided by certain standards. For a book to be considered Holy Scripture (canonical), it had to enjoy widespread acceptance among the churches. Regional acceptance was not adequate. Also, criteria were needed to separate later works from those of the first century. Books must date to the apostolic era and be connected to an apostle, whether by authorship or direct association (for example, Mark and Luke were associated with Peter and Paul, respectively). The books also had to prove beneficial to the churches that heard them read. This spiritual dimension was likely paramount. Our NT books were included in the canon because they spoke so strongly to people that they could not be kept out of the canon. Lastly, the books had to be deemed suitable for public reading in the church. Since illiteracy was widespread, the reading of the text in worship was the primary contact with the text for most of the people. Those texts read in worship were heard as the authoritative Word of God. Such texts were on the path of full canonization.

A further stage of canonization occurred during the Reformation. The reformers, echoing Jerome, held that the Jewish OT canon should be followed, and so they accepted only the 39 books of the Hebrew OT, instead of the expanded OT often found in the Septuagint. These additional books (the Apocrypha) were also in the Latin Vulgate, the primary Bible of the Western Church for over 1,000 years prior to the reformation. Bibles for both the Roman Catholic Church and the Orthodox Churches still generally include the Apocrypha, but since Vatican II they have a lesser level of canonicity, being called deuterocanonical. Protestants, while not denying these books are helpful, do not accept them as canonical Holy Scripture. See Apocrypha, Old Testament; Apocrypha, New Testament.

Bill Warren and Archie W. England

BIBLE HERMENEUTICS The theory of biblical interpretation—its goals, methods, principles, and evaluative criteria used in interpreting Scripture. This may sound esoteric and impractical, but, in fact, hermeneutical theory has farreaching consequences for believers and the church.

Every person who approaches the Bible is operating with some hermeneutical theory. The results of a person's encounter with the Bible will be heavily influenced by the interpretative understandings that person brings to the text. Humans develop their interpretive skills as they learn their first language. Early in acquiring their first language, children learn what it is to misunderstand and to be misunderstood. They learn that interpretations can be right or wrong.

This early insight is the basis of a long-standing assumption in biblical hermeneutics: that a text has at least one meaning and that one's interpretation of that meaning will be right or wrong. That assumption has been challenged in recent years by postmodernists. Persons in small group Bible studies may not have read any of the postmodernists. But postmodernist assumptions can be seen in such Bible study groups where every interpretation is seen as being as good as another. In these kinds of subtle ways our hermeneutical theory is modified by the cultural milieu we imbibe without being aware of what has happened. For that reason, having an overview of biblical hermeneutics can help students of the Bible become aware of the hermeneutical principles and assumptions that they bring to the Bible every time they read it. See Bible, Methods of Study.

How we interpret the Bible shares much in common with how we interpret other texts. But the difference between biblical texts and texts from law, literature, and the sciences is that despite the 66 biblical books having been written by many people over a period of 1,500 years, the Bible claims God as its ultimate author. This raises the stakes on reading it and accurately understanding what it says. It is one thing to misinterpret Shakespeare but quite another to misread God. Nevertheless there has been and is much disagreement over what the Bible means at various points. This encourages us to look at the different interpretative approaches that give rise to a diversity of interpretations, many of which are incompatible with each other.

An assumption held in common by both Jesus and the religious leaders of His time was that the Hebrew Scriptures were the word of God. Also held in common was a number of methods of interpreting Scripture: literal, midrash, pesher, and typological. Yet, Jesus and the religious leaders interpreted Scripture very differently.

One of the first activities of the risen Christ was interpreting Scripture. As He walked with Cleopas and another disciple on the road to Emmaus, “beginning with Moses and all the Prophets, He interpreted for them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself” (Luke 24:27 HCSB). Jesus' interpretation of who He was and His mission in light of the Hebrew Scriptures is the foundation of the church and historically is the factor that created separation between the church and the synagogue.

This interpretative activity of Jesus forges a connection between the Hebrew Scriptures and what later came to be called the New Testament. Not only does Jesus' teaching bring the two Testaments together, but it provides the key for seeing how they fit together, how they are mutually dependent.

What seems so clear in Luke 24 was not seen clearly by some in the second century. Alongside the Hebrew Scriptures, a body of Christian writings were being collected (2 Pet. 3:16). By A.D. 140 the relationship between the Hebrew Scriptures and this body of Christian writing began to be questioned. Marcion, a wealthy shipbuilder from Pontus, came to Rome and sought to use his influence to remove the Hebrew Scriptures from the church. He believed the God revealed in the Hebrew Scriptures was incompatible with the God revealed in Jesus. Marcion proposed that only some of Paul's letters and an edited version of the Gospel of Luke should be viewed as Scripture.

Marcion forced the church to decide whether or not to keep the Hebrew Scriptures and how to interpret them in light of Jesus. While Marcion wanted to make the canon considerably smaller, there was another group, the Montanists who wanted to add to it Montanist writings.

Between these two extremes was a third group who wanted to keep the Hebrew Scriptures alongside Christian writings that had apostolic authority. It was not required that an apostle be an author of a canonical writing but that it be written under the authority of an apostle. Some documents that carried apostles' names were rejected because they were incompatible with apostolic teaching about Jesus Christ.

This apostolic understanding of Jesus Christ came to be an important element in biblical interpretation in the early church. Written documents are often subject to multiple interpretations. They are somewhat like a series of dots on a piece of paper. There are numerous pictures that can be made by connecting the dots in a variety of ways. A vital question for the early church was how are the dots to be connected.

The Gnostics were taking the Scriptures and reinterpreting them according to their own opinions. Irenaeus likened what they were doing to a person taking the beautiful image of a king created by an artist out of precious jewels and rearranging the gems into the image of a fox or a dog (Irenaeus, Against Heresies, I,8:1 [A.D. 180], in ANF, I:326).

In the face of these distortions of Scripture, Irenaeus formalized an interpretive framework that had been implicit in the church for a number of decades. This framework came to be called the rule of faith. The rule of faith was not something additional to Scripture. It was derived from Scripture and became a template against which to test interpretations.

The rule of faith has taken numerous forms in the history of the church. The Apostles' Creed approximates the rule of faith. Later creeds and confessions of faith have functioned historically in ways similar to the rule of faith. The rule of faith has served both a positive and negative function in the history of biblical interpretation. Positively it has kept interpretation from going far afield and becoming something that suited only the tastes of the interpreter. Negatively, at times, it has kept the church looking at the biblical text with fresh eyes.

While the rule of faith was recognized in Alexandria, it did not keep Clement and Origen from creativity in biblical interpretation. The allegorical method of interpretation flourished there long before the time of Clement and Origen. It was used in Alexandria to interpret both the Greek classics and the Hebrew Scriptures. Clement and Origen used allegory as a way to deal with difficult passages in the OT and to interpret both the life and teachings of Jesus. One of the most famous of Origen's allegories is his interpretation of the Good Samaritan. Every element in the parable symbolizes something other than itself. While this interpretation is creative, the question is whether this is what Jesus intended to convey when He told the parable. See Allegory.

Allegory as practiced in Alexandria came under criticism from biblical interpreters in Antioch. The Antiochenes were concerned that allegorical interpretation detracted from the literal truth expressed in Scripture. They believed the spiritual import of Scripture was derived from an accurate, literal reading of the text rather than from interpretations that mapped unrelated spiritual meanings on to the primary sense of Scripture.

Perhaps the most influential biblical interpreter for the next millennium was Augustine. His first encounter with the Bible was anything but promising. Compared to Cicero, Augustine found the Bible lacking in dignity. Some of Augustine's first reactions to the Bible may have stemmed from the primitive Latin translation he read.

Augustine's early training led him to believe that the goal of interpretation was fidelity to the intent of the author as expressed in the text. This being said, there is some irony in the fact that Augustine's conversion was made easier after he heard Ambrose apply the allegorical method in his preaching. As Augustine interpreted Scripture, he did not neglect the literal sense but went beyond it in passages that were ambiguous at the literal level.

Augustine set forth a number of principles that have become part of sound biblical interpretation to the present. He recognized that the interpreter must know the text, preferably in the original languages, and have a broad knowledge of numerous subjects that are a part of biblical content. Augustine recognized that the Bible contains obscure and difficult passages. He taught that the interpreter should begin with the clear passages and interpret obscure passages in light of the clear.

For Augustine the goal of biblical interpretation is spiritual—nothing less than the transformation of the persons who read and study the Bible. This goal cannot be achieved through a mechanical process. Knowing language and history well are necessary for understanding the Scriptures, but they are not sufficient. The spiritual dimension of the interpreter is integral to the process of understanding Scripture, but neither is it sufficient. Augustine recognized that biblical interpretation was a task that engaged both the intellect and the heart.

Augustine made a distinction between knowledge of language (linguarum notitia) and knowledge of things (rerum notitia). In On the Teacher Augustine maintains that language (signs) does not provide knowledge but prompts the reader to remember what they already know. In spiritual matters Christ is the teacher and source of this knowledge. Augustine distinguished between literal signs and figurative signs. The language of Genesis that gives the account of Abraham taking Isaac to Mount Moriah uses literal signs. This same language can be read figuratively as pointing to the death of Christ.

Augustine's model of biblical interpretation influenced Gregory the Great, a pivotal figure in the medieval era. Gregory began with a literal reading of the text. With this reading as a foundation, Gregory derived the doctrinal (allegorical) and the moral (tropological) import of the passage. This threefold interpretation later added a fourth level, the anagogical that pointed to the future.

The fourfold approach to biblical interpretation was summarized in a rhyme:

Littera gesta docet, (The letter teaches facts) Quid credas allegoria, (allegory what one should believe)

Moralia quid agas, (tropology what one should do)

Quo tendas anagogia (anagogy where one should aspire).

We see this fourfold method of interpretation at work in Thomas Aquinas' exegesis of Exod. 20:8-11. In his literal interpretation Thomas makes a distinction between the moral import and the ceremonial import of this commandment. Christians are to give time to the things of God. The ceremonial part of the command specifies that time as the seventh day. The allegorical interpretation signifies Christ's seventh-day rest in the grave. The tropological reading calls for Christians to desist from sin and rest in God. The anagogical reading points forward to the eternal rest and enjoyment of God in heaven.

A way of reading Scripture that originated in the medieval era resonated strongly with Augustine's emphasis on the spiritual dimension of Bible study. Lectio divina had these steps:

(1) Spiritual preparation denotes that Scripture should be approached in an attitude of prayer. The text should be read with a quiet receptivity, listening for the voice of the Holy Spirit speaking through the text. Listening is closely related to readiness to act on what was revealed in the passage.

(2) Reading scripture requires close attention to the many details that compose Scripture. The text is to be approached with the expectation that each detail has been put there for a reason and that it is for our spiritual good to attend to these details.

(3) Giving careful attention to biblical imagery is important in seeing beyond the words to the realities they convey.

Increased knowledge of the original languages of the Bible was a catalyst for a new era of biblical interpretation and knowledge. Desiderius Erasmus is a significant transitional figure. His careful work in developing a series of editions of the Greek New Testament gave him an attention to detail that shifted the emphasis in interpretation from many levels of meaning to a passion for discovering what the author intended in the text. What Erasmus saw in the approach to interpretation of the past troubled him. Creativity of interpretation had the effect of leading readers away from the author's intent. It was almost as if they were playing a game.

In this milieu and in the context of his own spiritual crisis, Martin Luther moved gradually from the largely allegorical interpretation of Scripture to an approach that sought the historical sense of a passage. Luther caricatured allegorical interpretation as a wax nose that could be shaped by the interpreter rather than having a definitive form of which the interpreter had to take account. Yet, even in criticizing allegory, Luther continued to practice it.

Luther's controversy and eventual break with Rome gave focus to another important question in biblical interpretation: in the midst of competing interpretations of Scripture, what is the source of authority? With the crisis occasioned by Gnosticism, the rule of faith was the touchstone for discerning the correct interpretation of Scripture. Now in the crisis with Rome, Luther answers, "Sola Scriptural" Not reason. Not church tradition. Scripture alone.

This does not mean that Luther and other reformers did not value church tradition. They had been shaped by it and continued to be influenced by it. However, they became aware that church tradition had itself been shaped by influences other than Scripture. Sola Scriptura was a call to recognize and act on first things first.

John Calvin, the leading Bible interpreter of the 16th century, saw that the first purpose of the interpreter is to hear and understand what the author is saying rather than to say what the author should have said. Calvin interpreted Scripture in light of Scripture and stressed the importance of the Holy Spirit who inspired the text being an integral part of the interpretative process.

An assumption held in common by the majority of exegetes from the second century through the 18th century came to be increasingly abandoned in the 18th century and beyond. The assumption is that God is the ultimate author of Scripture. In the absence of this assumption, both the nature of Scripture and the goal of interpretation began to change.

A number of factors contributed to the change in how Scripture was seen and interpreted. Both the church fathers and medieval interpreters were guided by the authority of tradition. As noted earlier the Reformers did not eliminate tradition but were critical of it in order to emphasize that Scripture alone was the touchstone of what the church teaches and practices.

In other fields of learning, traditional authorities gradually came into question. Human reason and experience came to be viewed as the sources of knowledge. The explanatory power of Newtonian physics reinforced the belief that revelation was not needed to understand God and the world. The logical progression of this was Laplace saying that he no longer needed God as a hypothesis to explain anything in the world.

In the 19th century the writings of Charles Darwin strongly reinforced the naturalistic worldview that began to displace a theistic worldview that had been dominant in the West for a thousand years.

The Bible was now seen as just a human book, to be studied with the same methods as are used to study any other human document. The goal of interpretation now was to understand what the human authors were saying and to reconstruct the process by which they came to write the documents.

It is not that all of a sudden new discoveries were made about Scripture. The earliest interpreters of Scripture were aware of different accounts of the same events. Within their frame of reference, these differences were not that significant and in themselves did not call into question Scripture's self-attestation as the word of God. These same observations made from the perspective of naturalism, however, were seen as confirmation that the Scripture was just a human document.

From the late 19th century to the present, the academic study of Scripture has seen a proliferation of methods used to understand Scripture. Some sought to reconstruct the history of the document under study, including the history and motives of the community out of which the document was composed. Another broad approach was less concerned with the historical, cultural, and religious background of the document and gave attention to its literary form. For many scholars who took this approach, the history behind the document and the historicity of the events of the narrative were of minimal interest.

While historical-critical biblical interpreters differ from traditional interpreters on the issue of the nature of Scripture, they do hold in common the belief that the goal of interpretation is to understand what the author(s) intended to say. The fact that one can never establish this with certainty does not mean that the goal is not valid and important. In recent years this assumption has been called into question by postmodernists. It is interesting that philosophers as different as Jacques Derrida and W. V. Quine have come to this conclusion. Both Derrida and Quine acknowledge that meaning is a useful pragmatic concept. Yet they, for different reasons, hold that the meaning in semantics or hermeneutics lacks explanatory power. Our common-sense understanding of meaning leads us to give it the kind of reality that physical objects have, but meaning as a kind of entity does not exist.

The implication of this for biblical interpretation is that not only can we not be sure when we have the correct interpretation of a text, but there is no correct interpretation of the text. There is no authorial intent to be wrong or right about. As different as the starting points for Derrida and Quine are, what they share in common is an attempt to account for language within a naturalistic worldview. The conclusions they come to from very different directions may be an indicator of the bankruptcy of naturalism as a research program for understanding human language and developing hermeneutical theory that takes account of the complexity and richness of human language.

Steve Bond

BIBLE, METHODS OF STUDY Most people who read the Bible do so without a clearly defined goal. It is better to study the Bible with a more defined purpose in mind, for its subject matter and its intended meaning.

Study for Subject Matter One way to study the Bible is with specific questions in mind—for example, questions about doctrine, history, or moral and spiritual guidance.

Theological Doctrines and Teachings The Bible is above all a book that talks about God and His relationship to the world. What is God like? What is His relationship to His creation? What is His intended purpose for creation?

For Christians the Bible is the ultimate source for knowledge of theology (the person and nature of God), anthropology (the makeup of human beings), soteriology (the doctrine of salvation), Christology (the doctrine of the person of Christ), ecclesiology (the doctrine of the church), and eschatology (the doctrine of the last things). As the only infallible source for doctrine, Christians scrutinize the Bible. However, great harm has been done by using the Bible as a source of “proof-texts” to support theological doctrines. The Bible should be studied not to support our belief system but to determine it. True respect for the Bible involves subjecting what we believe to its teaching. For example, we should not study NT passages dealing with Christian baptism to support our particular understanding of baptism but rather to see if our understanding is in harmony with the teaching of these passages. To the degree that our understanding is correct, the biblical texts will support it. We must judge our interpretation in light of the authors' intended meaning.

In seeking to discover what the Bible teaches concerning a particular doctrine, two general principles can be mentioned. One is that important doctrines tend to be repeated. Things referred to only once or twice in the Bible are not as important as those teachings found repeatedly. For example, we read of baptism for the dead only once in the entire Bible (1 Cor. 15:29). Whatever Paul may have meant by this, it cannot be an important issue or doctrine. Building a theological system on it is foolish. Similarly, the vast importance some groups place on Peter as the rock upon which the church is built or on speaking in tongues, belies the fact that the former is referred to only once in the Bible (Matt. 16:17-19), and the latter occurs in only two NT books (Acts and 1 Corinthians). Because of relatively rare occurrences in the Bible their importance cannot be great. Far more important are the repeated teachings that love and service are to typify the Christian life, that salvation is by grace through faith, and that a day is coming when God will judge the world. Another principle is that the NT interprets the OT. Without denying that the OT throws light on the NT, it is clear that the more recent revelation reveals those aspects of the older revelation that are no longer operative (the ceremonial aspects of the law involving clean-unclean, regulations concerning circumcision, the Sabbath, and others) and those that have found their fulfillment (the promised successor of David is Jesus of Nazareth, the arrival of the Kingdom of God with the Spirit as its firstfruits, and so on).

Biblical History One of the most popular reasons people study the Bible is to learn about the historical events it records. The most important area involves the life and teachings of Jesus. Christians want to learn as much as they can about Jesus. The primary source for this is the four canonical Gospels. These are read to discover what we can learn about the birth of Jesus, the chronology of His life, His baptism and temptation, the calling of the disciples, His teaching and healing ministry, the confession of Peter and Jesus' teaching of His forthcoming death, the transfiguration, Palm Sunday, the cleansing of the temple, the Last Supper, Gethsemane, the arrest and trial, the crucifixion, burial, resurrection, resurrection appearances, ascension, and other historical events. Another popular area of historical investigation involves the life and ministry of the Apostle Paul. There are numerous other areas of biblical history: the lives of biblical characters (from well-known people like Abraham, Moses, and John the Baptist to lesser-known people like Hagar and Jehoshaphat); various events (the call of Abraham; the exodus; the fall of Jerusalem; the return from exile). So much of the Bible is devoted to history (cp. Genesis-Exodus, Joshua-Esther, Matthew-Acts, also various portions of Leviticus-Deuteronomy, the prophets, and Paul's letters) because biblical faith is largely founded on what God has done in history.

It must be remembered, however, that understanding what happened is not the same as understanding its full meaning. A clear example of this is the empty tomb on Easter morning. This event is not self-explanatory and is subject to more than one explanation. Jesus' enemies did not deny the fact of the empty tomb, but they gave a different explanation to it than did the writers of the NT. The enemies said that Jesus' body was stolen (Matt. 28:13-15; John 20:13-15). However, the fact of the empty tomb coupled with numerous appearances of the risen Christ over a period of 40 days provided a different interpretation: the tomb was empty because Jesus conquered death and rose triumphantly from the grave. In the study of biblical history the reader should seek to understand the meaning of historical facts. The biblical writers did not consider themselves mere reporters of facts but as authoritative interpreters of those facts. Thus, when reading a historical passage, we should seek to learn “why” the author recorded this historical event. We should not be content with understanding what happened but must seek to understand what the inspired authors sought to teach by the events they recorded.

Moral Teachings for Living Another reason people read the Bible is for moral and spiritual guidance. The Bible contains all one needs to know concerning what must be done to be saved and to live a life pleasing to God. Intuitively, following the plain and simple meaning of the biblical texts, people with normal intelligence read the Bible for themselves and are able to understand the Scriptures. Thus we speak of the perspicuity or clarity of Scripture: all that is necessary for salvation and Christian living is clearly set forth in Scripture. One does not need to be a scholar or pastor to understand what to do to be saved or to live a life pleasing to God. This is understandable to the educated and uneducated alike. This reality makes possible in the fullest sense the priesthood of all believers. There are helpful principles that provide insight for interpreting the ethical teachings of the Bible.

The most helpful principle is to remember how ethical commands relate to the reception of God's grace and forgiveness. Just as the Ten Commandments (Exod. 20) followed the deliverance from bondage in Egypt (Exod. 1-19), so the ethical teachings and commands of the Bible are addressed to people who are the recipients of God's grace and salvation. The commands of Scripture are part of a covenant entered into purely on the basis of grace alone. We are saved by grace through faith for good works (Eph. 2:8-10). We love God because He first loved us (1 John 4:19). The ethical teachings of the Bible are guides to those who have already experienced God's gift of salvation. They are not a means to achieve that salvation. See Covenant

Two additional, helpful principles are that we should pay most attention to those ethical teachings frequently repeated in the Bible, and that we should note those teachings that Jesus and the inspired writers of the Bible emphasized. So we find at the center of Scripture the command to love God with all one's heart, mind, and soul, and one's neighbor as oneself (Lev. 19:18; Deut. 6:5; Josh. 22:5; Mark 12:28-31; John 15:12; Rom. 13:8-10). The repetition of this command and the emphasis that it receives indicates that this is the essence of biblical morality and the heart of the Judeo-Christian ethic.

Additional Areas of Information There are too many other subjects to give each of them a subheading. The Bible can be studied with respect to its geography; languages (the characteristics of biblical Hebrew, Aramaic, and Greek; the grammar, style, and vocabulary of biblical writers); temples (tabernacle, Solomonic, second, and Herodian); the specific regulations associated with marriage, sacrifice, diseases, circumcision, Jewish festivals, clean and unclean foods; teachings concerning hospitality; the plants and animals of the Bible; figures of speech used in the Bible (puns, parables, hyperbole, poetry); dates of various biblical events; when the books of the Bible were written; military weapons and strategy; musical instruments referred to in the Psalms; and others.

The amount of information contained in the Bible is enormous. No one could study all the subjects and information found in it, even with several lifetimes to do so. Some of the subjects are more important than others. Thus it is wise to investigate those areas which are most important. We must be aware, however, that the study of the Bible for its information or facts is insufficient without the determination and appropriation of meaning.

Study of the Bible for its Meaning Where the meaning of the Bible is to be found has been a spirited debate over the past hundred years. Since all communication involves three fundamental components (the author/speaker; the text/speech; and the reader/hearer), it is not surprising that each of these components has been advocated as the determiner of biblical meaning.

Study of the Bible for the Inspired Author's Meaning During the first half of the 20th century, a movement arose called the “new criticism” which maintained that texts such as the Bible are autonomous works of art whose meaning is totally independent of the original author and of the present-day reader. Thus what Paul meant in Romans or the meaning that a later reader gives to Romans is irrelevant; the text gives meaning to itself. However, whereas texts can convey meaning, they cannot “mean” anything. Meaning is a construction of thinking. Authors can think. Readers can think. A text, however, is an inanimate object (ink and paper) and thus cannot think or will a meaning. Therefore the meaning of a biblical text cannot be found in the ink or paper that make up a text but in either the human who thought and penned the thoughts or the one who reads it.

In the latter part of the 20th century a reader response emphasis became the dominant approach to interpretation. Here the reader is the one who determines the meaning of a text. He determines it not in the sense that he discovers the meaning of the original author of the text. Rather he gives the text its meaning. Thus it is, theoretically, perfectly acceptable to have different and even contradictory meanings ascribed to the same texts. The result of such an approach is that the reader, rather than being submissive to the text and its author, becomes their master, and what the biblical authors meant by their texts is considered irrelevant.

The more traditional understanding is that the author is the determiner of meaning and that readers should seek the meaning that the original authors intended when they wrote the texts. This is the basic presupposition of all communication: the speakers/authors determine the meaning of what they say/write. The fact that we seek to understand the meaning of Galatians with the help of Romans (not Revelation), the meaning of Acts with the help of Luke (not Plato's Republic), the meaning of John with the help of 1 John (not Hemingway's For Whom the Bell Tolls) witnesses to the fact that we want to know what the authors of Galatians, Acts, and John meant. The authors of Romans, Luke, and 1 John reveal this better than anyone else because they are the same authors writing at about the same time and on the same subject.

Role of the Holy Spirit in Interpretation The Bible teaches that both in its inception and its interpretation the Holy Spirit plays a major role. In understanding the Spirit's role in the interpretation of the Bible, it is helpful to distinguish between obtaining a correct mental grasp of what the author meant by the text and becoming convinced of the significance or truthfulness of what he wrote. Whereas all people with reasonable intelligence can understand the meaning of Scripture (some non-Christians write excellent commentaries), apart from the conviction of the Holy Spirit the teachings of the Bible are essentially “foolishness” (1 Cor. 2:14). It is through the convicting work of the Spirit that the believer knows these teachings are in reality the word of God.

Through the centuries some readers of the Bible have sought to find a deeper meaning than the meaning the authors consciously intended. It is arrogant, however, to seek a supposedly deeper and more ultimate meaning than the divinely inspired author possessed. Any such “spiritual” interpretation must itself be tested (1 John 4:1) by Scripture. In practice these deeper meanings often prove false. We have no access to God's revelation except through the willed meaning of the biblical authors, who are God's authoritative spokesmen. Those who claim that God has given them a deeper meaning beyond that of the biblical authors indeed possess a different meaning than that of the authors, but that meaning is theirs, not God's. See Inspiration of Scripture.

Importance of Genre Within the Bible we encounter numerous literary genres such as poetry, narrative, prophecy, proverbs, parables, letters, idioms, hyperbole, and others. Because the goal in studying each genre is the same—to understand the meaning of the biblical author—we need to know how these genres function. One does not interpret a love poem in the same way one interprets a medical report. The biblical writers expected their readers to understand how various genres function and the rules governing them. Some genres and the rules associated with them are:

Proverbs A proverb is a short, pithy saying usually in poetic form, expressing a wise observation concerning life. The book of Proverbs involves wise observations of life seen through the lens of the revelation of God. What makes biblical proverbs different from other proverbs is that they have been formulated and shaped through the filter of divine revelation. Writers of proverbs expect their readers to understand that proverbs teach general truths. They are not universal laws but allow for exceptions. Such exceptions do not, however, negate the general rule (cp. Prov. 1:33; 3:9-10; 10:3-4; 13:21; 22:6; Matt. 26:52; Luke 16:10).

Poetry The difference in poetic and narrative description can easily be seen by how they describe the same event. In Judg. 4 we have a narrative description of how Deborah and Barak led the people of Israel over the Canaanites led by Sisera. Chapter 5 is a poetic version of that victory. It is only in the poetic description of the battle that we find the portrayal of the earth shaking, the mountains quaking (5:4-5), and the stars fighting from heaven (5:20). As poetry (5:1 calls it a song) this imagery should not be taken literally, as their complete absence from chapter 4 indicates. A similar narrative and poetic portrayal of another such victory is found in Exod. 14 and 15.

Prophecy For many readers prophecy is understood as the precise prediction of future events. Aside from the fact that much of prophecy deals less with prediction than with proclamation, the prophetic writers did not expect their readers to interpret their prophecies as reports for modern-day historical journals. Rather, they make considerable use of poetic or figurative language. When they refer to the destruction of Jerusalem in 587 B.C. or A.D. 70, they are referring to an actual event, but frequently the language describing this is the language of poets, not of modern-day military historians.

This can be seen in the frequent use of cosmic terminology in prophecies of events subsequently fulfilled (e.g., Isa. 13:9-11 which refers to the destruction of Babylon; Jer. 4:23-26 which refers to the destruction of Jerusalem in 587 B.C.; Acts 2:17-21 which refers to the coming of the Spirit at Pentecost). The purpose of such cosmic language is to indicate that God is about to act in a mighty way in history, and since God resides in the “heavens,” cosmic terminology is used to refer to his bringing predicted events to pass.

An additional rule involved in the interpretation of prophecy involves prophecies of judgment. Such prophecies always assume, even if not stated, that repentance may avert or delay the prophecy. This is clear from Jonah's prophecy of judgment to the people of Nineveh in Jon. 3:4, its lack of fulfillment in 3:10, and Jonah's reaction in 4:2. This principle is clearly stated in Jer. 18:7-8 (cp. also Ezek. 33:13-15). Other examples of such prophecies of judgment are found in Mic. 3:12 and Jer. 26:16-19. Thus such prophecies often function less as absolute, unchangeable predictions than as warnings and opportunities for repentance.

Parables Since parables are essentially brief or extended comparisons (similes or metaphors), a distinction must be made between the picture part of a parable and the meaning the parable is seeking to teach. Usually a parable seeks to convey a basic point of comparison, teaching one main point. Like any simile or metaphor, the details generally are not intended to be pressed. Details in a parable tend simply to add color to the story and create interest. On the other hand, if the original audience would have seen allegorical significance in such details, it is legitimate for the reader today to see them as well (cp. for example Mark 12:1-11 with Isa. 5:1-7).

In order to understand the main point of a parable, several questions serve as guides. (1) Who are the two main characters? This helps to focus attention on the main point of the parable. (2) What comes at the end of the parable? This rule (called “end stress”) recognizes that authors tend to emphasize the point they are making by how they end a story. (3) Who or what gets the most space in the parable? One tends to spend more time on the most important characters in the story. (4) What is found in direct discourse? The use of direct discourse in a story focuses the readers' attention on what is being said. These questions indicate that the focus of attention in the parable of the workers in the vineyard (Matt. 20:1-16) is upon the owner and the first-hour workers and in the parable of the prodigal son (Luke 15:11-32) on the father and the older brother.

Miscellaneous Genres Some other genres found in the Bible include idioms (the use of words in combination possessing a different meaning than the normal meaning of the individual words); narrative (the retelling of past events with the purpose of teaching a point); letters (what the writers meant by the individual words, the clauses in which these words appear, and the arguments created by these clauses); covenants (generally consisting of a prologue in which the covenant maker describes himself [the preamble], a description of his past graciousness [the historical prologue], stipulations of what the second party must do to remain in this covenantal relationship, references to witnesses of the covenant, a mandate for the regular reading of the covenant, a list of blessings and cursing based on the stipulations, and the oath by the second party); hyperbole and overstatement in which statements are exaggerated for emphasis, and so on. Every genre has rules that the writer understood. Even as one cannot understand what is going on in football without understanding the rules, so the present-day reader cannot understand what the biblical author meant without understanding the rules governing the genres he used.

Author's Meaning and Present-day Application Since the biblical author is the determiner of the meaning of the biblical text, that meaning can never change because what the author meant is locked in history. However, what authors meant in the past often has implications they were unaware of. Thus what authors meant in the past includes not only their specific but also all the legitimate implications flowing from that meaning. Thus the command not to commit adultery (Exod. 20:14) includes such implications as not to lust (Matt. 5:28). Since these implications flow from the specific meaning intended by the author, what implications are legitimate is determined by the author when he wrote. A reader may discover these implications, but the author created them.

BIBLE TEXTS AND VERSIONS The text of the Bible is the best attested of any ancient writings, and we may be confident we have the original words of Scripture. Ancient copies of the Bible number in tens of thousands; other ancient works are known in a single manuscript, or a few, or rarely, a few hundred. Although no original documents survive, the great volume of manuscripts confirm the accuracy of the text. About 5,700 Greek NT manuscripts (as early as the second century A.D.) are extant and thousands of the Hebrew OT (as early as the secondthird B.C.), some copied within 200 years of the final editing. Manuscripts of other ancient works are separated from their originals by much longer periods of time.

Old Testament Texts No document before the printing press was more carefully copied than the OT. Manuscripts were written on various materials. Papyrus, made from a reed abundant in Egypt, was used from the earliest times. Parchment was made of sheep, goat, and other animal hides. Paper, a Chinese invention (A.D. 105), began to be used in Egypt around A.D. 700 and in Europe around A.D. 1000. Old Testament manuscripts were in scrolls until A.D. 600; the codex, a book form, became popular thereafter.

The most important witness to the OT text is called the Masoretic text. Scribes, called Masoretes, were active A.D. 500-1000. They were not innovators but careful preservers of the consonantal text, the vowels, and accents of the Hebrew text. The most famous family was the ben Asher, especially Moses and his son Aaron, the most important Masorete.

Leningrad* Codex Dated A.D. 1008, the Leningrad Codex was a direct copy of the text of Aaron ben Asher and is the basis of the current Hebrew Bible and most modern OT translations.

Aleppo Codex The Aleppo Codex (A.D. 925) is perhaps the best OT manuscript, but it is missing most of the Pentateuch because of a fire during the late 1940s. Solomon ben Buya copied the text (consonants), and Aaron ben Asher supplied the vowels. This Codex is the basis for a new critical Hebrew OT being produced by the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

Codex Cairensis Codex Cairensis (A.D. 896), copied by Moses ben Asher, contains the Former and Latter Prophets. Taken from the Karaite Jews of Jerusalem by the Crusaders, it was later returned to the Karaites in Cairo, Egypt.

Dead Sea Scrolls Discovered 1947-1961 in caves near the Dead Sea, the Dead Sea Scrolls (ca. 250 B.C.-A.D. 70) are about 40,000 fragments from 600-1,000 scrolls (200 are OT). They predate the next oldest extant manuscripts by 800-1,000 years. Most are close to the Masoretic text, but some follow the Septuagint or Samaritan Pentateuch. The Dead Sea Scrolls testify to the careful transmission of the OT text and the reliability of the Masoretic Text.

Samaritan Pentateuch The Samaritan Pentateuch originated about the fifth century B.C. and was transmitted independently of the Masoretic Text, differing in about 6,000 places. It provides some added details, harmonizations, and sectarian theology. The oldest extant manuscripts date to the 11th century.

New Testament Texts The over 6,000 manuscripts of all or part of the Greek NT are written on papyrus, parchment, and paper. The categories of manuscripts are the Papyri, the Uncials (script similar to capital letters), the minuscules (lowercase cursive script), and the lectionaries (cursive texts designed for readings in worship). The text was transmitted in several types. Most scholars believe that the Alexandrian is oldest and closest to the original, followed by the Western, Caesarean, and the latest form, the Byzantine or Koine.

Papyri Only four papyri (of 115) are from scrolls; the rest are from the Codexes. None cover the entire NT. The papyri preserve a very early and accurate text, as many date to the second and third centuries. Some important papyrus manuscripts include:

P52: The oldest fragment of the Greek NT (A.D. 110-125), P52 contains John 18: 31-33,37-38. As John wrote his Gospel A.D. 90-95, P52 may reflect the original text of John.

P45, P46, P47: The Chester Beatty Papyri (acquired 1930-1931). Having 30 leaves (early third century), P45 contains sections of the Gospels and Acts. P46, ca. A.D. 200, with 86 leaves, has the Paulines and Hebrews (placed after Romans). P47, (mid-third century) has 10 leaves, Rev. 9:10-17:2.

P66, P72, P74, P75: The M. Martin Bodmer Papyri, published 1956-1962. P66, ca. A.D. 200, contains most of John. P72, ca. A.D. 250, contains 1-2 Peter and Jude. P74, ca. A.D. 750, contains portions of Acts, James, 1-2 Peter, 1-3 John, and Jude. Dating around A.D. 200, P75 contains extensive portions of John 1-15 and Luke 3-24. This is the earliest copy of Luke and one of the earliest of John.

Uncials Only about a fifth of the 309 Uncials have extensive sections of the NT. The Uncials are second in importance only to the Papyri. Important Uncials include:

Sinaiticus (a, 01): Discovered in 1859 at St. Catherine's Monastery on Mount Sinai by Constant von Tischendorf, Sinaiticus (fourth century) is the only Uncial containing the entire Greek NT. The text is early Alexandrian and in some places Western.

Vaticanus (B, 03): Vaticanus (fourth century) contains most of the NT, except 1-2 Timothy, Titus, Philemon, Heb. 9:14-13:25, and Revelation, and is one of the most important witnesses to the NT text, reflecting a text very close to P75.

Alexandrinus (A, 02): Alexandrinus (fifth century) contains most of the NT, except Matt. 1-24, portions of John 6-8, and 2 Cor. 4-12. Alexandrinus is an important Alexandrian witness outside the Gospels, is Byzantine in the Gospels, and is one of the best texts of Revelation.

Minuscules Written with lowercase letters in cursive script (9th—17th centuries), minuscules reflect the Byzantine text, but preserve some early readings. Over 2,800 minuscules have been catalogued.

Family 1: Consisting of four 12th—14th century manuscripts (1, 118, 131, 209), Family 1 represents a Caesarean text of the third-fourth centuries.

Family 13: Comprised of about 12 11th-15th century manuscripts, Family 13 has affinities with the Caesarean text-type.

Ms 33: MS 33 (ninth century) contains the entire NT except Revelation. Generally Alexandrian, it shows the influence of the Byzantine in Acts and the Paulines.

Ms 81: MS 81 (A.D. 1044) contains Acts and the epistles, and in Acts often agrees with the Alexandrian text.

Ms 1739: MS 1739 (10th century), containing Acts and the epistles, apparently followed a fourth-century manuscript, except in Acts, which the scribe attributed to Origen (ca. 250 B.C.). MS 1739 preserves a relatively pure Alexandrian text.

Lectionaries The lectionaries are minuscule manuscripts that arrange the text of the NT into readings for each Sunday of the liturgical year. Over 2,400 lectionaries have been cataloged. Though most are late, scholars are finding that lectionaries may preserve a form of the text from much earlier than the date the manuscript was copied.

Old Testament and New Testament Versions Because of their antiquity, some ancient versions (translations) are important for establishing the original text of the Bible. Important versions include:

Septuagint (LXX) The first translation, from Hebrew to Greek (ca. 280-100 B.C.), the LXX is the most important non-Hebrew witness to the OT. Some books such as Genesis and Psalms are literal translations; others such as Isaiah are freer. The Septuagint generally represents the Masoretic text, but there are differences, at times significant (in Jeremiah and Ezekiel). Some books preserve a more accurate text than the Masoretic, especially Samuel and Kings.

Targums Targums, Aramaic renderings of the OT, according to tradition began with Ezra (Neh. 8:8), and portions of Job and Leviticus are among the Dead Sea Scrolls. The Targums are important for providing traditional synagogue interpretation, as well as witnessing to the Hebrew text. Some are rather literal and others are periphrastic.

Peshitta Syriac (a dialect of Aramaic) translation of the OT and NT (fifth-sixth centuries A.D.), the Peshitta generally follows the Masoretic text in the OT. In the NT the Peshitta follows various text types. The NT contains only 22 books, excluding 2 Peter, 2-3 John, Jude, and Revelation.

Vulgate The Latin Vulgate (A.D. 383-405) was the work of Jerome, the premier linguist in the Church of his era. It was the Bible of the Western Church for over 1,000 years. Jerome translated the Masoretic OT text into Latin, and over 8,000 Latin manuscripts are extant. He used Latin and several Greek manuscripts. His Greek manuscripts seem to have been a mixture of text-types. See Textual Criticism; Textus Receptus.

Russell Fuller and Charles W. Draper

BIBLE TRANSLATIONS The OT was written in Hebrew and Aramaic and the NT in Greek, the languages of both the writers and those who were expected to read the books in the first instance. All or part of the Bible has been translated into over 2,000 languages and dialects. The process of translation is ongoing in the effort to make God's Word available to all in languages that everyone can understand.

Early Translations The Samaritan Pentateuch used by the Samaritan community is a form of Hebrew written in a different script (Samaritan characters) from that which the Jewish community later came to use. The Aramaic translations called Targums have their beginning in the pre-Christian period and are represented in the Qumran finds; but the major Targums came later.

The OT was translated into Greek about 250 B.C. for the royal library of Alexandria. Named from the 70 translators who are said to have made it, the Septuagint, though made by Jews, has come down to us through Christian channels. Later Greek translations were made in the early period by Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion.

The evangelistic thrust of the early church gave impetus for many translations to impart the gospel to peoples in diverse language areas of the Roman Empire. Before A.D. 400 the Bible had been made available in Latin, Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, and Georgian. The succeeding centuries brought still other translations.

In the West the church primarily used Latin after the end of the second century, and unofficial translations were made. In the fourth century Pope Damasus I invited Jerome to revise current Latin translations based on Hebrew and Greek manuscripts. Jerome completed the new translation after 18 years of work at Bethlehem. Jerome's translation came to be the accepted Bible, and by A.D. 1200 was called the Vulgate, the official version for the Roman Catholic Church.

Reformation Translations The invention of printing in 1443 and the onset of the Protestant Reformation in 1517 stimulated great interest in Bible translation. Most of the modern languages of Europe had printed translations made at that time: German, 1466; Italian, 1471; Spanish, 1478; and French, 1487. Each of these areas has a long history of manuscript translation prior to printing.

English Translations Efforts to render Scripture into English began with Caedmon's paraphrases into Anglo-Saxon (A.D. 670). Bede (A.D. 735) is said to have translated the Gospel of John, completing it on the last day of his life. It was, however, John Wycliffe and his associates (A.D. 1382) who are given credit for having first given the English the complete Bible in their own language.

Erasmus printed the Greek NT for the first time in 1516. Luther made his German translation in 1522-1524; and William Tyndale in 1525 brought out his English NT—the first printed one to circulate in England. Making use of Tyndale's material where available, Miles Coverdale brought out his complete Bible in 1535.

From this point the history of the English Reformation and the history of the English Bible go hand in glove with each other. Coverdale's Bible was followed by Matthew's Bible in 1537. Then in 1539 Coverdale, with the king's approval, brought out the Great Bible, named for its large size.

With the coming of Mary Tudor to the throne in 1553, the printing of Bibles was temporarily interrupted; but the exiles in Geneva, led by William Whittingham, produced the Geneva Bible in 1560. This proved to be particularly popular, especially with the later Puritans. Matthew Parker, archbishop of Canterbury, then had the Bishops' Bible prepared, primarily by bishops of the Church of England, which went through 20 editions. Roman Catholics brought out their Rheims NT in 1582 and then the OT in 1610. The period of Elizabeth was the time of England's greatest literary figures.

With Elizabeth's death and the coming of King James I to the throne, at the Hampton Court Conference in January 1604, the king accepted the proposal that a new translation be made. The outcome was the King James Version of 1611. It is number nine in the sequence of printed English Bibles and is a revision of the Bishops' Bible. The KJV was heavily criticized in its early days; but in time, with official pressure, it won the field and became “the Bible” for English-reading people—a position it held for almost 400 years. The KJV has undergone numerous modifications so that the currently circulating book differs from that of 1611 in over 75,000 places.

By 1850 large numbers of people felt the time had come for a revision. A motion made by Bishop Wilberforce in the Convocation of Canterbury carried, setting in operation the making of the Revised Version whose NT appeared in 1881 and its complete Bible in 1885. The best British scholars of the day participated in the revision, and American scholars were also invited for a limited role. Though launched with great publicity, the revision eventually provoked harsh criticism. In time it became obvious that people still preferred the KJV. The revised edition was more accurate; however, the style was awkward.

The Americans waited out the 15 years that they had promised before they would bring out a rival revision. The American Standard Revised Version was issued in 1901 with the American preferences in the text and the British in an appendix. It was more accurate than the KJV, but the revisers made the mistake of using an English style not native to English at any time. Wishing a literal translation, they produced one that is really English in Greek and Hebrew grammar and word order.

English Bible Translations in the Twentieth Century At the turn of the century, Adolf Deissmann, using study of the papyri from Egypt, persuaded scholars that the NT was in the common language (the Koine) of the first century, giving impetus to an effort to present the Bible in the language of the twentieth century. Accompanying this development was the rise of archaeological discovery that gave new manuscripts of both the OT and NT. The Cairo Genizah collection of Hebrew manuscripts was found at the end of the last century, and the Dead Sea Scrolls in 1947. Perhaps 25 Greek manuscripts of the NT could have been used in 1611. Now over 5,400 are known. More of the Uncial manuscripts (309) were available to 20th century translators. The papyrus manuscripts (115), most found in 20th century, are the oldest extant sources for the NT text. Wider knowledge of the nature of the biblical and related languages has been gained, making for more accurate definitions. New scholarly grammars, dictionaries, and anthologies of texts grew out of these developments. Besides these matters is the simple fact that the English language continually changes so that what is understandable at one period becomes less so at a later one.

Translation theory became a factor in Bible translation in the last half of the 20th century. The extremes are paraphrase and a “wooden” word-for-word literalism. Between the extremes, one choice is “formal equivalence,” where the objective is to find a formal equivalent for the words of the text being translated. Supporters of this method suggest that it is necessary in order for the reader to know what Scripture says, and some see theological implications that, if the words of Scripture are the words of God, they should not be modified in translation more than is unavoidable. All translations may involve some interpretation, but interpretation is not the work of the translator. Another choice is “dynamic equivalence,” where the priority is to communicate effectively the thoughts of the text being translated. Supporters of this view suggest that translation should communicate with the reader as effectively as the original did with its readers, and that translating “meaning for meaning” is necessary to accomplish this. Most of the previous translations were formal equivalence, including the King James, American Standard, and Revised Standard. Several recent translations fall into each category. Notably, the New English Bible (NEB, 1961) and its revision, the Revised English Bible (REB, 1989), the New International Version (NIV, 1978), the Good News Bible (GNB, 1976), the Jerusalem Bible (JB, 1966), and its thorough revision, the New Jerusalem Bible (NJB, 1985), and the New Living Translation (NLT, 1996) are dynamic equivalence. The New American Standard Bible (NASB, 1971) and its significant revision, the New American Standard Bible, Updated Edition (NASU, 1995), the King James II (KJ II, 1971), the New King James Version (NKJV, 1982), and the New Revised Standard Version (NRSV, 1989) are formal equivalence.

The first half of the 20th century saw a spate of translations which abandoned the effort to revise the KJV and attempted to reflect new trends, each from its own viewpoint. They had a limited vogue in some circles while being criticized in others. Some were works of groups while others were prepared by one person; none seriously threatened the dominance of the KJV.

The Revised Standard Version, with its NT ready in 1946 and the complete Bible in 1952, bore the brunt of criticism of modern translations because it was the first serious challenge after 1901 to the long dominance of the KJV. It retained the Old English forms in liturgical and poetic passages, as well as using Old English pronouns when deity is addressed. Eventually an edition was issued with modifications to make it acceptable for use by Greek Orthodox and Roman Catholics which is called the “Common Bible.”

The New Revised Standard Version appeared in 1989. Chaired by Bruce Metzger, the translators sought to preserve all that is best in the English Bible and to make the language as accurate and clear as possible. Significantly different from the RSV, the NRSV removed archaic pronouns and is both dignified and lucid. It is sanctioned for public and private reading by the National Council of Churches.

The British have prepared the New English Bible (1970) which represents certain trends in British biblical scholarship. The American reader will see differences between British English and American English. A revision, the Revised English Bible (1989), is strongly oriented to dynamic equivalence in translation and retains many British colloquialisms, as did its predecessor.

Roman Catholics issued the Jerusalem Bible, which with its notes is used both in and out of Catholic circles. In 1985, a thorough revision, the New Jerusalem Bible, was published. Even more fluid and readable than its predecessor, it is widely used. Of more widespread influence is the New American Bible (1970) which was used in preparing the English version of the liturgy of the Roman church. While making some concessions, its notes support Catholic doctrine.

The Jewish community has produced the New Jewish Publication Society translation Tanakh (1962-1982). This translation follows the Masoretic Text for the most part, is very readable, and is among the best translations of the Hebrew Bible.

The Living Bible (1971, LB), by Kenneth N. Taylor, is a paraphrase of the Bible, based on the American Standard Version (1901, ASV). Extremely popular in its early years, but of uneven quality, it has been much criticized. Dr. Taylor freely admits that it is not a substitute for Bible translations. Its successor is a dynamic equivalence translation from the original languages, The New Living Translation (1996, NLT), with a dual goal of reliability and readability. The NLT is the product of a large group of transdenominational scholars and leans toward inclusive language.

Those who prefer literal translation found their representatives in the New American Standard Bible (NASB) prepared by the Lockman Foundation (1971). An attempt to give the ASV new life, this effort removes many archaisms from the ASV; it reflects different judgments on textual questions from the ASV, and it places words not represented in the original text but added by the translators for clarity in italics, as did the King James Version. The NASB was significantly revised in the New American Standard Bible, Updated Edition (1995, NASU). Archaic pronouns are removed and readability is greatly enhanced without sacrificing accuracy. The NASU removes many of the common objections to the NASB and is without competitors as the most accurate English translation of the Bible. An effort to preserve as much of the old as possible is the New King James Bible (1982). This is a “halfway house” for those who know that something needs to replace the KJV but who are not willing to have a translation which represents the current state of knowledge and uses current language.

An effort to meet the needs of those who have English as a second language or those who have a limited knowledge of English is Today's English Version (TEV), also known as the Good News Bible (1976). Recasting of language, consolidation of statements, and paraphrasing have all been employed in the effort to make the message simple enough to be grasped by the reader.

The New International Version was issued in 1978 by the International Bible Society from a cooperative project in which more than 110 scholars representing 34 religious groups participated. Abandoning any effort to revise the KJV line of Bibles, the NIV is a new translation aiming at accuracy, clarity, and dignity. It attempts to steer a middle course between literalness and paraphrase while attaining a contemporary style for the English reader but does not always succeed, leaning heavily toward dynamic equivalence and containing many colloquialisms.

The NT of a new translation, the Holman Christian Standard Bible, was published in 2000. The OT is due in 2004. This translation strives for “optimal equivalence,” using formal equivalence except when a formal equivalent cannot be easily understood, in those cases leaning toward a dynamic equivalent. Translated from the critical texts of the OT and NT, it is lucid, dignified, faithful to God's word, and accurate. Wide distribution indicates it is quite popular. The HCSB answers many of the common objections to formal equivalence translations.

The ESV, English Standard Version, is essentially a literal translation published in 2001. It emphasizes “word-for-word correspondence” but also readability. It is designed for personal reading and in-depth study as well as Scripture memorization and public worship.

Eugene Peterson has completed his translation of The Message (2002). It is a contemporary language paraphrase designed to express a personal message to the reader. It is an outgrowth of his work as a pastor. It is not designed to replace the more literal translations but is for the new believer and those who need a more modern slant to enhance their understanding.

Jack P. Lewis and Charles W. Draper

BIBLICAL THEOLOGY See Theology, Biblical.

BICHRI [Bik' rī] Personal name meaning “first-born” or clan name “of the clan of Becher.” Father of Sheba, who led revolt against David after Absalom's revolt (2 Sam. 20:1).

BICHRITE [Bik' rit] (RSV) See Berites.

BICRI [Bik' rī] (NIV) See Bichri.

BIDKAR [Bid' kār] Officer of Jehu who took body of Joram, king of Israel (852-841 B.C.), and threw it on Naboth's land after Jehu murdered the king (2 Kings 9:25). Bidkar and Jehu had originally served as chariot officers for Ahab, Joram's father.

BIER Litter or bed upon which a body was placed before burial. They were portable (2 Sam. 3:31; Luke 7:14). Biers in biblical times have been compared to the wooden boards used in Muslim funerals to carry bodies today. Asa's bier was of a more elaborate type of burial couch that was probably placed in the tomb. The Hebrew word for bier (mittah) is the normal word for bed and is translated bier only when referring to burials.

BIGTHA [Big' thá] Persian personal name possibly meaning “gift of God.” A eunuch who served King Ahasuerus of Persia and took command to Queen Vashti to come to party (Esther 1:10). Bigthan (Esther 2:21) may be the same person. See Bigthan.

BIGTHAN [Big' thán] May be identical with Bigtha. He plotted with Teresh, another of the king's eunuchs, to assassinate King Ahasuerus of Persia (Esther 2:21). Mordecai foiled the plot, thus setting up the king's need to honor Mordecai at Haman's expense (Esther 6:1-12). See Bigtha.

BIGTHANA [Big-thá' ná] Alternate spelling in Hebrew of Bigthan (Esther 6:2). See Bigthan.

BIGVAI [Big' vá-i] Persian name meaning “god” or “fortune.” 1. Leader with Zerubbabel of exiles who returned from Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:2). Either he or another person of same name was original clan ancestor of 2,056 people who returned (Ezra 2:14). When Ezra returned about 458 B.C., 72 members of the clan returned (Ezra 8:14). 2. One who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:16).

BIKRI [Bik' rī] (TEV) See Bichri.

BILDAD [Bil' dād] Proper name meaning “the Lord loved.” One of the three friends of Job (Job 2:11). He is identified as a Shuhite, perhaps a member of a group of nomadic Arameans. His speeches reveal him as a defender of traditionalist theological views. He argues that a just God does not punish the innocent (chap. 8). Job should admit he was suffering the just fate of the wicked (chap.18), and no person can be righteous before the awesome God (chap. 25). See Job.

BILEAM [Bil' ē-am] City given to Levites from tribal territory of western Manasseh. It is often identified with Ibleam. Joshua 21:25, a parallel passage reads “Gath-rimmon.” See Ibleam.

BILGAH [Bil' gah] Personal name meaning “brightness.” 1. Original ancestor of one of divisions of priesthood (1 Chron. 24:14). 2. Priest who returned from exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Neh. 12:5).

BILGAI [Bil' gi] Priest who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:8).

BILHAH [Bil' hā] Personal name meaning “unworried.” The handmaid of Rachel (Gen. 29:29). When Rachel failed to bear children to her husband Jacob, Bilhah became his concubine at Rachel's instigation. Bilhah became the mother of Dan and Naphtali (Gen. 29:29; 30:4-8). See Patriarchs; Tribes of Israel.

BILHAN [Bil' hān] Personal name, perhaps meaning “afraid” or “foolish.” 1. Descendant of Seir or Edom (Gen. 36:27). 2. Descendant of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:10).

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT See Divorce.

BILSHAN [Bil' shān] Akkadian personal name meaning “their lord.” Leader of returning exiles with Zerubbabel from Babylon about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:2).

BIMHAL [Bim' hāl] Descendant of tribe of Asher (1 Chron. 7:33).

BINDING AND LOOSING Simon Peter made the great confession that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God, in Matt. 16:16. Jesus immediately responded by telling Simon that his name would be Peter and that Christ would build His church on this great confession. He went on, “I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatever you bind on earth will have been bound in heaven, and whatever you loose on earth will have been loosed in heaven” (16:19 HCSB). Jesus gave a similar statement in Matt. 18:18, this time to all of the disciples.

Some have taken the statement to imply that the institutional church or the ecclesiastical head has the power to make authoritative statements that may supersede Scripture and that heaven is obligated to comply. Others have taken it to mean that Christians have the authority to “bind” and “loose” spiritual powers by use of the spoken word of faith. Neither of these views is a satisfactory interpretation.

A correct understanding of the two passages is tied to the grammar of the phrases “will have been bound in heaven” and “will have been loosed in heaven.” The grammatical constructions in both phrases and in both verses are periphrastic future perfect passives. A more accurate translation of Matt. 16:19 might be “and whatsoever you shall bind on earth shall have been bound in heaven: and whatsoever you shall loose on earth shall have been loosed in heaven.” Similarly, Matt. 18:18 might well read “Whatsoever you shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever you shall loose on earth shall have been loosed in heaven.” In other words, that which would be declared and bound on the earth will have already been declared and bound in heaven first; that which would be declared and loosed on earth will have already been declared and loosed in heaven first.

In Matt. 16:19 the context involves the keys to the kingdom of heaven. This is a clear reference to the gospel, upon the truths of which Jesus would build His church. Simon and the other apostles are given authority to offer the gospel freely to loose those in bondage. This same gospel alienates some, so we find Peter shutting up the kingdom as well (Acts 4:11-12; 8:20-23). Those who are loosed by the church have already been loosed by heaven, and those bound by the gospel's narrowness will have been bound by heaven, as long as the church confines itself to simple, direct gospel proclamation. Heaven and earth come together then as disciples proclaim the message of salvation, confirming some in their sin, loosing others to the freedom of forgiveness.

Matthew 18:18 addresses the matter of church discipline. Here Jesus uses virtually the same words as in 16:19 to speak of the importance of confrontation and restoration. The gathered body has an obligation to exercise church discipline toward erring or sinful members, knowing that as it does so, heaven has already ratified its action. Even more, when churches exercise godly and appropriate discipline, which is a vital mark of true churches, they can be sure of the presence of the Lord in their midst at the time, “For where two or three are gathered together in My name, I am there among them” (18:20 HCSB). The “two or three” here are the same two or three that established the truth of the need for correction in Matt. 18:16. This text is not, then, a general statement about the presence of the Lord among His people but an assurance of His providential guidance in matters of church discipline. The Lord is present even with individual Christians, but it is a great comfort to know that He stands in the midst of the church when it exercises the most difficult of all of its functions—discipline.

David G. Shackelford and Chad Brand

BINEA [Bin' ē-ā] Descendant of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:37) and of King Saul (1 Chron.9:43).

BINNUI [Bin' nū-i] Personal name meaning “built.” 1. Father of Noadiah, Levite who assured the temple treasures Ezra brought back from exile were correctly inventoried (Ezra 8:33). 2. Two men who divorced foreign wives when Ezra sought to remove temptation to idolatry and purify the community (Ezra 10:30,38). 3. Man who helped Nehemiah repair the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 3:24). 4. Clan leader of 648 members who returned with Zerubbabel from Babylon about 537 B.C. (Neh. 7:15; Ezra 2:10—spells it “Bani” with 642 people). 5. Levite who sealed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's law (Neh. 10:9). Could be same as any of the above. He came up with Zerubbabel from Babylonian exile (Neh. 12:8).

BIRDS The Bible contains approximately 300 references to birds, scattered from Genesis to Revelation. The Hebrew people's keen awareness of bird life is reflected in the different Hebrew and Greek names used for birds in general or for specific birds. Although bird names are difficult to translate, many birds of the Bible can be identified from the descriptions of them given in the Scriptures.

Several general terms for birds occur. In the OT the Hebrew term ‘oph, the most general term for birds, is used collectively to refer to flying creatures or fowl, as well as to winged insects. The term ‘oph occurs repeatedly in the creation narrative of Gen. 1 and 2 (Gen. 1:20-22,26,28,30; 2:19-20). Genesis 6:20 notes the division of birds into species. Leviticus 20:25 categorizes them as clean or unclean. Leviticus 11:13-19 and Deut. 14:12-18 list the specific birds which the Hebrews regarded as unclean and therefore not to be eaten. All birds of prey, including eagles, vultures, hawks, and falcons, were classified as unclean.

A second general term used for birds in the OT is tsippor. Like 'oph, tsippor may refer to birds of every kind (Gen. 7:14; Deut. 4:17), but it usually denotes game birds (Ps. 124:7; Prov. 6:5) or the perching birds (passerines, Ps. 102:7; Dan. 4:12). From the term tsippor the name of Moses' wife (Zipporah) is derived.

In the NT the Greek term peteinon is used for birds in general (Matt. 6:26; 8:20; 13:4; Luke 9:58; 12:24; Acts 10:12; 11:6; Rom. 1:23). The term orneon is used in Revelation to describe the completeness of Babylon's destruction (18:2) and to refer to flesh-eating fowl (19:17,21).

Some of the specific birds mentioned are: cock (rooster), dove (turtledove), eagle, ostrich, pigeon, quail, raven, sparrow, and vulture. See other individual bird names in the alphabetical dictionary listing.

Birds of abomination The birds of abomination are in the list of 20 birds not to be consumed by Israelites (Lev. 11:13-19). The reason for the exclusion of these birds is unclear. Some have suggested that the birds were prohibited because they were associated with the worship of idols. Others have suggested that they were excluded because they ate flesh which contained blood or because they had contact with corpses—both of which would make one ritually unclean (Lev. 7:26; 17:13-14; 21:1-4,11; 22:4; Num. 5:2-3; 6:6-11).

BIRSHA [Bir' shá] Personal name with uncertain meaning, traditionally, “ugly.” King of Gomorrah who joined coalition of Dead Sea area kings against eastern group of invading kings (Gen. 14:2).

BIRTH Bringing forth young from the womb. The biblical writers, like other ancient people, did not fully understand the process of conception. Having no knowledge of the woman's ovum, they thought that only the male's semen (his “seed”) produced the child. The woman provided her womb as a receptacle for the protection and growth of the child.

Midwives were often used in the birthing process (Gen. 35:17; 38:28; Exod. 1:15). Birthstools were also used (Exod. 1:16). The infant's navel cord was cut immediately after birth; the child was cleaned, rubbed with salt, and wrapped in cloths (Ezek. 16:4). Often the child was named at birth (Gen. 21:3; 29:32,35; 30:6-8). The woman was considered ritually unclean for a period from 40 to 80 days following birth (Lev. 12:1-8; Luke 2:22). See Birthstool.

When a son was born, he was placed immediately on his father's knees (Gen. 50:23; Job 3:12). The psalmist's words, “Upon thee was I cast from my birth,” (KJV) reflects the father's receiving of his new son and signifies God's care from the moment of birth (Pss. 22:10; 71:6). Rachel, by receiving Bilhah's child upon her knees at birth, was adopting him as her own (Gen. 30:3-8).

Birth could be premature because of the shock of bad news (1 Sam. 4:19). The untimely birth—here, stillborn—enters the dark, finds rest, and does not know the agony of life (Eccles. 6:4-5; Job 3:11-13). A miscarriage was caused by accident or violence (Exod. 21:22-25) or may have been considered as divine judgment (Ps. 58:8; Hos. 9:14).

The birth of a child was a time of rejoicing, especially the birth of a son (Ruth 4:13-14; Jer. 20:15; Luke 1:14,57-58; 2:13-14; John 16:21). One's birthday was an occasion for celebration (Gen. 40:20; Matt. 14:6). If life became unbearable, one might be moved to curse the day of birth (Job 3:3; Jer. 20:14).

The birthing process was used in a figurative way in describing the relationship of God to His people. In Deut. 32:18 God gave birth to Israel as a mother would give birth to a child. Therefore, when the Israelites said to the tree “You are my father,” and to the stone, “You gave me birth,” they turned away from their true parent (the tree and stone pillar were symbols in the worship of idols). According to Jesus, it is just as necessary to be born of the Spirit as it is to be born of a woman (John 3:1-7). The birthing process is also used as an image to describe God's creative activity (Job 38:29). God is even pictured as a midwife (Isa. 66:7-9).

Many biblical writers used the pain of childbirth in a metaphorical way. Kings before God tremble like a woman giving birth (Ps. 48:6). The coming of the Day of the Lord will cause anguish similar to childbirth. There will be pangs, agony, cries, gasping, and panting (Isa. 13:8; 42:14; Jer. 6:24; 13:21; 22:23; 30:6; 48:41; 49:24; 50:43; John 16:21; Rev. 12:2).

Phil Logan

BIRTH CONTROL In response to God's command in the garden of Eden to “be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth” (Gen. 1:28; cp. Gen. 9:1,7), men and women in ancient Israel and Judea placed a high value on human reproductivity (1 Sam. 1:8; Ps. 127:3-5). Emotional and economic security in ancient Israel was expressed through large families (Ps. 113:9) and protected by legal structures and customs which ensured genealogical continuity (Deut. 25:5-10; Ruth 4:5; Mark 12:18-23). One's personal identity was largely based on kinship and lineage so that a woman who was barren was considered incomplete (Gen. 30:22-23; 1 Sam. 1:5-6). For these reasons Onan's attempt at birth control was displeasing to both God and his family (Gen. 38:8-10).

Eunuchs were fairly common in the ancient world (e.g., Matt. 19:12; Acts 8:27). Castration was aimed not at birth control but performed for a variety of reasons such as punishment, to mark religious devotion, or to qualify a male for certain jobs which required undistracted loyalty, such as supervising women of the royal household (Esther 1:10-12; 2:3). However, Mosaic law recognized that castration was contrary to the created order and banned castrated persons from religious service (Deut. 23:1). This ban was evidently relaxed by the time of Isaiah (Isa. 56:3-5).

Paul H. Wright

BIRTH DEFECTS The Bible records four clear cases of birth defects: a man “blind from birth” (John 9:1), a man “crippled from birth” (Acts 3:2), a man “crippled in his feet, who was lame from birth” (Acts 14:8), and a eunuch (male sterility) “born that way” (Matt. 19:12).

A variety of diseases and physical handicaps are mentioned in the Bible with no note as to their origin or cause (e.g., Matt. 9:2; Mark 7:32). Leviticus 21:18-21 lists physical deformities which disqualified a male descendant of Aaron from serving in the sanctuary of the Lord; these include blindness, lameness, disfigurement, dwarfishness, eye defects, and damaged testicles. In many instances such deformities must have been congenital.

The Bible is clear that while the development of a fetus may not be understood by people (Eccles. 11:5), it is both known and guided by God (Job 10:11; 31:15; Ps. 119:73; 139:13-16; Isa. 44:2; 46:3; 49:5; Jer. 1:5; Rom. 8:28). For this reason, every person must be embraced as a whole person in the eyes of God.

Paul H. Wright

BIRTHRIGHT Special privileges that belonged to the firstborn male child in a family. Prominent among those privileges was a double portion of the estate as an inheritance. If a man had two sons, his estate would be divided into three portions, and the older son would receive two. If there were three sons, the estate would be divided into four portions, and the oldest son would receive two. The oldest son also normally received the father's major blessing. Esau forfeited his birthright to his brother Jacob for the sake of a meal of lentil stew and bread (Gen. 25:29-34). Indeed, the Hebrew word for blessing (berakah) is virtually an anagram of the word that means both birthright and firstborn (bekorah). Legal continuation of the family line may also have been included among the privileges of the firstborn son. Deuteronomy 21:15-17 prohibited a father from playing favorites among his sons by trying to give the birthright to other than the firstborn.

BIRTHSTOOL Object upon which a woman sat during labor (Exod. 1:16 NASB, NKJV). The birthstool may have been of Egyptian origin. The same Hebrew word ('obnayim) is also translated as “potter's wheel” (Jer. 18:3). See Birth.

BIRZAITH [Bīr-zā' ı̄th] or BIRZAVITH [Bīr-zā' vı̄th] (KJV) Descendant of Asher (1 Chron. 7:31).

BISHLAM [Bı̄sh' lām] Personal name or common name meaning “in peace.” Apparently representative of Persian government in Palestine who complained about building activities (Ezra 4:7) of the returned Jews to Artaxerxes, king of Persia (464-423 B.C.).

BISHOP Term that comes from the Greek noun episkopos, which occurs five times in the NT (Acts 20:28; Phil. 1:1; 1 Tim. 3:2; Titus 1:7; 1 Pet. 2:25). “Overseer” more accurately identifies the function of the officeholder than does the term “bishop.”

In ancient Greek literature episkopos is used of the gods who watch over persons or objects committed to their patronage. When referring to people, this term can likewise refer to one's protective care over someone or something but can be used also as an official title. Most commonly, the term is applied to local officials of societies or clubs but is found also as a title for religious leaders.

Of the five uses of episkopos in the NT, one is used of Jesus where He is called the “Shepherd and Overseer” of our souls (1 Pet. 2:25). The other four uses refer to officeholders in predominately Gentile congregations. In Acts 20:28 Paul exhorts the Ephesian elders to guard the flock since the Holy Spirit has made them “overseers” to shepherd the church of God. In Phil. 1:1 Paul addresses the “bishops and deacons.” The qualifications for the office of bishop are given in 1 Tim. 3:1-7 and Titus 1:5-9. Although little is said concerning the duty of the bishop, one of the requirements that distinguished a bishop from a deacon was the bishop's responsibility to teach (cp. 1 Tim. 3:2; Titus 1:9 with 1 Tim. 5:8-13).

Since episkopos is used interchangeably with “elder” (Gk., presbuteros), it is likely that these two terms denote the same office in the NT (many also equate episkopos with the “pastor and teacher” of Eph. 4:11). For example, in Acts 20 Paul summoned the Ephesian elders (v. 17), then stated that God had made them “overseers” (v. 28) to shepherd the church of God. Similarly, Titus is instructed to “appoint elders in every town” (Titus 1:5 HCSB), but when Paul gave the needed qualifications, he said, “For a bishop...must be” (Titus 1:7 NRSV; cp. 1 Pet. 5:1-2). Yet, the fact that episkopos and presbuteros are used interchangeably is not the only evidence that the two terms denote the same office. If episkopos and presbuteros are two separate offices, then Paul never delineates the qualifications for elders, a striking omission given the importance of this office. Also, both the episkopos and the presbuteros have the same functions, leading and teaching (cp. 1 Tim. 3:2,4-5; Titus 1:7,9 with Acts 20:28; 1 Tim. 5:17). Furthermore, nowhere are the three offices mentioned together (bishop, elder, and deacon), which suggests that a three-tiered ecclesiastical system is foreign to the NT. It is also likely that more than one bishop (or elder) led each local congregation (Acts 20:28; Phil 1:1; cp. Acts 14:23; 20:17; 1 Tim. 5:17; Titus 1:5; James 5:14; 1 Pet. 5:1).

The related noun episkope occurs four times in the NT. Twice it refers to God's judgment (Luke 19:44; 1 Pet. 2:12) and twice it refers to officeholders (Acts 1:20; 1 Tim. 3:1).

It is not until the second century A.D. (in the epistles of Ignatius) that a distinction is made between the bishop and the elders. At first the bishop was simply the leader of the elders but soon gained more power and became sole head of the church, distinct from elders. Later, the bishop ruled not only one congregation but all the churches in a particular city or region. Today the Roman Catholic Church, Eastern Orthodox churches, Anglicans, Methodists, and Lutherans use bishops who have oversight of multiple churches.

Ben L Merkle

BIT Metal bar fastened to the muzzle end of the horse's bridle. The bit is inserted in the horse's mouth between the teeth and is used to control the horse. The bit had loops on either end for attaching the reins. Some bits from the biblical period have spikes which would have stuck in the side of the horse's mouth when the reins were applied; the pain made the horse more responsive to the rider's commands. The bit and bridle were used figuratively in the Bible to refer to different forms of control (James 1:26; 3:2; 2 Kings 19:28; Isa. 37:29).

BITHIA [Bi'thi'á] (NASB) or BITHIAH [Bith'Yáh] Personal name meaning “daughter of Yahweh” or Egyptian common noun meaning “queen.” Daughter of an Egyptian pharaoh whom Mered, a descendant of tribe of Judah, married (1 Chron. 4:17 NASB, RSV; 4:18 KJV, NJV). The verse stands in verse 18 in Hebrew but relates to the content of verse 17. Bithiah was the mother of Miriam, Shammai, and Ishbah. Throughout its history Israel incorporated foreigners into its tribes.

BITHRON [Bith' rón] Place-name meaning “ravine” or common noun meaning “morning.” As David ruled Judah in Hebron and Ishbosheth ruled Israel in Mahanaim, their armies clashed under generals Joab and Abner. Abner retreated. Joab and his brothers pursued. Abner killed Asahel. Finally when Joab quit pursuing, Abner crossed the Jordan and marched through Bithron (2 Sam. 2:29), either a ravine or mountain pass (KJV, NIV, TEV) or the forenoon (RSV, NASB).

BITHYNIA [Bi-thín' í-á] District in northern Asia Minor that Paul's missionary company desired to enter with the gospel (Acts 16:7). The Holy Spirit prevented them from doing so and directed them instead to Macedonia. Though no record exists of how the Christian faith took root in Bithynia, believers lived there during the first century. Those to whom 1 Peter was addressed included persons in Bithynia (1 Pet. 1:1).

BITTER See Gall.

BITTER HERBS Eaten with the Passover meal (Exod. 12:8; Num. 9:11), the herbs were interpreted as symbolizing the bitter experiences of the Israelites' slavery in Egypt. Some have suggested that the bitter herbs comprised a salad including lettuce, endive, chicory, and dandelion. The word translated “bitterness” in Lam. 3:15 is the same word translated “bitter herbs.”

BITTERN KJV translation for an animal of desolation mentioned three times (Isa. 14:23; 34:11; Zeph. 2:14). The name “bittern” is applied to any number of small or medium-sized herons (Botaurus and related genera) with a characteristic booming cry. Bittern and heron are marsh and water birds and do not seem to be the animal referred to by the biblical writers. A number of alternatives have been suggested: bustard (REB), (screech) owl (NIV, TEV), porcupine, hedgehog (NASB, NRSV), and lizard. Of these suggestions, hedgehog and porcupine have the widest support. The animal represents the wild and mysterious world that humans do not control. See Hedgehog.

BITTER WATER Women suspected of adultery were given bitter water to drink (Num. 5:11-31). If a man suspected his wife had been unfaithful to him but was not a witness to the act and could not produce witnesses to the act, the woman was taken to the priest who arranged an ordeal to determine the woman's innocence or guilt. When the man brought the woman to the priest, he brought an offering of jealousy or remembrance (a cereal offering of barley). The priest seated the woman before the sanctuary facing the altar. The woman's hair was unbound as a sign of her shame. The woman held the offering, and the priest held the vessel containing the bitter water. The bitter water was a combination of holy water and dust from the sanctuary floor. At this point the woman took an oath: if she was innocent, the water would not harm her; if she was guilty, then her “thigh would rot” and her “body swell.” The woman affirmed the oath with a double “amen.” The priest wrote the curse (Num. 5:21-23) on a parchment and washed the ink off the page into the water. The priest then took the offering and burned it upon the altar, after which the woman drank the bitter water. If she was innocent, she would not be harmed and would conceive children as a blessing. If she was guilty, the curse would take effect. The man bore no guilt if his suspicions proved false—that is, he had not willingly broken the ninth commandment against bearing false witness. The woman, on the other hand, bore the consequences of her guilt (Num. 5:31).

BITUMEN (NRSV, RSV, ESV) Mineral pitch or asphalt (KJV has “slime”; NASB, NIV, “tar pits”) found in solid black lumps in the cretaceous limestone on the west bank of the Dead Sea (Gen. 14:10). Other forms are found in Asia Minor. Bitumen was used as a mortar in setting bricks in the buildings and ziggurats in Mesopotamia (Gen. 11:3) and as a caulking for rafts and basket boats on the Euphrates (Exod. 2:3; cp. Gen. 6:14). See Babel; Pitch.

BIZIOTHIAH [Biz' 1-ó-thi' áh] or BIZJOTH-JAH [Biz-jóth' jah] (KJV) Place-name meaning “scorns of Yahweh.” Southern town in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:28). The parallel list in Neh. 11:27 reads benoteyha (“her villages”), which the Joshua text of the Septuagint or early Greek translation also read. If that is not the correct reading in Josh. 15:27, then the location of Biziothiah is not known.

BIZTHA [Biz' thá] Persian personal name of uncertain meaning. One of seven eunuchs who served King Ahasuerus in matters relating to his wives (Esther 1:10).

BLACK Often used to denote the color of physical objects: hair (Lev. 13:31,37; Song5:11); skin (Job 30:30; Song 1:5-6; Lam. 4:8); the sky as a sign of rain (1 Kings 18:45); and animals (Gen. 30:32-43; Zech. 6:2,6; Rev. 6:5). “Black” is also used figuratively to describe mourning (Job 30:28; Jer. 4:28; 8:21; 14:2); a visionless day (Mic. 3:6); the abode of the dead (Job 3:5; Jude 13); and the treachery of Job's friends (Job 6:16). See Colors.

BLAINS KJV word for “sores” in Exod. 9:9-10. See Boil.

BLASPHEMY Transliteration of a Greek word meaning literally “to speak harm.” In the biblical context blasphemy is an attitude of disrespect that finds expression in an act directed against the character of God.

Old Testament Blasphemy draws its Christian definition through the background of the OT. It is significant that blasphemy reflects improper action with regard to the use of God's name. God revealed His character and invited personal relationship through the revelation of His name. Therefore, the use of God's name gave the Israelites the opportunity of personal participation with the very nature of God.

Leviticus 24:14-16 guides the Hebrew definition of blasphemy. The offense is designated as a capital crime, and the offender is to be stoned by the community. Blasphemy involves the actual pronunciation of the name of God along with an attitude of disrespect. Under the influence of this interpretation, the personal name of God (Yahweh) was withdrawn from ordinary speech and the title of Adonai (Lord) was used in its place.

Israel, at various times, was guilty of blasphemy. Specifically mentioned were the instances of the golden calf (Neh. 9:18) and the harsh treatment of the prophets (Neh. 9:26). David was accused by Nathan of making a mockery of God's commands and giving an occasion for the enemies of Israel to blaspheme—to misunderstand the true nature of God (2 Sam. 12:14).

The enemies of Israel blasphemed God through acts against the people of God. The Assyrians claimed that God was powerless when compared to their mighty army (2 Kings 19:6,22; Isa. 37:6,23). A contempt of God was shown by the Babylonians during the exile, as they continually ridiculed God (Isa. 52:5). Edom was guilty of blasphemy when it rejoiced over the fall of Jerusalem (Ezek. 35:12). God responded with judgment (2 Kings 19:35-37) or promised judgment (Isa. 52:6; Ezek. 35:12-15) to defend the dignity of His name.

New Testament The NT broadens the concept of blasphemy to include actions against Christ and the church as the body of Christ. Jesus was regarded by the Jewish leaders as a blasphemer Himself (Mark 2:7). When tried by the Sanhedrin, Jesus not only claimed messianic dignity but further claimed the supreme exalted status (Luke 22:69). Such a claim, according to the Sanhedrin, fit the charge of blasphemy and, therefore, deserved death (Matt. 26:65; Mark 14:64). However, according to the NT perspective, the real blasphemers were those who denied the messianic claims of Jesus and rejected His unity with the Father (Mark 15:29; Luke 22:65; 23:39).

The unity of Christ and the church is recognized in the fact that persecutions against Christians are labeled as blasphemous acts (1 Tim. 1:13; 1 Pet. 4:4; Rev. 2:9). It is also important that Christians avoid conduct that might give an occasion for blasphemy, especially in the area of attitude and speech (Eph. 4:31; Col. 3:8; 1 Tim. 6:4; Titus 3:2).

The sin of blasphemy is a sin that can be forgiven. However, there is a sin of blasphemy against the Holy Spirit that cannot be forgiven (Matt. 12:32; Mark 3:29; Luke 12:10). This is a state of hardness in which one consciously and willfully resists God's saving power and grace. It is a desperate condition that is beyond the situation of forgiveness because one is not able to recognize and repent of sin. Thus one wanting to repent of blasphemy against the Spirit cannot have committed the sin.

Jerry M. Henry

BLASTING Reference to the hot east winds which blow across Palestine for days at a time (Deut. 28:22 KJV, RSV; other versions read “blight”). This blasting wind dries up vegetation and ruins crops (Isa. 37:27; Ps. 90:5-6; 102:3-4; Isa. 40:6-8). This wind represents one of the great natural calamities (1 Kings 8:37; 2 Chron. 6:28) and one of the judgments of God upon the disobedient (Deut. 28:22; Amos 4:9; Hag. 2:17).

BLASTUS ^[Blās' tōs] Personal name meaning “sprout.” Official under Herod Agrippa I (A.D. 37-44). Won over by citizens of Tyre and Sidon, he tried to help them make peace with Herod. Herod's ensuing speech let him assume the role of God over the people, resulting in God striking him dead (Acts 12:20-23).

BLEACH See Fuller.

BLEMISH Condition that disqualifies an animal as a sacrifice (Lev. 22:17-25) or a man from priestly service (Lev. 21:17-24). In the NT, Christ is the perfect sacrifice (without blemish, Heb. 9:14; 1 Pet. 1:19) intended to sanctify the church and remove all its blemishes (Eph. 5:27). The children of God are commanded to live lives without blemishes (Phil. 2:15; 2 Pet. 3:14).

BLESSING AND CURSING Key biblical emphases, as reflected by 544 uses of various forms of the word “bless” and 282 occurrences of various forms of the word “curse” in the ESV.

In the OT the word most often translated “bless” is barak. The relationship between the concepts of “bless” and “kneel” thought formerly to meet in this word is generally no longer considered valid. The words for these concepts only sounded alike, like “spelling bee” and “bumble bee.” To “bless” meant to fill with benefits, either as an end in itself or to make the object blessed a source of further blessing for others. God is most often at least the understood agent of blessing in this sense, and blessing a person often amounted to calling on God to bless them. In another sense the word could mean to “praise,” as if filling the object of blessing with honor and good words. Thus individuals might bless God (Exod. 18:10; Ruth 4:14; Pss. 68:19; 103:1), while God also could bless men and women (Gen. 12:3; Num. 23:20; 1 Chron. 4:10; Ps. 109:28; Isa. 61:9). Persons might also bless one another (Gen. 27:33; Deut. 7:14; 1 Sam. 25:33), or they might bless things (Deut. 28:4; 1 Sam. 25:33; Prov. 5:18).

Words of blessing could also be used as a salutation or greeting, similar to an invocation of “peace” (shalom, Gen. 48:20). As such it may be used in meeting (Gen. 47:7), departing (Gen. 24:60), by messengers (1 Sam. 25:14), in gratitude (Job 31:20), as a morning salutation (Prov. 27:14), congratulations for prosperity (Gen. 12:3), in homage (2 Sam. 14:22), and in friendliness (2 Sam. 21:3). To be blessed by God was considered the essential ingredient of a successful and satisfying life. A related word asher, often translated “blessed” (Ps. 1:1 in KJV, RSV, etc.) refers especially to the state of happiness (cp. HCSB) resulting from being blessed.

In the NT the word “blessed” often translates makarios, meaning “blessed, fortunate, happy.” It occurs 50 times in the NT, most familiarly in the “beatitudes” in Jesus’ Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:3-11). Thus the NT concept stresses the joy people experience as children of God and citizens of his kingdom of God (Rom. 4:7-8; Rev. 1:3; 14:13).

For the act of “blessing,” the NT generally used the verb eulogeo, whose etymology reflects the meaning “to speak well of” or “praise” (Luke 1:64). The related adjective eulogetos was especially used with this sense (Luke 1:68; Eph. 1:3). More often the verb refers to bestowing benefits (Gal. 3:9) or asking God to do so (Heb. 7:1). The noun eulogia, “blessing,” has a range of meaning similar to the verb (e.g., Rev. 5:12; James 3:10; Heb. 6:7).

Of the 282 biblical uses of various forms of the word “curse” in the ESV, all but 34 are in the OT. The concept was clearly more prevalent in the OT. Depending on who is speaking, one who “curses” is either predicting, wishing or praying for, or causing great trouble on someone, or he is calling for an object to be a source of such trouble. As belonging to God and His people meant blessing, being cursed often meant separation from God and the community of faith. It thus involved the experience of insecurity and disaster.

The two most common words for “curse” in the OT are arar and qalal. The former is the one that specifies the results of the fall and the entrance of sin into God's creation (Gen. 3:14,17; 4:11; 5:29; 9:25). It is found 39 times in the OT as a passive participle (“cursed is the one who ...”) in pronouncements of judgment or deterrence from future sin (esp. Deut. 27-28). The other word, qalal, particularly invokes the experience of being insignificant or contemptible (Gen. 27:12-13; Exod. 21:17; Lev. 19:14).

At one time many scholars believed that the OT reflected the ancient Near Eastern idea that the formally spoken word had both an independent existence and the power of its own fulfillment. This concept was sometimes derived, for example, from Isa. 55:10-11, “my word...shall not return to me empty, but it shall accomplish that which I purpose, and shall succeed in the thing for which I sent it” (ESV). Blessings and curses were likewise thought to have such independent power. But other passages as Prov. 26:2 (“Like a flitting sparrow or a fluttering swallow, an undeserved curse goes nowhere,” HCSB) demonstrate that for a word of blessing or curse to be effective it had to be appropriate and divinely sanctioned (cp. Ps. 109:17-20). Although the pagan king Balak may have believed in the self-fulfilling power of formally spoken words (Num. 22:6), even the pagan diviner Balaam knew otherwise (Num. 22:18-19). Isaac's blessing of his son Jacob was not irrevocable because it had already been uttered (Gen. 27:30-40) but because it had clearly been ordained by God (Gen. 25:22-23), and Isaac's preference for his son Esau could not change that.

In the NT the act of “cursing” sometimes means to wish misfortune on someone (Luke 6:28; Rom. 12:14; James 3:9-10). The concept of the “curse” is also applied to those who are outside God's blessings which are by His grace (Matt. 25:41). They are therefore under divine condemnation, the “curse of the law” because of sin (John 7:49; Gal. 3:10,13; 1 Cor. 16:22). Especially serious is the situation of those who reject or actively oppose the work of God (Gal. 1:8-9; 2 Pet. 2:14; Rev. 16:9,11,21).

E. Ray Clendenen

BLIGHT See Blasting.

BLINDNESS Physical blindness in the biblical period was very common. The suffering of the blind person was made worse by the common belief that the affliction was due to sin (John 9:1-3). Because of their severe handicap, blind persons had little opportunity to earn a living. A blind man was even ineligible to become a priest (Lev. 21:18). Frequently, the blind became beggars (Mark 10:46). The possibility of a blind person being mistreated was recognized and forbidden by God. The law prohibited the giving of misleading directions (Deut. 27:18) or doing anything to cause the blind to stumble (Lev. 19:14).

Physical Cause Many things caused blindness in ancient times. One could be born blind (John 9:1) due to some developmental defect or as a result of infection prior to birth. Usually, however, blindness began later. The most common cause was infection. Trachoma, a painful infection of the eye, is a common cause of blindness today and was probably prevalent in ancient times. Leprosy can also cause blindness. In old age vision may be severely impaired in some persons (Gen. 27:1). Some develop cataracts. Some have a gradual atrophy of portions of the eye.

Ancient people used salves of various types to treat disorders of the eye. Simple surgical procedures such as the lancing of boils near the eye and the extraction of inverted eyelashes were also employed.

In reality almost no effective treatment was available to those who suffered from diseases of the eye and blindness. There were no antibiotics, no effective surgical procedures for most problems, and no eyeglasses. Miraculous healing was often sought (John 5:2-3).

Jesus frequently healed blind persons (Matt. 9:27-31; 12:22; 20:30-34; Mark 10:46-52; John 9:1-7). Perhaps there is no greater evidence of His compassion and power than that seen in His willingness and ability to heal those who lived in darkness and hopelessness.

Spiritual Blindness The Bible addresses spiritual blindness as the great human problem. Israel was supposed to be God's servant (Isa. 42:19) but was blind to the role God wanted them to fill. Called to be watchmen protecting the nation, they instead blindly preyed on the people (Isa. 56:10). As the Pharisees gained leadership, they became blind leaders of the blind (Matt. 15:14; 23:16-26). Jesus came to reverse the situation, making clear who had spiritual sight and who was spiritually blind (John 9:39-41). Peter listed the qualities a person must have to have spiritual sight. Without these a person is blind (2 Pet. 1:5-9). The problem is that the spiritually blind do not know they are blind (Rev. 3:17). They are blinded by the "god of this world" (2 Cor. 4:4). They walk in darkness, eventually being blinded by the moral darkness of hatred (1 John 2:11).

BLOOD Term with meanings that involve profound aspects of human life and God's desire to transform human existence. Blood is intimately associated with physical life. Blood and "life," or "living being," are closely associated. The Hebrews of OT times were prohibited from eating blood. "Only be sure not to eat the blood, for the blood is the life, and you shall not eat the life with the flesh. You shall not eat it; you shall pour it out on the ground like water" (Deut. 12:23-24 NASB). For agricultural people this command stressed the value of life. Though death was ever present, life was sacred. Life was not to be regarded cheaply.

Even when the OT speaks of animal sacrifice and atonement, the sacredness of life is emphasized. "For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you on the altar to make atonement for your souls; for it is the blood by reason of the life that makes atonement” (Lev. 17:11 NASB). Perhaps because an animal life was given up (and animals were a vital part of a person's property), this action taken before God indicated how each person is estranged from God. In giving what was of great value, the person offering the sacrifice showed that reconciliation with God involved life—the basic element of human existence. How giving up an animal life brought about redemption and reconciliation is not clear. What is clear is that atonement was costly. Only the NT could show how costly it was.

Flesh and Blood This phrase designates a human being. When Peter confessed that Jesus was the Messiah, Jesus told Peter, “Flesh and blood did not reveal this to you, but My Father in heaven” (Matt. 16:17 HCSB). No human agent informed Peter; the Father Himself disclosed this truth. When “flesh and blood” is used of Jesus, it designates His whole person: “The one who eats My flesh and drinks My blood lives in Me, and I in him” (John 6:56 HCSB). The next verse shows that eating “blood and flesh” is powerful metaphorical language for sharing in the life that Jesus bestows—“so the one who feeds on Me will live because of Me” (John 6:57 HCSB).

When Paul used the phrase “flesh and blood” in 1 Cor. 15:50, he referred to sinful human existence: “flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.” The sinfulness of human beings disqualifies them as inheritors of God's kingdom. In Gal. 1:16 Paul used “flesh and blood” as a synonym for human beings with whom he did not consult after his conversion. Paul said his gospel came directly from God.

In Eph. 6:12 Paul portrayed Christians in conflict—their wrestling is “not against flesh and blood” but with higher, demonic powers, “against the rulers, against the authorities, against the world powers of this darkness, against the spiritual forces of evil in the heavens.” Of course, Christians do meet opposition to Christ and the gospel from other human beings, but behind all human opposition is a demonic/Satanic opposition. Human beings choose to identify with moral evil. We wrestle with the demonic leaders of moral revolt.

Finally, the phrase “flesh and blood” sometimes designates human nature apart from moral evil. Jesus, like other children of His people, was a partaker of “flesh and blood” (Heb. 2:14). Because He did so, He could die a unique, atoning death. He was fully human yet more than human; He was both God and man.

After the flood God renewed the original command that Noah and his sons be fruitful and multiply (Gen. 9:1). They were not to eat the flesh with its life, which means the blood (Gen. 9:4). Then murder is forbidden (Gen. 9:5-6). The reason is explained thus: “Whoever sheds man's blood, by man his blood shall be shed, for in the image of God He made man” (Gen. 9:6). Since a murderer destroys one made in God's image, murder is an attack upon God.

In Deut. 21:1-9 we read of an elaborate ceremony by elders concerning a person murdered in the fields near their city. They were to pray for the Lord's forgiveness by atonement: “Forgive Thy people Israel whom Thou hast redeemed, O Lord, and do not place the guilt of innocent blood in the midst of Thy people Israel. And the bloodguiltiness shall be forgiven them” (Deut. 21:8 NASB; see v. 9). The victim is assumed to be innocent, and the community is held responsible. A person who killed another accidentally had six cities to which he could flee and there establish his innocence (Josh. 20:1-9). He had to flee because the avenger of blood (the nearest of kin to the person murdered) was obligated to kill the individual who had murdered his relative (Num. 35).

When Pilate saw that justice was being distorted at the trial of Jesus, he washed his hands symbolically and declared his own innocence: “I am innocent of this man's blood. See to it yourselves” [i.e., that's your affair] (Matt. 27:24 HCSB). The people replied naively, “His blood be on us and on our children” (Matt. 27:25).

Blood of Sacrifices, Blood of the Covenant The great historic event of the OT was the exodus from Egypt. Central to that event was the offering of a lamb from the sheep or from the goats (Exod. 12:5). The blood of that lamb was put on the top and the two sides of the door frame (Exod. 12:7,22-23). When the angel passed through, destroying the firstborn in Egypt, he would pass by the houses in Israel's part of Egypt that were marked in this fashion. In terms of its redemptive effects, none of the daily sacrifices made throughout the OT (see Leviticus) were as dramatic as the Passover sacrifice.

Almost as dramatic as the Passover was the ceremony at the dedication of the covenant treaty at Sinai between Yahweh and His covenant people, the Israelites (Exod. 24:1-8). Moses took the blood of oxen and placed it in two bowls. Half of it he dashed upon the altar and half he dashed upon the people (Exod. 24:6-8). Moses declared "Behold the blood of the covenant, which the LORD has made (literally, cut) with you in accordance with all these words" (NASB). The people solemnly promised to act in agreement with this covenant (Exod. 24:3,7).

When Jesus inaugurated the new covenant after His last Passover with the disciples, He declared: "This is My blood of the covenant, which is shed for many for the forgiveness of sins" (Matt. 26:28 HCSB). Luke reads: "This cup is the new covenant in My blood, which is shed for you" (Luke 22:20). Testament means covenant here. Jesus, the God-man, gave up His life and experienced the reality of death so that those who identify themselves with Jesus might experience His life and never taste death as He did. He died as a sin-bearer that we might live for righteousness and become healed (1 Pet. 2:24).

Blood of Christ—Meaning and Effects The term "blood of Christ" designates in the NT the atoning death of Christ. Atonement refers to the basis and process by which estranged people become at one with God (atonement=at-onement). When we identify with Jesus, we are no longer at odds with God. The meaning of Christ's death is a great mystery. The NT seeks to express this meaning in two ways: in the language of sacrifice, and in language pertaining to the sphere of law. This sacrificial language and legal language provide helpful analogies. However, the meaning of Christ's death is far more than an enlargement of animal sacrifices or a spiritualization of legal transactions. Sometimes both legal and sacrificial language are found together.

In the language of sacrifice, we have “propitiation” (removal of sins, Rom. 3:25 HCSB); “sprinkling with the blood of Jesus Christ” (1 Pet. 1:1-2); redeemed “with the precious blood of Christ, like that of a lamb without defect or blemish” (1 Pet. 1:19); “blood of Jesus His Son cleanses us from all sin” (1 John 1:7); blood that will “cleanse our consciences” (Heb. 9:14); and “blood of the everlasting covenant” (Heb. 13:20). In legal language we have “justification” (Rom. 5:16,18); “redemption” (Eph. 1:7); been redeemed to God by His blood (Rev. 5:9). Such metaphors show that only God could provide atonement; Jesus, the God-man was both priest and offering, both Redeemer and the One intimately involved with the redeemed.

A. Berkeley Mickelsen

BLOOD, AVENGER OF See Avenger; Bloodguilt; Cities of Refuge.

BLOOD, FIELD OF See Aceldama.

BLOODGUILT Guilt usually incurred through bloodshed. Bloodguilt made a person ritually unclean (Num. 35:33-34) and was incurred by killing a person who did not deserve to die (Deut. 19:10; Jer. 26:15; Jon. 1:14). Killing in self-defense and execution of criminals are exempted from bloodguilt (Exod. 22:2; Lev. 20:9). Bloodguilt was incurred (1) by intentional killing (Judg. 9:24; 1 Sam. 25:26,33; 2 Kings 9:26; Jer. 26:15); (2) by unintentional killing (See Num. 35:22-28 where one who accidentally kills another may be killed by the avenger of blood implying that the accidental murderer had bloodguilt. See Avenger.); (3) by being an indirect cause of death (Gen. 42:22; Deut. 19:10b; 22:8; Josh. 2:19); (4) a person was under bloodguilt if those for whom he was responsible committed murder (1 Kings 2:5,31-33); and (5) the killing of a sacrifice at an unauthorized altar imputed bloodguilt (Lev. 17:4). The avenger of blood could take action in the first two instances but not in the latter three.

When the murderer was known in instance (1) above, the community shared the guilt of the murderer until the guilty party had paid the penalty of death. No other penalty or sacrifice could substitute for the death of the guilty party, nor was there any need for sacrifice once the murderer had been killed (Num. 35:33; Deut. 21:8-9). The one who unintentionally killed another [(2) above] might flee to a city of refuge and be safe. If, however, the accidental killer left the boundaries of the city of refuge, the avenger of blood could kill in revenge without incurring bloodguilt (Num. 35:31-32; Deut. 19:13). The community was held to be bloodguilty if it failed to provide asylum for the accidental killer (Deut. 19:10).

In cases where the blood of an innocent victim was not avenged, the blood of the innocent cried out to God (Gen. 4:10; Isa. 26:21; Ezek. 24:7-9; cp. Job 16:18), and God became the avenger for that person (Gen. 9:5; 2 Sam. 4:11; 2 Kings 9:7; Ps. 9:12; Hos. 1:4). Even the descendants of the bloodguilty person might suffer the consequences of God's judgment (2 Sam. 3:28-29; 21:1; 1 Kings 21:29). Manasseh's bloodguilt and Judah's failure to do anything about it was the cause of Judah's downfall over 50 years after Manasseh's reign (2 Kings 24:4).

Judas incurred bloodguilt by betraying Jesus (“innocent blood,” Matt. 27:4). Those who called for the crucifixion accepted the burden of bloodguilt for themselves and their children (Matt. 27:25). Pilate accepted no responsibility for the shedding of innocent blood (Matt. 27:24).

Phil Logan

BLUE Hebrew word translated “blue” (tekelet), also translated as “purple” (Ezek. 23:6) and “violet” (Jer. 10:9). The color was obtained from Mediterranean mollusks (class of Gastropoda) and used for dyeing. Blue was considered inferior to royal purple but was still a very popular color. Blue was used in the tabernacle (Exod. 25:4; 26:1,4; Num. 4:6-7,9; 15:38), in the temple (2 Chron. 2:7,14; 3:14), and in the clothing of the priests (Exod. 28:5-6,8,15; 39:1). See Colors.

BOANERGES [Bō á nēr' gēs] Name meaning “Sons of Thunder,” given by Jesus to James and John, the sons of Zebedee (Mark 3:17). The Gospel writer giving the meaning of the name did not explain why it was appropriate. The name might be indicative of the thunderous temperament these brothers apparently possessed. See Apostle; Disciple.

BOAR Male swine (Ps. 80:13). See Swine.

BOAT See Ships, Sailors, and Navigation.

BOAZ [Bō' ʒ] Personal name, perhaps meaning “lively.” 1. Hero of the book of Ruth; a wealthy relative of Naomi's husband. Ruth gleaned grain in his field. He graciously invited her to remain there and enjoy the hospitality of his servants, pronouncing a blessing on her for her goodness to Naomi. As he spent the night on the threshing floor to protect his harvest from thieves, Ruth lay down at his feet. Boaz agreed to marry her, according to the custom of levirate marriage by which the nearest male relative married a man's widow. Boaz bargained with the nearest relative, who gave up his right to marry Ruth. Boaz married her and became Obed's father, David's grandfather, and an ancestor of Christ (Matt. 1:5; Luke 3:32). See Ruth. 2. The left or north pillar Solomon set up in the temple (1 Kings 7:21). The function of the pillars is not known. See Jachin.

BOCHERU [Bō' kə-rū] Personal name meaning “firstborn.” Descendant of King Saul in the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:38).

BOCHIM [Bō' kīm] Place-name meaning “weepers.” Place where angel of God announced judgment on Israel at beginning of the period of the judges because they had not destroyed pagan altars but had made covenant treaties with the native inhabitants. Thus the people cried and named the place Bochim (Judg. 2:1-5). It may have been between Bethel and Gilgal. An oak of weeping near Bethel was the burial place of Deborah, Rebekah's nurse (Gen. 35:8). See Allonbachuth.

BODY Compared to most religions and systems of thought, both the OT and the NT place great value on the human body. In the OT there is not a term that refers to the body as such. The closest and most frequently used word is basar, translated as “flesh.” Basar and nephesh, translated as “soul,” are used interchangeably. Bible Teachings The Bible makes basic claims about physical human existence.

The body as God's creation. The body is created by God—mortal, with physical needs, weak and subject to temptation. The body is not, however, without significance. In the body the person lives out the “I” of human existence, relating to God and to fellow humans. The body is the place of proper worship (Rom. 12:1), the temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 6:19-20), and thus is to be disciplined (1 Cor. 9:27). In Corinth the people did not properly understand God's purpose for the body. Paul followed Jesus in teaching that the inner spiritual life is not to be played off against the outer, physical life (Matt. 6:22; 1 Cor. 6:12-20; 2 Cor. 4:7,10). That means the war in the name of the spirit is not against the body but against sin. The goal is not liberation of a “divine” soul from the body but the placing of the body in service for God. Every action must be accounted for before God one day (2 Cor. 5:10).

The body and sexuality. Physical love is a gift of the Creator (Gen. 2:23-24). An entire book of the Bible rejoices over this reality—the Song of Songs. Humans express love with their entire person, not only with their sexual organs. This means that sexuality differs from eating and drinking, which satisfy only the requirements of the stomach. Sexual sin rules the body, that is, the entire person. Because the body of the Christian belongs to the Creator, Redeemer, and Holy Spirit, sexual sin is forbidden for the Christian (1 Cor. 6:12-20).

The redemption and resurrection of the body. The earthly human stands under the power of sin and of death. No persons can distance themselves from this power, but all long for redemption (Rom. 7:24; 8:23). Redemption is not guaranteed by a bodiless soul that continues to live after death. Such redemption is guaranteed only by God, who continues to care for the body and soul of humans even after death (Matt. 10:28). Death is not the redeemer; God is. He makes the gift of eternal life (Rom. 6:23) in that Jesus Christ became an earthly human and offered Himself for us (John 1:14; Rom. 7:4). Those who follow Him in faith and baptism experience the reality that the body does not have to remain a slave of sin (Rom. 6:6,12). A person will not be redeemed from the body; rather the body will be redeemed through the resurrection of the dead (Rom. 6:5; 8:11). The existence of the resurrected is a bodily existence. The earthly body of lowliness will be renewed like the glorious body of the resurrected Jesus, becoming an unearthly body or building or house (1 Cor. 15:35-49; 2 Cor. 5:1-10; Phil. 3:21).

Resurrection of the body does not mean that the personality dissolves into an idea, into posterity, or into the society. It means, instead, the total transformation of “flesh and blood” into a “spiritual body,” that is a personality created and formed anew by God's Spirit. The resurrection body is that communion with the Lord and with people that begins before death and finds an unimaginable completion through the resurrection.

The body of Christ. Jesus Christ had a physical, earthly body which was crucified outside the gates of Jerusalem (Mark 15:20-47; Col. 1:22; Heb. 13:11-12). The body of Christ also designates the body of the Crucified One “given for you,” with which the church is united together in the celebration of the Lord's Supper (Mark 14:24; 1 Cor. 10:16; 11:24). The continuing power of the sacrifice of Golgotha leads humans to join together in a church community, which in a real sense is joined together with the exalted Lord. Bodily is not, however, physical. The joining with the body of Christ does not occur magically through bread, but historically through the realization of the presence of the suffering and death of Jesus.

The church as the body of Christ. The image of the body calls the differing individual members into a unity (1 Cor. 12:12-27); however, the church is not just similar; it is one body, and, indeed, one body in Christ (Rom. 12:5; 1 Cor. 10:17). In Christ the body of the church community is incorporated. The community of Christians does not produce the body; the body is a previously given fact (1 Cor. 12:13). In the body of Christ, the body of the church community lives because Christ is greater than the church. He is the Head of the entire creation (Eph. 1:22-23; Col. 2:10) and as Head does not only belong to the church community but rather also stands over against the church. While the world stands in a relationship of subjection to Christ (Eph. 1:20-23; Phil. 2:9-11), only the church is His body (Col. 1:18,24; Eph. 4:4,12; 5:23,30), which He loves (Eph. 5:25). The church is joined to Him in organic growth (Col. 2:19; Eph. 4:15-16). The church grows by serving a future, which through Christ has already begun to be incarnate (Col. 2:9). The growth of the body occurs as the church marches out in service to the world (Eph. 4:12), even to the demonic world (Eph. 3:10). The individual Christian is joined to Christ only as a member of the body. The Bible knows nothing of a direct, mythical union of the individual with the Lord. The Bible knows of a union with Christ only as faith embodied in the realm of the church community and with the church in the realm of the world.

Christian Wolf

BODYGUARD Person or group of persons whose duty it is to protect another from physical harm. In the OT soldiers were included among the king's bodyguard because of acts of bravery. Members of a king's bodyguard mentioned in the Bible include: David (1 Sam. 22:14; 28:2), Benaiah ben Jehoiada (2 Sam. 23:23), Potiphar (Gen. 37:36), Nebuzaradan (2 Kings 25:8; Jer. 39:9-13; 52:12-16), and Arioch (Dan. 2:14).

BOHAN [Bō' hān] Place-name and personal name meaning "thumb" or "big toe." A place on the northern border of the tribal allotment of Judah called the "stone of Bohan," "the son of Reuben" (Josh. 15:6). This was the southern border of the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:17). Some Bible students see this as evidence that some part of the tribe of Reuben once lived west of the Jordan. Others see an otherwise unknown heroic deed of Bohan honored with a memorial boundary stone.

BOIL General term used in the Bible to describe inflamed swellings of the skin. Boils are mentioned in connection with blains (KJV, an inflammatory swelling or sore) in the sixth plague on Egypt (Exod. 9:9-10). Since this plague affected both animals and men, many have suggested the malignant pustule of cutaneous anthrax as the sore or boil mentioned. Hezekiah's boil (2 Kings 20:7; Isa. 38:21) is identified as a furuncle—a localized swelling and inflammation of the skin caused by the infection of a hair follicle that discharges pus and has a central core of dead tissue. The boils suffered by Job (Job 2:7) have been identified with smallpox or with treponematosis (a parasitic infection).

BOKERU [Bó' kə-rú] (NIV) See Bocheru.

BOKIM [Bó' kím] (NIV) See Bochim.

BOLDNESS Translation of four Greek words in the NT. Boldness denotes two things in the NT. First, boldness describes the courageous manner of those who preach the gospel (Acts 2:29; 4:13,31; 9:27-29; 13:46; 14:3; 18:26; 19:8; 26:26; 28:31; 1 Thess. 2:2; Phil. 1:20). The word translated as “boldness” in these texts (parresia) was used of the free citizen of a city-state who could say anything in the public assembly. In the NT it denotes the moral freedom to speak the truth publicly. Second, boldness describes the confidence with which Christians can now approach God because of the redeeming work of Christ (2 Cor. 3:4-6,12; Heb. 10:19; 1 John 2:28; 4:17).

BOLLED KJV translation (Exod. 9:31) of a term that means “having bolls”—that is, having seedpods. Some see the flax in this verse as being either in bud or in blossom.

BOLSTER KJV translation that means “the place where the head is while sleeping” (1 Sam. 19:13,16; 26:7,11-12,16). REB, NRSV translate “at his head”(cp.NIV,NASB).

BOND Translation of several Hebrew and Greek words with the meanings of “obligation,” “dependence,” or “restraint.” Used literally to speak of the bonds of prisoners or slaves (Judg. 15:14; 1 Kings 14:10; Pss. 107:14; 116:16; Luke 8:29; Philem. 13). Used figuratively to speak of the bonds of wickedness or sin (Isa. 58:6; Luke 13:16; Acts 8:23), of affliction and judgment (Isa. 28:22; 52:2; Jer. 30:8; Nah. 1:13), the authority of kings (Job 12:18; Ps. 2:3), the obligation to keep the covenant (Jer. 2:20; 5:5; Col. 2:14), the bonds of peace and love (Eph. 4:3; Col. 3:14), and the bonds of an evil woman (Eccles. 7:26).

BONDAGE, BONDMAN, BONDMAID, BONDSERVANT See Slave, Servant.

BONES While often referring to the skeletal remains of humans (Gen. 50:25; Exod. 13:19; 1 Sam. 31:13), “bones” were also referred to metaphorically. “Rottenness in his bones” signified one whose wife caused shame and confusion (Prov. 12:4; 14:30, “to the bones” HCSB) or could refer to dejectedness and anticipation of approaching evil (Hab. 3:16). The “shaking of bones” denoted fear (Job 4:14) or sadness (Jer. 23:9). The “burning of the bones” indicated grief and depression (Ps. 102:3; Lam. 1:13) and the feeling of Jeremiah when he tried to refrain from proclaiming God's message (Jer. 20:9). “Dryness of bones” meant poor health (Prov. 17:22). Various other expressions using “bones” referred to mental distress (Job 30:17; Pss. 6:2; 22:14; 31:10; 38:3; 51:8; Lam. 3:4). “Bone of my bones” may mean having the same nature or being the nearest relation (Gen. 2:23; 2 Sam. 5:1).

BONNET KJV translation of two words. A conical-shaped cap placed on the head of the priest at the time of investiture. Made of fine white linen (Exod. 28:40; 29:9; 39:28; Lev. 8:13). See Cloth, Clothing.

BOOK OF LIFE Heavenly record (Luke 10:20; Heb. 12:23) written by God before the foundation of the world (Rev. 13:8; 17:8) containing the names of those who are destined because of God's grace and their faithfulness to participate in God's heavenly kingdom. Those whose names are in the book have been born into God's family through Jesus Christ (Heb. 12:23; Rev. 13:8); remain faithful in worship of God (Rev. 13:8; 17:8); are untouched by the practice of abomination and falsehood (Rev. 21:27); are faithful through tribulation (Rev. 3:5); and are fellow workers in the work of Jesus Christ (Phil. 4:3). The book of life will be used along with the books of judgment at the final judgment to separate the righteous and the wicked for their respective eternal destinies (Rev. 20:12,15; 21:27).

Christ Himself determines whether the names that are recorded in the book of life remain in that record and are supported by His confession that they belong to Him at the day of judgment or are blotted out (Rev. 3:5).

The OT refers to a record kept by God of those who are a part of His people (Exod. 32:32; Isa. 4:3; Dan. 12:1; Mal. 3:16). As in Revelation, God can blot out the names of those in the book (Exod. 32:32; Ps. 69:28). In the OT this may simply mean people not in the book die, leaving the list of the living. Those whose names are written in the book are destined for life in a restored Jerusalem (Isa. 4:3) and deliverance through future judgment (Dan. 12:1). See Apocalyptic; Book\(s\); Eschatology.

Jeff Cranford

BOOK(S) Term which often refers to a scroll. A document written on parchment or papyrus and then rolled up. The “book” may be a letter (1 Kings 21:8) or a longer literary effort (Dan. 9:2). See Letter; Library; Writing.

Several books are mentioned in the Bible:

The Book of the Covenant Moses read from this book during the making of the covenant between God and Israel on Mount Sinai (Exod. 24:7). The Book of the Covenant included at least the material now found in Exod. 20:23-23:33. The Book of the Covenant is referred to at a later time (2 Kings 23:2,21; 2 Chron. 34:30). It probably included the Exodus passage in addition to other material.

The Book of the Law During the reign of Josiah, Hilkiah, the high priest, found a copy of The Book of the Law in the temple (2 Kings 22:8). Josiah based his reforms of the religion of Israel on the laws in this book (2 Kings 23). The book was not explicitly identified in 2 Kings, but by comparing the measures undertaken by Josiah and the laws of Deuteronomy, it is very likely that The Book of the Law was a copy of Deuteronomy.

The Book of the Wars of the Lord This book is quoted in Num. 21:14-15 (21:17-18 and 27-30 may also represent quotations from this book). The part of the book quoted describes the territory conquered by God in behalf of the Israelites. The book was probably a collection of poems that relate the conquest of the land during the time of Moses and Joshua. As the title of the book suggests, the Lord (acting as commander-in-chief) was responsible for the success of the conquest.

The Books of Joshua Joshua wrote one book detailing the allotment of Canaan to the Israelite tribes (Josh. 18:9) and a book similar to The Book of the Covenant listed above (Josh. 24:25-26).

The Book of Jashar (or Upright) A book quoted twice in the OT: Joshua's poetic address to the sun and the moon (Josh. 10:12-13) and David's lament for Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1:17-27). Others would include Solomon's words of dedication of the temple (1 Kings 8:12-13), which the earliest Greek translation attributes to the book of song (Hb. shir), a transposition of letters of Hebrew jshr or ishr for Jashar. Deborah's song (Judg. 5) and Miriam's song (Exod. 15:20-21) are sometimes seen as part of Jashar. The Book of Jashar probably consisted of poems on important events in Israel's history collected during the time of David or Solomon. The Book of Jashar is often compared to or identified with The Book of the Wars of the Lord discussed above.

The Book of the Acts of Solomon Probably a biographical document that included such stories as Solomon's judgment between the two harlots (1 Kings 3:16-28), Solomon's administrative arrangements (1 Kings 4:1-19), and the visit of the Queen of Sheba (1 Kings 10:1-13).

Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel Perhaps a continuous journal compiled by scribes from various sources but not to be confused with 1 and 2 Chronicles in the Bible. The writer of 1 and 2 Kings mentions this book 18 times as containing more complete information on the reigns of the kings of Israel (1 Kings 14:19; 15:31; 16:5,14,20,27; 22:39; 2 Kings 1:18; 10:34; 13:8,12; 14:15,28; 15:11,15,21, 26,31).

Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah Source similar to the Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel, not to be confused with 1 and 2 Chronicles in the Bible. The writer of 1 and 2 Kings mentions this book 15 times as containing more complete information on the reigns of the kings of Judah (1 Kings 14:29; 15:7,23; 22:45; 2 Kings 8:23; 12:19; 14:18; 15:6,36; 16:19; 20:20; 21:17,25; 23:28; 24:5).

Books Mentioned in 1 and 2 Chronicles Included are the Book of the Kings of Israel (1 Chron. 9:1; 2 Chron. 20:34), the Book of the Kings of Israel and Judah (2 Chron. 27:7; 35:27; 36:8), the Book of the Kings of Judah and Israel (2 Chron. 16:11; 25:26; 28:26; 32:32), the Acts of the Kings of Israel (2 Chron. 33:18), and the Commentary on the Book of the Kings (2 Chron. 24:27). Many think these titles are references to the same work and refer to it as the Midrash of the Kings. This work may contain the books of the chronicles of the kings of Israel and Judah listed above or at least be very similar in content to them.

Also mentioned in 1 and 2 Chronicles are books of various prophets: the Book of Samuel the Seer (1 Chron. 29:29), the Book of Nathan the Prophet (1 Chron. 29:29; 2 Chron. 9:29), the Book of Gad the Seer (1 Chron. 29:29), the Prophecy of Ahijah the Shilonite (2 Chron. 9:29), the Visions of Iddo the Seer against Jeroboam the Son of Nebat (2 Chron. 9:29), the Book of Shemaiah the Prophet and Iddo the Seer (2 Chron. 12:15), the Story of the Prophet Iddo (2 Chron. 13:22), the Book of Jehu the Son of Hanani (2 Chron. 20:34), the Acts of Uzziah (2 Chron. 26:22; written by Isaiah), the Vision of Isaiah the Prophet (2 Chron. 32:32), and the Saying of the Seers (2 Chron. 33:19). All of these, except for the last, may have been part of the Midrash of the Kings.

Various other works are also mentioned in 1 and 2 Chronicles: genealogies of the tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:17), the Chronicles of King David (1 Chron. 27:24), an untitled work containing the plan for the temple (1 Chron. 28:19), works on the organization of the Levites written by David and Solomon (2 Chron. 35:4), and lamentations for the death of Josiah by Jeremiah and others (2 Chron. 35:25).

Book of the Chronicles This is a work that contained genealogies and possibly other historical material (Neh. 7:5; 12:23) but was distinct from 1 and 2 Chronicles.

Books by the Prophets Isaiah (Isa. 30:8; cp. 8:16) and Jeremiah (Jer. 25:13; 30:2; 36; 45:1; 51:60,63) are said to have written books. These may have represented the first stages of the collections of their prophecies we now have.

Book (of Records) of the Chronicles or Book of Memorable Deeds The royal archives of Persia contained, among other things, books recording the way in which Mordecai saved the life of King Ahasuerus (Esther 2:20-23; 6:1; 10:2; cp. Ezra 4:15).

Book of Remembrance This book is mentioned in Mal. 3:16. It is probably the same as the Book of Life. See Book of Life. Scripture (Book) of Truth This book is mentioned in Dan. 10:21. It is probably the same as the Book of Life.

Phil Logan

BOOT Figure mentioned in Isa. 9:5 of the booted Assyrian warrior (KJV translates the rare Hebrew word for boot as “battle”). Assyrian reliefs from the period of Sennacherib depict soldiers wearing leather boots laced up to the knee, which is in contrast to the sandals worn by the Israelite soldier of the period. God's Messiah promised full victory, even over the more impressively dressed army.

BOOTH Temporary shelter constructed for cattle (Gen. 33:17) and people (Jon. 4:5), especially for soldiers on the battlefield (2 Sam. 11:11; 1 Kings 20:12,16). Israel after an invasion is compared to a deserted booth in a vineyard (Isa. 1:8). The booth is also used as a symbol of that which is flimsy and impermanent (Job 27:18). The booths used at the Feast of Booths were made of twigs woven together (Lev. 23:40-43; Neh. 8:15).

BOOTHS, FEAST OF See Festivals.

BOOTY Spoils taken by individuals in battle. Includes anything that might be of value or use to the captor including persons (Num. 31:53; Jer. 15:13; Ezek. 25:7). Booty is distinguished from spoil in the sense that booty was that taken by individual soldiers whereas spoil was plunder taken by the victor nation as a right of conquest.

BOOZ [Bō' ōz] (KJV, NT) See Boaz.

BOR-ASHAN [Bór-á' shán] Place-name meaning “well of smoke” or “pit of smoke.” Place in most manuscripts of 1 Sam. 30:30; others read Chor-ashan (KJV). A town of the tribe of Judah to whom David gave part of his spoils of victory. It is usually equated with Asham, the town of Judah in which Simeon lived (Josh. 15:42; 19:7).

BORN AGAIN See Regeneration.

BORROW In Hebrew culture borrowing indicated economic hardship, not a strategy for expanding business or household. (See Lev. 25:35-37, which assumes that borrowers are poor.) In Deuteronomy God's blessings of prosperity was understood to exclude the need to borrow (15:6; 26:12). Thus poverty was not considered to be a desirable situation for anyone in the covenant community. The dire straits requiring borrowing are illustrated in Neh. 5:1-5. With typical shifts in fortune, borrowing was common practice in Hebrew society, and rules were needed so that the poor were not victimized by creditors. Laws for restitution were also established for borrowed property that was damaged (Exod. 22:14-15).

In Matt. 5:42 Jesus cites generosity “from the one who wants to borrow from you” as one example of an unexpected, loving response (instead of the typical self-protective response) to others' demands and abuses. In each example (5:38-42) the disciple's primary concern is the other person, not protecting one's own vested interests. The second person singular in verse 42 makes clear the personal nature of this response to the would-be borrower. This passage is part of Jesus' consistent emphasis on absolute loyalty to the way of God's kingdom, which necessitates a carefree regard for one's possessions (Matt. 6:24-34) and personal security (Matt. 5:43-48) as one unselfishly loves the neighbor.

David Nelson Duke

BOSCATH [Bös' cáth] (KJV, 2 Kings 22:1). See Bozkath.

BOSOR [Bö' sör] (KJV, 2 Pet. 2:15). See Beor.

BOSSED, BOSSES Knobs on the flat surfaces of shields. When shields were made of leather and wood, the bosses served to strengthen the shield. When shields were made of metal, the bosses were ornamental. Job 15:26 says that the wicked oppose God with a thick-bossed shield—that is, a reinforced shield. Thus some modern translations express the meaning rather than using literal translation: “strong shield” (NIV); “massive shield” (NASB).

BOTCH Old English term used in the KJV that means “boil” (Deut. 28:27,35).

BOTTLE Word used often in the KJV to translate several Hebrew and Greek words. Modern versions often translate these words as “skin” or “wineskin.” Although glass and glass bottles were known in ancient times, ancient “bottles” were almost always made of animal skins since they were easier to carry than earthenware vessels. In Ps. 33:7 many modern scholars and translators emend the Hebrew text by adding an unpronounced Hebrew letter (aleph) to read “bottle” or “jars” (NIV, NRSV), but the traditional reading “heap” following the Hebrew text finds support in the parallel statement of Exod. 15:8.

Tiny Roman glass bottle.

BOTTOMLESS PIT Literal translation of the Greek in Rev. 9:1-2,11; 11:7; 17:8; 20:1,3. It represented the home of evil, death, and destruction stored up until the sovereign God allowed them temporary power on earth. See Abyss; Hades; Hell; Sheol.

BOW AND ARROW See Arms and Armor.

BOWELS Translation used in modern versions to refer to intestines and other entrails (Acts 1:18). In the KJV “bowels” is also used to refer to the sexual reproductive system (2 Sam. 16:11; Ps. 71:6) and, figuratively, to strong emotions (Job 30:27), especially love (Song 5:4) and compassion

(Col. 3:12). Both Hebrew and Greek picture the entrails as the center of human emotions and excitement.

BOWL See Basin.

BOX KJV translation for jar or flask, a container of oil used for anointing (2 Kings 9:1; Mark 14:3).

BOX TREE KJV, REB and NASB translation in Isa. 41:19; 60:13. The box tree grows in Asia Minor and Persia but does not occur in Palestine. The tree has been identified as the pine (NRSV) or cypress (TEV, NIV). “Box tree” is based on early Greek and Latin translations. The Hebrew word means “to be straight” and apparently refers to the tall, majestic cypress trees. Such wonders of nature reflect the greatness of the Creator (Isa. 41:20).

Painted relief of Persian soldier with lance, bow, and quiver of arrows on his left shoulder.

Phrygian cut-glass bowl.

BOZEZ [Bó' zèz] Place-name, perhaps meaning “white.” A sharp rock marking a passage in the Wadi Suwenit near Michmash through which Jonathan and his armor bearer went to fight the Philistines (1 Sam. 14:4).

BOZKATH [Bóz' káth] Place-name meaning “swelling.” Town near Lachish and Eglon in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:39). It was the hometown of Adaiah, King Josiah's maternal grandmother (2 Kings 22:1). Its precise location is not known.

BOZRAH [Bóz' ráh] Place-name meaning “inaccessible.” 1. Ancestral home of Jobab, a king in Edom before Israel had a king (Gen. 36:33). Isaiah announced a great judgment on Bozrah in which God would sacrifice His enemies (Isa. 34:6). A center of shepherds, it was known for woolen garments. God is pictured as returning from Bozrah with dyed garments as His spoil of victory (Isa. 63:1). Thus He demonstrated His righteousness and power to save from enemies. Jeremiah proclaimed doom on Bozrah (Jer. 49:13,22), as did Amos (1:12). A major city, which at times served as capital of Edom, Bozrah lay about 25 miles southeast of the southern end of the Dead Sea at modern Buseirah. See Edom. 2. City of Moab Jeremiah condemned (Jer. 48:24). It may be equated with Bezer. See Bezer.

BRACELET Ornamental band of metal or glass worn around the wrist (as distinct from an armlet worn around the upper arm). Bracelets were common in the ancient Near East and were worn by both women and men. They were made mostly of bronze, though examples of iron, silver, glass, and, rarely, gold bracelets have been found. The bracelets mentioned were usually of gold (Gen. 24:22,30,47; Num. 31:50; Isa. 3:19; Ezek. 16:11; 23:42). KJV, TEV and NASB translation for armlet in 2 Sam. 1:10. See Armlet.

Serpentine bracelet.

BRAIDED, BRAIDING Fixing the hair in knots or weaving a wreath into the hair. Christian women were instructed that good works and spiritual grace were more important than outward appearances (1 Tim. 2:9; 1 Pet. 3:3). See Lace.

BRAMBLE Shrub (Lycium europaeum) with sharp spines and runners usually forming a tangled mass of vegetation (Judg. 9:8-15; Luke 6:44). It had beautiful, attractive flowers, but its thorns gave flocks trouble. Today we know that it prevents erosion on mountain slopes.

BRANCH Translation of many Hebrew and Greek words. Often refers to the branches of trees or vines or to the branches of the lampstands of the tabernacle and temple. There are, however, many metaphorical usages of “branch.” The palm branch may stand for nobility, while the reed is symbolic for the common people (Isa. 9:14; 19:15). One's “being a branch” denotes membership in the people of God (John 15:1-8; Rom. 11:16-21). Spreading branches can symbolize fruitfulness and prosperity (Gen. 49:22; Job 18:16; Ps. 80:11), while withered, burnt, or cut branches symbolize destruction (Job 8:16; Isa. 9:14; Jer. 11:16; Ezek. 15:2). “Branch” or “shoot” is often used as a symbol for a present or coming king of Israel (Isa. 11:1; Jer. 23:5; 33:15; Zech. 3:8; 6:12). See Messiah.

BRASEN SEA See Molten Sea.

BRASEN SERPENT See Bronze Serpent.

BRASS Any copper alloy was called “brass” by the KJV translators. Brass is the alloy of copper and zinc, a combination unknown in the ancient Near East. A common alloy was copper and tin—that is, bronze—and this is what is indicated by the Hebrew of the biblical text. Some modern translations retain brass where hardness or persistence in sin is in view (Lev. 26:19; Deut. 28:23; Isa. 48:4), but they use “bronze” as a translation elsewhere. See Minerals and Metals.

BRAZEN SEA See Molten Sea.

BRAZEN SERPENT See Bronze Serpent.

BRAZIER Portable firepot (NIV) or fire pan used for heating a room during cold weather (Jer. 36:22-23; KJV has “hearth”).

BREAD Appears 239 times in the NASB OT and 79 times in the NASB NT; but the seven Hebrew words which refer to bread, not always so translated, appear 384 times in the OT and the three Greek words 108 times in the NT. Frequency of mention is just one indication that bread (not vegetables and certainly not meat) was the basic food of most people (except nomads and the wealthy) in Bible times. Indeed, several of the words alluded to above are often translated food. Ingredients A course meal was ground from wheat (Gen. 30:14) or barley (John 6:9,13). American corn was unknown. (Use of the word in the KJV is a “Britishism” meaning grain in general.) Barley bread was less appetizing but also less expensive and therefore common among the poor. Grinding was done by a mortar and pestle or with millstones turned by an animal or human being (Num. 11:8; Matt. 24:41). For special occasions and offerings a fine flour was ground (Gen. 18:6; Lev. 2:7). The meal or flour was mixed with water, salt, sometimes leaven or yeast, sometimes olive oil, and rarely with other cereals and vegetables (Ezek. 4:9) and then was kneaded (Exod. 12:34).

Bread for sale in old Jerusalem.

Baking Usually the work of wives (Gen. 18:6) or daughters (2 Sam. 13:8), although in wealthy households it was done by slaves. Large cities or the royal court had professional bakers (Gen. 40:2; Jer. 37:21). There were three means of baking: on heated rocks with the dough being covered with ashes (1 Kings 19:6); on a clay or iron griddle or pan (Lev. 2:5); and in a clay or iron oven (Lev. 2:4). Most bread that was so baked had the appearance of a disk (Judg. 7:13) about one-half inch thick and 12 inches in diameter. Some was perforated. Some had a hole in the middle for storing or carrying on a pole. Some was heart shaped (the word for cakes in 2 Sam. 13:6,8,10 literally means heart shaped). Some took the shape of a small modern loaf (suggested by the arrangement of the Bread of Presence). Bread was broken or torn, not cut. Use In addition to being used as a staple food, bread was used as an offering to God (Lev. 2:4-10). It was used in the tabernacle and temple to symbolize the presence of God (Exod. 25:23-30; Lev. 24:5-9). Bread was also used in the OT to symbolize such things as an enemy to be consumed (Num. 14:9, KJV, RSV), the unity of a group (1 Kings 18:19), hospitality (Gen. 19:3), and wisdom (Prov. 9:5). It is prefixed to such things as idleness (Prov. 31:27), wickedness (Prov. 4:17), and adversity (Isa. 30:20). In the NT it symbolizes Jesus Christ Himself (John 6:35), His body (1 Cor. 11:23-24), His kingdom (Luke 14:15), and the unity of His church (1 Cor. 10:17).

BREAD OF THE PRESENCE Also “bread of the faces.” In Exod. 25:30 the Lord's instructions concerning the paraphernalia of worship include a provision that bread be kept always on a table set before the Holy of Holies. This bread was called the “bread of the Presence” or “showbread (shewbread).” The literal meaning of the Hebrew expression is “bread of the face.” It consisted of 12 loaves of presumably unleavened bread, and it was replaced each Sabbath. Jesus took the staple diet of festival worship—unleavened bread—and gave it to His followers to symbolize the presence of His body broken to bring salvation and the hope of His return (1 Cor. 11:17-32). See Shewbread; Tabernacle; Temple.

James A. Brooks

BREAKFAST See Food.

BREASTPIECE OF THE HIGH PRIEST Piece of elaborate embroidery about nine inches square worn by the high priest upon his breast. It was set with 12 stones with the name of one of the 12 tribes of Israel engraved on each stone. The breastpiece was a special item worn by the high priest as he ministered in the tabernacle or temple. Made like a purse, the breastpiece was constructed of gold metal; blue, purple, and scarlet yarn; and fine linen. It was securely tied to the ephod. Inside the breastpiece was placed two unknown stones, the Urim and Thummim, worn over the heart (Lev. 8:8). The breastpiece was called the breastpiece of judgment (Exod. 28:15) because these stones were the means of making decisions (Exod. 28:28-29). The purpose of the breastpiece was to show the glory and beauty of the Lord (Exod. 28:2) and to be a means of making decisions (Exod. 28:30) as well as to be a continuing memorial before the Lord (Exod. 28:29). See Breastplate; Ephod; Urim and Thummim.

Lawson G. Hatfield

BREASTPLATE Piece of defensive armor. Paul used the military breastplate as an illustration of Christian virtues. Ephesians 6:14 reflects Isa. 59:17, symbolizing the breastplate as righteousness. Faith and love are symbolized in 1 Thess. 5:8. Breastplates were also strong symbols of evil (Rev. 9:9,17). See Arms and Armor.

Lawson G. Hatfield

BREATH Air coming out of or into the body of a living being. Two Hebrew terms are translated “breath.” Generally neshamah is used in a milder manner to refer to the fact that breath is in all forms of life. It is concerned with the physiological concept of breath with a primary emphasis on breath as a principle of life. By contrast, ruach refers more to the force of breath in the extreme experiences of life, judgment, and death. At times it is intensified by the idea of a blast of breath. It thus contains the expanded meanings, wind and spirit. Ruach refers more to the psychological idea of breath by relating it to one's own will or purpose.

The term neshamah is often used with reference to God's breath. It identifies God as the source of life (Gen. 2:7; Job 27:3; 33:4; Dan. 5:23).

God is also the sovereign of life. He gave breath to humans initially in creation (Gen. 2:7), but He also takes breath away eventually at death (Gen. 7:22; Job 34:14). God has the power to restore life to the dead if He wishes to do so (Ezek. 37:9). He controls nature and the weather by His breath (Job 37:9-10). More important is the impact of God's breath on national life, for He can breathe anger and judgment on threatening enemies bringing festive joy to God's people (Isa. 30:33; cp. Job 41:21).

Neshamah is used several times to refer to human breath. It identifies breath as fragile during the times of God's wrath and in natural calamities (Isa. 2:21-22). Breath can become weak (Dan. 10:17); it is limited (Gen. 7:22; 1 Kings 17:17). Breath may be taken from a person, thus the experience of death (Josh. 11:11).

Breath (neshamah) refers to all living creatures. Those who breathe are expected to be responsive to God by offering Him praise (Ps. 150:6). Ultimately, they are responsible to God because He has the right to demand that they be put to death (Deut. 20:16; Josh. 10:40).

The NT contains a few references to breath as the life principle which God gives (Acts 17:25) and as the mighty wind at Pentecost (Acts 2:2). Acts 9:1 uses breath to express Saul's anger as a breathing of threats against the early Christians. In John 20:22 Jesus breathed the Holy Spirit upon His disciples. While the word pneuma parallels ruach in the OT in its multiple meanings, it is translated primarily as spirit or Holy Spirit. In Rev. 13:15 it refers to the power to breathe life into the image of the beast. See Life; Spirit. Donald R. Potts BREATH OF LIFE Translation of several Hebrew words and phrases. The phrase denotes the capacity for life. In the Bible God is the source of the breath of life (Gen. 1:30; 2:7; 7:15; Isa. 57:16). Just as God gave the breath of life, so can He take it away (Gen. 6:17; 7:22; Isa. 57:16). See Immortality; Life.

BREECHES Priestly garments made of linen covering the thighs for reasons of modesty. They were worn by the high priest on the Day of Atonement and by other priests on other ceremonial occasions (Exod. 28:42; 39:28; Lev. 6:10; 16:4; Ezek. 44:18). The garment ensured that priests fulfilled the commandment in Exod. 20:26.

BRIBERY Giving anything of value with intention of influencing one in the discharge of his or her duties. The danger of bribery is the opportunity it presents for the perversion of justice (1 Sam. 8:3; Prov. 17:23; Isa. 1:23; Mic. 3:11; 7:3). The poor, because they had no bribe to offer, were either discriminated against when the judgment was handed down or had difficulty getting a trial at all (see Job 6:22 where a bribe is necessary to get justice done). Bribery, because it perverted justice, is prohibited in the Bible (Exod. 23:8; Deut. 16:19).

BRICK Building material of clay, molded into rectangular-shaped blocks while moist and hardened by the sun or fire, used to construct walls or pavement.

The task of brick making was hard labor. It involved digging and moving heavy clay. Clay required softening with water, which was done by treading clay pits. After molding the bricks of approximately two by four by eight inches, they were dried in the sun or in kilns (ovens) for firehardened bricks. The tower of Babel (Gen. 11:3), made of bricks, had mortar of slime, a tarlike substance. Later, because of famine, Joseph moved his family to Egypt (Gen. 46:6). The 12 families multiplied greatly in 430 years. A new Pharaoh who “knew not Joseph” (Exod. 1:6-8) enslaved the Jews. They built storehouse cities of brick in Pithom and Rameses. Egyptian bricks were sometimes mixed with straw. When Moses confronted Pharaoh for Israel's freedom, the angered Pharaoh increased his demands of the slaves. They were required to produce their same brick quotas and gather their own straw. Both straw-made bricks and bricks of pure clay have been found at Pithom and Rameses. When David conquered the Ammonites, he required they make bricks (2 Sam. 12:31). Isaiah (65:3) condemned Israel for their paganlike practice of offering incense on altars of brick.

Lawson G. Hatfield

Mud-clay bricks in the ruins of the city of Ur.

BRICK KILN Oven, furnace, or heated enclosure used for processing bricks by burning, firing, or drying. Some Bible students believe that sun-dried bricks were used in Palestine; they would translate the word as “brick-mold” (Nah. 3:14 NRSV, NASB, TEV). Others give the neutral translation “brickwork” (NIV, REB). Just as the Egyptians used the Israelites to make bricks, so David put the Ammonites to making bricks (2 Sam. 12:31).

BRIDE Biblical writers have little to say about weddings or brides. They occasionally mention means by which brides were obtained (Gen. 24:4; 29:15-19). Ezekiel 16:8-14 describes the bride, her attire, and the wedding ceremony. The Song of Songs is a collection of love poems in which the bride describes her love for her bridegroom.

The imagery of the bride is used widely in the Bible as a description of the people of God. In the OT, the prophets presented Israel as a bride who had committed repeated adulteries (Jer. 3; Ezek. 16; Hos. 3). The prophets also proclaimed that God was faithful to His unfaithful bride and would restore her (Jer. 33:10-11; Isa. 61:10; 62:5). In the NT, the bride imagery is used often of the church and her relationship to Christ. The bride belongs to Christ, who is the Bridegroom (John 3:29). In Revelation, the church, as the bride of the Lamb, has prepared herself for marriage by performing righteous deeds (19:7-8). In Rev. 21, the great wedding is portrayed with the church prepared for her bridegroom (21:2,9). Finally, the bride and the Spirit issue an invitation “to come” (22:17). Paul used the metaphor of the bride to indicate his feelings toward the churches he had founded. In 2 Cor. 11:2 Paul wrote that he had betrothed the Corinthian church to Christ. He wanted to present the church as a pure bride to Christ. The Corinthians were in danger of committing “adultery.” The imagery of the bride is used by various biblical writers, but they appear to have a single purpose. The bridal imagery is used to indicate the great love that God has for His people. For these writers, no image could express better this love than the ideal love between a bridegroom and bride.

Terence B. Ellis

BRIDE OF CHRIST See Bride.

BRIDE PRICE See Dowry.

BRIDLE See Bit.

BRIER Translation of various Hebrew words referring to thorny plants. Used metaphorically of the enemies of Israel (Ezek. 28:24) and of land which is worthless (Isa. 5:6; 7:23-25; 55:13; cp. Mic. 7:4).

BRIGANDINE KJV translation at Jer. 46:4; 51:3. Rendered elsewhere as “coat of mail” or “armor.” See Arms and Armor.

BRIMSTONE Combustible form of sulfur. Used as a means of divine retribution (Gen. 19:24; Deut. 29:23; Job 18:15; Ps. 11:6; Isa. 30:33; 34:9; Ezek. 38:22; Luke 17:29; Rev. 14:10; 19:20; 20:10; 21:8). It lies on the shore of the Dead Sea and can burst into flame when earthquakes release hot gases from the earth's interior.

BROAD PLACE To be set in a broad place (Job 36:16) is to be delivered from danger, anxiety, want, or distress. The phrase is also translated as “large place” (2 Sam. 22:20; Pss. 18:19; 118:5; Hos. 4:16) and “large room” (Ps. 31:8). Related is the phrase applied to Canaan, “large land,” which would appear to denote Canaan—the promised land—as a place of deliverance (Judg. 18:10; but see Isa. 22:18).

BROAD WALL A stretch of the wall of Jerusalem on the northwest corner near the Gate of Ephraim, restored by Nehemiah (Neh. 3:8; 12:38).

BROIDERED See Needlework

BRONZE See Minerals and Metals.

BRONZE SEA See Molten Sea.

BRONZE SERPENT Moses made a bronze serpent and set it on a pole in the middle of the Israelite camp (Num. 21). God had told Moses to do this so the Israelites bitten by serpents could express their faith by looking at it and be healed. The need for the serpent came in one of the times that Israel murmured against God and Moses. The people were in the wilderness after their refusal to obey God by entering the land of Canaan. Although God had provided food and water for them after their disobedience, they complained because of the monotony of the manna provided. As punishment for the people, God sent serpents among them. The serpents' bites were deadly, but God relented and chose to provide a way for rescue if those bitten would accept it. Anyone who looked on the bronze serpent set in the middle of the camp would be healed.

Nothing more is known of the bronze serpent until it is mentioned again in 2 Kings 18:4. There, in the account of King Hezekiah's purging of the temple, the Bible tells of the destruction of this symbol. Hezekiah wanted to purify temple worship. Apparently, the bronze serpent had become an object of worship as the Israelites burned incense to it.

Archaeological evidence from Mesopotamian and, more importantly, Canaanite sites reveals that the crawling serpent was a symbol of the fertility of the soil. The serpent was often represented associated with the fertility goddesses, the bull, the dove (life of the heavens), and water.

Jesus made the final mention of this symbol in John 3:14. There, in His conversation with Nicodemus, Jesus compared His own purpose with that of the bronze serpent. The serpent, lifted up in the wilderness, had been God's chosen way to provide physical healing. Jesus, lifted up on the cross, is God's chosen means of providing spiritual healing for all afflicted by sin. Whoever believes in Jesus “will not perish but have eternal life” (John 3:16 HCSB). See Atonement; Hezekiah; Moses; Wilderness.

Albert F. Bean and Karen Joines

BROOCH Class of jewelry brought by both men and women as offerings (Exod. 35:22). The Hebrew term denotes a golden pin (KJV has “bracelets”; REB, “clasp”; TEV, “decorative pins”). At a later time brooches were bow shaped and made of bronze or iron. Some recent interpreters think “nose rings” were meant.

BROOK OF EGYPT The southwestern limit of Canaanite territory given to Israel as a possession (Num. 34:5 NASB). It is usually identified with the Wadi el-'Arish, which flows from the middle of the Sinai Peninsula to the Mediterranean Sea. It empties into the Mediterranean about midway between the sites of Gaza and Pelusium. See Rivers and Waterways.

BROOK OF THE ARABAH Literally “brook of the wilderness.” A streambed that is dry most of the year and marked the southern border of Israel, the Northern Kingdom (2 Kings 14:25; Amos 6:14). It has sometimes been located at the Brook of Zered that joins the Dead Sea at its southeastern corner from the east. More likely, it is either the Wadi el-Qelt, flowing from Jericho to the west, or the Wadi el-Kefren from the northern end of the Dead Sea flowing to the east.

BROOK OF THE WILLOWS Name appearing only in Isa. 15:7 as one of the borders of Moab. The Hebrew name can be read as a plural form of the Brook of the Arabah, but two separate waterways are meant. Probably the same as the Brook of Zered, modern Wadi el-Hesa. See Brook of Zered; Arabim.

BROOK OF ZERED Also called “valley of Zered.” The Israelites crossed this brook marking an end to their wilderness wandering and entrance into the promised land (Num. 21:12; Deut. 2:13-14). It is usually identified with modern Wadi el-Hesa that flows into the southeast end of the Dead Sea. The wadi is about 35 miles long and forms the boundary between Moab and Edom. The Brook of Zered is the same as the Brook of the Willows (Isa. 15:7 KJV), the dry streambed of 2 Kings 3:16 (see 3:22), and perhaps the same as the Brook of the Arabah (Amos 6:14). See Brook of the Arabah; Arabim.

BROOM TREE Bush that often grows large enough to provide shade (1 Kings 19:4-5). Its foliage and roots were often used as fuel (Job 30:4; Ps. 120:4). Its white flowers with maroon center beautify the Dead Sea area. Bees buzz among its blooms. The name Rithmah—a place along the route of the exodus (Num. 33:18-19)—was named for this shrub (rotem). Although KJV, NASB identify the bush as the juniper, modern scholars agree that the bush intended by the Hebrew writer was the broom tree—Retama raetam (NIV, REB, NRSV).

BROTHERLY LOVE Concept that appears throughout the Bible, but the specific word for this type of love appears only in the NT. The word which is usually rendered “brotherly love” in the NT is the Greek philadelphia and is used only five times (Rom. 12:10; 1 Thess. 4:9; Heb. 13:1; 1 Pet. 1:22; 2 Pet. 1:7). A similar word, philadelphos, appears in 1 Pet. 3:8, and means “loving one's brother.” However, the idea of brotherly love is much more extensive than these few occurrences.

Old Testament Two words in the OT cover the full range of ideas associated with “love,” the Hebrew ahab and chesed, though the latter is often associated with covenant love. Israelites were called upon to love other people in many relationships: as friend to friend (Ps. 38:11; Prov. 10:12); between slave and master (Exod. 21:5; Deut. 15:16); with the neighbor (Lev. 19:18); with the poor and unfortunate (Prov. 14:21,31); and especially significant is the command to love the stranger and foreigner (Lev. 19:34; Deut. 10:19). Often the love relationship between people is in the context of covenant, as with David and Jonathan (1 Sam. 18:1-3).

New Testament Brotherly love in the ancient Christian literature means to treat others as if they were a part of one's family. This kind of love means “to like” another person and to want what is best for that individual. The basic word used for the brotherly type of love, phileo, sometimes means “to kiss,” which was to show close friendship (Mark 14:44). This kind of love is never used for the love of God nor for erotic love.

Jesus constantly taught His followers the principle of “brotherly love.” He declared that the second great commandment is, “You shall love your neighbor as yourself” (Mark 12:31 HCSB), and in the parable of the Good Samaritan He explained who that neighbor is (Luke 10:25-37). He also encouraged forgiveness of a brother (Matt. 18:23-35) and offered the Golden Rule as a guide in relating to one's brother (Matt. 7:12; Luke 6:31).

Paul spoke of “brotherly love” in the context of the community of believers, the church. Twice he used the term philadelphia: first in 1 Thess. 4:9, then in Rom. 12:10. In both cases he encouraged Christians to live peaceably with one another in the church. He underlined the idea of love for the brethren in Gal. 5:14, “For the entire law is fulfilled in one statement: 'you shall love your neighbor as yourself.’” Also in Rom. 13:8-10, he declared, “Do not owe anyone anything, except to love one another.” In 1 Cor. 8:13, on causing a weaker brother to stumble, he wrote, “If food causes my brother to fall, I will never again eat meat, so that I won't cause my brother to fall” (HCSB).

In the Johannine writings, brotherly love is a dominant theme. Jesus gave a new commandment “that you love one another” (John 13:34). The idea is repeated in John 17:26, “that the love with which You have loved Me may be in them.” A series of emphatic statements on brotherly love in 1 and 2 John are designed to show that this is truly the central command of Jesus (1 John 2:9; 3:10,18,23; 4:8,20; 2 John 6).

In the Epistles the specific word philadelphia (brotherly love) appears in Hebrews and in 1 and 2 Peter. Hebrews 13:1-2 connects it with “hospitality to strangers,” 1 Pet. 1:22 with being pure, and 2 Pet. 1:7 has it in a checklist of virtues which Christians should possess. See Ethics; Hospitality; Love.

W. Thomas Sawyer

BROTHERS In the OT the word “brother” usually refers to the blood relationship of siblings (Exod. 4:14; Judg. 9:5). In fact, the book of Genesis addresses the difficulties of sibling rivalry, or the “brother problem”: Cain and Abel (Gen. 4); Jacob and Esau (Gen. 25-28); Joseph and his brothers (Gen. 37-50). In each instance the younger brother is the one favored by God. (See also David among Jesse's sons, 1 Sam. 16:11-13.)

The NT also reflects the use of the word “brother” to designate a physical relationship. Luke mentions that Herod and Philip are brothers (Luke 3:1). Among the disciples, Simon and Andrew are siblings (Mark 1:16); so also are James and John (Mark 1:19). The four brothers of Jesus are mentioned in Mark 3:31 and named in Mark 6:3. Other examples of physical brothers are found in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:28), the story of the disputed inheritance (Luke 12:13), and the parable of the prodigal son (Luke 15:11-32).

The term “brother” is also used in the OT to signify kinsmen, allies, fellow countrymen. The word is used in Gen. 13:8 to describe the relationship of Abram and his nephew, Lot (“we are brothers”). Solomon and Hiram of Tyre are called brothers after they entered into political alliance with one another (1 Kings 9:13). Often the term “brothers” is found in apposition to the phrase “the sons of Israel” (Lev. 25:46; Deut. 3:18; 24:7; Judg. 20:13; cp. Num. 25:6). Basic to this idea is the notion that the tribes and nation of Israel descended from a common father.

This shift of focus from blood to spiritual kinship is found in the teachings of Jesus when He designated as brothers “those who hear and do the word of God” (Luke 8:21 HCSB). The fledgling Christian community continued this emphasis on brother as expressing a spiritual relationship. Paul regularly addressed the Christian community as brothers (1 Cor. 1:10; 1 Thess. 1:4). In fact, in most of the NT passages where “brothers” is used to designate the entire Christian community (male and female), the word may be better translated as “fellow Christians” (Phil. 4:1-9). The dual function of the term “brother” as describing both a physical and spiritual relationship bears eloquent testimony to the importance in the Christian community of both the family of flesh and the family of faith. See Early Church; Paul; Sister.

Mikeal C Parsons

BROTHERS, JESUS' Jesus grew up in a normal family with parents and brothers. Jesus' Nazareth critics listed them in Mark 6:3 as James, Joses, Judas, and Simon. Their names appear again in the parallel passage of Matt. 13:55, except Joseph is used as the alternate spelling of Joses (see NASB). His brothers may have been among the friends in Mark 3:21 who thought Jesus was “out of His mind”; ten verses later in 3:31 “His mother and His brothers” tried to get His attention while He was teaching in a house. Furthermore, John 7:5 reports that “not even His brothers believed in Him.” After the resurrection, however, they changed their minds and joined the disciples in times of prayer (Acts 1:14). The risen Christ appeared to one of them, James, and he became the leader of the church in Jerusalem (Acts 12:17; 1 Cor. 15:7). Nevertheless, some writings in the early centuries raised questions about the brothers to protect their developing doctrine of Mary's perpetual virginity. One of them, often called the Gospel of James, tells the life story of Mary, using much fanciful material. It claims that Jesus' brothers were the sons of Joseph by an earlier marriage. This is the view of the Greek Orthodox Church. Later a famous scholar, Jerome, argued that Jesus' brothers were really his cousins because their mother was Mary of Cleophas and the sister of Mary the mother of Jesus (John 19:25). This is the view of the Roman Catholic Church, but Protestant scholars prefer the traditional view of the Gospels. Jesus was born of the virgin Mary. Mary and Joseph then had four sons in the way all humans normally do.

W.J. Fallis

BROWN KJV translation of a Hebrew word rendered as “black” (NASB, NRSV, TEV, REB) or “dark-colored” (NIV) by modern translations (Gen. 30:32,33,35,40). See Black; Colors.

BUBASTIS [Bū bās'tis] (TEV, NIV) See Pibeseth.

BUCKET Reference is to water skin held open at the top by a stick in the shape of a cross (Num. 24:7; Isa. 40:15). The main purpose was for drawing water from a well and is still used in Palestine today.

BUCKLER Small rounded shield that was carried in the hand or worn on the arm. Larger shields were also used which covered the entire body. See Arms and Armor.

BUGLE NRSV, NASB, TEV translation of a Greek word in 1 Cor. 14:8 which is elsewhere translated as “trumpet.” See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

BUKKI [Buk'ki] Personal name shortened from Bukkiah, meaning “Yahweh proved” or “Yahweh has emptied.” 1. Representative of tribe of Dan on commission to distribute the promised land among the tribes (Num. 34:22). 2. High priestly descendant of Aaron (1 Chron. 6:5,51) and ancestor of Ezra (Ezra 7:4).

BUKKIAH [Buk-ki' ah] Son of Heman among temple musicians David appointed (1 Chron. 25:4). He or a person of the same name headed the sixth course of musicians (1 Chron. 25:13). See Bukki.

BUL [Bul] Name of eighth month or parts of October and November meaning “harvest month.” Solomon finished building the temple in this month (1 Kings 6:38).

BULL The term is a translation of several Hebrew words: abbir, par, and shor. The difference between abbir and par is not obvious but may be of some consequence. Abbir is used as an adjective most frequently to mean might or valiant one, either man, angels, or animals. Par seems to be used in reference to the male of the bovine species.

The bull was the symbol of great productivity in the ancient world and was a sign of great strength. Moses portrayed the future strength of Joseph with the term shor (Deut. 33:17). The king of Assyria boasted of his great strength with the term abbir (Isa. 10:13). The most frequent use of the bull in the OT was as a sacrificial animal. Leviticus specifies that no castrated animal could be so used and that the animal must be at least eight days old (22:17-28). The bull is specified as the sacrificial animal for a peace offering (Exod. 24:5), a burnt offering (Judg. 6:26), and as a sin offering (Ezek. 43:19). On the other hand, the sacrificial animal is not so restricted in other passages (Lev. 22:23; Num. 23:14). The bull was used most frequently in connection with the inauguration of the sacrificial system or with sacrifices on special days. It was used in connection with the consecration of the priests (Exod. 29:1-37); at the dedication of the altar of the tabernacle (Num. 7); for the purification of the Levites (Num. 8:5-22); at the beginning of the month, New Moon (Num. 28:11-15); the Feast of Weeks (Num. 28:26-31). The Feast of Booths had the distinction of requiring the largest numbers of bulls (71, Num. 29:12-40). The bull may have been introduced into the cultic system of Israel from the practice of her neighbors. It was a widespread practice in the region in which Israel resided. In the Canaanite religion, the chief of the assembly was called “father bull El.” The bull was closely associated with Baal and may have influenced Jeroboam to set up the golden bulls at Bethel and Dan (1 Kings 12:28). The bronze sea in the courtyard of the temple in Jerusalem was resting on the back of 12 bronze bulls.

Bryce Sandlin

Relief of festooned bull's head from Roman Philippi.

A colossal Persian column capital from Susa decorated with the neck and head of two stylized bulls.

Bulrushes at the so-called "Moses' Well" in the Sinai Desert.

BULRUSH In Exod. 2:3 the material that was used to make the ark (basket) in which the infant Moses was placed to protect him from the edict of Pharaoh requiring that every male Hebrew child be drowned. It was a kind of reed plant. See Plants.

BULWARK Solid wall-like structure raised for defense, possibly a system of two walls with space between. God's salvation is a bulwark for His people (Isa. 26:1; Ps. 8:2; 1 Tim. 3:15).

BUNAH [Bū' nāh] Personal name meaning "understanding." Member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:25).

BUNDLE See Bag.

BUNNI [Būn' nī] Personal name meaning "built." Levite leader of worship service confessing Israel's sin in days of Ezra (Neh. 9:4). A man of the same name, probably same man, signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God's Law (Neh. 10:15). His son Hasabiah was one of the Levites living in Jerusalem in the time of Nehemiah (Neh. 11:15).

BURGLARY See Crimes and Punishments.

BURIAL Partly because of the warm climate of Palestine and partly because the corpse was considered ritually impure, the Hebrews buried their dead as soon as possible and usually within 24 hours of death (Deut. 21:23).

To allow a body to decay or be desecrated above the ground was highly dishonorable (1 Kings 14:10-14; 2 Kings 9:34-37), and any corpse found by the wayside was required to be buried (2 Sam. 21:10-14).

Though the Bible nowhere systematically describes Hebrew mortuary practice, several features can be gleaned from individual passages. Joseph closed his father's eyelids soon after Jacob's death (Gen. 46:4). Jesus' body was prepared for burial by anointing with aromatic oils and spices and wrapping in a linen cloth (Mark 16:1; Luke 24:1; John 19:39). The arms and legs of Lazarus' body were bound with cloth, and the face covered by a napkin (John 11:44). The body of Tabitha was washed in preparation for burial (Acts 9:37).

Burial caves carved out of bedrock along the south slope of the Hinnom Valley in Jerusalem.

The dead were buried in caves, rock-cut tombs, or in the ground. It was desirable to be buried in the family tomb, so Sarah (Gen. 23:19), Abraham (Gen. 25:9), Isaac, Rebekah, Leah (Gen. 49:31), and Jacob (Gen. 50:13) were all buried in the cave of Machpelah, east of Hebron. Burial sites were marked by trees (Gen. 35:8), pillars (Gen. 35:19-20), and piles of stones (Josh. 7:26). The burials of the wealthy or politically powerful were sometimes accompanied by lavish accessories, including robes, jewelry, furniture, weapons, and pottery (1 Sam. 28:14; Isa. 14:11; Ezek. 32:27).

In contrast to its wide usage among the Greeks and Romans, cremation is not described as normal practice in the Bible. Bodies were cremated only in exceptional cases such as decay following mutilation (1 Sam. 31:12) or the threat of plague. Even in these instances, cremation was partial so that the bones remained. Embalming is mentioned only in the burial accounts of Jacob and Joseph (Gen. 50:2-3,26) and there only because of the Egyptian setting and plans to move the bodies. Apparently, embalming was an Egyptian practice.

When preparations for burial were completed, the body was usually placed on a bier and carried to the burial site in a procession of relatives, friends, and servants (Amos 6:10). The procession carried out the mourning ritual, which could include baldness and cutting of beard; rending garments and wearing sackcloth; loud and agonized weeping; and putting dust on the head and sitting in ashes (2 Sam. 1:11-12; 13:31; 14:2; Isa. 3:24; 22:12; Jer. 7:29; Ezek. 7:18; Joel 1:8). The Canaanite practices of laceration and mutilation are forbidden in the Torah (Lev. 19:27-28; 21:5; Deut. 14:1).

The period of mourning varied in response to circumstances. Mourning for Jacob lasted 70 days (Gen. 50:3), while for Aaron and Moses it lasted 30 days (Num. 20:29; Deut. 34:5-8). Women captured in war were allowed to mourn the deaths of their parents one month before having to marry their captors (Deut. 21:11-13).

The deaths of the famous prompted poetic laments. David mourned for the deaths of Saul and Jonathan (2 Sam. 1:17-27), and Jeremiah lamented the death of Josiah (2 Chron. 35:25).

Professional mourners are referred to in Jer. 9:17-18 and Amos 5:16 and in Matt. 9:23 as “flute players.” In the latter account Jesus seemed to dismiss them as He healed the ruler's daughter. It is interesting to note that Jesus' own response to Lazarus' death was comparatively simple; He wept at the tomb (John 11:35-36).

Israel's mourning rites reflect in part the belief that death is something evil. All contact with death—whether it happened by touching a corpse, the bones of a corpse, a grave, or a house which contained a dead body—made the Israelite unclean and in need of purification. In addition to personal sorrow, the mourning rites reflected at least to a degree the mourner's humiliation because of his necessarily close contact with the body of the deceased. Joe Haag BURNING BUSH In Exod. 3:2 Moses' attention was arrested by the sight of a bush that burned without being consumed by the fire. When he turned aside to investigate, the Lord spoke to him from the bush, instructing him to return to Egypt to deliver the Hebrew people from slavery. Some attempts have been made to explain the phenomenon by claiming that the bush had foliage of a brilliant fiery color or that its leaves reflected the sunlight in an unusual manner. It is best, however, to regard the burning of the bush as a unique act of God. It appears to have had significance primarily, perhaps solely, as a means of attracting Moses' interest and so enabling him to hear the divine word. See Exodus; Moses.

BURNT OFFERINGS See Sacrifice and Offering.

BUSHEL See Weights and Measures.

BUTLER Translation of a Hebrew word that literally means “one who gives drink.” The butler was an officer of the royal court who had charge of wines and other beverages. The butler was a trusted member of the royal court as this person helped prevent the poisoning of the king. The term that is translated “butler” (Gen. 40:1-23; 41:9) is also translated “cupbearer” (1 Kings 10:5; 2 Chron. 9:4; Neh. 1:11).

BUZ ^[Büz] Place and personal name meaning “scorn.” 1. Son of Nahor, brother of Abraham (Gen. 22:21). 2. A member of tribe of Gad (1 Chron. 5:14). 3. A land in eastern Arabia (Jer. 25:23) which Jeremiah condemned.

BUZI ^[Bü' zi] Personal noun meaning “scorn.” Priest and father of Ezekiel, the prophet and priest (Ezek. 1:3).

BUZITE ^[Büz' it] Citizen of Buz. See Buz.

BUZZARD Unclean bird, not suitable for food. Listed in the NASB and NLT in Lev. 11:13; Deut. 14:12 with the birds of abomination. Revelation 18:2 (NLT) has “filthy buzzards” nesting in the fallen Babylon.

BYBLOS See Gebal.

BYWORD Object of ridicule and scorn among other peoples. Used to speak of the fate of faithless Israel (Deut. 28:37; 1 Kings 9:7; 2 Chron. 7:20; Job 17:6; 30:9; Ps. 44:14).

The bema (tribunal) where Paul stood before Gallio in Corinth.

CAB See Kab; Weights and Measures.

CABBON [Căb' bôn] Place-name of uncertain meaning. Town in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:40). Its location is uncertain.

CABIN KJV translation of Hebrew word appearing only in Jer. 37:16 and meaning vault, cellar, or prison cell (cistern, NRSV).

CABUL [Că' bûl] Place-name meaning “fettered” or “braided.” 1. Town on northeast border of Asher (Josh. 19:27). May be located at modern Kabul, nine miles southeast of Acco. 2. Region of cities in Galilee Solomon gave Hiram, king of Tyre, as payment for materials and services in building the temple and the palace. Hiram did not like them and called them “Cabul,” a Hebrew wordplay meaning “as nothing.” Apparently, the “gift” expected a gift in return, according to Near Eastern etiquette, for Hiram gave Solomon 120 talents of gold (1 Kings 9:10-14).

CAESAR [Cē' sār] Family name of Julius Caesar assumed by following emperors as a title. Some Pharisees and Herodians asked Jesus about the propriety of paying taxes to Caesar. In reply the Lord said that those things pertaining to Caesar should be rendered to Caesar and those things pertaining to God should be rendered to Him (Matt. 22:15-21). In this passage the name Caesar is virtually a symbol for civil authority. Originally, Caesar was the family name of the founder of the Roman Empire. Julius Caesar was assassinated on March 15, 44 B.C. His successors kept Caesar's memory alive, and eventually his name came to be used as a title. Caesars mentioned or referred to in the NT include Augustus, Tiberius, Claudius, and probably Nero. See Rome and the Roman Empire.

Performances are once again held at the restored Herodian theater at Caesarea Maritima.

The turbulent waters of the Mediterranean Sea as seen from Caesarea Maritima.

CAESAREA [Cēs-ā-rē' ā] Located on the Mediterranean Sea 23 miles south of Mount Carmel is the city of Caesarea, known also as Caesarea-on-the-Sea (Maritima), Caesarea Sebaste, Caesarea of Palestine, and Caesarea of Judea.

Because of the lack of natural harbor between Sidon and Egypt, a Sidonian king, Abdashtart, established an anchorage in the fourth century B.C. It became known as Strato's Tower, using the king's Greek name. A fortified town developed on this site. The first literary record is from the archive of the Egyptian Zenon who put in there for supplies in 259 B.C. The Hasmonean ruler Alexander Jannaeus brought it under Jewish control in 96 B.C., but Pompey returned it to Gentile rule in 63 B.C. The Jewish community apparently continued to thrive. Mark Anthony gave it to Cleopatra, but Octavian or Augustus defeated Antony at Actium and placed Caesarea under Herod in 30 B.C.

Byzantine street at Caesarea Maritima with two colossal statues, one possibly of the Emperor Hadrian.

The Mediterranean Sea as seen through the arches of the Herodian aqueduct at Caesarea Maritima.

Herod determined to build a fine port facility and support it by a new city. The harbor, which he named Sebastos (Latin, Augustus), was a magnificently engineered project. The southern breakwater was built of huge mortared stones placed in a semicircle about 2,000 feet long, and the northern one is of similar construction almost 900 feet long. Great statues of Augustus and Roma were erected at the entrance. An inner harbor appears to have been dug into the land where mooring berths and vaulted warehouses were constructed. Josephus described the construction of the harbor and accompanying city in grandiose detail. The city was Hellenistic in design and style and named Caesarea for Caesar. In addition to the many buildings, a platform was raised near the harbor upon which a temple was built for Caesar with a colossus of Caesar.

After Archelaus was removed in A.D. 6, Caesarea became the capital of the province of Judea and served as the official home of the procurators. Hostilities between the Jewish and Gentile population apparently had been a way of life in this city. One of the public outbreaks resulted in the desecration of the synagogue Kneṣtha d'Meredtha in A.D. 66 that precipitated the Jewish-Roman War. Vespasian gave it the status of colony.

The city appears in the book of Acts as a place of witness, travel, and the seat of government. Philip, having witnessed to the Ethiopian eunuch, is mentioned as arriving at Caesarea after a preaching mission. Peter led Cornelius, a centurion who was stationed there, to Christianity (Acts 10). Paul had several reported contacts with the city as a port (Acts 9:30; 18:22; and perhaps 21:8) and a place of imprisonment and trial (Acts 23:23; 25:1-7). Herod Agrippa I had a residence there and died there (Acts 12:19-23).

George W. Knight

Water was provided for Caesarea Maritima by an extensive system based on this Herodian aqueduct.

CAESAREA PHILIPPI [Cēs-ā-rē' ā Phil' ip pi] About 1,150 feet above sea level, Caesarea Philippi is located on a triangular plain in the upper Jordan Valley along the southwestern slopes of Mount Hermon. Behind it rise bluffs and rugged mountain peaks. The area is one of the most lush and beautiful in Palestine, with groves of trees and grassy fields abounding. Water is in abundance, for the city is near the spot where the spring Nahr Baniyas, one of the sources of the Jordan, gushes from a cave in the bluffs. The city is also in a strategic location, guarding the plains in the area. The extent of its ruins indicate that it was a city of considerable size. The modern town, which has dwindled drastically, is known as Banyas.

History Caesarea Philippi seems to have been a religious center from its earliest days. The Canaanite god Baal-gad, the god of good fortune, was worshiped here in OT times. Later, in the Greek period, a shrine in the cave was dedicated to the god Pan. In addition, many niches in the cave held statues of the Nymphs. When Herod the Great was king of the Jews, he built a temple out of white marble near the same spot and dedicated it to Emperor Augustus.

The city also has an important place in the history of the area. Paneas, as it was called before its name was changed, was the site of a famous battle (198 B.C.) in which Antiochus the Great defeated the Egyptians and thereby took control of Palestine for the Seleucids. In 20 B.C. the Romans under Augustus, who then controlled the area, gave the territory to Herod the Great. After Herod's death, it passed to his son Philip who ruled there from 4 B.C. until his death in A.D. 34. Philip rebuilt the city into a beautiful place and renamed it Caesarea Philippi in honor of Tiberias Caesar and himself.

Baritas waterfall near Caesarea Philippi.

When Herod Agrippa II (grandson of Herod the Great) inherited the city, he renamed it Neronias in honor of the emperor Nero. But after Nero's death the name was dropped. During the Jewish-Roman War of A.D. 66-70, the Roman general Vespasian rested his army here. After the war, Titus, who succeeded his father as general of the Roman armies, held gladiatorial shows here during which a number of Jewish prisoners were put to death. After subduing the Jews, the Romans changed its name back to Paneas.

New Testament Near here Jesus asked His disciples the famous question about His identity. When He asked them who men said He was, they answered that people were identifying Him with Elijah, John the Baptist, or one of the prophets (Mark 8:27-33; Matt. 16:13-23). Jesus then asked them, “Who do you say that I am?” (Matt. 16:15 HCSB). Peter, acting as the group's spokesman, replied with his famous statement that Jesus is the Christ.

Stone niche at Caesarea Philippi (Baniyas) in which the statue of a pagan god was placed.

Ruins of a Christian chapel on Mount Hermon near Caesarea Philippi, the site of Peter's confession.

The transfiguration, which occurred about a week after the confession at Caesarea Philippi, was probably also in the area. Caesarea Philippi, which had been the center for pagan worship, thus became an important site for Christians because of Jesus' association with it. See Augustus; Baal; Herod; Nero.

W. T. Edwards, Jr.

CAESAR'S HOUSEHOLD In Phil. 4:22 Paul the apostle sent greetings to the Philippian Christians from certain believers who were of Caesar's household. The phrase was used to refer to all persons, both slave and free, who were in the service of the emperor. In Phil. 1:13 Paul had indicated the fact that he was imprisoned for the cause of Christ had become well-known throughout the Praetorian Guard. Quite possibly, some members of the Praetorian Guard were included among the believers of Caesar's household. See Caesar; Rome and the Roman Empire.

CAIAPHAS [Kai' á-phás] personal name meaning "rock" or "depression." High priest at the time of the trial and crucifixion of Jesus (Matt. 26:3). He was the son-in-law of Annas and a leader in the plot to arrest and execute Jesus. Relatively little is known of his life. He was apparently appointed high priest about A.D. 18 and served until A.D. 36 or 37. His remains have been found in an ossuary box in a burial cave in Jerusalem, which also contains the remains of many of his family members. See Cross, Crucifixion; Levites; Priests.

Charles W. Draper

CAIN [Cān] Personal name meaning “acquisition.” The firstborn son of Adam and Eve (Gen. 4:1). Although the meaning of the name is disputed, Eve's rationale for giving it suggests a relationship with a Hebrew root that means “to acquire.” Cain was a farmer, and his brother Abel was a shepherd. When the two men each brought an offering to the Lord, Abel's was accepted, but Cain's was not. Subsequently, Cain murdered Abel his brother. In punishment, God took from him the ability to till the ground productively and made him to be a wandering vagabond. God marked him to protect him from anyone seeking to avenge Abel's murder.

CAINAN [Cā' nān] Personal name of unknown meaning. 1. Ancestor of Noah (Gen. 5:10-14), sometimes seen as a variant spelling of Cain (Gen. 4:17). He is included in Christ's ancestry (Luke 3:37). In 1 Chron. 1:2 the name is spelled Kenan, a spelling used in other places by many modern translators. 2. Descendant of Noah listed in the Septuagint of Gen. 11:12 but not of Hebrew. Luke used this early Greek translation of the OT and included Cainan in Christ's ancestors (Luke 3:36). See Kenan.

CAKE Term referring more to the shape of a loaf of bread (flat and round) than to the type of batter or dough used to make the loaf (Exod. 29:23; 1 Kings 17:13). See Bread.

CALAH [Cā' lāh] Assyrian place-name. City that Nimrod built along with Nineveh and Rehoboth (Gen. 10:8-12). It is modern Tell Nimrud on the east bank of Tigris River where it joins Upper Zab River 20 miles south of Nineveh. Ashurnasirpal II (883-859 B.C.) made it the capital of Assyria.

Major Assyrian archaeological discoveries including the six-acre palace of Ashurnasirpal have been dug up. See Assyria.

CALAMUS [Cal' a-mūs] Ingredient of holy anointing oil (Ezek. 30:23). It was a good-smelling spice made from an imported reed. It is also translated “fragrant cane” (NIV, NASB) or “aromatic cane” (NRSV). See Plants.

CALCOL [Cal' cōl] Personal name of uncertain meaning. Wise man who served as comparison for Solomon's unsurpassed wisdom (1 Kings 4:31). First Chronicles 2:6 makes him a grandson of Judah, the son of Jacob.

CALDRON Cooking pot made of various materials used by different English translations for various Hebrew words. Used both in the home and in the temple (1 Sam. 2:14; 2 Chron. 35:13; Job 41:20; Ezek. 11:3,7,11; Jer 52:18-19; Micah 3:3). See Pottery.

CALEB [Cal' leb], CALEBITE Personal and clan name meaning “dog.” Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, was one of the 12 spies sent by Moses to scout out the territory of Canaan (Num. 13:6). He was one of only two who brought back a positive report (Num. 13:30). Because of his steadfast loyalty to the Lord, God rewarded him by letting him survive the years of wilderness wandering and giving him the region of Hebron as his portion in the promised land. At the age of 85 Caleb conquered Hebron (Josh. 14).

The ethnological identity of the Calebites is uncertain. In Num. 13:6 Caleb is identified with the tribe of Judah. However, according to Num. 32:12, his father Jephunneh was a Kenezite. The Kenezites apparently were of Edomite origin (Gen. 36:9-11). Perhaps Caleb represented a Kenezite clan that had joined the Israelites and become incorporated into the tribe of Judah.

CALEB EPHRATAH [Ca' leb Eph' ra-tāh] (KJV), CALEB-EPHRATHAH (modern translations) Place where Hezron, Caleb's father, died (1 Chron. 2:24). The RSV (not NRSV) follows a slight change of Hebrew text to make Ephrathah the wife of Hezron whom Caleb took after his father's death. Ephrathah was another name for Bethlehem. Otherwise, Caleb-ephrathah is unknown. See Bethlehem; Ephratah.

CALENDAR OT mentions days, months, and years, the basic elements of a calendar, but it has no prescription for regulating one. It was in the rabbinical period that the written treatise on Jewish traditions, Rosh Hashanah, a part of the Mishna, organized the biblical data into the detailed calendrical system that the Jews observe today. We can assume that what the rabbis codified was in general practice among the Jews of the first century, the time of Christ and the apostles, but the NT offers little direct calendrical data. Periods into which certain important events are dated mention not the day and month but the name of one or another of the ancient Jewish festivals: the Passover (usually in the passion pericopae, Matt. 26, Mark 14, Luke 22, John 18-19; otherwise at Luke 2:41 and at seven passages in John preceding the passion); the day of Pentecost (the Jewish feast of Weeks, Acts 2:1; 20:16; 1 Cor. 16:8); and the feast of dedication (Jewish Hanukkah, John 10:22). The NT offers no evidence that the Jews inside or outside Palestine observed the Roman calendar commencing on January 1, but the apocryphal book 1 Maccabees and the Jewish historian Josephus do substitute Greek (Macedonian) month names for Jewish month names. We may assume that in business dealings Greek-speaking Jews made free use of them. This was little more than a linguistic convention, however, since the Greek months corresponded with the Jewish months, making little difference in the basis of calendrical reckoning.

The Year Anthropological evidence from many regions shows that it was possible in the most ancient times to chart the course of the sun in its annual orbit, which occurs in approximately 365 days. The vernal and autumnal equinoxes (the day in the spring and fall, respectively, when days and nights are of equal lengths) were commonly designated as the beginning of a new year. From biblical data and from Near Eastern writings we know that all the peoples from the Mesopotamian area, as well as the Arabians, the Greeks, and the Romans, chose the first, unquestionably because spring is when new life sprouts forth. In Phoenicia, Canaan, and Israel, however, the fall date was chosen, probably for the reason that harvesting marked the end of one agricultural cycle and prepared for the next. In the exilic and Postexilic periods, the Jews shifted to the spring new year, but since rabbinic times, the fall new year has been observed.

From biblical and archaeological evidence we are able to describe three different ways for reckoning the years and dividing up the months from one new year to the next. Each of them reflects a different social system and religious ideology.

First, a basically agricultural society is reflected in the “Gezer Calendar” discovered by R. A. S. Macalister. This is actually a schoolboy exercise in which primitive Hebrew letters are scratched on a clay tablet. It reads:

His two months are (olive) harvest, His two months are planting (grain),
His two months are late planting;

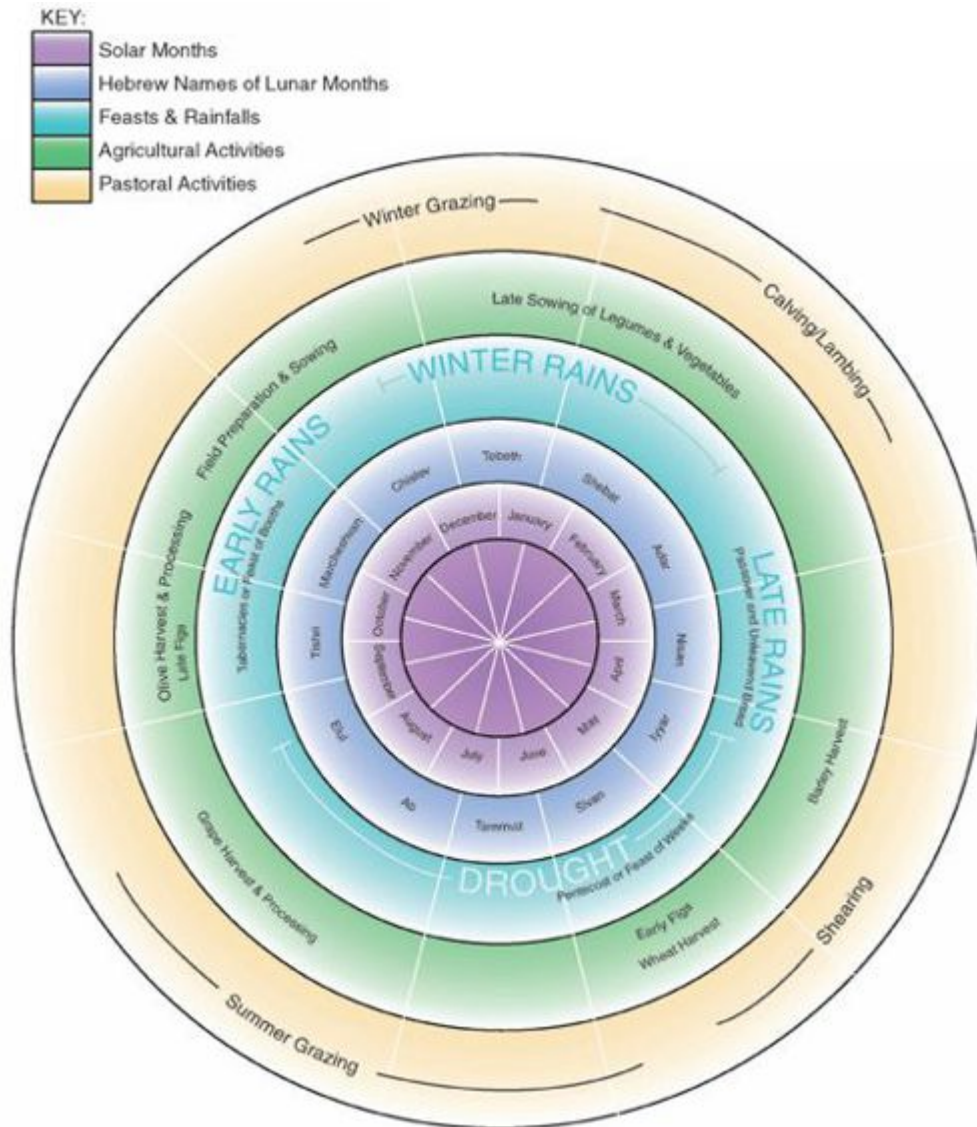

His month is hoeing up of flax, His month is harvest of barley, His month is harvest and feasting;

His two months are vine-tending, His month is summer fruit. (trans. by W.
F. Albright, Ancient Near Eastern Texts)

Two things are important to observe: (1) the list commences in the fall and ends with the following summer; (2) because it alternates between two-month and one-month periods and does not name or number the months, we can see that the succession of agricultural activities determines the order of items and that the year is conceived on the succession of agricultural events rather than on astronomical observation.

Second, the entire OT moves on to a lunar-solar calendar that is based on observation of the heavenly bodies and regulates a more sophisticated order of economic and religious activity. This type of calendar had wide currency among the more advanced societies. It is called “lunar-solar” because it allowed the sun's orbit to mark the years' beginning but based the beginning of months on observation of the phases of the moon. The first appearance of the new moon would mark the new month. According to the Talmud, the priests would watch for this and proclaim it by sending messengers and blowing trumpets. The first problem is that the moon's circuit is about 29 ½ days, forcing a vacillation between a 30-day and a 29-day month; and second, that 12 of these moon/months equal 354 ¼ days, about 11 days short of the solar year. From the Babylonians the Hebrews learned to add an extra month every two or three years. In rabbinical times this “intercalary” month was inserted seven times in 19 years.

Third, a sect known as the Essenes created a purely solar calendar that combined mathematical calculation with a special ideology. Discarding observation of the new moon, the Essenes gave each month 30 days but added a special day at the end of each three-month period, giving a year of 364 days. We have reason to believe that when this party tried to put this calendar into practice, the temple authorities drove them into exile. It would have disrupted the official religious festival cycle based on the lunar-solar year. We know about this erratic calendar only from sectarian books like the scrolls of Qumran.

The Month In addition to knowing that the length of months varied and that a new-year date in the spring or fall determined which of them was first, we are able to observe through Israel's history an interesting development in the naming of the months. These names reflected the presence of one or another dominating cultural influence: first that of the Canaanites, then that of Mesopotamia.

The earliest practice was to use the Canaanite month-names, of which four survive in the Bible: Abib (March-April); Ziv (April-May); Ethanim (September-October); and Bul (October-November) (Exod. 13:4; 23:15; 34:18; 1 Kings 6:1,37-38; 8:2). The other Canaanite months are known from Phoenician inscriptions. These are all agricultural names and reflect a seasonal pattern of reckoning, as in the Gezer calendar.

The usual practice in the OT is simply to number the months from first to 12th. Some of these numbered months are found in the passages mentioned above, hence the practice must be at least as early as the time of the Israelite monarchy. Because the first month is always in the spring, we must trace this practice back to the patriarchs, who would have learned it in Mesopotamia.

When the Jews returned from Babylonian exile, they brought with them the names of the Babylonian calendar, at the same time counting the new year from the spring. Although the rabbis returned to an autumnal new year, Judaism retains these Babylonian names as its own: Nisan (March-April); Iyyar (April-May); Sivan (May-June); Tammuz (June-July); Ab (July-August); Elul (August-September); Tishri (September-October); Marcheshvan (October-November); Chislev (November-December); Tebeth

(December-January); Shebat (January-February); Adar (February-March). The inserted month is called WeAdar, “and-Adar.”

Simon J. DeVries

Bust of Caligula, the Roman Caesar from A.D. 37-41.

CALF Young of the cow or other closely related animals. Calves were fattened in stalls to provide veal on special occasions (Gen. 18:7-8; 1 Sam. 28:24; Luke 15:23,27,30). Calves were also used in sacrificial settings (Lev. 9:2-3; Jer. 34:18; cp. Gen. 15:9-10, heifer). A calf symbolized the bullish Gentile armies (Ps. 68:30) and Egyptian mercenary soldiers (Jer. 46:21). The feet of one of the cherubim described by Ezekiel looked like those of a calf (Ezek. 1:7). One of the four creatures around the throne resembled a calf (Rev. 4:7 KJV, HCSB; other translations read “ox”). See Golden Calf.

CALIGULA Roman emperor, A.D. 37-41. See Rome and the Roman Empire.

CALKERS, CALKING Those who place some substance like bitumen into the seams of a ship's planking to make it watertight (Ezek. 27:9,27). See Bitumen.

CALL, CALLING Term often used of one being called by God to salvation and service.

Old Testament In the OT “call” carries several dominant connotations. These include to name, to summon, to proclaim, to cry to God for help, and to choose.

In the OT the Hebrew word qara' is translated as “call” in the sense of naming items, animals, places, and persons (Gen. 1:5; 2:19; 16:14; 25:30). In other portions of the OT, the concept of “to summon” is more noticeable. Examples include the Hebrew midwives (Exod. 1:18), Moses and Aaron (Exod. 8:8), and the disastrous refusal of Dathan and Abiram to answer a divine summons (Num. 16:12,31-33). In Joel 2:15 the word is translated as “proclaim” in the NASB; it carries the idea of announcing an upcoming event in which the people are expected to participate. God's people are also instructed to “call” upon Him for salvation and deliverance in times of need (Isa. 55:6), and the false prophets of Baal called upon their god in the contest with Elijah on Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18:26), while Elijah called on the name of the Lord. In Isa. 45:3 the Lord is said to have “called” Cyrus by name, indicating that he was chosen to fulfill a specific role in the salvation history of God's people. See Election; Predestination.

New Testament The NT uses the concept of “call” in relation to one's station in life and a calling to Christian service. Jesus and the apostles appear to distinguish between two types of call: external (gospel) call and an inner call.

In Acts 4:18 Peter and John are “called” back into the presence of the Sanhedrin after the body had completed its deliberations. In the parable of the unjust steward (Luke 16:2) the steward is “called” or summoned to give an accounting of his trust. The parable of the talents (Matt. 25:14-30) indicates again that a summons backed by divine authority is a most serious matter.

In the NT the concept of calling on the name of the Lord for deliverance is taken directly from key OT passages (Joel 2:32; cp. Acts 2:21; Rom. 10:13) and expanded into its fullest meaning of complete spiritual salvation from sin and judgment. In Acts 7:59 Stephen called on the Lord in prayer as he was about to die the martyr's death.

There is also a calling to Christian service. Paul refers to this directly when he says that he was called of God to be an apostle (Gal. 1:1; cp. Rom. 1:1).

In regard to the salvation of individuals, the word “call” is used in two distinct ways. In Matt. 22:14 Jesus said, “For many are called, but few are chosen” (NASB). Here the Lord indicates that the gospel call is intended to go out far and wide, calling men and women everywhere to repent of sin and trust in Christ for salvation.

Not everyone will heed that “external” or “gospel” call. The Bible attributes the conversion of the sinner to an internal call effected by God. The Apostle Paul taught that this kind of call will be issued to all those whom God has predestined to salvation (Rom 8:28-30) and spoke of it in this passage with such certainty as to give the impression that such an internal call cannot fail to achieve its purpose (cp. Joel 2:32; Acts 2:39). Jesus spoke of the same thing under the concept of God's drawing power (John 6:44). This call is always ascribed to the loving and eternal purpose of the Father with the goal of redounding to the praise of his grace (Eph. 1:4-6).

God's gracious call does not lead to laziness. The Apostle Paul admonishes his readers to strive with all their God-given strength to live lives worthy of the calling they have received (Eph. 4:1) and press onward and upward “toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus” (Phil. 3:14 NASB). In this context Paul's balance between responsibility and sovereignty comes into focus. In Rom. 10:9-15 Paul establishes the relationship between this internal call and the evangelistic imperative of the church: without the preaching of the gospel a person cannot hear, either of Christ, or from Christ, and so cannot call upon the name of the Lord and be saved. See Election; Justification; Predestination; Salvation.

A. J. Smith

CALNEH [Cal' neh], CALNO [Cal' nō] (Isa. 10:9) Place-name of uncertain meaning. 1. A part of the kingdom of Nimrod in Babylonia (Gen. 10:10). Location or identity with any other recorded city is not known. 2. City in Syria under Israel's control in the days of Amos and Isaiah (around 740 B.C.). Amos invited Israel to view Calneh's fate as a conquered city and see if Israel were really better in any way (Amos 6:2). Similarly, Isaiah warned Jerusalem that Calno (another spelling of Calneh) was as good as Jerusalem and yet had suffered conquest by Tiglathpileser of Assyria in 738. This Calneh may be modern Kullan Koy in northern Syria, six miles from Arpad.

CALVARY English name for the place where Jesus was crucified (Luke 23:33), derived from the Latin Calvaria, which is the Vulgate's translation of the Greek Kranion, “skull.” The other three Gospels (Matt. 27:33; Mark 15:22; John 19:17) refer also to the Semitic name “Golgotha,” from the Aramaic gûlgûltā, “skull” or “head.” This peculiar signification—“Place of a Skull” (Kraniou Topos)—has given rise to varied speculation about its origin. Common suggestions are that the site was a conventional and customary place of execution, or that it physically resembled a human skull, or even possibly that skulls were found there (or could be seen there). The biblical text sheds no light on the matter. What the NT does reveal is that the location was near Jerusalem (John 19:20), just outside the city walls (Heb. 13:12), apparently near a well-traveled road (Matt. 27:39), and seemingly stood conspicuously in its surroundings (Mark 15:40; Luke 23:49). Nearby was a garden (John 19:41; 20:15) in which was the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, cut out of rock (Matt. 27:59-60; Luke 23:53), in which no one had ever been buried (Luke 23:53; John 19:41), and which, after Jesus' interment, was sealed with a large stone (Matt. 27:60; Mark 15:46).

Today, two locations in Jerusalem lay claim to being this ancient site: (1) the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, which is within the walls of the modern city and has the weight of tradition on its side (from about the 4th century), and (2) the much more recently noticed (19th century) Garden Tomb, which is just north and east of the Damascus Gate and conforms closely to the biblical details (also called Gordon's Calvary, after the British general Charles Gordon, who argued for its validity).

B. Spencer Haygood

CALVES, GOLDEN Representation of young bulls used to symbolize the god's presence in the worship place. The bull was used to represent many gods in the ancient Near East, particularly Amon-Re in Egypt and El and Baal in Canaan. As Moses was on Mount Sinai, Aaron formed a golden calf to use in a "feast to Yahweh" (Exod. 32:4-5). Similarly, Jeroboam placed calves in Dan and Bethel for the Northern Kingdom to use in its worship of Yahweh (1 Kings 12:28) so the people would not have to go to Jerusalem, the southern capital, to worship. In both instances the calves represent the gods who brought Israel up from Egypt. Thus the sin of the calves is not worshipping the wrong god but worshipping the true God in the wrong way through images (Ps. 106:19-20). Israel tried to make pedestals on which the invisible God could ride. The only such pedestal OT teaching allows was the ark of the covenant (1 Sam. 4:4). See Bull; Golden Calf.

Gordon's Calvary is one of two sites considered to be the possible location of Jesus' crucifixion.

CALVES OF THE LIPS KJV translation of a very difficult Hebrew phrase in Hos. 14:2. If this is the correct translation, the meaning is very obscure, possibly referring to vows to sacrifice cattle (REB). Modern translations supply different vowels to the consonants of the Hebrew text and read “fruit of the lips,” which means giving praise to God.

CAMEL Large humpbacked mammal of Asia and Africa used for desert travel to bear burdens or passengers. Recent discoveries show it was domesticated before 2000 B.C.

Old Testament The camel, called the “ship of the desert,” is adapted for desert travel with padded feet, a muscular body, and a hump of fat to sustain life on long journeys. A young camel can walk 100 miles in a day. Wealth was measured by many things, including camels (Gen. 24:35; Job 1:3). The Jews were forbidden to eat the ceremonially unclean camel, which chews the cud but does not have a split hoof (Lev. 11:4). An ill-tempered camel in an unhampered rampage could quickly trample down the tents of a family or clan. Jeremiah thus described the sins of Israel saying they were as a swift she-camel, running wild (Jer. 2:23). The wise men who worshiped Jesus (Matt. 2:1) are traditionally pictured as riding camels. This may be a prophecy of Isa. 60:6 that describes camel riders from Sheba coming to bring gold and incense and to proclaim praises of the Lord.

New Testament John the Baptist, a desert preacher, wore the rough and plain clothes of camel hair (Mark 1:6). His clothing and diet were revolutionary and consistent with his role as a forerunner of Jesus. A proverb picturing things impossible to accomplish was quoted by Jesus (Mark 10:25) when He said it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle (Matt. 19:24) than for a rich man to enter heaven. A traditional but nonbiblical illustration describes an unburdened camel kneeling to creep under a low gate in a Jerusalem wall. This means that if a rich man will rid himself of pride and humble himself (kneel), he can get into heaven. Jesus describes hypocrites as persons who are very careful to strain out a gnat from a cup of drink but swallow a camel without notice (Matt. 23:24). They tithe the leaves of a small household herb but omit judgment, mercy, and faith.

Lawson G. Hatfield

Camels are still used by bedouins and others as a mode of travel in the Middle East.

CAMEL HAIR Very coarse material was woven from the hair of a camel's back and hump. A finer material was woven from the hair taken from underneath the animal. John the Baptist wore coarse camel hair (Mark 1:6). Jesus contrasted John's cloak to the “soft raiment” (KJV) of the members of the king's court (Matt. 11:8). Wearing a hairy mantle was the mark of a prophet (Zech. 13:4; cp. 2 Kings 1:8).

CAMON [Cá' môn] (KJV) See Kamon.

CAMP, ENCAMPMENT Temporary settlement for nomadic and military people. In the OT, English translators usually use “camp” or “encampment” to translate Hebrew machaneh. A machaneh is a temporary settlement of travelers or warriors. Before the settlement in the promised land, Israel was a group of tribes on the move. Hence the frequent reference to “the camp” or “the camp of Israel” (Exod. 14:1,9; 16:13). Leviticus and Deuteronomy contain laws regulating life “in the camp.”

Each tribe also had its own camp: Num. 2:3 speaks of “the camp of Judah”; Num. 2:25 of “the camp of Dan.” After each tribe had secured a permanent place of residence in the promised land, the term “camp” designated a military settlement, whether of Israel (1 Sam. 4:3; 14:21) or of an enemy (2 Kings 7:10). The Hebrew word machaneh is often rendered “company” (Gen. 32:8,21), “host” (Exod. 14:24), and “army” (1 Sam. 17:1). The context in these instances calls for a word that designates the people of the camp rather than the settlement as such.

In the Greek translation of the OT, machaneh is rendered parembole, literally “a putting alongside.” This word appears in Heb. 13:11,13 and in Rev. 20:9. In the last passage it is used figuratively of the church, “the camp of the saints,” under attack by the forces of Satan. Its use in the two Hebrew citations is also figurative, drawing upon the time when the people of Israel lived as a camp and using that experience as a metaphor for the people of God at the time the author was writing. During Israel's years in the wilderness, sin offerings were burned outside the camp. When Jesus was put to death for the sins of mankind, He was led outside the Holy City and at a distance from the temple. The writer of Hebrews thus encouraged his fellow Christians to follow their Lord “outside the camp” of Israel's sacrificial system and of their Jewish religious heritage, even though that could mean bearing abuse. See Castle.

Thomas A. Jackson

CAMPHIRE KJV spelling of “camphor,” Song 1:14; 4:13. Most modern versions read “henna.” See Henna.

CANA [Cá' ná] Place-name meaning “the nest.” In John 2:1 the town that was the scene of a wedding during which Jesus changed water into wine. Its exact location is uncertain, though it was in Galilee. In Cana an unnamed nobleman sought out Jesus to ask Him to heal his son in Capernaum (John 4:46). Cana was also the home of Nathanael, one of the apostles (John 21:2).

CANAAN Territory between the Mediterranean Sea and the Jordan River reaching from the brook of Egypt to the area around Ugarit in Syria or to the Euphrates. This represents description in Near Eastern documents and in the OT. Apparently Canaan meant different things at different times. Numbers 13:29 limits Canaanites to those who “live by the sea and along the Jordan” (HCSB; cp. Josh. 11:3). Israel was aware of the larger “promised land” of Canaan (Gen. 15:18; Exod. 23:20; Num. 13:17-21; Deut. 1:7; 1 Kings 4:21), but Israel's basic land reached only from “Dan to Beersheba” (2 Sam. 24:28,15; 2 Kings 4:25). At times Israel included land east of Jordan (2 Sam. 24:5-6). Other times the land of Gilead was contrasted to the land of Canaan (Josh. 22:9). After the conquest Israel knew “a great deal of the land remains to be possessed” (Josh. 13:1 HCSB). Canaan thus extended beyond the normal borders of Israel yet did not include land east of the Jordan. At times the land of Canaanites and the land of Amorites are identical. Whatever the land was called, it exercised extraordinary influence as the land bridge between Mesopotamia and Egypt and between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. History The word “Canaan” is not a Semitic name, although its appearance about 2300 B.C. in the Elba texts attests to its antiquity. Because of the final “n,” it has been conjectured to be a Huirrian form. Quite probably the name was derived from a merchant designation; certainly Canaanite was ultimately equated in the biblical text with “trader” or “merchant” (Zech. 14:21). Isaiah 23:8 uses “Canaanites” as a common noun meaning “merchants” or “traders” as the aristocracy to Tyre in the prophet's day. Similar association may be found in passages such as Hos. 12:7-8; Ezek. 17:4; Zeph. 1:11. Canaan's identity as merchants probably goes back to a time when Canaan was limited to the area of Phoenicia, the rather small and narrow country along the seacoast of Canaan. Phoenicia was particularly known for a special purple dye produced from crushed mollusks. This product was shipped throughout the Mediterranean world. The word “Canaan” may be related to the special colored dye.

The biblical genealogical references are not particularly helpful in clarifying our understanding of Canaan. According to Gen. 9:18 and 10:6 Canaan was a son of Ham, one of the three sons of Noah. Genesis 10:15-20 clarifies the implications of this Hamitic descent in the sons of Canaan:

Sidon, Heth, the Jebusites, the Amorites, the Girgasites, the Hivites, the Arkites, the Sinites, the Arvadites, the Zemarites, and the Hamathites. All of these people are characterized by being generally within the Egyptian sphere of influence.

Settlement within the land of Canaan is attested from Paleolithic times. Furthermore, a Semitic presence in the area is evidenced at least by 3000 B.C. Some of the best examples of cities indicating Semitic influences are Jericho, Megiddo, Byblos, and Ugarit.

The best attested period in Canaanite history is the Bronze Age (ca. 3200-1200 B.C.). During the Old Kingdom (ca. 2600-2200 B.C.), Egypt's power extended as far northward as Ugarit. From recoveries at several sites including Byblos and Ugarit, it is clear that Egypt controlled the area during the period of the 12th Dynasty (1990-1790 B.C.). From this general time period come the Egyptian Execration Texts that list peoples and princes of the area who owe their allegiance to Egypt. Egyptian control over Canaan waned, being withdrawn about 1800.

These twin basalt column bases are a part of one of four Canaanite altars excavated at Beth-shean.

Canaan had to contend with other aggressors besides Egypt. Approximately 2000 B.C. the Amorites invaded the area, having migrated via the Fertile Crescent from the southern Mesopotamian Valley. In addition, the Canaanites were beset by the Hyksos, who controlled Egypt from 1720 until 1570. Hurrians and Hittites also sought control of Canaan. The mingling of so many cultural influences still resulted in a rather unified culture.

When the Egyptians were able to expel the Hyksos in the 16th century, the Egyptians were able to extend their power over Canaan. Again, however, Egyptian power weakened. By 1400 B.C. a number of small, established nations in the area struggled with each other. From the 14th century the Amarna Letters are derived. These are approximately 350 letters written in cuneiform Akkadian. They represent correspondence between the Egyptian court at Tell elAmarna and numerous Canaanite cities, including Jerusalem, Megiddo, and Shechem. These letters indicate the unrest characteristic of these Canaanite principalities socially and politically.

Prior to Israel's entrance into Canaan, the country seems to have been organized around major cities creating rather small principalities. There was apparently no attempt to organize centrally for defense, thus making possible the success the Israelites enjoyed in the 14th century and the parallel success of the Philistines in the 12th century. The biblical evidence is scant for any type of concerted Canaanite aggression against the Israelites. Stories in the book of Joshua (9:1-2; 10:1-5) indicate that in emergency situations the independent city-state kings formed defense coalitions, but no one had power to unite all Canaan against Israel. In the book of Judges only one judge, namely Deborah (Judg. 4-5), is depicted as having fought against the Canaanites. Rather than struggling with each other after the conquest, the Canaanites and Israelites gradually melded together, a phenomenon essentially completed by the end of David's rule.

The most significant finds have been the cuneiform tablets discovered in the royal library and/or temple of Ugarit. These tablets date from ca. 1400 B.C. to the final fall of Ugarit in ca. 1200 B.C. These tablets represent Canaanite culture in the second millennium B.C.

The Pantheon A pantheon of deities was worshiped at Ugarit. On the one hand, each deity had a clear duty assignment; while on the other hand, considerable fluidity flowed in deity perception. The role(s) of any given deity might be assumed by another.

El was acknowledged as the titular head of the pantheon. As king of the gods, he was both the creator god and a fertility god. He had earlier been more strongly associated with fertility than was true in the 14th century, although he was still depicted in the form of a bull. El lived at some distance from Ugarit upon a mountain (Mount Saphon) located to the north.

El was joined by Athirat, apparently his wife, who is represented in the OT as Asherah, with both feminine (Ashewth) and masculine (Asherim) plurals. Athirat was acknowledged as the mother of the deities, having given birth to some 70 gods and goddesses. Thus, she was predominately a fertility goddess and designated “creatress of the gods.”

Baal was the chief god in the popular worship of the people. Baal means “master” or “lord” and could refer to any one of the numerous Baalim (Baals) who had authority in various locations. The Ugartic Baal, however, referred to the ultimate Baal.

Whereas El was located at some distance from the people, Baal was easily accessible. Baal statues have been recovered. These depict Baal wearing a conical hat with horns that convey the strength and fertility associated with bull imagery. In his right hand Baal holds a club that represents his military strength as well as thunder. In his left hand he grasps a stylized lightning bolt which symbolizes his role as a storm god. He is sometimes portrayed as seated on a throne, indicating his authority as king of gods.

Baal was joined in his task by Anat, represented in the Bible as Anath. She was portrayed as both sister and consort of Baal. In her role she was goddess of love, the perpetual virgin, and the goddess of warfare, whose exploits in Baal's behalf were sometimes remarkably cruel.

As Baal gradually supplanted El, many of the prerogatives earlier associated with El were naturally transferred to Baal. The biblical text derives from the period when this symbolic struggle between the deities had in essence been accomplished. Thus in the Bible Baal is often depicted with Asherah (i.e., Athirat) rather than Anath (i.e., Anat), as in Judg. 3:7.

Two additional gods fulfilled important roles in the popular mythology. Mot was the god of death and sterility. (In the Hebrew language the word for death is also mot.) Mot was associated with death, whether that refers to the seasonal cycle of vegetation, the sabbatical understanding of a seventh year of agricultural rest, or in some fashion to the individual's death. Mot was clearly understood as a power capable of rendering impotent Baal's regenerative powers.

Yam was called both "Prince River" and "Judge River." (Again, the Hebrew word for sea is Yam.) In the Ugaritic texts Yam was the chaotic god of the sea, capable of turning cosmos into chaos. The people of Ugarit, like their Mesopotamian counterparts (and unlike the Egyptians), apparently recognized both their dependency upon as well as the dangers associated with water. Cultically, the fear of chaos overcoming cosmos was represented in Baal's struggle with Yam.

This sampling of some of the more important members of the pantheon indicates that the Ugaritic schema, and thus that of the Canaanites in general, offered abundant options for worship. The mode of worship was tied especially to procreative sympathetic magic. The sexual union of god and goddess assured the fertility of mankind, the animals, and the larger world of nature. Crucial for this mode of worship was the worshiper's possibility to assist the process via sympathetic magic. In the temple a male priest or devotee fulfilled the goddess role. These two individuals became for the moment as god and goddess. In sympathetic magic humans ordain when and how the god and goddess act. This mode of human arrogance undergirded the tower of Babel story in Gen. 11. Practically all ancient worship structures operated from such a fertility-sympathetic magic orientation. The Israelites encountered this thought pattern when they entered Canaan. It took many centuries (note King Josiah's removal from the Jerusalem temple about 621 B.C. of the vessels made for Baal and Asherah as well as the houses of the male cult prostitutes—2 Kings 23) for Israel in daily practice of popular religion to resist Canaanite practices. The teachings of inspired leaders and the actual practice of religion often stood in stark contrast.

A Canaanite altar located at Megiddo in Israel.

Canaanite Mythology The seven tablets upon which the Ugaritic mythological material was found are often mutilated, frequently making difficult an assured rendering of the material.

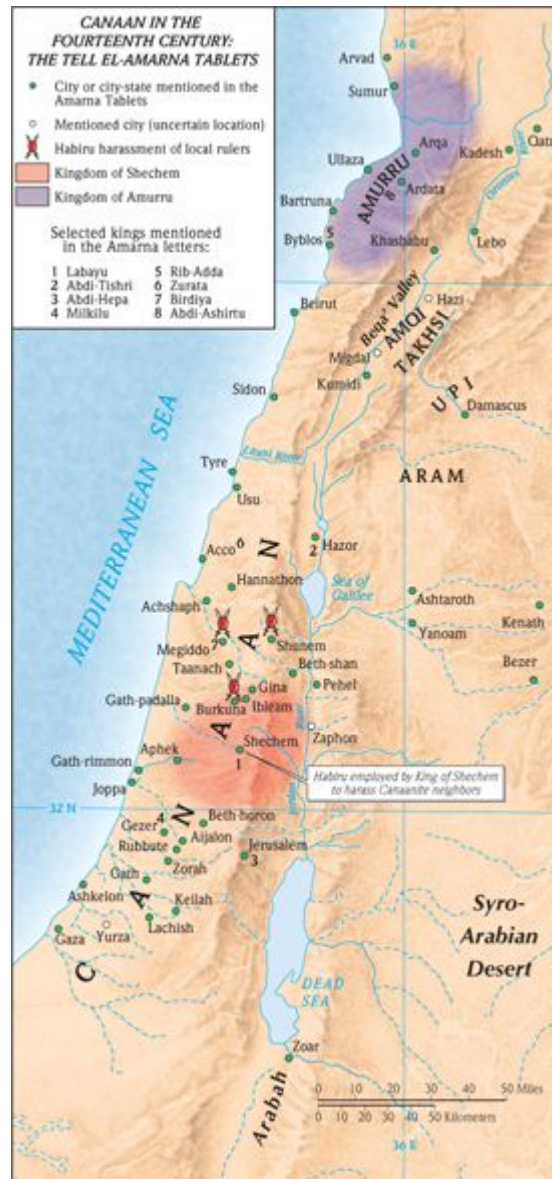

The mythology apparently centered on three primary exploits of Baal. Through these events he established himself as the god of supreme power within the pantheon, built the palace or temple which he merited by virtue of his victory over Yam, and in the third scenario struggled with, succumbed to, and ultimately escaped from the clutches of Mot.

El is portrayed as having been unashamedly afraid of Yam, this chaotic god of the sea. In fact, El was so frightened that he hid beneath his throne, fearful himself to encounter Yam but encouraging anyone to come forward who would confront this agent of chaos. Eventually, following some negotiations having to do with his role if successful against Yam, Baal stepped forward and proceeded to engage Yam. Baal was successful, bringing Yam under control by dividing him and thus making helpful an otherwise destructive, chaotic force. By this act Baal demonstrated himself worthy of exaltation.

The second mythological sequence emphasized that Baal was now worthy of his own palace or temple. Given the cyclic view of reality and the recurring danger posed by Yam, it is understandable that Baal did not want any windows in his palace. After all, the threat of chaotic flooding would surely occur again, for such recurrence is characteristic of mythological thought. Eventually Baal was convinced otherwise. Anat secured El's permission to build the palace, and the master craftsmen erected the structure. Baal opened the completed palace to all the pantheon for a type of sacred meal. During the meal Baal opened one of the windows and bellowed out the window, surely understood as an indication of thunder's origin, given Baal's association as god of the storm.

All should be well, but Baal had one more enemy to confront, Mot. According to the mythology, the two met in battle. Baal was defeated, being consigned thereby to the nether world. When Baal was separated from Anat, sterility reigned on earth. The wadis dried up, and Anat anxiously searched for Baal. While she could not find Baal, one day she chanced upon Mot. She had with her a blade with which she cut Mot into many pieces, which she then sifted, with the remains being scattered across the ground, probably an allusion to some type of grain festival. Regardless, this action by Anat enabled Baal to escape from his confinement. Rapidly thereafter, fertility returned! Thus the full cycle has been traversed, whether the intent be the annual cycle experienced in the world of nature, the seven-year sabbatical cycle, or perhaps the human birth-to-death cycle. What is transparent is the cyclic nature of the highly sensual, sympathetic magic worship. The Israelites were forced to contend with this mythology upon their entrance to Canaan. They faced a worship structure that had proved itself successful in the view of the Canaanites. Apparently the Israelites had to offer in exchange a non-agrarian wilderness God who had no record of success in agriculture!

Old Testament Relationships The Israelites settling into Canaan were not impervious to their surroundings. In the ancient Near East people assumed that as a people migrated from one area to another area they would take over the gods and religion of the new area in which they settled. At the least, they would incorporate the new religion into their own old religious structure. After all, these gods and goddesses had demonstrated their capability in meeting the inhabitants' needs. For the Israelites the most natural thing would have been to embrace baalism, although perhaps not to the exclusion of Yahwism.

Strong argument can be made that a type of Yahwism—baalism synthesis gradually established itself, particularly in the Northern Kingdom. During the period of Joshua and the judges a cultural struggle was waged which had to do more with the conflict between wilderness (Israelite) and agrarian (Canaanite) cultural motifs than between Yahweh and Baal. As earlier indicated, in the book of Judges only one judge, Deborah, is depicted as fighting directly against the Canaanites. Another judge could be called Jerub-baal (Judg. 6:32), having a father with an altar to Baal (Judg. 6:25). Without leadership Israel worshiped Baal-berith (Baal of the covenant) mixing baalism with the covenant of Yahweh (Judg. 8:33).

The early monarchical period demonstrates the same type of syncretistic behavior. Saul assuredly did not struggle to eliminate baalism, and he even named a son Eshbaal (man of Baal, 1 Chron. 8:33). Jonathan had a son, Merib-baal (1 Chron. 8:34). In like manner David named a son Beeliada (“Baal knows,” 1 Chron. 14:7). Solomon was even more of a syncretist. Solomon's crowning glory, the temple, was designed and built by Canaanite architects. In such an atmosphere, lines of demarcation were loosely drawn. Solomon's politically-motivated marriages brought many other gods and their worship into Jerusalem (2 Kings 11:1-8).

Following Solomon's death and the disruption of the united monarchy, the identity crisis continued in both north and south, but not as much in the south as in the north. Judah was the base for worship of Yahweh and the site of the Jerusalem temple. In addition, Judah was geographically isolated from the northern Canaanite area where baalism was more regularly practiced.

In Israel, however, the initial king, Jeroboam I (922-901 B.C.), erected rival shrines to the Jerusalem temple at Dan and Bethel. These shrines, in the shape of bulls, are viewed by most scholars as being associated in some fashion with baalism (recall that both El and Baal could be represented in the form of a bull). Regardless, the adherence to Jeroboam's shrines was for the biblical writers the mark of apostasy for Israel's kings.

During the Omride dynasty, Ahab (869-850 B.C.) married Jezebel, a princess from Tyre, as a sign of the diplomatic relationship between Israel and Tyre. Jezebel brought the clearest infusion of baalism into Israel. Amidst the building of a Baal temple in the capital city of Samaria and the persecution of Yahweh's prophets, the Prophet Elijah emerged on the scene. In a classical story of cultural confrontation, Elijah encouraged a contest atop Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18-19). On the one hand, the contest was an attempt to determine which deity could provide the life-giving rain. On the other hand, it had a much greater significance. It clarified that a person must worship either Yahweh or Baal. It was not possible to worship both, for Yahweh demanded exclusive allegiance.

The struggle Elijah initiated with this either Yahweh-or-Baal imperative, King Jehu (842-815 B.C.) carried forward politically. Religiously, in the Northern Kingdom, Hosea gave voice to the anti-baalistic message.

In the south two kings led the anti-baalistic struggle. Hezekiah (715-687 B.C.) is remembered as a reforming king (2 Chron. 29-31). Josiah (640-609 B.C.) was the reformer par excellence.

Judah also had its vocal prophetic spokesmen against baalism. Isaiah about 740-700 B.C. addressed the issue. Jeremiah from 615 B.C. onwards issued the strongest denunciation of baalism.

The baalistic Canaanites influenced Israel in many ways: temple construction, sacrificial rituals, the high places, a rejection of any sexual motif as a worship instrument (Deut. 23:17-18), and a lessening of the purely mythical with a concomitant emphasis upon the historical happening as with Yahweh's splitting of the sea (Yam Suph) rather than a struggle with a mythological Yam (Exod. 14-15).

It is too easy for the biblical interpreter to focus on the numerous ways that Israel found the Canaanite religion to be offensive. In some cases, such as the use of sex in worship, the level of antipathy witnessed in the OT may not always have characterized Israel's actual practice, as prophetic denouncements like Hosea's show. The marked hostility (Deut. 20:16-18) which clamored for the wholesale destruction of the Canaanites came from inspired religious leaders who did not represent the majority of Israel's population. A priest could call a prophet to leave the king's place of worship (Amos 7:12-13). The prophet could command people not to go to traditional worship places (Amos 5:5).

In summary the Israelites did not settle into a cultural vacuum upon entering Canaan. They encountered a people with a proud history and a thriving religion. Historically speaking, that encounter could potentially have led to the elimination of Yahwism. It did not. Rather, a long historical process led to the eventual elimination of baalism and the other elements of Canaanite religion. Israel's battle with Canaanite religion gave new dimensions and depth to Israel's faith. The biblical record affirms that Yahweh, the Lord of history, has used the reality of historical encounter as a means to bring biblical religion to its mature development as revealed in the full canon of Scripture. See Amontes; Anath; Asherah; Baal; El; Elijah; Gods, Pagan; Israel; Phoenicia; Ugarit.

Frank E. Eakin, Jr.

CANALS Translation of a Hebrew word that refers to the branches of the Nile River (Exod. 7:19; 8:5; Isa. 19:6). The KJV uses “rivers.”

CANANAEAN [Cā nán' ē-án] One of the 12 apostles is identified (Mark 3:18 RSV) as Simon the Cananaean (KJV renders “Simon the Canaanite”). In some other NT references this individual is called Simon the Zealot. Cananaean is probably the Aramaic equivalent of Greek zealot. See Disciple; Apostle; Zealot.

CANDACE [Cān' dá-sē] In Acts 8:27 the queen of Ethiopia whose servant became a believer in Christ and was baptized by Philip. It is generally agreed that Candace was a title rather than a proper name, though its meaning is uncertain. The title was used by several queens of Ethiopia.

CANDLE, CANDLESTICK (KJV) Candles as we know them were in use in biblical times. The reference is to “lamp” or “lampstand.” See Lamps, Lighting, Lampstand.

CANE See Calamus.

CANKER KJV translation in 2 Tim. 2:17 and James 5:3. In general, canker may refer to any source of corruption or debasement. In 2 Tim. 2:17 the reference is to gangrene which is the local death of soft tissues due to loss of blood supply—a condition that can spread from infected to uninfected tissue. In James 5:3 the reference is to rust. See Rust.

CANKERWORM KJV translation in Joel 1:4; 2:25; Nahum 3:15-16. The Hebrew refers to a type of locust. See Insects; Locust.

CANNEH [Cān' nēh] Northern Syrian city that traded with Tyre and gained Ezekiel's mention in condemning Tyre (Ezek. 27:23). It may be variant spelling of Calneh or a city called Kannu in Assyrian documents.

CANON See Bible Formation and Canon.

CANTICLES See Song of Songs.

CAP See Bonnet.

CAPERBERRY Fruit—Capparis spinosa—thought to increase sexual powers and used in Ecclesiastes to symbolize the dying physical desire of the aging (Eccles. 12:5 NASB). Most modern translations omit the symbolism of the Hebrew and translate “desire.”

CAPERNAUM [Cā pēr' nā um] Meaning “village of Nahum.” On the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee about 2½ miles west of the entrance of the Jordan is located the NT town of Capernaum.

Capernaum appears in the biblical record only in the Gospels where it is mentioned 16 times. As an economic center in Galilee, it was more significant than tradition has often allowed. The designation “city” distinguishes it from the “fishing village” category. Perhaps the proximity to a major east-west trade route explains the need for a customs station there. The importance of the city is further demonstrated by the location of a military installation there under the command of a centurion. Fishing and farming were important to the economy, and archaeological evidence suggests that other light industries were contributing to the local prosperity.

Some of the intricately carved column pieces discovered in the excavations at Capernaum.

The foundational material of this third-century synagogue at Capernaum may date from the first century.

A house at Capernaum venerated by early local Christians as the home of the Apostle Peter.

An overview of the third-century synagogue at Capernaum.

In the NT, Capernaum was chosen as the base of operations by Jesus when He began His ministry. Teaching in the synagogue (Mark 1:21) and private homes (Mark 2:1) was basic to His work there, but the miracles performed there appear to have precipitated the controversy and opposition. The religious leadership challenged the direction of Jesus' ministry (Mark 2:24; 7:5), and the popular following attempted to take over and force Him into a political position (John 6:15). Mark (2:1) referred to Capernaum as Jesus' home, and Matthew (9:1) described it as "His own city." It appears that several of the disciples also lived in that town including Peter, Andrew, Matthew, and perhaps John and James. The populace apparently did not accept His messianic role because they fell under the same condemnation as Chorazin and Bethsaida for failing to repent (Matt. 11:20-24).

George W. Knight

CAPHTOR [Cāph' tōr] Original home of the Philistines (Amos 9:7). In Jer. 47:4 and in Deut. 2:23 its inhabitants are called Caphtorim (cp. Gen. 10:14). Though several places have at times been proposed for its location, current scholarship is generally agreed that Caphtor is the island of Crete. See Crete; Philistines.

CAPHTORIM [Cāph' tō-rīm], CAPHTORITES (NIV) Citizens of Caphtor or Crete. See Caphtor.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT Capital punishment, or the death penalty, refers to the execution by the state of those guilty of certain crimes. Though some have opposed capital punishment for ideological and practical reasons, it is important to note that God mandated its use. This divine mandate occurs first immediately after the Noahic flood. God instructed Noah and his sons, "Whoever sheds man's blood, by man his blood shall be shed" (Gen. 9:6 NASB). Human beings are created in the image of God (Gen. 9:6), and thus all human life is sacred, justifying a penalty as severe as death for murder.

Capital punishment is reserved for the state, not the individual. There is no place for personal revenge in administration of this punishment (Rom. 12:19). The state has responsibility, as God's civil servant on earth, to protect its citizens and to punish those who harm them (Rom. 13:4,6). Capital punishment provides the state the means to apply the appropriate punishment for murder (Deut. 19:21).

God instituted capital punishment as a legitimate punitive option for every state. Its institution predates Israel's birth as a nation and Moses' divinely inspired directions for its governance, eliminating the possibility that it was mandated solely for Israel. God issued guidance on capital punishment to earth's only surviving people (Gen. 7:20-24). God's instructions to them provided the foundation for all subsequent governments.

Capital punishment remains a valid instrument in the state's administration of justice. Paul affirms that the governing authorities do “not carry the sword (machaira) for no reason” (Rom. 13:4 HCSB). Paul is expressing the general principle that the state has the right to punish those who break its laws. More specifically, since the machaira (sword) typically describes an instrument of death in the NT, and certainly in Romans (cf. Rom. 8:35-36), it is evident that the state's authority to administer justice includes capital punishment.

The state possesses this power of death to punish evil (Rom. 13:4; 1 Pet. 2:13-14); however, only those acts identified by God as evil justify the use of capital punishment (Isa. 5:20). A state that uses capital punishment for other things abuses its power and violates God's standard for its use. An example of such an abuse of power is Nazi Germany's killing of millions of Jews.

The state does not violate the sixth commandment (“You shall not murder,” Exod. 20:13 NASB) by its proper exercise of capital punishment. The Hebrew word ratsach, translated “kill” in some translations, refers to acts of murder or homicide. A different word, harag, often translated “kill,” occurs more commonly in the OT. Rather than violating the sixth commandment by capital punishment, the state actually supports the commandment by executing those who murder.

In order to assure the fair administration of justice, God established some important guidelines for Israel, which any state would be wise to adopt, especially in a matter as serious as capital punishment:

1. The accused person must have committed a crime for which death is appropriate punishment. God states: “Life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot” (Deut. 19:21).

2. Clear evidence of guilt must be provided by two or more witnesses. One witness was not sufficient to warrant capital punishment (Num. 35:30; Deut. 17:6). Aware that unscrupulous people may use the death penalty for evil purposes, God requires multiple witnesses to the crime.

3. Those charged with crimes must be treated in a uniform and impartial manner, regardless of the status (Deut. 1:17) or class (Lev. 19:15) of the offender. Any society that favors some people and discriminates against others because of class or status, or deprives some of adequate defense, intentionally or through neglect, diminishes its integrity and creates serious doubts about its administration of justice (Lev. 24:22).

Some view the incident with the woman caught in adultery as evidence that Jesus opposed capital punishment (John 8:1-11). However, Jesus' reaction was not directed at the prescribed punishment but rather at those who sought to trap Him into participating in an illegitimate act (John 8:6). First, the scribes and Pharisees did not constitute an official governing body. Their efforts represented an illegitimate attempt to exercise the power of the state. Second, there is no indication there was any formal presentation of charges or official declaration of guilt. Third, there is no evidence that witnesses were present. At least two witnesses were necessary to prove capital cases, and in some instances, they had to throw the first stones (Deut. 17:6-7).

Jesus did not point out these failings. Instead, He used the incident to illuminate the hypocrisy of the scribes and Pharisees by calling for someone without sin to throw the first stone (John 8:7). Only a sinless person could claim the moral authority to execute this woman for a crime without due process. Knowing their situation was legally untenable and that they were not sinless, the scribes and Pharisees retreated (John 8:9). Obviously, Jesus' words were directed at the scribes and Pharisees, not the issue of capital punishment.

Though capital punishment remains a legitimate option for the state, it must be exercised under the strictest of conditions. The state that chooses to exercise the power of life and death over its citizenry must be certain all has been done to assure it is punishing the right person, that the punishment fits the crime, and that everyone, regardless of class or status, has had an adequate, vigorous defense.

Offenses requiring capital punishment in Israel: (1) intentional homicide (Exod. 21:12-13; Lev. 24:17; Num. 35:16-21,29-34); (2) false witnessing in capital cases (Deut. 19:16-21); (3) idolatry (Lev. 20:1-5; Deut. 13:6-11; 17:2-7), including human (Lev. 20:2) and animal sacrifices (Exod. 22:20); (4) blasphemy (Lev. 24:14-16, 23; 1 Kings 21:13; Matt. 26:65-66); (5) witchcraft and false claims to prophecy (Exod. 22:18; Lev. 20:27; Deut. 13:1-5; 18:20; 1 Sam. 28:3,9); (6) profaning the Sabbath (Exod. 31:14; 35:2; Num. 15:32-36); (7) rape (Deut. 22:23-27); (8) adultery (Lev. 20:10-12; Deut. 22:22); (9) sexual relations outside of marriage: (a) before marriage (Deut. 22:20-21), the woman alone to be executed; (b) consensual relations with another's betrothed (Deut. 22:23-24), both to be executed; (c) by a priest's daughter (Lev. 21:9); (10) acts of incest, homosexuality, and bestiality (Exod. 22:19; Lev. 20:11-17); (11) kidnapping (Exod. 21:16; Deut. 24:7); (12) cursing or striking one's parents (Exod. 21:15,17); (13) incorrigibility (Deut. 21:18-20; Ezek. 18:1-18); (14) refusing to obey the court (Deut. 17:12).

Because God held His covenant people to a high spiritual standard, He specified capital punishment for the above acts. Since no other nation has this same relationship with God, He has not specified that these acts are subject to the same penalty in other societies. However, because God mandated capital punishment prior to Israel's establishment, at the very least, it is a legitimate response to murder in other societies.

Forms of capital punishment stipulated or mentioned: stoning was the usual method (Exod. 19:13; Lev. 20:27; Deut. 22:24; Josh. 7:25); burning (Lev. 20:14; 21:9); sword (Exod. 32:27; Deut. 13:15); spear (Num. 25:7-8); shooting by arrow (Exod. 19:13); beheading (2 Sam. 16:9; 2 Kings 6:31-32); and crucifixion, only by Roman decree and Roman soldiers (Matt.27:22-26,33-50; Mark 15:15-32; Luke 23:13-33; John 18:28-19:30). Jewish authorities under Roman rule were not normally permitted to execute anyone (John 18:31).

Barrett Duke, Jr.

CAPITALS See Chapter.

CAPPADOCIA [Căp-pă-dŏ' cĭ-ă] Roman province in Asia Minor mentioned twice in the NT: Acts 2:9; 1 Pet. 1:1. Although the extent of Cappadocia varied through the centuries depending on the currently dominant empire, it lay south of Pontus and stretched about 300 miles from Galatia eastward toward Armenia, with Cilicia and the Taurus Mountains to the south. Although mountainous country, its mostly rural population raised good crops, cattle, and horses. While in NT times its mines were still producing some minerals, a large number of tablets written in cuneiform script discovered in 1907 at Tanish, now known as Kultepe, revealed that Assyrians were mining and exporting silver ore from Cappadocia about 1900 B.C.

From Acts 2:9 we know that Jews from Cappadocia were in Jerusalem when Peter preached at Pentecost. Those converted to Christianity that day must have given a good witness when they returned home because in 1 Pet. 1:1 believers there are mentioned along with others in Pontus.

Today the region of Cappadocia is in central Turkey, which is 98 percent Muslim.

CAPTAIN English translation of several Hebrew words usually referring to an officer or leader; often applied to Christ. See Prince of Life.

CAPTAIN OF THE TEMPLE Officer second in authority only to the high priest. Pashhur ("chief officer in the house of the Lord," Jer. 20:1 NASB) and Seraiah ("leader of the house of God," Neh. 11:11 NASB) held this office in the OT times. In Acts it appears that one of the main functions of this officer was to keep order in the temple (Acts 4:1; 5:24,26). The plural (Luke 22:4,52) may refer to officers under the command of the captain of the temple.

Monastery of the Nuns at Cappadocia.

CAPTIVITY Term used for Israel's exile in Babylon between 597 B.C. and 538 B.C. See Exile.

CARAVAN Company of travelers (usually merchants) on a journey through desert or hostile regions with a train of pack animals (Gen. 37:25; Judg. 5:6; 1 Kings 10:2; Job 6:18-19; Isa. 21:13). Palestine lay along the main travel route between Egypt, Arabia, and Mesopotamia and had many caravans passing through it. See Retinue.

CARBUNCLE Precious stone used in the priest's breastpiece (Exod. 28:17 KJV) and part of the king of Tyre's apparel in the garden of Eden according to Ezekiel's ironic description (Ezek. 28:13). Equation with a stone used today is difficult if not impossible. NASB and NRSV read "emerald"; NIV, "beryl." KJV translates a different Hebrew term, "carbuncle," in Isa. 54:12. There NASB reads "crystal"; NRSV, "jewels"; and NIV, "sparkling jewels."

In English, carbuncle is an obsolete term referring to various red jewels. See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

CARCAS [Cār' cās] Persian name meaning "hawk." One of the seven eunuchs under King Ahasuerus of Persia commanded to bring Queen Vashti to the king's party (Esther 1:10). See Abagtha; Esther.

CARCHEMISH [Cār' kēm'ish] Fort of Chemosh; modern Jerablus. An important city on the great bend of the Euphrates River. It was on the west bank of the river, at an important river crossing point on the international trade route. Carchemish lies mostly on the Turkish side of the modern Turkish-Syrian border.

Carchemish is mentioned about 1800 B.C. as the capital of a kingdom in alliance with the Assyrian king Shamshi-adad I against Yahdunlim, king of Mari.

After the Mari period, there is a short break in the known history of the city. When sources again become available, Carchemish was first under Human influence, then was included within the Hittite sphere. Carchemish was a vassal and ally of the Hittite King Muwatallis against the Egyptian Pharaoh Rameses II at the important battle of Kadesh in 1286 B.C.

Following the destruction of the New Hittite Kingdom at the hands of the Sea Peoples shortly after 1200 B.C., Carchemish became the most important heir of the Hittite culture. The land of Haiti and the Hittites mentioned are probably these successors to the Anatolian Hittites centered on Carchemish. Carchemish again became the head of an independent kingdom and successfully resisted capture by the Assyrian Empire during the whole of its first period of expansion. Only under Sargon II were the Assyrians able to capture and destroy Carchemish in 717 B.C. Sargon helped to rebuild the city, and it became the capital of a western Assyrian province. Assyria's ultimate capture of the city was noteworthy enough that Isaiah used it as a rhetorical example in one of his oracles (Isa. 10:9).

The most important battle at Carchemish, however, was not fought over possession of the city. At the very end of the Assyrian period, when Nebuchadnezzar was incorporating all former Assyrian territory within the new Babylonian Empire, Pharaoh Neco II of Egypt came to Carchemish to try to save the remnants of the Assyrian army. He hoped to preserve a weak Assyria as a buffer between him and a strong and aggressive Babylon. He arrived too late to save the Assyrians, perhaps held up by Josiah's unsuccessful challenge at Megiddo (2 Chron. 35:20-24). Nebuchadnezzar defeated Neco at Carchemish. This victory gave Babylon authority over all of western Asia within the next few years; for this reason it ranks as one of the most decisive battles of all time. Jeremiah and the chronicler both took note of it; Jeremiah composed a poetic dirge commemorating the Egyptian defeat (Jer. 46:2-12). The city of Carchemish appears to have declined after the Babylonian period of power since references to it cease.

Carchemish and its ruins were visited by western travelers repeatedly during the 18th and 19th centuries. Excavations were carried out on the site from 1878 to 1881 and again from 1911 to 1914 and in 1920. A cuneiform inscription found during the excavations confirms the site as Carchemish.

Joseph Coleson

CAREAH [Cá-ré' ah] (2 Kings 25:23 KJV). See Kareah.

CAREER DECISIONS As a rule during the biblical period, sons entered the same line of work as their fathers. Occasionally, however, God chose careers for people, causing them to leave their family occupation in order to serve Him directly (e.g. Exod. 3:10; 1 Sam. 16:1-13; 1 Kings 19:19-21; Amos 7:14-15; Mark 1:16-20).

The Bible upholds any line of work that is honest and good (Titus 3:1; cp. Gen. 2:15; Neh. 2:18) and does not contradict the gospel (Acts 16:16-18; 19:23-27). All work should be done in the name of Jesus (Col. 3:17) and for the glory of God (1 Cor. 10:31) as if God Himself were the employer (Col. 3:23). This is true whether one works as a bishop, considered by Paul to be a "noble task" (1 Tim. 3:1), or at a job not highly regarded by the world (cp. the Egyptian attitude toward shepherding in Gen.

46:34). For this reason God is more concerned with one's attitude about work than the particular task performed (Eccles. 9:10; Col. 3:23).

God is concerned that each individual's full potential be met. For this reason He guides persons to choose careers (Ps. 73:24) that match their skills and areas of giftedness (cp. Exod. 39:43).

CARITES [Cär' its] Term of uncertain meaning in 2 Kings 11:4,19 and in Hebrew text of 2 Sam. 20:23, where "Cherethites" is usually read. The Carites were either mercenary soldiers recruited from Cilicia by Judah and other countries such as Egypt, or the meaning of the term can no longer be determined. They were military personnel who helped Jehoiada, the priest, install Joash as king and assassinate the queen mother Athaliah.

CARKAS [Cär' käs] NASB, NRSV, TEV spelling of Carcas (Esther 1:10). See Carcas.

CARMEL [Cär' mël] Place-name meaning "park, fruitful field." 1. Village in the tribal territory assigned to Judah (Josh. 15:55). King Saul set up a monument there after he defeated the Amalekites (1 Sam. 15:12). This is the place where Nabal treated David and his men with disrespect and disregard, an action eventually resulting in Nabal's death and David's marriage to his widow Abigail (1 Sam. 25:2-40). The village is modern Khirbet el-Kirmil, seven miles south of Hebron. 2. The towering mountain (1 Kings 18:19) where Elijah confronted the prophets of Baal. The mountain is near the Mediterranean coast of Palestine between the Plain of Acco to the north and the Plain of Sharon to the south. It reaches a maximum elevation of about 1,750 feet.

The western summit of Mount Carmel overlooking the modern Israeli port city of Haifa.

CARMEL, MOUNT [Cār' mēl] In 1 Kings 18:19 the scene of the confrontation between the prophet Elijah and the prophets of Baal. The mountain is near the Mediterranean coast of Palestine between the Plain of Acco to the north and the Plain of Sharon to the south. It is frequently mentioned in the Bible as a place of great beauty and fertility.

CARMELITE [Cār' mēl-īt] Citizen of Carmel. See Carmel.

CARMELITESS [Cār' mēl-ī-tēs] Woman who resided in or was a citizen of the town of Carmel. See Carmel.

CARMI [Cār' mi] Personal name meaning “my vineyard.” 1. Son of Reuben (Gen. 46:9) and thus original ancestor of a clan in the tribe of Reuben (Num. 26:6). 2. Father of Achan (Josh. 7:1). 3. Son of Judah (1 Chron.4:1).

CARMITE [Cār' mīt] Member of clan of Carmi (Num. 26:6). See Carmi.

CARNAL Anything related to the fleshly or worldly appetites and desires rather than to the godly and spiritual desires. Basic human nature is carnal, sold out to sin and thus living in the realm of death, unable to observe God's spiritual law (Rom. 7:14). People walk either in the flesh or in the Spirit, leading to death or to life. The carnal person is hostile to God, unable to please God (Rom. 8:1-11). Jesus Christ in human flesh overcame the condemnation of the fleshly way to offer the free life of the Spirit's way. Paul said that Gentiles had received the spiritual gospel through the Jews and should thus minister to the fleshly or material needs of the Jews (Rom. 15:27; cp. 1 Cor. 9:11).

Even church members can be carnal, being only babes in Christ, as Paul indicated in writing to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 3:1-4). Such Christians are jealous of one another and quarrel with one another. Christians should solve their problems with different “weapons” (2 Cor. 10:4). Such weapons serve God's purposes, destroy human arguments and human divisions, and bring glory to Christ.

Hebrews teaches that Christ had a distinct kind of priesthood from that of Jewish priests. Priests had always served on the basis of commandments written to meet fleshly needs. Christ served on the basis of His indestructible, eternal life (Heb. 7:16). In 9:10 the writer of Hebrews made clear the fleshly nature of the law. It consisted of commandments for the old order dealing with external matters until Christ came to deal with the spiritual matters of eternal redemption, sanctification, cleansing, and eternal life.

Using the same Greek word (sarkikos), Peter issued a battle cry against “fleshly lusts” so that glory would go to God and people would be attracted to His way of life (1 Pet. 2:11).

CARNELIAN Hard, red precious stone, a variety of chalcedony. It was used to decorate the king of Tyre (Ezek. 28:13 NRSV) and could be used to describe the one sitting on the heavenly throne (Rev. 4:3 NIV, NRSV, HCSB) and formed part of the wall of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20 NIV, NRSV, HCSB). See Minerals and Metals.

CARPENTER Trade or skill lifted to a high position of honor by Jesus (Mark 6:3). See Occupations and Professions.

CARPUS [Cār' pūs] Personal name meaning “fruit.” A Christian friend with whom Paul left his cloak in Troas. He asked Timothy to retrieve it for him

(2 Tim. 4:13).

CARRIAGE KJV translation of several general Hebrew and Greek terms referring to utensils, baggage, supplies, or anything which can be carried. The term has nothing to do with transportation vehicles, as a more modern use of carriage would imply. Compare various translations of Judg. 18:21; 1 Sam. 17:22; Isa. 10:28; 46:1; Acts 21:15.

CARRION VULTURE NASB, NRSV translation of bird of prey (Lev. 11:18; Deut. 14:17). See Vulture.

CARSHENA [Cār shē' nā] Wise counselor of King Ahasuerus of Persia to whom the king turned for advice on how to deal with his disobedient wife Vashti (Esther 1:14).

CASEMENT Window with latticework. The wisdom teacher looked through a latticed window to observe a foreign woman dealing with a naive youth (Prov. 7:6). Sisera's mother looked through a similar window as she impatiently waited for her son to return from the battle which he had lost to Deborah and Barak and after which he was killed by Jael (Judg. 5:28). Archaeologists have found such lattice windows in royal palaces. The queen or a goddess looking out the royal window seems to have been a popular motif in the ancient Near East.

CASIPHIA [Cā siph' ŷā] Place-name meaning “silversmith.” Place in Babylon where Levites settled in exile (Ezra 8:17) and from which Ezra summoned Levites to return with him to Jerusalem. The place is unknown outside this passage.

CASLUH [Cās' lūh], CASLUHIM [Cās' lū hīm], CASLUHITES [Cās' lū hīts] Clan name of “sons of Mizraim (or Egypt)” and “father” of the Philistines in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:14). Their origin is not known.

CASSIA Bark of an oriental tree (Cinnamomum cassia Blume) related to cinnamon. One of the ingredients used to make anointing oil (Exod. 30:24), it was acquired through trade with Tyre (Ezek. 27:19) and was desired for its aromatic qualities (Ps. 45:8). One of Job's daughters was named Keziah (Job 42:14), a name that means “cassia.”

CASTANETS See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

CASTAWAY KJV translation of Greek adokimos, referring to battle-testing of soldiers, qualifications for office, or testing of metals to make sure they are genuine. Paul used his own example of personal discipline to ensure that his preaching proved true in life as a call to others to do the same (1 Cor. 9:27). He did not want to be cast away as impure metal or disqualified as an unworthy soldier or candidate. Paul played on the words dokimos, “qualified,” and adokimos, “disqualified,” in 2 Cor. 13:5-7. The Corinthians demanded a test or proof that Christ spoke through him (v. 3). Paul turned the argument on them, saying they needed to prove themselves that they had not failed the test of Christ and become reprobates. He hoped the Corinthians would recognize in Paul's life that he had not failed the test and was thus not a reprobate. He prayed the Corinthians would not do wrong, not to prove himself qualified but so that the Corinthians would do what was right even if Paul proved to be unqualified.

Paul warned Timothy of evil persons in evil times with people resisting the truth, having corrupt minds, and being unqualified in the faith (2 Tim. 3:8). Similarly, he wrote Titus of persons professing to know God but unqualified in good works (Titus 1:16). With similar purpose, Hebrews compares people to ground which bears thorns and briars and is thus unqualified and fails to pass the test (Heb. 6:8).

CASTLE KJV translation for six Hebrew and one Greek word. NASB uses “castle” only for one Hebrew term in 2 Kings 15:25 and Prov. 18:19. RSV uses “castle” in Prov. 18:19 and also for a different Hebrew term in Neh. 7:2. NIV does not use “castle.” See Fortified Cities.

Armon refers to the large, fortified home of the king, often translated palace or citadel (1 Kings 16:18). The term apparently referred to the massive masonry structures connected with the defense of the palace and possibly of the homes of other leading citizens (Amos 6:8; cp. 1:4).

Apparently they served as storehouses for royal treasures and goods taken in battle (Amos 3:10). Israel prayed for peace in her fortress, but no fortress gave security from God's anger (Isa. 25:2; 34:13; Hos. 8:14). God promised to rebuild the fortified palaces of His people (Jer. 30:18). The palaces should witness to God's strength (Ps. 48:3,13-14). The wisdom teacher knew a more stubborn defense system than castles—that of humans (Prov. 18:19).

Birah is a late loanword from Accadian and refers to the fortified acropolis, usually built at the highest and most easily defensible part of a city (Neh. 1:1; Esther 1:2). It referred to the fortress near the temple in the rebuilt Jerusalem (Neh. 2:8). A military commander ruled the fortress (Neh. 7:2). The Chronicler used the term for Solomon's temple (1 Chron. 29:1,19) and used the term in the plural to describe Jehoshaphat's and Jotham's building (2 Chron. 17:12; 27:4).

Tirah refers to a stone wall used for protection around a camp of tents (Gen. 25:16; Num. 31:10; Ps. 69:25; Ezek. 25:4; cp. 1 Chron. 6:54; Ezek. 46:23b).

Migdal is a defense tower which may stand alone in the countryside as a watchtower (1 Chron. 27:25). They were also used to protect vineyards and other crops (Isa. 5:2). A famous migdal crowned one area of Shechem or served as a military outpost for Shechem (Judg. 9:46-49). Uzziah fortified the Jerusalem gates with such towers on top of which he placed modern weaponry (2 Chron. 26:9-10,15). Battle-axes were used to break down such towers (Ezek. 26:9). See Shechem.

Matsad and metsudah are closely connected to the Canaanite or Jebusite city of Jerusalem that David conquered (2 Sam. 5:7,9; 1 Chron. 11:5,7). The metsudah of Zion was probably a military citadel protecting the southeastern hill of Jerusalem, that part of Israel called “city of David.” In general, the word described any place of hiding or refuge (Judg. 6:2; 1 Sam. 23:14). The basic biblical lesson is that Yahweh is our stronghold, refuge, and fortress (Pss. 18:2; 31:3). See David, City of.

Parembole is the Greek term for a fortified camp and designated the Roman army barracks or headquarters in Jerusalem (Acts 21:34; 22:24; 23:10). Hebrews refers to OT offerings burned outside the camp, comparing this to the place of Jesus' suffering and inviting Christians to be willing to suffer outside the camp, accepting disgrace as did Jesus (Heb. 13:11-13; cp. Rev. 20:9).

Trent C. Butler

CASTOR [Cās' tōr] AND POLLUX (Pōl' lūx) Greek deities, the twin sons of Zeus, represented by the astral sign of Gemini. They were supposed to watch particularly over sailors and innocent travelers. They were regarded as guardians of truth and punishers of those who committed perjury. In Acts 28:11, Castor and Pollux were the sign or figurehead of the ship that carried Paul from Malta toward Rome. See Figurehead.

CATERPILLAR Worm-like larvae of butterflies and moths. The term appears in different English versions to translate various Hebrew words, NIV not referring to caterpillars at all.

Chasil refers to a particular stage of the grasshopper or locust. Apparently in this stage wings have begun to develop but are not folded together. They could cause famine in a land, eating all the crops (1 Kings 8:37; Joel 1:4). They symbolized gathering booty or spoil of battle (Isa. 33:4). They made their mark on Israelite history in the plagues in Egypt (Ps. 78:46).

Yeleg is the first stage after emerging from the egg. The flying apparatus has begun to develop but is invisible. The word could be used to describe the plague on Egypt (Ps. 105:34). They were noted for covering or filling up an area (Jer. 51:14). They swarmed over a land as an army in formation marched into a country (Jer. 51:27; Joel 2:25). They multiplied quickly and ate up all in front of them before flying away to attack another land (Nah. 3:15-16). Obviously such language is not fully appropriate for the first stage of the animal, showing that the various terms became synonyms and could be used interchangeably to describe typical activities of the grasshopper or locust.

Gazam is traditionally defined as the just matured grasshopper ready for flight. Other scholars would identify it as the true caterpillar. Its name comes from a Hebrew root word meaning “to cut off,” thus describing the animal's destructive ability to bite through weeds, grain, fig leaves, grapes, olive trees, fruit, and even small twigs and branches (cp. Amos 4:9; Joel 1:4; 2:25). This stage is variously translated as “palmerworm” (KJV), “gnawing locust” or “caterpillar” (NASB), “locust” (NIV), “cutting locust” (NRSV).

Arbeh is the mature, swarming locust—schistocera gregaria—that grows to six centimeters in length. The exodus plague narrative features them (Exod. 10:14-19). They were classified as hopping animals (Job 39:20) with jointed legs and so were clean for Israel to eat (Lev. 11:20-23). Their devouring habits made them a part of God's threatened curses on a disobedient people (Deut. 28:38). Their wandering and swarming resembled that of an army (Judg. 6:5; 7:12; Prov. 30:27; Jer. 46:23; Nah. 3:17). They were harmless to the human body, since people could easily shake them off (Ps. 109:23). See Insects.

CATHOLIC EPISTLES NT letters not attributed to Paul and written to a more general or unidentifiable audience: James; 1 and 2 Peter; 1, 2, and 3 John; Jude. The title is from tradition and cannot be defined by modern standards.

CATTLE Domesticated quadrupeds used as livestock. In the Bible the term commonly refers to all domesticated animals. English translations use “cattle” for at least 13 different Hebrew words and six Greek words referring to animals.

Ox, bull, calf, and cow are among the names for cattle in the Bible. Sheep, goats, and other domesticated animals are also included under the designation of cattle (Gen. 1:24; John 4:12). The land of Goshen, where the Hebrews settled during the time of Joseph, was rich in cattle. From bones found at Megiddo, one archaeologist has identified cattle in ancient Israel as the present small Beiruti race, while another has identified five types of cattle of Gezer. Cattle were valued for sacrifices, for food, and as work animals (Deut. 25:4; Luke 14:19). They were divided into clean and unclean classifications (Lev. 5:2) and were covered by the law of firstlings and Sabbath rest (Exod. 13:12; 20:12). Bullocks and calves were used for sacrifices. Possession of considerable livestock was a sign of wealth (Gen. 13:2; 1 Sam. 25:2).

Shirley Stephens

CAUDA [Cou' dá] or CLAUDA Small island whose name is variously spelled in the Greek manuscripts. Paul sailed by the island on his way to Malta and ultimately to Rome (Acts 27:16). The island is modern Gavdos, southwest of Crete.

CAUL Part of the liver which appears to be left over or forms an appendage to the liver, according to KJV. Other translations refer to the “lobe” (NASB), “covering” (NIV), or “appendage” (NRSV) of the liver (Exod. 29:13). Hosea 13:8 KJV speaks of the “caul of their hearts,” which modern translations render more freely. The Hebrew apparently refers to the chest cavity in which the heart is located. KJV also uses “caul” to translate a rare Hebrew word in Isa. 3:18 taken by modern linguists to mean “headbands.”

CAULKERS, CAULKING See Calkers, Calking.

CAVALRY Mounted soldiers of an army. Israel faced cavalry and chariots in the exodus (Exod. 14:9,18,28) and during the period of the judges (Judg. 4). God would not allow Israel to rely on the wealth and security represented by military horses (Deut. 17:16). David captured horses and chariots from Syria (2 Sam. 8:4). Solomon then developed a military force featuring horses (1 Kings 4:26; 9:19; 10:26). These references to horsemen may all refer to personnel connected with chariots rather than to individual riders or cavalry units. The Hebrew term parash refers to both with the context the only guide to interpretation. Evidence outside Israel points to Assyria using cavalry troops shortly after 900 B.C. The cavalry provided a line of defense, served as scouts, and chased a defeated army. God warned Israel not to depend upon horses for security (Isa. 31:1).

The east face of the Mount of Transfiguration showing caves used for shelter by the people of the area.

CAVES Numerous caves pit the cliffs and mountains of Palestine. Such caves provided housing and burial sites for prehistoric people. Although occupation was not continuous, evidence for human habitation in some of the caves exists up until the Roman period. At this time they became places of refuge for Jews fleeing Roman persecution.

In the Bible caves were often used as burial places. Abraham bought the cave of Machpelah as a tomb for Sarah (Gen. 23:11-16,19). Lazarus was buried in a cave (John 11:38). David used the cave of Adullam for refuge (1 Sam. 22:1), as did five Canaanite kings at Makkedah (Josh. 10:16) Diane Cross

CEDAR Tree grown especially in Lebanon and valued as building material (probably Cedrus libani). Cedar played a still-unknown role in the purification rites of Israel (Lev. 14:4; Num. 19:6). Kings used cedar for royal buildings (2 Sam. 5:11; 1 Kings 5:6; 6:9-7:12). Cedar signified royal power and wealth (1 Kings 10:27). Thus the cedar symbolized growth and strength (Ps. 92:12; cp. Ezek. 17). Still, the majestic cedars could not stand before God's powerful presence (Ps. 29:5). The cedars owed their existence to God, who had planted them (Ps. 104:16). See Plants.

One of the cedars of Lebanon.

CEDRON [Çè' drôn] (KJV, John 18:1) See Kidron.

CELESTIAL BODIES Paul contrasted celestial bodies (sun, moon, and stars) with terrestrial bodies in explaining the difference between the present human body (physical) and the resurrection body (spiritual body, 1 Cor. 15:35-50). The two types of bodies are of an entirely different nature: one weak and perishing, the other glorious and eternal.

CELIBACY Abstention by vow from marriage. The practice of abstaining from marriage may be alluded to twice in the NT. Jesus said that some have made themselves eunuchs for the sake of the kingdom and that those who were able to do likewise should do so (Matt. 19:12). This statement has traditionally been understood as a reference to celibacy. Paul counseled the single to remain so (1 Cor. 7:8). Both Jesus (Mark 10:2-12) and Paul (1 Cor. 7:9,28,36-39; 9:5), however, affirmed the goodness of the married state. One NT passage goes so far as to characterize the prohibition of marriage as demonic (1 Tim. 4:1-3). See Eunuch.

CENCHREA . (Cēn' chrō ā) or CENCHREAĒ Eastern port city of Corinth. Phoebe served in the church there (Rom. 16:1), and Paul had his head shaved there when he took a vow (Acts 18:18).

CENSER Vessel used for offering incense before the Lord (Lev. 10:1). Nadab and Abihu used it improperly to bring God's destruction. It probably was also used for carrying live coals employed in connection with worship in the tabernacle or the temple, each priest having one (cp. Num. 16:17-18). Use of the censer in temple worship was restricted to members of the Aaronic priesthood, as King Uzziah discovered (2 Chron. 26:16-21). The heavenly worship also involved censers and incense, according to John's vision (Rev. 8:3-5). See Tabernacle; Temple.

CENSUS Enumeration of a population for the purpose of taxation or for the determination of manpower of war.

Moses took a census of Israel at Mount Sinai and assessed a half-shekel tax to each male over 20 to support the tabernacle (Exod. 30:13-16). Another census counted Israel's manpower available for war. This census excluded the Levites, separating them for service in the tabernacle (Num. 1). Another census was taken in Moab at the end of the wilderness wanderings, again excluding the Levites. The Hebrew may indicate that the units used in the count reflect tribal units and not thousands, thus accounting for the large totals. David also counted Israel's warriors. Second Samuel 24 says that the Lord incited David to carry out the census, and 1 Chron. 21 says that Satan moved David to do so. In both accounts a pestilence was sent upon Israel because of the census. Ezra 2 accounts for those who came out of exile with Zerubbabel and Nehemiah.

The first census referred to in the NT concerns the decree by Caesar Augustus “that the whole empire should be registered.” This first census was taken by Quirinius, the governor of Syria (Luke 2:1-5). Luke used this benchmark both as a general time reference and, more importantly, to set the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem, the ancestral city of David. This passage has presented problems in that there is no specific record of such a census outside the Lukan account, and the date of Quirinius's governorship (A.D. 6-9) appears to be inconsistent with the previous statement that Jesus' birth was in the reign of Herod the Great (Luke 1:5), who died in A.D. 4. However, Luke's account is consistent with Roman practices, and such a census could well have been ordered by Quirinius functioning as a military governor alongside the political governor Sentius Saturnius around 6 B.C., when most scholars date the birth of Jesus. The other reference is that of Gamaliel's remark about Judas of Galilee, who rose up “in the days of the census” only to later perish (Acts 5:37).

Joel Parkman

CENTURION Officer in the Roman army, nominally in command of 100 soldiers. In Matt. 8:5 a centurion who lived at Capernaum approached Jesus on behalf of his ailing servant. In Mark 15:39 a centurion who witnessed the crucifixion identified Jesus as the Son of God. In Acts 10 the conversion of the centurion Cornelius marked the beginning of the church's outreach to the Gentile world. In Acts 27:3 the centurion Julius treated the Apostle Paul with courtesy. These passages illustrate the generally favorable impression made by the centurions who appear in the NT. They were usually career soldiers, and they formed the real backbone of the Roman military force.

The ruins of Cenchrea with the waters of its bay seen in the background.

CEPHAS [Ĉe' phás] See Peter.

CEREAL OFFERINGS See Sacrifices and Offerings.

CEREMONIAL LAW Laws which pertained to the festivals and cultic activities of the Israelites. See Festivals; Laws; Priests and Levites; Sacrifices and Offerings; Worship.

CERTIFICATE OF DIVORCE See Divorce; Family.

CHAFF Husk and other materials separated from the kernel of grain during the threshing or winnowing process. It blew away in the wind (Hos. 13:3) or was burned up as worthless (Isa. 5:24; Luke 3:17).

CHAINS English translation of at least eight different Hebrew terms for materials interlaced together into ornamental or restraining objects. 1. Ornament worn around the neck either signifying investiture in office with political award (Gen. 41:42; Dan. 5:7) or for personal jewelry (Num. 31:50). Animals such as camels might also wear ornamental chains (Judg.

8:26). 2. Decorations of gold worn on the high priest's breastplate (Exod. 28:14,22). 3. Series of chains formed a partition in Solomon's temple (1 Kings 6:21). 4. Architectural ornaments on the temple walls (2 Chron. 3:5,16). 5. Restraining chains preventing prisoners from escaping (Jer. 39:7; Acts. 28:20). God could loose His minister from chains (Acts 12:7).

CHALCEDONY Transliteration of Greek name of precious stone in Rev. 21:19. See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

CHALCOL [Cal' col] (KJV, 1 Kings 4:31) See Calcol.

CHALDEA [Cal-de' a] Refers either to a geographical locality (Chaldea) or to the people who lived there (Chaldeans). Chaldea was situated in central and southeastern Mesopotamia, i.e., the land between the lower stretches of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers. Today Chaldea lies in the country of Iraq, very close to its border with Iran, and touching upon the head of the Persian Gulf.

The Chaldeans In OT times different peoples occupied southeastern Mesopotamia at various times. One such group was the Chaldeans, whose name derives from the ancient term Kaldai, which refers to several Aramean tribes who moved into lower Mesopotamia between 1000 and 900 B.C. Their new homeland was a flat, alluvial plain of few natural resources, many marshes, spring flooding, and very hot summers.

Relation to Babylonia At first the Chaldeans lived in tribal settlements, rejecting the urban society of the Babylonians to the northwest—so called after the leading city-state of the region, Babylon, to which the OT refers over 300 times. Babylon was once the capital city of the great King Hammurabi (ca. 1763-1750 B.C.), remembered for the empire he created, and for the famous law code which bears his name.

As time passed, the Chaldeans gradually acquired domination in Babylonia. In the process they also took on the title “Babylonians,” or more exactly, “Neo-Babylonians.” As a result, the terms Chaldea(ns) and (Neo-)Babylonia(ns) may be used interchangeably (Ezek. 1:3 RSV, NIV; 12:13 NIV). See Babylon.

In the eighth century B.C. the Chaldeans emerged as the champions of resistance against Assyria, a dangerous, aggressive imperial force in upper Mesopotamia. At this time the Chaldeans begin to appear in the OT, first, as possible allies with Judah against Assyria, but later, as a direct threat to Judah and Jerusalem.

Tony M. Martin

CHALDEES [Cal' dees] Another expression for Chaldeans. See Chaldea.

CHALKSTONE Soft stone easily crushed, used for comparison to destruction of altar (Isa. 27:9).

CHAMBER English translation of at least seven Hebrew words referring to a portion of a house or building. Included are sleeping quarters (2 Kings 6:12); bathroom (Judg. 3:24); private inner room reserved for a bride (Judg. 15:1; Joel 2:16); private, personal cubicle in the temple furnished with benches (1 Sam. 9:22; 2 Kings 23:11); storage rooms (Neh. 12:44); a cool upper room built on the roof (Judg. 3:20) or over the city gate (2 Sam. 18:33); and the ribs or beams forming side rooms in the temple (1 Kings 7:3). The NT speaks of inner rooms of a house (Matt. 6:6; 24:26; Luke 12:3) or of a storeroom (Luke 12:24). See Architecture.

CHAMBERING KJV translation of a Greek word in Rom. 13:13 rendered as “debauchery” or “sexual promiscuity” in modern versions.

CHAMBERLAIN High military or political official whose title is related to Hebrew term meaning “castrated” or “eunuch” but actually may be derived from Akkadian term for royal official. That all officials bearing the Hebrew title, sar, were actually eunuchs is doubtful. The Rab-saris of 2 Kings 18:17 is literally “chief of eunuchs” but more likely signifies the office held by a high military and administrative official (cp. Jer. 39:3; Dan. 1:3). Potiphar is described as Pharaoh's sar but had a wife (Gen. 37:36; 39:7). The Persian officials in Esther 1:10 may have been eunuchs, since they apparently protected the king's wives and harem (cp. 2 Kings 9:32). Hebrew officials also carried the title (1 Sam. 8:15; 1 Kings 22:9; 2 Kings 8:6; 23:11; 24:12,15; 25:19). See Eunuch.

CHAMBERS OF IMAGERY Phrase of uncertain meaning (Ezek. 8:12). It could refer to secret rooms containing idols or pictures on the walls (Ezek. 8:10; 23:14) probably related to pagan religions. Whatever “chambers of imagery” refers to, that which was taking place in the temple during the days of Ezekiel was displeasing to God.

CHAMBERS OF THE SOUTH Reference to some unknown phenomenon in the skies. Since “chambers of the south” is mentioned along with other stellar constellations (Job 9:9), the phenomenon is usually taken to mean some sort of constellation or group of constellations. Some have taken “chambers of the south” to be a reference to the bright portion of the sky from Argus to Centauri. Others have taken the term as a reference to the zodiac or perhaps to the southern portion of the zodiac (cp. Job 37:9; 38:22). See Astrologer.

CHAMELEON Unclean animal that moves on the ground (Lev. 11:30), usually identified as the Chamaeleo calyptratus. A Hebrew word with the same spelling but perhaps with different historical derivation occurs in Lev. 11:18 and Deut. 14:16, where it is apparently the barn owl, Tyto alba. See Reptiles.

CHAMOIS Small antelope (rupicapra) that stands about two feet high and is found in mountainous regions. Translated as “mountain-sheep” in modern versions (Deut. 14:5). See Antelope; Sheep.

CHAMPAIGN Open, unenclosed land or plain (Deut. 11:30 KJV). Hebrew has preposition meaning in front of or opposite Gilgal and Arabah. See Arabah.

CHAMPION Hebrew phrase in 1 Sam. 17:4,23 is literally “the man of the space between”—that is the man (like Goliath) who fights a single opponent in the space between two armies. The Hebrew word translated “champion” in 1 Sam. 17:51 is a different word meaning “mighty one, warrior.”

CHANAAN [Cá' náan] KJV form of Canaan in Acts 7:11; 13:19.

CHANCELLOR Title of a royal official of the Persian government living in Samaria and helping administer the Persian province after Persia gained control of Palestine. English translations vary in the way they render the title, but it apparently refers to political administration rather than to military command and represents a high official but not the highest provincial office, that of governor (Ezra 4:8-9,17).

CHANT See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

CHAOS Transliteration of the Greek word. In the OT, several Hebrew words convey the idea meaning emptiness, waste, desolation, and void. Hebrew verbs denote sinking into obscurity, becoming nothingness, or falling prey to weakness. In Isa. 24:10 God announced judgment on the whole earth. This included breaking down the city of chaos so that no one could enter. Through God's power the line of desolation and the plumb line of emptiness are stretched over Edom (Isa. 34:11). In Jer. 4:23-26 the land is described as desolate, formless, void, and without light, a wilderness unfit for habitation. En route to Canaan, God cared for Israel in a howling wilderness waste (Deut. 32:10). God's power caused mighty leaders and princes to wander in the pathless wastes (Job 12:24; Ps. 107:40). Job compared his friends to waterless riverbeds that had lost themselves in nothingness (Job 6:18). Later Job longed for a place of deep shadow, of utter gloom without order (Job 10:21-22).

In Hebrew thought, however, the most prominent concept of chaos is that of the primeval disorder that preceded God's creative activity. When “darkness was over the surface of the deep” (Gen. 1:2 NASB), God through His word destroyed the forces of confusion.

Throughout the Scriptures chaos is personified as the principal opponent of God. In ancient Semitic legends, a terrible chaos-monster was called Rahab (the proud one), or Leviathan (the twisting dragon-creature), or Yam (the roaring sea). While vehemently denouncing idolatry and unmistakably proclaiming the matchless power of the One Almighty God, biblical writers did not hesitate to draw upon these prevalent pagan images to add vividness and color to their messages, trusting that their Israelite hearers would understand the truths presented.

God demonstrated His power in creation graphically in the crushing defeat of chaos. He quieted the sea, shattering Rahab, making the heavens fair, and piercing the fleeing serpent (Job 26:12-13). His victory over Leviathan is well known (Job 41:1-8; Isa. 27:1); Leviathan and the sea are at His command (Ps. 104:26). In creation He curbed the unruly sea and locked it into its boundaries (Job 38:1-11). He stretched out the heavens and trampled the back of Yam, the sea (Job 9:8).

A second use of the chaos-monster figure involved God's victories at the time of the exodus, using the term Rahab as a nickname for Egypt. Through His power God divided the sea and crushed Leviathan (Ps. 74:13-14). He calmed the swelling sea and smashed Rahab like a carcass (Ps. 89:9-10). By slaying the monster Rahab, God allowed the people to pass through the barrier sea (Isa. 51:9-10). Mockingly, Isaiah called Egypt a helpless, vain Rahab whom God exterminated (Isa. 30:7). The psalmist anticipated the day when Rahab and Babylon would be forced to recognize God's rule (Ps. 87:4). In Ezek. 29:3; 32:2, the Pharaoh of Egypt is called the river monster that will be defeated at God's will.

Thirdly, the chaos theme is implied, if not used, in the NT depicting God's victory in Christ. In the Gospels Christ confidently demonstrated mastery over the sea (Mark 4:35-41; 6:45-52; John 6:16-21). In Revelation, when the ancient serpent, personified as the satanic dragon, rises out of the sea challenging His kingdom, Christ utterly defeats the adversary forever.

So, beginning with Gen. 1:2, when God conquered the formless waste, and continuing through all the Scriptures, God's mighty power over chaos is shown repeatedly. Finally, the triumphal note is sounded in Rev. 21:1, "the sea existed no longer." A new heaven and new earth are proof once again that chaos is conquered!

Alvin O. Collins

CHAPTER KJV translation of Hebrew architectural term meaning a capital made to stand on top of a pillar (1 Kings 7:16) or the base on which the actual capital is placed. In Exod. 36:38; 38:17,19,28 KJV translates the Hebrew word for “head” as “chapter,” while a different Hebrew term is so translated in 2 Chron. 3:15. See Architecture.

CHAPMAN Old English word for trader (2 Chron. 9:14 KJV). See Commerce.

CHARASHIM [Cār' á shīm] (KJV) See Geharashim.

CHARCHEMISH See Carchemish.

CHARGE See Schoolmaster.

CHARGER(S) 1. Large flat serving dish (Num. 7:13-85; Matt. 14:8,11 KJV). 2. Horses used in battle to charge or attack (Nah. 2:3 NRSV; cp. TEV, REB based on early Greek translations; cp. Isa. 31:1,3; Jer. 8:6; Rev. 6:2).

CHARIOTS Two-wheeled land vehicles made of wood and strips of leather and usually drawn by horses. They were used widely in Mesopotamia before 3000 B.C. and were introduced into Canaan and Egypt by the Hyksos about 1800-1600 B.C. Their primary function was as mobile firing platforms in battles. They were also used for hunting, for transportation of dignitaries, and in state and religious ceremonies.

Old Testament Egyptian chariots were the first to be mentioned (Gen. 41:43; 46:29; 50:9). The iron chariots of the Philistines were fortified with plates of metal that made them militarily stronger than those of the Israelites (Judg. 1:19; 4:3,13-17; 1 Sam. 13:5-7).

Chariots became an important part of Solomon's army and his commercial affairs (1 Kings 4:26; 9:15-19; 10:28-29). The military strength of Israel under Ahab was noteworthy because of the number of chariots available for use. According to Assyrian records, Ahab brought 2,000 chariots into the Battle of Qarqar in 853 B.C. Chariots were also seen in prophetic visions (Zech. 6:1-8) and applied figuratively to Elijah's and Elisha's power (2 Kings 2:12; 13:14). New Testament Chariots were used in prophetic imagery (Rev. 9:9; 18:13) and for transportation of the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts 8:26-38). See Arms and Armor.

Lai Ling Elizabeth Ngan

CHARIOTS OF THE SUN RSV translation in 2 Kings 23:11 for a sculpture that Josiah removed from the Jerusalem temple. Other translations speak of horses the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun. The Assyrians called the sun god “chariot rider,” so this could represent statuary introduced when Judah began to pay tribute to the Assyrian kings. Deuteronomy 17:3 records God's injunction to Israel not to worship the sun, but Ezekiel attested to persons in the temple worshiping the sun (Ezek. 8:16).

CHARITY KJV translation of Greek agape. Several translations use “charity” for eleemosune, “pity, alms” (Luke 11:41; Acts 9:36; 10:4,31). See Alms; Love.

CHARM Human grace and attractiveness; magic objects intended to ward off evil; and a method used to prevent poisonous snakes from biting. 1. Human charm can be deceitful (Prov. 31:30), yet the Hebrew term used—chen—is a characteristic of God's gift of the Spirit (Zech. 12:10). God gave Joseph the ability to be charming or gain favor with the Egyptian jailer (Gen. 39:21). God also gives such grace to the afflicted (Prov. 3:34). Generally the term means to find favor or acceptance from another person (Gen. 6:8; 33:8), but English translations use “grace” or “favor” rather than “charm” as the translation at these points. “Charm” is used in cases like the harlot of Nah. 3:4. 2. Magic charms sewn as wristbands (Ezek. 13:18 NIV) to ward off evil spirits and diseases receive prophetic condemnation (cp. Isa. 3:20). 3. Snake charmers exercised power in the community because they knew “magic words” or “magic acts” to prevent poisonous snakes from harming people. The psalmist compared the wicked to deaf snakes who were immune to such charmers (Ps. 58:4-5). The “enchanters” (NASB, NIV, NRSV) are listed among community leaders the prophet condemned (Isa. 3:3). Jeremiah warned God would send snakes whom no one could charm to punish His disobedient people (Jer. 8:17). The writer of Ecclesiastes reminded his audience that the price of unsuccessful charmers was great (Eccles. 10:11).

CHARRAN Greek and KJV spelling of Haran (Acts 7:2,4). See Haran

CHASTE Holy purity demanded of God's people with special reference to the sexual purity of women. The Greek word hagnos originally referred to the holy purity of deities. Paul used the term to urge the Corinthians to remain pure so he could present them to Christ in the last days as a pure, virginal bride (2 Cor. 11:2-3). Titus was to teach young women to be pure in sincere worship, in general moral behavior, and in sexual matters (Titus 2:5; cp. 1 Pet. 3:2). Similarly, church leaders must be pure (1 Tim. 5:22). Purity is an essential element of Christian ethics (Phil. 4:8; James 3:17). Even preaching the gospel can be done from impure motives (Phil. 1:17). To be pure can also appear in a legal context, meaning to be declared innocent of a charge as Paul did in reference to the Corinthians (2 Cor. 7:11). Ultimately, Jesus is the pure One (1 John 3:3).

CHASTEN or CHASTISEMENT Refers to an act of punishment intended to instruct and change behavior. Two basic Hebrew words express the idea—yakach, “to settle a dispute, reprove”; yasar, “to instruct, a discipline.” People fear the experience of God's angry chastisement (Pss. 6:1; 38:1). Still, the Father must correct His children (2 Sam. 7:14; cp. Deut. 8:5; 21:18; Prov. 13:24; 19:18). God's people should not despise God's chastening, for it leads to healing (Job 5:17-18; cp. Prov. 3:11; Heb. 12:5). Such chastisement is God's choice, not that of humans (Hos. 10:10; cp. 7:12). The purpose of chastising is to lead to repentance (Jer. 31:18-19) and bring blessing (Ps. 94:12), not to kill (Ps. 118:18). It shows God's greatness and power (Deut. 11:2). The climactic OT word on chastisement is that the Suffering Servant has borne our chastisement, so that we do not have to suffer it (Isa. 53:5). Ultimately, chastisement shows God's love for the one chastised (Rev. 3:19). He seeks to lead us away from eternal chastisement (1 Cor. 11:32; cp. Heb. 12:10).

CHEBAR [Cē' bār] River in Babylon where Ezekiel had visions (Ezek. 1:1; 3:15; 10:15; 43:3). This is probably to be identified with the nar Kabari, a channel of the Euphrates River southeast of Babylon. It may be the modern Satten-nil.

CHECKER WORK Part of the decoration of the pillars of the temple (1 Kings 7:17). The Hebrew word also denotes a lattice (2 Kings 1:2) or net (Job 18:8). With reference to the pillars of the temple, it thus denotes a crisscrossed design.

CHEDOR-LAOMER [Cēd-ōr-lā-ō' mēr] King of Elam who joined coalition of kings against kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, leading to Abraham's involvement and victory (Gen. 14:1). His Elamite name means "son of La'gamal," (a god). He apparently led the eastern coalition. He does not appear in the fragmentary Elamite records known today, so nothing else is known except what Gen. 14 records. See Elam.

CHEESE Dairy product forming a basic part of the diet. The three occurrences of cheese in English translations reflect three different Hebrew expressions. Job 10:10 refers to cheese; 1 Sam. 17:18 speaks literally of a "slice of milk"; and 2 Sam. 17:29 uses a phrase usually interpreted as meaning "curds of the herd."

CHELAL [Cē' lāl] Personal name of a man with foreign wife in the Postexilic community (Ezra 10:30).

CHELLUH [Cē' lū] Personal name of a man with a foreign wife in Postexilic community (Ezra 10:35).

CHELUB [Cē' lūb] 1. Descendant of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:11), probably to be identified with Caleb, the hero of the spy narrative of Num. 13-14. See Caleb. 2. Father of Ezri, overseer of workers on David's farms (1 Chron. 27:26).

CHELUBAI [Cē-lu' bī] Hebrew variant of Caleb, the hero of the spy narratives (Num. 13-14). See Caleb.

CHELUHI [Cēl' uh-i] (TEV, NRSV, NASB) See Chelluh.

CHEMARIM [Cēm' ā-rīm] KJV transliteration of Hebrew word meaning “priests of foreign or false gods” in Zeph. 1:4. The Hebrew term also appears in 2 Kings 23:5; Hos. 10:5.

CHEMOSH [Cē' mōsh] Divine name meaning “subdue.” Deity the Moabites worshiped (Num. 21:29). He was expected to provide land for Moab (Judg. 11:24) though the meaning here is complicated by the fact that Ammonites are addressed. Solomon erected a sanctuary for Chemosh on a mountain east of Jerusalem (1 Kings 11:7). Josiah subsequently defiled the sanctuary (2 Kings 23:13). Jeremiah pronounced doom on Chemosh and his people (Jer. 48:7,13,46).

CHENAANAH [Cə-nā' ā-nāh] 1. Personal name meaning “tradeswoman.” Father of the false prophet Zedekiah (1 Kings 22:11). See Zedekiah. 2. Member of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 7:10).

CHENANI [Cə-nā' nī] Personal name meaning “one born in month of Kanunu.” A Levite who led Israel in a prayer of renewal and praise (Neh. 9:4).

CHENANIAH [Cēn-ā-nī' āh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh empowers.” 1. Chief of the Levites under David who instructed people in singing and played a leading role in bringing the ark back to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:22,27). 2. Levite whose family had charge of business outside the temple, including work as officials and judges (1 Chron. 26:29).

CHEPHAR-AMMONI [Cē' phār-ām' mō-nī] Place-name meaning “open village of the Ammonites.” A village in the tribal territory of Benjamin (Josh. 18:24). Its location is not known.

CHEPHAR HA-AMMONAI KJV spelling, including the Hebrew definite article, ha, for Chephar-ammoni. See Chephar-ammoni.

CHEPHIRAH [Cə-phī' rāh] Place-name meaning “queen of the lions.” It is located at Khirbet Kefire about four miles west of Gibeon. One of the four cities of the Gibeonites which Joshua delivered from the coalition led by the king of Jerusalem (Josh. 9:17). Joshua assigned it to the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:26). Some of its exiled inhabitants returned to the Postexilic village with Zerubbabel (Ezra 2:25).

CHEPHIRIM [Cəph' ɪ-rīm] Hebrew term for villages that NASB transliterates as place-name in Neh. 6:2.

CHERAN [Cə' rān] Descendant of Seir (or Edom) listed in Gen. 36:26.

CHERETHITES, CHERETHIM People who lived south of or with the Philistines (1 Sam. 30:14). They were probably related to or paid soldiers for the Philistines. Crete may have been their original home. David used some of these soldiers as a personal bodyguard (2 Sam. 8:18). Ezekiel pronounced judgment on them (Ezek. 25:16), as did Zephaniah (Zeph. 2:5).

CHERITH [Cə' rīth] Place-name meaning “cutting” or “ditch.” A wadi or brook east of the Jordan River, the modern Wadi Qilt south of Jericho. Elijah pronounced God's judgment to Ahab, king of Israel, in the form of a two-year drought and then found God's protection at the brook of Cherith, where he had water to drink (1 Kings 17:3). When Cherith finally went dry, he found refuge with the widow of Zarephath. See Elijah.

CHERUB [Cə' ūb] Man who left Tel-melah in Babylonian exile to go to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. He could not provide a family list to prove he was an Israelite (Ezra 2:59).

CHERUB or CHERUBIM [Chər' ū-bīm] Class of winged angels. The Hebrew cherub (plural, cherubim) is of uncertain derivation. In the OT it is the name of a class of winged angels who functioned primarily as guards (Gen. 3:24) or attendants (Ezek. 10:3-22). The only NT reference to cherubim is in a description of the furnishings of the holy of holies (Heb. 9:5).

Texts descriptive of the appearance and activities of cherubim reflect two contexts. One is in the visions of the presence of God attended by living creatures (cherubim and seraphim, Isa. 6:2-6; Ezek. 1:4-28; 10:3-22). The other is temple worship and the representations of cherubim which were a part of its furnishings (Exod. 25:18-22; 1 Kings 6:23-35; 2 Chron. 3:7-14).

The most impressive of the temple cherubim were the large sculptures (probably winged quadrupeds) in the holy of holies. If these were arranged as was common in the ancient Near East, the two cherubim would together form a throne. Their legs would be the legs of the throne, their backs the arm rests, and their wings the back of the throne. Consistent with the idea of a cherub throne are the texts which envision God dwelling between, enthroned upon, or riding upon the cherubim (1 Sam. 4:4; 2 Sam. 6:2; 22:11; 2 Kings 19:15; 1 Chron. 13:6; 28:18; Pss. 18:10; 80:1; 99:1; Isa. 37:16). Even Ezekiel's vision depicts the glory of God resting upon or between the cherubim as something of a living throne. See Angels.

Michael Martin

CHESALON [Cēs' ă lōn] Place-name meaning “on the hip.” Village on eastern border of territory of tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:10). It is equated with Mount Jearim and is modern Kesla, about 10 miles west of Jerusalem. See Jearim

CHESED [Cē' sēd] Personal name meaning “one of the Chaldeans.” Son of Nahor, the brother of Abraham (Gen. 22:22). His name may indicate he was the original ancestor of the Chaldeans. See Chaldea.

CHESIL [Kə sēl] Place-name meaning “foolish.” A city of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:30). A similar list giving the boundary of Simeon in Josh. 19:4 spells the name Bethul, a reading supported for Josh. 15:30 by the Septuagint, the earliest Greek translation. First Chronicles 4:30 also reads Bethuel. Chesil is thus identical with Bethuel. See Bethuel.

CHESTNUT KJV translation for plane tree in Gen. 30:37. It apparently refers to the smooth-barked Platanus orientalis.

CHESULLOTH [Cə sūl' lōth] Place-name meaning “on the hips.” A border town of the tribe of Issachar (Josh. 19:18), probably the same as the border town of Zebulon called Chisloth-tabor in Josh. 19:12. It is the modern Iksal, four miles south of Nazareth.

CHEZIB [Ka zeb'] Place-name meaning “deceiving.” Birthplace of Shelah, son of Judah and Shuah, a Canaanite (Gen. 38:5). Chezib is probably the same as Achzib. See Achzib.

CHICKEN Nesting, brooding bird. Both tame and wild chickens were known in Bible times. Jesus' compares His care for Jerusalem to the care of a mother hen for her nestlings. The Greek terms are general terms for birds and nestlings (Matt. 23:37; Luke 13:34).

CHIDON [Ci' don] Personal name meaning “crescent sword.” First Chronicles 13:9 reads “Chidon” for “Nacon” in 2 Sam. 6:6. Chidon could be a place-name in the text. See Nachon.

CHIEF English translation of at least 13 different Hebrew words designating a leader in political, military, religious, or economic affairs. 'Abir means the powerful one and is used of the chief of Saul's shepherds (1 Sam. 21:7). 'Ayil is one who holds official power (Exod. 15:15; 2 Kings 24:15; Ezek. 17:13; 32:21). 'Aluph is the leader of a clan or tribe (Gen. 36:15-43; Zech. 12:5-6). Gibboris the manly one or hero (1 Chron. 9:26). Gadolis the great one or the big one (Lev. 21:10). Ba'al is the lord or master (Lev. 21:4). Kohen is literally a priest and then a leader (2 Sam. 8:18). Nagid is a leader (1 Chron. 29:22; 2 Chron. 11:11; Isa. 55:4; Jer. 20:1; Ezek. 28:2). Nitsab is the one in charge, the overseer or foreman (1 Kings 9:23). Menatseach is the eminent one or supervisor and is used in the titles of many psalms (Ps. 4:1), apparently referring to the choir director. Nasi'is a sheikh or tribal chief (Num. 25:18; Josh. 22:14). Pinnah is the corner or cornerstone (Judg. 20:2; 1 Sam. 14:38; Zech. 10:4). 'Attud is a ram or he-goat and is used metaphorically for a chief or leader (Isa. 14:9; Zech. 10:3). Qatsin is the last one, the one who has to decide and thus the leader (Josh. 10:24; Judg. 11:6; Prov. 6:7; Isa. 1:10; Mic. 3:1). Ro'sh is the head (Num. 25:4; 2 Sam. 23:8,18; Job 29:25 and often in Chron., Ezra, Neh.). Ri'shon is number one, the first (Dan. 10:13). Re'shith is the first or beginning one (Dan. 11:41). Saris one with dominion or rule, thus an official or ruler (Gen. 40:2; 1 Sam. 17:18; 1 Kings 4:2; 5:16; 1 Chron. 24:5; Dan. 10:20). Rab means numerous or great and is used in several compound words to represent the chief or greatest one (2 Kings 18:17; Jer. 39:13; Dan. 5:11).

In the NT the Greek word arche means “beginning” or “chief” and is used in several compound words to represent the chief priest or ruler (Matt. 2:4; 16:21; Luke 11:15; 19:2; John 12:42; Acts 18:8; 19:31; 1 Pet. 5:4). Hegeomai means to lead to command with official authority (Luke 22:26; Acts 14:12). Protos means first or foremost (Matt. 20:27; Luke 19:47; Acts 13:50; 16:12; 25:2; 28:7). Chiliarchos is the commander of a military unit supposed to have 1,000 members (Acts 21:31; 25:23; Rev. 6:15).

CHIEF PRIEST See Aaron; Levites; Priests.

CHILD See Family.

CHILD ABUSE Incidents of child abuse in the Bible usually involve the killing of infants or children. Reported instances of child abuse include the death of Israelite male babies in Egypt (Exod. 1:16-17,22), the male babies of Bethlehem (Matt. 2:16), the sons of Mesha (2 Kings 3:4,27), Ahab (2 Kings 16:3; cp. 2 Kings 23:10) and Manasseh (2 Chron. 33:6), and the daughters of Lot (Gen. 19:8) and Jephthah (Judg. 11:30-40). The Bible recognizes that some sinful activity is passed on from generation to generation (Exod. 34:7).

Ezekiel compared the origin of the people of Israel to an abandoned baby found and cared for by God (Ezek. 16:4-14). The psalmist likened God to a father who “has compassion on his children” (Ps. 103:13 HCSB), a teaching expanded by Jesus when He declared that God is more caring than even human fathers (Luke 11:11-13).

Jesus' actions in welcoming the little children (Mark 10:13-16) exemplify the care which parents and teachers should bestow on children who are under their protection. Parents are charged not to provoke their children (Eph. 6:4; Col. 3:21), a command that forbids all forms of abuse and neglect. Furthermore, Christians have a responsibility to expose and work to rectify acts which are harmful to others, especially persons who are innocent and helpless (Ps. 82:3-4; Jer. 22:3; Eph. 5:11).

Paul H. Wright

CHILDREN (SONS) OF GOD In the OT “sons of God” can refer to spirit beings (Job 1:6; 38:7; Ps. 89:6-7) but more often refers to persons who stand in covenant relationship with God. Thus, the people of Israel are called God's sons and daughters. At times this designation is due to God's choice of Abraham and his descendants and often refers to the whole nation of Israel (Exod. 4:22; Deut. 14:1; Hos. 11:1). At other times the childhood of Israel is tied to obedience to and faith in God, and therefore, it refers only to a faithful remnant. Although children are disobedient (Is. 30:1), one's covenant status as a child of God can be forfeited (Deut. 32:5), because it applies only to individuals who can rightly be called by God's name (Isa. 43:6-7). This is the point of John the Baptist's criticism of some Jews' confidence in their Abrahamic descent (Luke 3:7-9).

The NT continues this dual emphasis on covenant relationship and faithfulness. The sonship of Israel through the covenant still stands (Rom. 9:4; Heb. 2:16), though not all Jews participate in the covenant blessings (Rom. 9:6). Only those who are “heirs according to the promise” to Abraham are truly God's children (Gal. 3:29). Jesus is the ultimate example and fulfillment of covenant relationship with the Father and, therefore, serves as the model of sonship. Our sonship is inextricably tied to the sonship of Christ (Heb. 1:5; Gal. 4:5). Adoption as God's children is received by union with Christ (Rom. 8:17), through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit (Rom. 8:14-16), and is available to both Jews and Gentiles. Adoption is based on faith in Christ Jesus (Gal. 3:26-27), though obedience is emphasized. The relationship between obedience and faith is mysterious but is one of reciprocity. The obedient are shown to be children of God (Phil. 2:15), and those who obey are God's children (1 John 3:9-10). Thus, divine childhood is based on faith in Christ (1 John 5:1), which flows out of love for God (1 John 5:2), and naturally leads to obedience (1 John 5:3-5).

Adoption as God's children is described as present with fulfillment at the end of the age. Paul says we are “eagerly waiting” (Rom. 8:23 HCSB) and tied to redemption of the body at the resurrection (Rom. 8:19). Jesus is the firstborn among many brethren (Rom. 8:29; 1 Cor. 15:20-23). John speaks of a childhood actualized by faith and revealed in future glory (1 John 3:2-3). See Sons of God.

CHILDREN OF THE EAST See Kadmonite.

CHILEAB [Cil' ə ʔab] Personal name meaning “everything of the Father.” David's second son (2 Sam. 3:3) born to Abigail. The name appears as Daniel in 1 Chron. 3:1. Whatever his exact name, David's second son disappeared from history here and did not figure in the later disputes over who would succeed David as king. His name could be associated with the clan of Caleb.

CHILION [Cil' i-ʔn] Personal name meaning “sickly.” One of the two sons of Elimelech and Naomi (Ruth 1:2). With his parents he emigrated to Moab, where he married a Moabite woman named Orpah. Afterwards, he died in Moab. See Ruth.

CHILMAD [Cil' mād] Place-name meaning “marketplace.” A trading partner of Tyre according to Hebrew text of Ezek. 27:23, but many Bible students think copyists inadvertently changed the text from “all of Media” or a similar reading. Otherwise, Chilmad is identical with Kulmadara, a city in the Syrian Kingdom of Unqi. Its location may be modern Tell Jindaris.

CHIMHAM [Cim' hām] Personal name meaning “paleface.” 1. Apparently the son of Barzillai, the patron of David when he fled to Mahanaim east of the Jordan before Absalom (2 Sam. 19:37). Chimham returned with David to Jerusalem when Barzillai refused to leave his home. 2. Village near Bethlehem. Johanan gathered his people there after the assassination of Gedaliah. From there they escaped to Egypt (Jer. 41:17).

CHINNERETH [Cin' nə rēth] Place-name meaning “harp shaped.” 1. Sea or lake otherwise called the Sea of Galilee, Lake of Gennesaret, or Sea of Tiberias. It formed the eastern border of Canaan, the promised land (Num. 34:11), marking the western boundary of the tribe of Gad (Josh. 13:27). 2. City on the western edge of the Sea of Chinnereth, also called Chinneroth (Josh. 11:2), though this could be a reference to the Sea. The city belonged to the tribe of Naphtali (Josh. 19:35). The city apparently gave its name to the Sea and to the surrounding region with its several bays, thus explaining the plural form in 1 Kings 15:20, which tells of Ben-hadad of Syria defeating the area in answer to the request of King Asa of Judah. Thothmes III of Egypt also claimed to have conquered the city about 1475 B.C. The city is the modern Tell al-Oreimeh.

CHINNEROTH [Chin' nə rōth] Hebrew plural form of Chinnereth. See Chinnereth.

CHIOS [Chi' ōs] Island with city of same name. Paul stopped here while returning from third missionary journey (Acts 20:15). The Greek poet Homer supposedly came from Chios. It lies in the Aegean Sea five miles off the coast of Asia Minor. It is now called Scio.

CHISEL English term NIV uses to translate several Hebrew expressions for working with wood and stone. The verb pasal means to hew out or dress stone (Exod. 34:1; Deut. 10:1; 1 Kings 5:18; Hab. 2:18). Garzen is an ax used in the stone quarries or forests (Deut. 19:5; 1 Kings 6:7). Choqqi is a verbal noun meaning cutting out or engraving (Isa. 22:16; 30:8). Isaiah employs a word used nowhere else and meaning a carpenter's tool for forming an idol. KJV, NASB, NRSV read "planes." Ma'atsad is apparently a small, curved cutting tool, perhaps an adze (Isa. 44:12; Jer. 10:3). KJV reads "tongs" in Isa. 44:12. See Tools.

CHISLEU [Chis' leu] or CHISLEV Name of the ninth month of the Jewish calendar after the exile, apparently borrowed from the Babylonian name Kisliwu (Neh. 1:1; Zech. 7:1). See Calendar.

CHISLON [Chis' lōn] Personal name meaning "clumsy." Father of Elidad, who represented the tribe of Benjamin on the commission that divided the land for Israel (Num. 34:21).

CHISLOTH-TABOR [Chis' lōth-tā' bōr] See Chesulloth.

CHITLISH [Chit' lish] Place-name of foreign origin. It was a city of the tribe of Judah near Lachish (Josh. 15:40). KJV reads "Kithlish"; NIV, "Kitlish."

CHITTIM See Kittim.

CHIUN [Cī' ūn] KJV spelling of divine name meaning “the constant, unchanging one” (Amos 5:26). NRSV reads “Kaiwan;” NASB, “Kiyyun;” NIV, “pedestal.” The Hebrew word kiyun appears to represent an intentional change by the Hebrew scribes, inserting the vowels of shiqquts, “abomination,” for an original reading, Kaiwan, the name of a Babylonian god of the stars equivalent to the Greek god, Saturn. Amos condemned the people of Israel for priding in their sophisticated worship of foreign gods. He called them back to the simple worship of the wilderness. See Sikkuth.

CHLOE [Clō' ē] Personal name meaning “verdant.” A woman whose household members informed Paul of dissension within the church at Corinth (1 Cor. 1:11). Where she lived and how her people learned of the situation in Corinth are not known.

CHOINIX Dry measure used to measure grain and was equivalent to about a quart, or a daily ration for one person (Rev. 6:6). See Weights and Measures.

CHORASHAN [Cōr āsh' ān] See Bor-ashan.

CHORAZIN [Cō' rā zīn] One of the cities Jesus censured because of the unbelief of its inhabitants (Matt. 11:21). It was located in Galilee. It has been identified with modern Khirbet Kerazeh, ruins located about two miles north of the site of Capernaum. Chorazin is mentioned in the Talmud as a place famous for its wheat. In the time of Jesus it must have been an important place, but by the second half of the third century A.D. it had ceased to be inhabited.

CHOSEN PEOPLE Israel as the elect of God. See Election.

CHOZEBA [Cō zē' bā] (KJV) See Cozeba.

CHRIST, CHRISTOLOGY “Christ” is English for the Greek Christos, “anointed one.” The Hebrew word is Mashiach, Messiah. Christology is a compound of the Greek words Christos and logos (word, speech). Christology is the study of the person (who He is) and work (what He did/does) of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Excavations at the site of Chorazin showing the synagogue area.

Old Testament and Jewish Background See Messiah.

Jesus as the Christ in the Gospels The Gospels present distinctive yet complementary portraits of Jesus. The Synoptics' (Matthew, Mark, and Luke) presentations are similar, while John's is significantly different. The Synoptics give less prominence to the title "Christ" than we might expect. Jesus does not parade His messiahship nor overtly claim to be Messiah by announcing Himself as Israel's warrior king who would rid Palestine of Rome. He did claim to be the One in whom the kingdom of God was present (Mark 1:14-15; Luke 11:20). His parables enunciated both the arrival and character of the kingdom, showing how to be God's children (Matt. 13; Mark 4). His healing the sick, raising the dead, and casting out demons were demonstrations of His divine power and of God's presence in His ministry (Luke 5:17). His teaching on prayer demonstrated His awareness that God was uniquely and intimately His Father. He called God "Abba" ("my dear Father"), a word fondly used of a parent by Jewish children (Mark 14:36; Luke 10:21-22; 11:2). His mission was heralding the coming kingdom, which was bound to His sacrificial and substitutionary death on the cross (Mark 8:31-32; 9:31; 10:32-34; Luke 9:51; 13:32-35). Only through the cross could God's kingdom come and God's will be done by His anointed Servant and Son (Luke 4:16-19). See Abba.

Since God's redemption involved a suffering Messiah, Jesus took a reserved attitude to the title "Christ." When Peter confessed, "You are the Messiah" (Mark 8:29 HCSB), Jesus' response was guarded. He did not deny it, but He distanced Himself from common Jewish nationalistic expectations of a deliverer Messiah (Mark 10:35-45; Luke 24:19-21). Even the disciples entertained such a hope (Acts 1:6). At His trial before the Sanhedrin, Jesus affirmed He was "the Messiah, the Son of the Blessed One," then added the title "Son of Man" (Mark 14:61-62 HCSB). Before Pilate, however, He was more cautious (Matt. 26:63-64; Mark 15:2; Luke 22:67-68), not identifying with a political Messianic idea. Jesus was sentenced to death on a false charge of being a political messianic claimant and rival to Rome (Mark 15:26,32). Jesus instead (Mark 10:45) viewed His mission as "Son of man," God's Representative who suffers, is loyal to truth, promoted to share God's throne (Dan. 7:13-14) and God's Suffering Servant (Isa. 42:14; 49:5-7; 52:13-53:12). At His baptism (Matt. 3:13-17; Mark 1:9-13; Luke 3:21-22), the voice of God revealed the kind of Messiah Jesus was. "This is My beloved Son" (cp. Ps. 2:7) is Messianic. "I take delight in Him!" (Matt. 3:17 HCSB; cp. Isa. 42:1) is from the first of the Suffering Servant songs. His Messiahship was realized through suffering and death as a sin-bearer. Understanding both His Messianic identity and mission, Jesus looked confidently beyond rejection by His own (John 1:11) and death on the cross to vindication by God in His bodily resurrection from the dead.

The Gospel of John makes unique contributions to Christology. Matthew and Luke narrate events related to the virgin conception and birth (Matt. 1-2; Luke 1-2) of Jesus. John, in contrast, focuses on the incarnation of the divine Son, the Word (Logos) of God (John 1:1-18). The Synoptics' Christology is "from below," beginning with the birth of Jesus; John's Christology is "from above," beginning with the preexistent Word (Logos) who was with God at creation and was God (1:1-2). John 1 and Col. 1 present the highest Christology in the NT. The background for John's use of Logos is the OT concepts of the "Word" and "Wisdom" (Prov. 8) of God. The Word is: the agent of creation (John 1:1-3; cp. Gen. 1:1; Ps. 33:6-9); the agent of revelation (John 1:4; cp. Gen. 12:1; 15:1; Isa. 9:8; Jer. 1:4; Ezek. 33:7; Amos 3:1); eternal (John 1:1-2; cp. Ps. 119:89) and the agent of redemption (John 1:12, 29; cp. Ps. 107:20). In Prov. 8 much of this is attributed to Wisdom. Wisdom was with God in the beginning and was present at creation (Prov. 8:22-31). Gen. 1-2 and Prov. 8 provide the OT context for John's prologue (1:1-18). Jesus spoke and taught as a wise man or sage. Much of His speech is wisdom speech, and He used many traditional wisdom forms (including parables and proverbs). Jesus is presented by Himself and others as a wise man (Matt. 12:42; 13:54; Mark 6:2; Luke 2:40,52; 11:31; 21:15; John 1:1-4; Rom. 11:33-36; Col. 2:2-3; Rev. 5:12; 7:10-12) and as the wisdom of God itself (1 Cor. 1:22-24,30; 2:6-8). This Wisdom Christology is an important feature of the NT portrait of Jesus. John also found Logos a valuable bridge word, speaking to multiple cultures at once, such as Jew and Greek. To the Greeks the Logos was the ordering principle of the universe. The Word (Jesus) in John's prologue became flesh (1:14) and has explicated the invisible God to man (1:18).

John also develops his Christology around seven signs and seven "I am" sayings, all of which point to the divine nature of the Son. The signs were miraculous, but their Johannine significance is in the fact that they proved who Jesus was.

THE SEVEN SIGNS IN JOHN

2:1-11	Jesus turns water into wine.
4:46-54	Jesus heals a nobleman's son.
5:1-16	Jesus cures a paralytic.
6:1-15	Jesus feeds the 5,000.
6:16-21	Jesus walks on water.
9:1-41	Jesus heals a blind man.
11:1-57	Jesus raises Lazarus from the dead.

THE SEVEN "I AM" STATEMENTS

"I AM the Bread of Life" (6:35,41,48,51).

"I AM the Light of the World" (8:12).

“I AM the Door of the Sheep” (10:7,9).

“I AM the Good Shepherd” (10:11,14).

“I AM the Resurrection and the Life” (11:25).

“I AM the Way, the Truth, the Life” (14:6).

“I AM the true Vine” (15:1,5).

In John 8:58 Jesus declares Himself to be the “I AM” of the OT. A more direct claim to deity cannot be found. John also develops a theology of glory through suffering for God's Messiah (12:27-28; 17:1-5). The self-awareness of Jesus as the Son of the Father is emphasized in John, though not absent in the Synoptics. The deity of Jesus receives a climactic confession at the end of John with Thomas' exclamation, “My Lord and my God!” (20:28).

This understanding was proclaimed in the apostolic church (Acts 2:22-36; 8:26-40), and in the hands of NT theologians such as Paul (Rom. 3:24-26) and the author of Hebrews (Heb. 8-10) is given further expression.

Christology: Methods Any study of Christology must consider methodology. Some start with creedal formulations confessing Jesus Christ as “true God” and “true man” (e.g., Nicea and Chalcedon), and then work backward to Christology of the early church and the NT. This method is Christology “from above.” The alternative approach, Christology “from below,” begins with the factual historical records and theological data of the NT and traces the development of the church's understanding of the Lord before the creeds. In other words, is NT Christology ontological (concerned with Christ's transcendent role in relation to God, the world, and the church) or primarily functional (concerned mainly to relate the person of Jesus Christ to His achievements as Savior and Lord set in the context of earthly ministry)?

The two methods have different starting points. The first asks, “Who is Christ and how is He related to God?” The second raises questions, “What did the human Jesus do and how did the church come to see Him as God, according Him titles of divinity?” Or: “Is Jesus rightly called the Son of God because He saves me?” (functional Christology) or “Does He save me because He is God?” (ontological Christology). The two approaches reach the same goal and both are present in the NT.

John, especially the prologue (1:1-18), gives greater attention to ontological Christology as do other classic christological texts. Philippians 2:6-11 addresses the hypostatic union and the doctrine of kenosis; Col. 1:15-23, and 2:9-10 present the Son as the very image (eikon) of God and the Creator in whom all fullness (pleroma) dwells; and Heb. 1:1-3 affirms Christ as the radiance of God's glory and the exact representation of God's nature. The argument that the early church had little or no concerns about the ontological nature and status of Jesus as the Son of God are impossible. Christology “from above” was there from the beginning of the earliest church.

Approaching Christology from below, however, is also valuable and a way the apostles and early church knew Jesus and understood who He is and what He did. That a people wed to monotheism came to affirm His sinlessness (2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 4:15), His deity, and His death on the cross as atonement for the sin of humanity is startling.

The Course of New Testament Christology The earliest believers were Jews who accepted by faith Jesus as Messiah and risen Lord (Acts 2:32-36). Their appreciation of Jesus rose from the conviction that with His resurrection and exaltation, the new age of God's triumph, promised in the OT, indeed had dawned and the Scriptures (Ps. 110:1; Isa. 53:10-13) had been fulfilled. The cross required explanation, since Jesus' manner of death stood in direct contradiction to current Jewish Messianic expectations. Deuteronomy 21:23 states anyone hanged on a tree died under God's curse (cp. Gal. 3:13). The early church responded in two ways: asserting that Jesus' rejection was foreseen in the OT (Ps. 118:22; Isa. 53) and that the resurrection vindicated God's Son and installed Him in the place of highest honor and power (Phil. 2:5-11). The first Christology had two thrusts: He was the Son of David in His human descent, and in the resurrection He is the Son of God with power (Rom. 1:3-4). The implicit messianic claims of His earthly life were overt in His resurrection and exaltation, and His true being was revealed in glory. Further, the new age He inaugurated was authenticated with the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost (Acts 2:16-21, cp. Joel 2:28).

At a practical level this view of Jesus' life and resurrection gave believers a personal relationship with Jesus as a present reality. He was not a figure of the past, however recent. The first Christian prayer of record is "Maranatha" ("our Lord, come," 1 Cor. 16:22). Addressed to the risen Lord, it makes Him equal with Yahweh, Israel's covenant God (Rom. 10:9-13; cp. Acts 7:55-56,59) and as worthy of worship.

OT Scripture also illumines Jesus' true identity and explains His use of the title "Son of Man." Drawn from Dan. 7:13-18, Son of Man is a title of authority and dignity, two ideas the resurrection confirmed (Acts 7:56). Though seldom used by anyone other than Jesus, the church preserved this teaching for several reasons: (1) to show how Jesus was misunderstood and rejected as a false messiah, but as the "Son of Man" Jesus inaugurates God's kingdom and shares the divine throne; (2) to indicate how Jesus brought in a new age of revelation not tied to the law of Moses but universalized for all people. The "Son of Man" is head of a worldwide kingdom, far outstripping narrow Jewish hopes (Dan. 7:22,27); and (3) to find a missionary impulse to lead believers to evangelize non-Jews (Acts 7:59-8:1; 11:19-21; 13:1-3).

Such was the church's mission in the world of Greco-Roman culture and religion. The most relevant title was "Lord," used of gods and goddesses. More significantly, "Lord" designated the honor and divinity of emperor worship. Both areas proved fertile for application of Jesus' most common christological title, Lord. Already used for Yahweh in the Greek OT, it was now applied to the exalted Christ and became a useful point of contact between Christians and pagans familiar with their own deities (1 Cor. 8:5-6). Later "Lord" became the touchstone for Christian allegiance to Jesus when Roman authorities required homage to the emperor as divine, such as in Revelation, when the Emperor Domitian (A.D. 81-96) proclaimed himself "lord and god" (Rev. 17:14).

A further aspect of NT Christology is seen in Hebrews. The author of Hebrews proves the finality of Christ's revelation as Son of God and great "high priest" (5:5; 7:1-9:28), a theme unique to this book. Along with Paul (Rom 3:25) and John (1 John 2:2; 4:10), Hebrews sees the work of Christ as a propitiation (satisfaction) for sin (Heb. 2:17). Hebrews also affirms that in His death on the cross Jesus cleansed us of sins (1:3), puts away sins (8:12; 10:17), bore our sins (9:28), offered one sacrifice for sins for all time (10:12), made an offering for sin (10:18), and annulled sin by his sacrifice (9:26). From any perspective the Son has dealt with sin.

Even in these marvelous confessions (Rom. 9:5; Titus 2:13; 1 John 5:20), the church never compromised its belief in the unity and oneness of God (Deut. 6:4-6), a Christian inheritance from the Jews and an essential element of OT monotheism. Jesus and the Father are one (John 10:30). Jesus, the Logos, is with God and is God. There is a oneness in essence but a distinction in persons. Jesus is no new or rival deity in competition with the Father (John 14:28; 1 Cor. 11:3; Phil. 2:9-11). The worship of the Church is rightly directed to both, along with the Holy Spirit. The NT Church taught and practiced this without entering in-depth theological reflection on the relationships of the Godhead. How the two sides of Jesus' person (human and divine) relate is not explained. The writers bequeathed a rich legacy to the church which formed the substance of the Trinitarian and christological debates leading to the Councils of Nicea (A.D. 325) and Chalcedon (A.D. 451), where it was decreed and expressed that Jesus Christ is "God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God," and that Christ's two natures are united in one Person. This belief has remained the central position of the church ever since, a true confession of a Christology whose roots are in the soil of Holy Scripture. See Messiah; Son of God; Lord.

Daniel L. Akin, Ralph P. Martin, and Charles W. Draper

CHRISTIAN The Greek suffix -ianos was originally applied to slaves. It came to denote the adherents of an individual or party. A Christian is a slave or adherent of Christ; one committed to Christ; a follower of Christ. The word is used three times in the NT. Believers "were first called Christians in Antioch” because their behavior, activity, and speech were like Christ (Acts 11:26 HCSB). Agrippa responded to Paul's witness, “Are you going to persuade me to become a Christian so easily?” (Acts 26:28 HCSB). He spoke of becoming an adherent of Christ. Peter stated that believers who suffer as a Christian are to do so for the glory of God (1 Pet. 4:16). A Christian is one who becomes an adherent of Christ, whose daily life and behavior facing adversity is like Christ.

Darrell W. Robinson

CHRISTIAN FESTIVALS See Church Year.

CHRISTMAS Of the major Christian festivals, Christmas is the most recent in origin. The name, a contraction of the term “Christ's mass,” did not come into use until the Middle Ages. In the early centuries Christians were much more likely to celebrate the day of a person's death than the person's birthday. Very early in its history the church had an annual observance of the death of Christ and also honored many of the early martyrs on the day of their death. Before the fourth century, churches in the East—Egypt, Asia Minor, and Antioch—observed Epiphany, the manifestation of God to the world, celebrating Christ's baptism, His birth, and the visit of the magi.

In the early part of the fourth century, Christians in Rome began to celebrate the birth of Christ. The practice spread widely and rapidly, so that most parts of the Christian world observed the new festival by the end of the century. In the fourth century the controversy over the nature of Christ, whether He was truly God or a created being, led to an increased emphasis on the doctrine of the incarnation, the affirmation that “the Word became flesh” (John 1:14 HCSB). It is likely that the urgency to proclaim the incarnation was an important factor in the spread of the celebration of Christmas.

No evidence remains about the exact date of the birth of Christ. The December 25 date was chosen as much for practical reasons as for theological ones. Throughout the Roman Empire, various festivals were held in conjunction with the winter solstice. In Rome, the Feast of the Unconquerable Sun celebrated the beginning of the return of the sun. When Christianity became the religion of the Empire, the church either had to suppress the festivals or transform them. The winter solstice seemed an appropriate time to celebrate Christ's birth. Thus, the festival of the sun became a festival of the Son, the Light of the world. See Church Year.

Fred A. Grissom

CHRONICLES, BOOKS OF [Crō'ni·kəls] First and Second Chronicles are the first and second books of a four-book series that includes Ezra and Nehemiah. These four books provide a scribal (priestly) history of Israel from the time of Adam (1 Chron. 1:1) to the rebuilding of the house of God and the walls of Jerusalem and the restoration of the people in the worship of God according to the law of Moses (Neh. 13:31). Special focus is on the fortunes of God's house in Jerusalem upon which God has set His name forever (2 Chron. 7:16). David found Israel to be like scattered sheep. As God's chosen shepherd and line through which God would build His house, David sought to order the life of Israel around the worship of God. Under God he made the city of Jerusalem his capital (1 Chron. 11:4-9), transferred the ark of God to the city (1 Chron. 16:1), and began to prepare for the building of the temple (1 Chron. 22:1-2). Solomon, his son, built the temple (2 Chron. 2:1), and Zerubbabel, his son of succeeding generations, rebuilt the temple (Ezra 3:8). The intervening sons of David, who served as kings of Judah, were judged by whether they were faithful to God and to His house. Compare, for example, the reign of wicked King Ahaz with that of good King Hezekiah (2 Chron. 28:1-4; 29:1-11).

Significance of the Title The two books now called 1 and 2 Chronicles were originally one book. The division into two books was first made after 300 B.C. by the Jewish elders who translated the Hebrew OT into Greek, producing the Septuagint. The reason for making Chronicles into two books is quite simple. The Hebrew manuscript, which usually contained no vowels, could be written on one large roll. The Greek translation with its vowels, however, required nearly twice as much space. The division seems quite appropriate with 1 Chronicles concluding the reign of David and 2 Chronicles beginning the reign of Solomon.

The English title “Chronicles” is derived from the Latin Chronicon, which was applied to these writings by Jerome. He described these materials as “a chronicle of the whole of sacred history.” The Septuagint (Greek) title is Paraleipomena, meaning “omitted things.” That title reflects their understanding of Chronicles to be a supplement to the materials found in Samuel and Kings though this is not actually the case.

Closest to the heart is the Hebrew title. It means “the acts or deeds of the day or times.” However, the books do more than recount the various acts of the people of that day. Chronicles focuses on the most important deeds of that time or indeed of any time—building the house of God. God's house was, of course, the temple in Jerusalem. But God's house transcends that building. David's dwelling “in the house of the Lord as long as I live” (Ps. 23:6 HCSB) means dwelling forever with God and His people in the abode of God. In the ultimate sense we would equate God's house with His kingdom. Accordingly, the writer(s) of Chronicles reminds us that the most important of all deeds are those by which God's kingdom is built in the hearts of people.

Significance of Chronicles' Place in the Canon Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah stand among the Hagiographa, meaning “holy writings,” which is the third division of the OT. The order of English versions with Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah after Samuels and Kings goes back to the Septuagint.

The Hebrew Bible places Chronicles as the last book in the OT after even Ezra and Nehemiah. Chronicles doubtless occupied this position in the time of Christ, since He cited Zechariah as the last named prophet who suffered a violent death (2 Chron. 24:20-22; Matt. 23:35; Luke 11:51).

Three explanations are given as to why the Hebrews concluded the OT with Chronicles. One is the view that Chronicles was the last book to be accepted in the OT canon. The second is that the author(s) first wrote Ezra-

Nehemiah and then Chronicles. The third and most likely is to have the OT conclude with God's providential control of history to build (rebuild) His house in Jerusalem. The final admonition of the Hebrew OT then is for God's people to go up to Jerusalem to build God's house (2 Chron. 36:23). Moreover, God's final promise is to bless with His presence those who indeed go up to build (2 Chron. 36:23).

Authorship, Date, and Sources We do not know for sure who wrote Chronicles. As has been noted, tradition names Ezra the “ready scribe,” a priest descended from Zadok and Phinehas (Ezra 7:1-6), as author of Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah. This tradition cannot be proved, but there is no valid objection to it. If he did not, we do not know who did. The position of these books in the Hagiographa indicates that the author was not a prophet. Moreover, the emphasis upon the priests and Levites suggests the author to be someone like Ezra who was one of them. Also, in the seventh year of his reign, Artaxerxes Longimanus, the Persian king from 465 to 425 B.C., sent Ezra to Jerusalem to order the civil and religious life of the Jews according to the law of Moses (Ezra 7:8,14). Accordingly, Ezra was the leader of the spiritual restoration effort these books were written to accomplish. An editor(s) could account for any material extending beyond the time of Ezra.

The use of sources by the author(s) is obvious. Much of the material came from the biblical books of Samuel and Kings. However, other sources are evident such as official chronicles (1 Chron. 27:24), the writings of the prophets (1 Chron. 29:29), and commentaries on the events of that day (2 Chron. 24:27). The genealogies reflect the carefully kept records of the Levites. Sources for the temple materials include “the works of Asaph and David” (2 Chron. 29:30) and the God-given “pattern” (1 Chron. 28:19).

Purposes and Enduring Value The principal purpose of 1 and 2 Chronicles is to show God's control of history to fulfill His desire to dwell among His people in a perfect relationship of holiness in which God is God and the redeemed are His people. God first shared His desire with Moses (Exod. 25:8). The tabernacle and the temple symbolize that desire. God is fulfilling His desire through the Lord Jesus Christ—the Son of David.

When Christ shall have completed His redemptive work, “the tabernacle of God” will be “with men, and He will live with them. They will be His people, and God himself will be with them and be their God” (Rev. 21:3 HCSB). Chronicles shows how God worked from the time of Adam but particularly in the times of David through Ezra and Nehemiah to accomplish His desire to dwell in holiness with His people.

A second purpose is to show God's choice of a person and a people to build His house. The person is the Son of David—the Messiah. Solomon built the temple in Jerusalem, but the Son who is building and shall build to completion God's true house and the Son whose reign God will establish forever is the Lord Jesus Christ (1 Chron. 17:12; Luke 1:31-33; Acts 15:14-16). The people are those of faith whose lineage goes back to Adam through Seth to Shem to Abraham (1 Chron. 1:1,17,28) to whom God made the promise of the seed (the Christ) through whom He would bless all nations (Gen. 12:1-4; 15:4-6; 17:7; 22:16-18; Gal. 3:16). His people are those of Israel and indeed of all nations who will put their trust in Him.

A third purpose is to show that God who dwells in holiness must be approached according to the law that God gave to Moses. David, in seeking to unite his people around the presence of God, learned that God must be sought in the proper way (1 Chron. 15:13). Basic is the necessity to come to God by way of the altar of sacrifice as ministered by the Levitical priesthood. God in His merciful forgiveness of David revealed the place of the altar of sacrifice to be in Jerusalem at the threshing floor of Ornan (Araunah) (1 Chron. 21:18-22:1). There David erected the altar and built the temple according to God's directions. But most importantly, there the Son of God, our great High Priest, sacrificed Himself on the cross in our stead to bring His people into the glorious presence of God (Heb. 2:17; 5:1-10).

A fourth purpose of Chronicles is to encourage God's people to work together with God and with one another to build God's house. The author(s) shared with the people the challenge of God through King Cyrus to go up to Jerusalem to build God's house. Chronicles reminds the people of God's history of faithfulness to His people and to His house. God promised that

He would bless their obedience to this challenge (2 Chron. 36:23), and He warned of judgment upon those who neglected, thwarted the building of, or desecrated the house of God.

Outline of 1 and 2 Chronicles: Blessings for Building God's House

- I. Israel's People of Faith (1 Chron. 1:1-9:44)
 - A. Godly line of Adam (1:1-4)
 - B. Sons of Noah focusing on Shem (1:5-27)
 - C. Sons of Abraham focusing on Isaac (1:28-34a)
 - D. Sons of Isaac focusing on Israel (1:34b-54)
 - E. Sons of Israel focusing on Judah and Levi (2:1-9:44)
- II. David's Learning Obedience (10:1-22:1)
 - A. God's replacing rebellious Saul with David (10:1-14)
 - B. God's bringing David to power (11:1-12:40)
 - C. David's bringing the ark back to Jerusalem and asking to build the temple (13:1-17:27)
 - D. David's marring his victories by his sin (18:1-21:17)
 - E. God's revelation in mercy of the site of the temple and the place of the altar of sacrifice (21:18-22:1)
- III. David's Preparing to Build God's House (22:2-29:30)
 - A. Preparing workmen and materials (22:2-5)
 - B. Preparing Solomon to build (22:6-16)
 - C. Charging the princes to help Solomon (22:17-19)
 - D. Making Solomon king (23:1)
 - E. Ordering the priests and Levites and princes for service (23:2-27:34)
 - F. Charging Solomon and the people (28:1-21)
 - G. Inspiring gifts to build (29:1-9)
 - H. Worshiping God and enthroning Solomon (29:10-25)
 - I. Summarizing David's reign (29:26-30)
- IV. Solomon's Building God's House (2 Chron. 1:1-9:31)
 - A. God's blessing of Solomon to build (1:1-17)
 - B. Construction and consecration (2:1-7:22)
 - C. Solomon's other achievements (8:1-18)
 - D. Solomon's wisdom and wealth and fame (9:1-28)

- E. Concluding Solomon's reign (9:29-31)
- V. God's Judging Judah's Kings by Their Faithfulness to His House (10:1-36:21)
 - A. The wicked reign of Rehoboam (10:1-12:16)
 - B. The wicked reign of Abijah (13:1-22)
 - C. The sin-marred reign of good King Asa (14:1-16:14)
 - D. The godly reign of Jehoshaphat (17:1-21:1)
 - E. The wicked reign of Jehoram (21:2-20)
 - F. The wicked reign of Ahaziah (22:1-9)
 - G. The wicked reign of Athaliah (22:10-23:21)
 - H. The good reign of Joash (24:1-27)
 - I. Imperfect devotion of Amaziah (25:1-28)
 - J. Uzziah's violation of the priestly office (26:1-23)
 - K. Good but imperfect reign of Jotham (27:1-9)
 - L. Wicked reign of Ahaz (28:1-27)
 - M. Unqualified good reign of Hezekiah (29:1-32:33)
 - N. Conversion of wicked King Manasseh (33:1-20)
 - O. Wicked reign of Amon (33:21-25)
 - P. Unqualified good reign of Josiah (34:1-35:27)
 - Q. Wicked reigns of Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim: beginning of exile (36:1-8)
 - R. Wicked reigns of Jehoiachin and Zedekiah: final stage of exile (36:9-21)
- VI. Providential Decree to Rebuild God's House (36:22-23)
 - A. Date and origin of decree (v. 22a)
 - B. Purpose of decree (v. 22b)
 - C. Motivating force of decree (v. 23)
 - D. Substance of decree (v. 23)

John H. Traylor, Jr.

CHRONICLES OF KINGS OF ISRAEL AND OF JUDAH Sources of information to which the writer of 1 and 2 Kings referred readers for more data concerning the various kings about whom he wrote (1 Kings 14:19). These are not the biblical books 1 and 2 Chronicles. They probably were official court records compiled for the use of each of the kings. Such records apparently were available to the author of Kings writing after the destruction of Jerusalem, but they are not available today. See Kings.

CHRONOLOGY OF THE BIBLICAL PERIOD When speaking of chronology, one must differentiate between relative and absolute chronology. Absolute chronology is tied to fixed date events that are known to have occurred on a specific date (i.e., John F. Kennedy was assassinated on November 22, 1963). Relative chronology places events in their chronological order but without a fixed date (i.e., Jesus was baptized, then tempted, then began His public ministry). Most of the biblical events are dated relatively rather than absolutely. For this reason many chronological charts have differences in specific dates, B.C. or A.D., but generally agree on the relative order of most events.

The Old Testament Period The primary tool by which absolute dates are provided for ancient Israel is Assyrian chronology, which is established through the use of lists of year names (eponyms) that can be tied to absolute chronology by reference to a solar eclipse known to have occurred in 763 B.C. Two Israelite kings, Jehu and Ahab, are referred to on Assyrian tablets. Thus we know that King Ahab (1 Kings 16-22) fought Shalmaneser III at the Battle of Qarqar and died in 853 B.C. Similarly, we know that King Jehu (2 Kings 9-10) in the first year of his reign paid tribute to the same Assyrian king in 841 B.C. Since the books of Kings give the names and length of reign of all the kings of Judah and Israel, the years of Solomon's reign are known with reasonable accuracy to have been 970 to 930 B.C., David's reign was 1010 to 970 B.C., and Saul's was 1050 to 1010 B.C.

Apparent numerical inconsistencies of dates between Kings and Chronicles can be resolved by recognizing (1) such common practices as coregencies (the overlapping reigns of a king and his successor) and rival kings and (2) differences between Israel and Judah in the manner of counting the years of a king's reign. The kings of Judah figured their reign from their first full year as king. A part of a year would be designated as the former king's last year of rule. In Israel a part year was designated as the previous king's last year and the new king's first year. Therefore, the length of reign for a king of Israel was counted as one year longer than a similar reign for a king of Judah. Uncertainty still remains at many points. Differences between ancient and modern calendars, for example, often necessitates the giving of alternate dates in the form 931/0 B.C. Furthermore, different methods of harmonizing the dates of biblical kings yield slightly different results. The dates given for the divided kingdom in the chart “Significant Dates in the Old Testament Bible History” are according to the widely used system of Edwin A. Thiele.

SIGNIFICANT DATES IN OLD TESTAMENT BIBLE HISTORY

		Traditional	Critical
Patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, Jacob)		2100-1800	1800-1600
Exodus		1446	1290
Conquest		1400	1250
Judges		1350-1050	1200-1025
Kings of United Israel
Saul		1050-1010	1025-1005
David		1010-970	1005-965
Solomon		970-931/0	965-925
Kings of the Divided Kingdom
	Judah		Israel
Rehoboam	930-913	Jeroboam	930-909
Abijah (Abijam)	913-910
Asa	910-869	Nadab	909-908
		Baasha	908-886
		Elah	886-885
		(Zimri)	885
		(Tibni)	885-880
		Omri	885-874
Jehoshaphat	872-848
		Ahab	874-853
		Ahaziah	853-852
Jehoram (Joram)	853-841	Joram (Jehoram)	852-841
Ahaziah	841
Athaliah	841-835	Jehu	841-814
Joash (Jehoash)	835-796	Jehoahaz	814-798
Amaziah	796-767	Jehoash (Joash)	798-782
Uzziah (Azariah)	792-740	Jeroboam II	793-753
Jotham	750-732	Zechariah	753
		Shallum	752
		Menahem	752-742
Jehoahaz (Ahaz)	735-715	Pekahiah	742-740
		Pekah	752-732
		Hoshea	732-722
Hezekiah	729-686	Fall of Samaria	722
Manasseh	697-642
Amon	642-640
Josiah	640-609
Jehoahaz II	609
Jehoiakim	608-598
Jehoiachin	598-597
Zedekiah	597-586

Fall of Judah Exile and Restoration

Babylonian conquest of Judah, Daniel and other nobles exiled	605
Jehoiachin and thousands exiled to Babylon, including Ezekiel	597
Jerusalem and temple destroyed, Zedekiah and others exiled	587/6
Governor Gedaliah assassinated, many fled to Egypt, taking Jeremiah	582(?)
Jehoiachin released from prison	562
Persian king Cyrus (559–530) captured Babylon	539
Jewish return to Judah led by Sheshbazzar and Zerubbabel	538
Persian king Cambyses	530–522
Persian king Darius	522–486
Preaching of Haggai and Zechariah, Temple building resumes	520
Temple completed	516/5
Persian King Xerxes/Ahasuerus	486–465
Persian King Artaxerxes	465–424
Ezra's arrival in Judah; wall rebuilding begins?	458
Nehemiah's arrival in Judah; wall completed	445
Nehemiah's temporary absence from Judah	433–431?

Assuming a literal interpretation of 1 Kings 6:1, the exodus occurred in 1446 B.C., and the conquest period lasted about seven years around 1400 B.C. Continuing backwards, based on Exod. 12:40, Jacob's migration to Egypt would have been in 1876 B.C. Data regarding the ages of the patriarchs would place their births at 2006 B.C. for Jacob (Gen. 47:9), 2066 B.C. for Isaac (Gen. 25:26), and 2166 B.C. for Abraham (Gen. 21:5). Because the genealogical lists in Genesis are believed by most to be intentionally incomplete or “open,” attempts are usually not made to establish historical dates prior to Abraham.

Many biblical scholars discount the Bible's chronological data. Even some who accept biblical authority nevertheless argue that many numbers in the Bible are figurative, especially “40” and its multiples. These scholars prefer to give priority to archaeological clues in establishing biblical chronology. Thus the Patriarchal period is often dated in the Middle Bronze Age between about 1800 and 1600 B.C. It is also supposed that the Hebrews migrated to Egypt during the Hyksos period (about 1700 to 1500 B.C.) when Semitic people ruled Egypt. The exodus is then associated with the reign of Rameses II shortly after 1290 B.C. Following the wilderness-wandering period, the conquest of Canaan would have begun about 1250 B.C. Pharaoh Merneptah (1224-1214 B.C.) mounted a campaign against Canaan in the fifth year of his reign (about 1220). In his record of that campaign, he records that, among others, Israel was utterly destroyed. Thus by that date, the people Israel were a recognized group in Canaan.

The last days of the kingdom of Judah involve the kings of Babylon, thus giving an outside source to date Judah's history. These external synchronisms can be used to fix the date of the fall of Jerusalem at around 586 B.C.

The period of exile began with the capture of Jerusalem, the destruction of the temple, and the second deportation of leading citizens in 586 B.C. (An earlier deportation in 597 B.C. had taken King Jehoiachin and his family and many top officials to Babylon.) Ezekiel is a leading prophet among the exiles during this time. Exile ended in 538 B.C. after the capture of Babylon by the Persians under Cyrus in 539 B.C. and Cyrus' edict permitting displaced persons to return to their homelands. The rebuilding of the temple is dated between 520 and 515 B.C. according to dates from Hag. 1:1; Zech. 1:1; and Ezra 4:24; 6:15.

The Intertestamental Period During the Intertestamental Period, Palestine was first under the control of the Persians. Persian rule ended with the conquest of Palestine by Alexander the Great in 333-332 B.C. After the death of Alexander, Palestine fell first under Ptolemaic rule (323-198 B.C.) and then under Seleucid rule (198-164 B.C.). During the period of Ptolemaic rule the Septuagint (Greek translation of the OT) was made in Egypt. Seleucid rule brought a strong move to bring Hellenistic culture to Palestine, ending with the desecration of the temple in Jerusalem and the persecution of Jews by Antiochus IV (Epiphanes) in 167 B.C. The following Jewish revolt led by Judas Maccabeus resulted in the defeat of the Seleucids and the Second Jewish Commonwealth (164-63 B.C.). The temple was reconsecrated in 164 B.C. These events are recorded in the Apocrypha in 1 Maccabees 1-4. The successors to the Maccabees are usually called the Hasmonean rulers. Hasmonean rule ended in 63 B.C. when Pompey occupied Jerusalem and Judea was again under foreign domination.

The New Testament Period One might expect that the chronology of the NT would be much more certain than that of the OT. In some respects that is the case but not entirely so. Granted we have Greek and Roman histories and annals, but most of the biblical events still cannot be placed precisely in an absolute chronology. The complicating factors are at least twofold. In the first place, the events of the NT were not reported by the Greek and Roman historians, nor were many precise events from Greek and Roman history included in the NT. Secondly, the Romans and Jews used different calendars. The Romans had a solar calendar with the year beginning in January but reckoned most events from the accession date of the emperor. Thus they had internal differences in their own calendar. The Jewish calendar only confused the matter more. Basically, the Jews used a lunar calendar of 354 days. Periodically, they added an additional month to keep their calendar in line with the seasons. Because of several calendar changes, the Jews in their history had two New Year's days, one in the fall and the other in the spring. The spring New Year marked the beginning of the cultic calendar and the beginning of the next year's reign of the Jewish king. The fall New Year marked the beginning of the civil year. The reign of foreign rulers was noted from this fall New Year. With such differences it is no wonder that absolute chronology for NT events is very difficult.

The Life and Ministry of Jesus The births of both Jesus (Matt. 2:1) and John the Baptist (Luke 1:5) are set in the reign of Herod the Great. From Josephus we learn that Herod died in the 37th year after the Roman Senate decree named him king (40 B.C.). This would place his death in 4 B.C. Herod's command to kill all the boys in Bethlehem two years old or less (Matt. 2:16) is another clue. The further evidence Luke gives of a census while Cyrenius was governor of Syria presents some difficulty (Luke 2:2). Cyrenius conducted a census while serving as governor in A.D. 6-7, but there is no corroborating historical reference to a census during Herod's reign nor to Cyrenius serving as governor at that time. This simply means that we cannot verify Luke's statement from presently available evidence. Luke may have referred to the census of A.D. 6-7 in Acts 5:37. With Herod's death placed in 4 B.C., Jesus' birth is usually dated between 7 and 5 B.C.

The beginning of John the Baptist's ministry is set in the 15th year of Tiberius (Luke 3:1-2), which was A.D. 28 or 29. Jesus' ministry would then have begun in A.D. 29 or 30 if John's ministry began one to two years before that of Jesus. On the other hand, if Tiberius' reign was considered to have begun when he co-ruled with Augustus, his fifteenth year would be A.D. 26 or 27. This latter date would fit better with Luke's statement that Jesus was about 30 when He began His ministry (Luke 3:23). Jesus' ministry would thus have begun about A.D. 27 or 28. The length of Jesus' ministry is also much debated. None of the four Gospels gives enough details to determine the precise length of the ministry. Lengths of one, two, and three years are most often proposed. John's Gospel mentions three Passover feasts (2:13; 6:4; 11:55). If these are distinct Passovers, they would indicate a ministry of at least a little more than two years.

The Roman historian Tacitus dated Jesus' crucifixion during the reign of Emperor Tiberius (A.D. 14-37) when Pilate was governor of Judea (A.D. 26-37). All the Gospel accounts agree that Jesus died on a Friday, the day before the Sabbath, at the beginning of Passover week. The chronological terms used by John and the Synoptic Gospels are not identical, resulting in disagreement over interpreting and reconciling the two. Nevertheless, it seems that after Jesus and the disciples celebrated the Last Supper on Thursday evening, Jesus was arrested and tried that night as well as the following morning. He was then crucified the next day, Nisan 14, which fell on a Friday in A.D. 30 and 33. If Jesus' ministry began in A.D. 29 or 30, His crucifixion must have been in A.D. 33. On the other hand, if His ministry began in A.D. 27 or 28, His crucifixion was in A.D. 30.

The Apostles Dating the events and activities of the apostles is as vexing as dating the events of Jesus' life. There are very few fixed dates. The death of Herod Agrippa I, mentioned in Acts 12:23, occurred in A.D. 44 according to Josephus. Likewise, the edict of Claudius expelling Jews from Rome (Acts 18:2) is usually dated to A.D. 49, and Gallio's term as deputy (Acts 18:12) belongs to A.D. 51-52.

Other events in Acts must be dated relatively, and problems remain. In particular, there is great difficulty in matching the chronology of Acts with the information in the Pauline epistles. However, in general, we can sketch with approximate dates the ministry of Paul as follows:

Conversion, A.D. 33/34

First visit to Jerusalem, A.D. 36

Second visit to Jerusalem, during famine, A.D. 46/47

First missionary journey, A.D. 47-48/49

Conference in Jerusalem, A.D. 49

Second missionary journey, A.D. 49/50–52

Third missionary journey A.D. 53–57

Final visit to Jerusalem, A.D. 57

Reaches Rome, A.D. 60

Further ministry in Asia A.D. 62–63

Return to Rome (execution under Nero) A.D. 64/65

The datable events in the NT all occurred before the fall of Jerusalem and destruction of the temple in A.D. 70.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr. and E. Ray Clendenen

CHRYSOLITE Mineral from which the seventh stone of the foundation of the New Jerusalem is made (Rev. 21:20). The Greek chrusolithos means “golden stone,” indicating a yellow-colored stone. It was thus a yellow topaz, beryl, or zircon. The modern chrysolite is green and is not identical with biblical chrysolite (cp. Ezek. 1:16). See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

CHRYSOPRASE Mineral forming the tenth stone of the foundation of the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21:20). The Greek word literally means “green leek.” The stone is apple-green, fine-grained hornstone or quartz colored with nickel oxide and is highly translucent. It may be closer to modern chalcedony than any other modern mineral. See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

CHUB ^[Cub] KJV transliteration of Hebrew name of a people in Ezek. 30:5. Other translations follow an interpretation of the Septuagint, the earliest Greek translation, to find meaning in the text, reading “Lud” for “Chub,” and translating “Libya.” If “Libya” is not the original reading, “Chub” remains a people about whom nothing is known except that Ezekiel announced judgment on them as a partner of Egypt. See Libya.

CHUN ^[Cun] (KJV) See Cun.

CHURCH In the NT, the Greek word ekklesia refers to any assembly, local bodies of believers, or the universal body of all believers.

The Church as People of God Redemptive history demonstrates that God's purposes are not limited to redemption of individuals. Instead, God's intent was to form a people (Gen. 12:1-3).

The OT relates God's establishment of the Jewish nation, ruled by a king of His choosing, governed by divine revelation, and settled in the land of promise. The OT foresaw, however, a day when God would call Gentiles to Himself. After Pentecost, the apostles believed this prophecy was fulfilled as God created a new multinational, multiethnic church (Acts 2:14-42; 15:6-29). Jesus was the Son of David ushering in the eschatological ingathering of the nations (Acts 15:15-17).

The church's identity as the people of God is seen in terms of both Jewish and Gentile believers. Paul noted that the Gentiles have been “grafted on” to the people of God along with believing Israel (Rom. 11:11-25). Pagans once cut off from God and excluded from the commonwealth of Israel became “fellow citizens” with the Jews in God's planned redemption (Eph. 2:11-22 HCSB). Indeed, now there is “no Jew or Greek” in the church (Gal. 3:28 HCSB). Using language once reserved only for Israel, Peter wrote of the church as a “holy priesthood” and a house of “living stones” (1 Pet. 2:4-10 HCSB). Indeed, Peter, echoing Hosea (Hos. 1:9), reminds Gentile believers that “once you were not a people, but now you are God's people” (1 Pet. 2:10).

John's end-time vision is of a vast multitude from every “tribe, people, and language” redeemed before God's throne (Rev. 7:9-10). Jesus commissioned His disciples to carry the gospel even “to the ends of the earth” (Acts 1:8). The multinational, multiethnic character of the NT church testifies not only to the universality of the gospel message (Rom. 10:11-12) and to the personal reconciliation accomplished at the cross (Eph. 2:14-16), but also to the global extent of the coming reign of Christ (Ps. 2:8). Thus, obedience to the Great Commission (Matt. 28:16-20) is not simply a function of the church but is essential to her identity as the people of God.

Similarly, worship is not incidental. Because God has assembled a people “to the praise of His glorious grace” (Eph. 1:6), worship is necessary to the corporate life of the church. This is seen not only in Israelite practice but also in the practice of the earliest church (John 4:20-24; Eph. 5:18-20).

The Church as Body of Christ The church is not merely a sectarian religious society. Jesus speaks of personally building this new community on the confession of His lordship (Matt. 16:18-19). The apostles recognized the birth of the church at Pentecost as the work of Jesus Himself. At Pentecost (Acts 2:14-39), Peter tied the events there to the promises of a Davidic Messiah (2 Sam. 7; Pss. 16; 110).

Various terms are used in the NT to describe the church: body of Christ (Eph. 5:22-23,30), “new man” (Eph. 2:14-15), “His (God's) household”

(Heb. 3:6; 1 Pet. 4:17), and others. Paul repeatedly calls the church the “body of Christ,” believers united to Christ in His death and resurrection. The persecution of the church, therefore, is the persecution of Christ Himself. The body metaphor shows the unity of believers in Christ and emphasizes differing roles and gifts of believers in the larger community (1 Cor. 12:12-31).

The description of the church as the body of Christ designates Jesus' rule over the community. As the exalted Son of David, He exercises sovereignty by His Spirit and by His Word. Through His resurrection He is named “head” of the church (Col. 1:18). Jesus' headship shows that believers are subject to the One who loved them and purchased them with His blood (Eph. 5:23-27). Individual gifts are to be exercised according to the sovereign distribution of the Holy Spirit (Eph. 4:4-16).

The body of Christ does not only refer to the universal church but also applies to each local congregation of believers. In writing to the Corinthians, Paul teaches that God has gifted members of the congregation to edify one another for the glory of Christ (1 Cor. 12:1-31). As such, each local congregation is autonomous, governed by the risen Christ, through submission to the authority of biblical revelation (Eph. 5:24).

The fact that the church is the body of Christ necessarily entails that individual members belong to Christ. As such, each church must be composed of a regenerate membership, those giving evidence of faith in Jesus Christ. The NT inextricably ties personal regeneration to local church membership (Heb. 10:19-25). Because baptism is both an initiatory rite into the church and a testimony of conversion, it is to be administered only to those who confess Jesus as Savior and Lord (Acts 10:47-48). Baptism is reserved for those united to Christ in His death and resurrection (Rom. 6:3-4). Likewise, the Lord's Supper testifies to a regenerate church membership. Those who partake of the Lord's Supper remember the death of Christ on their behalf and testify to their union with Him (1 Cor. 11:23-34).

The Church as Covenant Community The NT refers to the church as “the pillar and foundation of the truth” (1 Tim. 3:15 HCSB). From the beginning, the church was to serve as a confessional body, holding to the truth of Christ as revealed by the prophets and apostles He had chosen (Eph. 2:20).

A local congregation is organized around a confession of faith. The church's leaders are to guard the doctrinal fidelity of the congregation by faithfully preaching the Scriptures (Acts 20:25-30; 1 Tim. 4:1-11; 2 Tim. 3:13-17). When doctrinal error comes, the church is to confront and uproot it, even if it means expulsion of unrepentant false teachers (1 Tim. 1:19-20; 6:3-5; 2 Tim. 3:1-9; James 5:19-20).

The covenant nature of the local congregation is also seen in the accountability of believers to one another. The members of a church are responsible to edify one another (Eph. 5:19) and are charged with restoring those who falter in the faith (Gal. 6:1-2). When personal attempts fail to restore, the church is to exercise discipline (Matt. 18:15-20). If a church member will not repent, the ultimate step is removal from membership (1 Cor. 5:1-13).

The Church and the World The Bible presents the church as sharply distinct from the world. The church is to be composed of regenerate believers called out of a world hostile to the gospel of Christ. As such, the church is called to confront the world with the reality of coming judgment and the gospel of redemption through Christ.

The Bible presents the church as an alternative society, called to countercultural life in the Spirit. The church is to be a colony of the kingdom, holding ultimate loyalty to Christ. As opposed to a world that slavishly worships raw political power, like Caesar's, the church proclaims, "Jesus is Lord." As opposed to a world of deadly power struggles, the church is self-sacrificial and serves others. This does not mean, however, that the church is to disengage from the world. The church is in the world but is not to conform to it (Rom. 12:2). The NT speaks repeatedly of the early church confronting synagogues, cultic paganism, and Greek philosophy. The church is not to abandon earthly relationships and responsibilities but to transform these by their regenerated lives.

The church, however, cannot coerce the world (John 18:11). The church's message is that God regenerates sinners and adds them to the body of Christ. If genuine conversion is prerequisite to membership in the church, then such transformation cannot be forced. The church testifies to the sovereignty of God through the persuasive power of the preached word. Sinners thus are cut to the heart, regenerated, and rescued “from the domain of darkness” (Col. 1:13).

Thus the church and the state are to be kept separate. The church has prerogatives over which the state has no jurisdiction (1 Cor. 5:1-13). The state has responsibilities that are not part of the church's mission (Rom. 13:1-4).

The Mission of the Church The church is nowhere equated in the NT with the kingdom of God. The body of Christ is related to the kingdom, but the use of kingdom language for the church (Matt. 16:18-19; Col. 1:11-18) suggests that the church is an initial manifestation of the coming kingdom.

Confessing Jesus as Lord, every local congregation is a visible reminder to worldly powers that judgment will come. The just and righteous King will one day crush the kingdoms of this world and the entire cosmos will tremble before the church's sovereign risen Head (Dan. 2:44; Phil. 2:5-11). As such, although believers submit to governing authorities, their ultimate loyalty is not to transient political entities but to the coming messianic kingdom.

The Government of the Church The fact that God has gifted each member of the church does not mean that the church is to be without leadership. To the contrary, the NT speaks of God's calling out leaders for His church for the building up of the body (Eph. 4:11-16). The officers of a NT church are pastors (called “overseers” or “bishops” or “elders”) and deacons (1 Tim. 3:1-13). These men are gifted by God and called out from the congregation to serve the church.

The pastor is called to lead the congregation by teaching the truth of Scripture, by setting a godly example, and by shepherding the flock (Heb.

13:7). The ultimate decision-making of the church, however, is given to the congregation under the lordship of Christ. The NT writers confronted various issues of conflict within church life. They often addressed these issues of polity not to a supra-congregational “board,” but to the congregations themselves (1 Cor. 5). As such, each member of the congregation is responsible before God for decisions of the local body. The called leadership of the church, however, bears an even greater responsibility before God (James 3:1) as those who will give account for the soul of each member of the congregation (Heb. 13:17).

Because each congregation is so gifted and responsible for internal polity, the local congregation does not submit to external control. Churches may cooperate together for the work of the kingdom of God. The early church, for example, called a council of church leaders to address pressing doctrinal questions vexing congregations (Acts 15:1-35). Similarly, Paul called on and organized local churches for the relief of impoverished fellow believers in other churches (2 Cor. 8-9; Phil. 1:15-18). See Apostle; Bishop; Deacon; Elders; Missions.

Russell D. Moore

CHURCH AND STATE SEPARATION There was very little separation between governmental and religious institutions in ancient Israel during OT times. Before the Israelite monarchy, Israel operated under a theocracy; during the monarchy Israel's religious institutions fell under the direct influence of the king (e.g., 1 Kings 5-8; 2 Kings 16:10-18; 22:1-23:25). Some prophets, however, acted outside of royal control (e.g., 1 Kings 17:1; Amos 7:12-15).

In the NT period individual Christians were subject to the authority of Caesar and his officials, yet local churches, if they remained quiet, were able to function relatively independent of governmental control. As the Christian movement grew in power and influence, the Roman Empire's interests invariably came into contact—and conflict—with those of the church.

God bestows all power, civil (Jer. 27:5-6; Dan. 2:21; John 19:11; Rom. 13:1) and religious. Religious freedom is grounded in the reality of God and the freedom of human conscience to worship Him as is seen fitting. Ultimately, all governmental authorities—and individuals—are subject to God (Rom. 13:4,6), whether a particular state removes religion from civil control or not. It is the responsibility of Christian citizens to obey their governmental authorities (Rom. 13:1-5; 1 Tim. 2:1-2; 1 Pet. 2:13-17) yet promote biblical values in society through all possible spheres of influence.

CHURCH YEAR Although the dates of observance and specific practices of the Christian festivals developed over the centuries, the major festivals all center on the life of Christ. As the church grew and the need for ordered worship increased, the need for focusing on the central affirmations at the heart of the Christian message also increased. By the fifth century, the basic elements of the church calendar were firmly established, although modifications continued to be made throughout the Middle Ages and the Reformation. Even today, the symbols and rituals of the festivals vary according to denomination, culture, and personal preference.

The original Christian festival and the basic building block for all the church year is the Lord's day, Sunday. The earliest Christians set aside Sunday, the day of the resurrection, as a time of special remembrance of Christ. By the second century, most Christians were observing a special celebration of the resurrection at Easter. In most areas, the season before Easter, later called Lent, was a time of penitence and the training of new Christians. Similarly, the 50-day period after Easter was one of triumph during which fasting and kneeling to pray were forbidden. This period culminated in Pentecost, which means "50th day," the celebration of the descent of the Holy Spirit. By the next century, at least in the East, many churches held a special observance of Christ's birth and baptism at Epiphany. In the fourth century, most Christians began to celebrate Christ's birth at Christmas and to observe Advent as a period of preparation.

As the dates and practices for these celebrations became more standard throughout the Christian world, the dimensions of the church year were established. Advent came to be regarded as the beginning of the church year and the half-year between Advent and Pentecost, the period during which all the major festivals occurred, came to be regarded as a time for Christians to concentrate on the life and work of Christ. The rest of the year, from Pentecost to Advent, became a time for concentrating on the teachings of Jesus and the application of those teachings in the lives of Christians. The development of the church calendar helped to assure that Christian worship would deal with the entire breadth and depth of the Christian gospel. See Advent; Christmas; Easter; Epiphany; Holy Week; Lent; Lord's Day.

Fred A. Grissom

CHUSHAN-RISHATHAIM [Cū' shān-rish-ā-thā'im] KJV spelling of Cushan-rishathaim, Mesopotamian king who oppressed Israel until he was defeated by Othniel the son of Kenaz (Judg. 3:8). The name of this Mesopotamian ruler means Chushan of double iniquity. It probably was a derogatory epithet rather than his actual name. See Judges.

CHUZA [Chū' zā] Personal name meaning “seer.” The steward of Herod Antipas (Luke 8:3). He was the husband of Joanna, one of the women who provided material support for Jesus. See Joanna.

CILICIA [Çi·li' shá] Geographical area and/or Roman province in southeastern Asia Minor. The region was home to some of the people who opposed Stephen (Acts 6:9). It was located on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea in the southeast part of Asia Minor. One of its important cities was Tarsus, the birthplace of Paul the apostle (Acts 21:39; 22:3). By the time of the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15), Christianity had already penetrated Cilicia. Paul passed through the region during the course of his missionary travels (Acts 15:41; 27:5; Gal. 1:21).

The famous Cilician Gates, a mountain pass through the Taurus Mountains, 30 miles north of Tarsus.

The western portion of the geographical area, about 130 miles long east to west and 50 to 60 miles wide, consisted almost entirely of the westernmost extension of the Taurus Mountains. It was called “mountainous” Cilicia and was sparsely populated, important primarily for timber. The eastern portion, about 100 miles long east to west and 30 to 50 miles wide, consisted of a fertile coastal plain and was called “level” Cilicia. Through the Cilician Gates (pass) in the Taurus Mountains to the north, through “level” Cilicia itself, and through the Syrian Gates in the Ammanus Mountains to the east, ran the great international highway between central Asia Minor and Syria, Mesopotamia, and Egypt.

The area was conquered by the Romans between 102 and 67 B.C. Until A.D. 72 the western portion had the status of a client kingdom or was part of another such kingdom. In 38 B.C. the eastern portion was joined to the Province of Syria, which then became Syria and Cilicia. In A.D. 72 the parts were united in a separate province.

In the OT the same region is called Kue (1 Kings 10:28; 2 Chron. 1:16 RSV, NASB, NIV). See Helech; Kue; Paul; Tarsus.

CINNAMON Spice used in making fragrant oils. Such oil was used to anoint the wilderness tent of meeting (Exod. 30:23). It was part of the lucrative international spice trade (Rev. 18:13; cp. Prov. 7:17; Song 4:14). Cinnamon comes from the bark of a large tree belonging to the laurel family. Both the English and Greek words are derived from the Hebrew qinnamon. See Plants; Spices.

CINNEROTH [Cin' nē rōth] (KJV, 1 Kings 15:20) See Chinnereth; Chinneroth.

CIRCUIT Circular route that a person, a geographical feature, or a natural object follows. Underlying the English word are at least four Hebrew words indicating round, surround, around, or turning. Samuel went around a circuit of cities to judge Israel (1 Sam. 7:16). The human eye views heaven as a circular vault or dome, where God takes His daily walk (Job 22:14). Similarly, the sun passes along the circuit of the heavens (Ps. 19:6). The wind appears to run a meaningless circular course going nowhere (Eccles. 1:6). Jerusalem within its walls represented a circle or circuit, which David repaired (1 Chron. 11:8 NRSV). The villages around Jerusalem formed a circuit (Neh. 12:28 NRSV; cp. 2 Kings 3:9 NASB).

CIRCUMCISION Act of removing the foreskin of the male genital. In ancient Israel this act was ritually performed on the eighth day after birth upon children of natives, servants, and aliens (Gen. 17:12-14; Lev. 12:3). Circumcision was carried out by the father initially, utilizing a flint knife (cp. Josh. 5:3). Later specialists were employed among the Jewish people.

Origin Several theories seek to explain and describe the nature and origin of circumcision: (1) initiatory rite—before marriage (as the Shechemites in Gen. 34:14-24) or at puberty; (2) physical hygiene—to prevent the attraction or transmission of diseases; (3) tribal mark of distinction; (4) rite of entry into the community of faith. In the OT the origin of Israelite practice was founded upon the circumcision of Abraham as a sign of the covenant between God and the patriarch (Gen. 17:10).

Ancient Near Eastern Background Several Semitic and non-Semitic peoples practiced circumcision according to biblical and other sources. Jeremiah depicts Egyptians, Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, and the desert-dwelling Arabians as circumcised peoples (Jer. 9:25-26; cp. Ezek. 32:17-32). On the other hand Philistines, Assyrians, and Babylonians are counted among the uncircumcised. That the Canaanites are not mentioned in either regard is noteworthy. Evidence of their perspective of circumcision is lacking.

Ethical implications of circumcision can be observed in the metaphorical usage of the term. The uncircumcised are those who are insensitive to God's leadership. Circumcision of the heart implies total devotion to God (Deut. 10:16; Jer. 4:4); however, the uncircumcised ear cannot hear so as to respond to the Lord (Jer. 6:10); and the uncircumcised of lips cannot speak (Exod. 6:12). Circumcision was therefore an external sign of an internal singularity of devotion of Yahweh.

Circumcision and Christianity Controversy arose in the early church (Acts 15:1-12) as to whether Gentile converts needed to be circumcised. First-century A.D. Jews disdained the uncircumcised. The leadership of the Apostle Paul in the Jerusalem Council was crucial in the settlement of the dispute: circumcision was not essential to Christian faith and fellowship. Circumcision of the heart via repentance and faith were the only requirements (Rom. 4:9-12; Gal. 2:15-21).

R. Dennis Cole

CIS (CĭS) (KJV, Acts 13:21) See Kish.

CISTERN Translation of a Hebrew term that means “hole,” “pit,” or more often “well.” The difference between “cistern” and “well” often is not apparent. The innumerable cisterns, wells, and pools that exist in Palestine are evidence of the efforts of ancient people to supplement the natural water supply. The cistern of Palestine was usually a bottle or pear-shaped reservoir into which water could drain from a roof, tunnel, or courtyard. The porous limestone out of which the cisterns were dug allowed much of the water put into the cistern to escape. After 1300 B.C. cisterns began to be plastered, which resulted in a more efficient system of water storage. The mouth of a cistern was sometimes finished and covered with a stone. Some cisterns have been found with a crude filter to trap debris.

The circular opening to a cistern at the site of Lachish in Israel.

A cistern with a stone mortar in the foreground probably used for grinding grain at Beersheba.

Large, extensive water cistern at Masada, Herod's mountain fortress.

A water system at Gibeon was based on this large rock-cut pool connected by tunnel to another cistern.

The biblical writers revealed that cisterns were used for purposes other than holding water. Joseph was placed in a “broken” cistern by his brothers (Gen. 37:20-29). The prophet Jeremiah was imprisoned in the cistern of Malchijah, King Zedekiah's son (Jer. 38:6 NASB). In Jer. 14 the pagan gods were symbolized as broken cisterns that could not hold water. Cisterns also served as convenient dumping places for corpses (Jer. 41:7,9). See Waterworks; Wells.

James Newell

CITADEL NRSV, NASB, NIV translation of Hebrew 'armon. See Castle.

CITIES AND URBAN LIFE Cities form a major indicator of civilization. Indeed, the emergence of cities often marks the move to civilization. The oldest city excavated to date is found in Palestine; it is Tell es-Sultan, OT Jericho. This site was already a bustling city between 8000 and 7000 B.C. Even before its citizens used pottery, the city had a massive defense wall and a high circular watchtower inside the wall.

The terms “city” and “urban life” had quite a different meaning in the biblical period, especially in the earlier times. Modern usage has given us at least five terms to describe a range of population. In increasing size of population we speak of open country, village, town, city, metropolis. The OT uses two words for “city” ('eer and qir) and one for “village” (chatser). The OT differentiation seems to be based not on size primarily, but on the presence or absence of a defense wall. Cities had walls, while villages were without walls.

Size of Cities Ancient cities tended to be much smaller in both size and population than our typical understanding of a city. The oldest walled city at Jericho mentioned above covered less than 10 acres. Even during the OT period, Jericho was no more than 10 acres in area. Some of the great cities of Mesopotamia were much more like the size we consider for a city. At the height of the Assyrian empire in the eighth century B.C., Nineveh covered approximately 1,720 acres or over two and a half square miles. The mound of Calah (ancient Nimrud) covered over 875 acres or one and a quarter square miles. None of the cities in Palestine from the OT period come close to the size of the great cities of Mesopotamia. Jerusalem at the time of Solomon covered only 33 acres; even at the time of Jesus it covered less than 200 acres. This is not to say that Palestine had no larger cities. Hazor, in northern Israel, was over 175 acres in area. However, most of the well-known biblical sites were smaller rather than larger.

Closely related to the area of a town is its population. Recent population projections based on the density of cities from cultures similar to those of biblical times along with a count of the number of house units found in excavations suggest that most cities could support 160-200 persons per acre. Thus Shechem might have had a population of 2,000 to 2,500 during the OT period; Jerusalem in Solomon's time could have supported 5,000 to 6,500. Even when Jerusalem expanded in Josiah's time, it would have had no more than 25,000 inhabitants. An inscription found at Ebla in northern Syria and dated to about 2400-2250 B.C. states that Ebla had a population of 250,000. However, it is unclear whether this figure referred to the city, or the entire kingdom controlled by Ebla, or was an exaggeration to impress others of the size of Ebla. By A.D. 300, the city of Rome may have had nearly a million inhabitants.

Cities and the Surrounding Region At least two types of phrases are used to describe the region surrounding a city. One phrase described the chief city of a region in relation to the smaller villages around it. Thus in a literal Hebrew translation the OT speaks of a city “with its villages” (Josh. 19:16; Neh. 11:30) or “with its daughters” (Num. 21:25; 2 Chron. 13:19). These two phrases indicate that the city was the most important center of activity for the region. Outlying villages were closely related to the central city for their existence. Most of the commercial activity for the region was carried out in the city. Usually, the city was located on the main highway or intersection of highways and trade route through the area. The major sanctuary or worship place would be most frequently located in the city, making it a center of religious pilgrimages and celebrations. Whenever war or invasion threatened, the people of the surrounding villages would flee to the walled city for protection.

Among the chief concerns a city would be built at a particular location was the presence of food and water nearby, along with the raw materials for shelter, tools, and industry. Furthermore, a site that was easy to defend would be most likely to be chosen. A number of common features may be found in a typical city of the ancient Near East. Each of these features will be discussed briefly.

Walls City walls in the ancient Near East were formed of courses of stone or mudbrick, at times quite thick. The rampart at Hazor in northern Israel about 1700 B.C. is almost 50 feet high at places and up to 290 feet thick. Furthermore, the perimeter of this enclosed area was over two miles.

Gate The most important and most vulnerable part of the wall structure was the gate. Massive guard towers usually flanked the gate. The entrance itself was narrow, usually 12 to 15 feet wide. Two heavy wooden doors could be shut and braced with metal bars at night or in case of attack. The gate complex itself had two or three separate sets of doors through which one had to pass to gain entry to the city.

Water supply Adequate water supply was another necessity for a city. During peaceful times, the water supply could be outside the wall and within a reasonable distance from the city. A protected water supply accessible from within the city was necessary to endure a siege during wartime. Most cities were located near springs, streams, or wells. Many homes had cisterns, especially in the more arid regions. The springs were usually at the foot of the tell outside the city wall. Hazor, Megiddo, and Gibeon provide examples of water systems the Israelites constructed during the monarchy. Extensive water tunnel and pool systems were built by cutting through the bedrock of the tell to reach the level of the springs. At Hazor, the tunnel system had to cut through 70 feet of soil and rock to reach the water level. Hezekiah's tunnel in Jerusalem is another example of the water tunnel system. Second Kings 20:20 mentions the construction of this system about 700 B.C. The Romans often constructed great aqueducts to bring water from long distances to a city. Portions of two such aqueducts still remain at Caesarea-by-the-Sea, which brought the water from over five miles away. One of the Hellenistic-Roman aqueducts at Jerusalem covers nearly 25 miles.

Agricultural land Earliest towns were surely self-sufficient and must have had fertile farming land nearby. The OT speaks of the fields of a city or village (Lev. 25:34; Josh. 21:12; Neh. 11:25,30) and indicates that some of the land was held in common and some was owned by a family or clan. Large cities would not have had enough land surrounding to meet its food needs, so they would depend on the trade of the surplus produce from the smaller villages. The villages in turn would depend on the cities for the manufactured goods and items of trade from distant areas. Agricultural land was not supposed to be sold out of the family or clan (Lev. 25:25-28). Isaiah strongly denounced those wealthy who would add “field to field, until there is no more room” (Isa.5:8 NASB).

Acropolis The highest elevation of many cities often formed an acropolis or inner citadel. In addition to serving as a stronghold, the acropolis also served as residence for the aristocracy or royalty. As one might expect, the houses located here would be the largest and best constructed of the city. Not only would the security be strongest in the acropolis, but the higher elevation would catch any breeze and cool the house in the summer. In addition, the major shrines or temples were often located on the acropolis.

Street plan Ancient Near Eastern cities usually had a regular street plan. In Babylon, major streets led from the gates into the city center. In the period of the monarchy, Israelite cities regularly had an open court just inside the gate. A circular street led from the court around the perimeter of the city. This circular street gave easy access to all sections of the city, and provided the military with quick access to any part of the city wall. Other streets branched off this circular street and led into the center of the city. In the Roman cities, the major road was usually the cardo, a wide, flagstone paved highway which ran north-south. The major east-west road was the decumanus. A section of the cardo of Jerusalem has been excavated recently in the Jewish Quarter. Although the portion excavated belongs to the Byzantine period, it may well reflect what the Roman cardo there was like. The street was colonnaded and was 39 feet wide. It had covered sidewalks, each an additional 17 feet wide. The street even had a covered drainage system.

House plans Along with the street plan, one can note something of a development in house plans in Israel. The earliest houses had one main room and courtyard. By the period of the monarchy, the typical Israelite house was a four-room house.

Dramatic changes took place in the Hellenistic and Roman periods. The successors to Alexander the Great built many Greek cities in Palestine. Greek culture was the pattern in the Decapolis and other Hellenistic cities. See Architecture.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

CITIES OF REFUGE Safe place to flee for a person who had accidentally killed another. The city provided asylum to the fugitive by sheltering and protecting him until a trial could be held to determine his guilt or innocence. If, in the judgment of the city elders, the death had occurred accidentally and without intent, the man was allowed to stay there without fear of harm or revenge by the dead man's relatives (Josh. 20:2-6).

Four major passages in the OT describe the right of asylum and the sanctuary provided by a city of refuge (Exod. 21:12-14; Num. 35:6-34; Deut. 19:1-13; Josh. 20:1-9). A literal translation of the Hebrew phrase means “a city of intaking.” This right of asylum was offered before the settlement of the promised land but was available only to one charged with accidental manslaughter. Exodus 21:12 records that “He who strikes a man so that he dies shall surely be put to death” (NASB). The passage continues, however, to promise that “if he did not lie in wait for him,” a place would be designated to which he could flee (v. 13). Prior to the establishment of these cities, temporary safety could be gained by fleeing to a sanctuary and grasping the horns of the altar there. First Kings 1:50 and 2:28 record two examples of men seeking safety by clinging to the altar in Jerusalem. Neither Adonijah nor Joab were innocent, though, and later were executed.

Moses was commanded to establish six cities of refuge from the total of 48 given to the Levites (Num. 35:6-7). Three were located on each side of the Jordan. In the east were Bezer in the territory of the Reubenites, Ramoth in Gilead, and Golan in the area of Bashan (Deut. 4:43). On the west side of the Jordan were Kedesh in Galilee, Shechem in Ephraim, and Kirjath-arba or Hebron in the hill country of Judah (Josh. 20:7-8). Sanctuary was not limited to the people of Israel but was extended to the stranger and sojourner among them (Num. 35:15).

The OT reveals the importance and sacredness of human life by its laws regarding the taking of life. The reason for distributing the cities of refuge throughout Israel on both sides of the Jordan was so that a city was easily accessible to a person responsible for an accidental homicide. He needed to find asylum immediately because a member of the dead man's family would pursue him. The avenger of blood sought to kill the slayer of his kin for the harm done to the family or clan. In the early period of Israel's history before the development of the cities of refuge, this action could result in a blood feud that terminated only with the extinction of one family. The establishment of the cities of refuge served a humanitarian purpose by transforming a case of homicide from a private feud between two families to a judicial matter settled by a group of elders.

Numbers 35 lists several requirements to be met prior to seeking sanctuary in a city of refuge. The primary requisite was that the death must have occurred by accident without premeditation or intent. Case studies are presented in Num. 35:16-18,20-23 to provide examples of those incidents that prevented or allowed a slayer to seek refuge in such a place.

A second major requirement for asylum in a city of refuge was that the slayer, once being admitted to the city, could not leave until the death of the high priest (Num. 35:25; Josh. 20:6). If he chose to leave the city before that time, he could be killed by the avenger of blood (Num. 35:26-28). In contrast to the temporary sanctuary offered by grasping the horns of an altar, the city of refuge provided a permanent place of asylum for the manslayer. In a punitive way, the city also served as a place of detention. The manslayer was not guiltless. He could not leave under penalty of death by the avenger of blood nor could he buy his way out by offering a ransom to the relatives of the deceased. A similar example of this punishment may be found in Solomon's confinement of Shimei to Jerusalem under a death threat if he left the city (1 Kings 2:36-46).

The taking of a life imposed a guilt that could not be paid for by any means short of death. The death of the high priest, even as a result of natural causes, served to pay the price of the required penalty. One man died in place of another. During his life, one of the functions of a high priest was to bear the sins of the people (Exod. 28:38). In accordance with this regulation, all the cities of refuge were Levitical cities, given to that tribe during the division of the promised land among the Israelites. These locations probably contained local sanctuaries in which a priest served. After the death of the high priest, the one guilty of manslaughter was free to leave the city and return to his home without fear of the avenger of blood. See Avenger; Bloodguilt.

Brenda R. Hockenhull

CITIES OF THE PLAIN Cities of the Plain (RSV, “cities of the valley”) are the five cities—Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar—thought to be located near the southern end of the Dead Sea. The narrative of Gen. 14 associates these five cities and locates them in the Valley of Siddim, the Dead Sea. All these cities except Zoar were destroyed for the wickedness of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19:24-29).

Most recent scholarship has located the five cities in the shallow water of the southern end of the Dead Sea, south of the Lisan, the tongue of land along the southeastern shore that protrudes into the sea. However, no conclusive evidence has been found to support this proposal. Excavations along the eastern shore of the Dead Sea in recent years have convinced some scholars that the cities of the Plain might be located in that region, especially at Bab-ed-Dhra and Numeira near the Lisan.

The particular phrase, “cities of the Plain,” occurs in Gen. 13:12 as the place Lot chose to dwell, and in Gen. 19:29 concerning the destruction. The Hebrew word translated “plain” more nearly means “round.” Thus it seems better to think of these cities as being ones “around” the Dead Sea or “around” the Jordan Valley. This interpretation may indicate simply that these cities were allies that lay in the Jordan Valley near the Dead Sea. As such, these cities may have been on a trade route and themselves involved in the trade of bitumen, salt, and sulphur.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

CITIZEN, CITIZENSHIP Officially recognized status in a political state bringing certain rights and responsibilities as defined by the state. Paul raised the issue of citizenship by appealing to his right as a Roman citizen (Acts 16:37; 22:26-28). Roman citizenship rights were first formulated in the Valerian Law at the founding of the Roman Republic in 509 B.C., but citizenship rights changed as Roman governments changed. In NT times the definition came in the Julian Law passed near 23 B.C.

Becoming a Citizen Roman citizenship could be gained in several ways: birth to Roman parents, including birth to a Roman woman without regards to identity of the father; retirement from the army; being freed from slavery by a Roman master; buying freedom from slavery; being given citizenship by a Roman general or emperor as an individual or as part of a political unit; purchase of citizenship. Paul was born a citizen, but how his family gained citizenship we do not know.

Citizenship Rights and Responsibilities A citizen became liable for Roman property taxes and municipal taxes. A citizen had the right to vote in Rome, though different social classes had different rights at this point. A citizen became a member of a Roman tribe. A citizen was promised a fair trial without certain forms of harsh punishment. A citizen could not be executed without a trial and would not be crucified except by order of the emperor. A citizen could appeal to Caesar and had to be taken to Rome for trial. Paul made use of these rights as he faced opposition and persecution (Acts 16:37; 25:11).

CITRON NASB, NIV translation of Greek thuinos, a scented wood that formed part of the rich international trade (Rev. 18:12). KJV translates “thyine,” while NRSV has “scented.”

CITY GATE Gates in the biblical period bring to mind two images: the massive defensive structures that protect the entrance way, and a place of various activities “in the gate.” Gates and walls together mark the boundary between outside and inside, but gates are more frequently mentioned simply because they give access in and out.

Gates have existed since defensive walls first appeared in towns and villages. If walls are necessary to protect a town, an entrance through the wall is also necessary, and a gate to protect the entrance would likewise be required. The two developments probably coincided. In the ancient Near East, archaeologists have uncovered town gate foundations dating back at least to the early Bronze Age (3300-2200 B.C.) and have a fully preserved four chamber mud-brick gate complex from the middle Bronze Age (ca. 1800 B.C.) at Tel Dan [see below]. Earlier during the Chalcolithic period (4500-3300 B.C.) at Ein Gedi remains of a temple and sacred area which has an enclosure wall with two entrances have been found. One of the entrances has the clear foundations of a two-chamber gate. Much earlier, at prepottery neolithic Jericho (ca. 8300 B.C.) evidence of a wall around the town and a circular tower, probably to serve as a watchtower. Although no evidence of a gate for that time has yet been excavated, there must have been a gate to provide entry into the town.

The gate is usually the most vulnerable part of a town's defenses, simply because it stands at an opening into the town. In addition, the gate was often located at a low point in the town's topography for several reasons: the low point would provide the easiest access to the town by travelers or merchants—they wouldn't have to maneuver their animals and wares to higher points in the town; the marketplace was often located just inside the gate for the same reason; and the low point would offer a good drainage channel for rainfall throughout the town to run outside the city walls through the gate. Because of its vulnerability, strong towers often flanked the gateway to help protect it. In addition, heavy wooden or metal doors would be closed to shut the gate at night or in times of imminent attack.

During the Iron Age, the period of Israelite monarchy, two-, four-, and six-chamber gates are found. Rather than a developmental scheme, the choice of gate type seems most likely related to local topography and defensive needs. Undoubtedly, the development of new weapons, including more effective battering rams, required new defensive strategies. Among such innovations were the introduction of inner and outer gate structures. Such double-gate structures may well have been intended to strengthen defenses. Assaulting an outer-gate structure would not give access into the city proper; it would only lead through a narrow passage (where an invading army would be under continual assault by defenders on the walls above) to an inner-gate structure, likewise well defended. Sites with inner and outer-gate structures include Tel Dan, Megiddo, and Lachish. Typical gate openings during the Iron Age were from 3.5 to 4 meters, from 11 to 13 feet. Such openings would allow easy passage for animals laden with goods, for chariots, as well as for pedestrian traffic.

Just outside the city gate one would often find a well or spring. Since access to the water supply is quite important, the city gate was often located near the water. Recent excavations at the Jebusite and Davidic city of Jerusalem have found a gate with massive towers protecting access to the spring Gihon. Beersheba had a well just outside the city gate. John 4 has the story of Jesus meeting a woman of Sychar at the well just outside the city.

In the typical town plan, the marketplace, often an open plaza, was just inside the gate complex. Close by might be either administrative buildings, military buildings, or a shrine or temple. The biblical description of various activities within the gates of the city/town indicates the business of that area. When Abraham was negotiating for the purchase of a burial plot for Sarah, he met with the landowner and the elders of the town at the city gate (Gen. 23: 10,18), as did Boaz when he negotiated the purchase of Elimelech's property (Ruth 4:1-11). Elders gathered at the city gate to administer justice or judgment (Deut. 21:19; 22:15,24) as well as transact sales. The prophets have a number of references to proper justice at the city gate (Amos 5:10-15; Zech. 8:16). King David had a seat at the gate (2 Sam 19:8). At Tel Dan a platform has been discovered just inside the gate complex that may have been for a royal throne or may have been a shrine. Shrines have been excavated at several sites around the gate complex. In particular Bethsaida, probably ancient Geshur, had a cultic platform adjacent to the gate and several steles in the gate complex. Also at Mudayna on the Wadi ethThamid in Jordan, a shrine has been discovered adjacent to the gate complex.

Many have suggested the various activities described above took place literally in the city gate. "Benches" have been found within the chambers of some city gates. However, the benches are often of such height and size that it is unlikely they were used for sitting. It is more likely such benches were for depositing and storing items or for other purposes. It is probable that the activities took place "at" the city gate or "inside" the city gate [i.e., within the open plaza] rather than necessarily "in" the gate itself. The presence of the marketplace and of administrative buildings just inside the gate complex provided the rationale for the elders to gather there. And where the elders gathered would be the ideal place for transacting business or dispensing justice that fell to them.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

CITY OF CONFUSION (CHAOS) Name applied to Jerusalem in Isa. 24:10.

CITY OF DAVID In the OT the phrase “the city of David” refers to Jerusalem. The name was given to the fortified city of the Jebusites after David captured it (2 Sam. 5:6-10). Its original reference may have been only to the southeastern hill and the Jebusites' military fortress there. In Luke 2:4,11 the reference is to Bethlehem, the birthplace of David (John 7:42). See Jerusalem; Zion.

CITY OF DESTRUCTION See Heliopolis.

CITY OF MOAB City where Balak went to meet Balaam (Num. 22:36). Some identify the city as Ar. See Ar.

CITY OF PALM TREES Probably to be identified with a site near Jericho where the Kenites lived (Judg. 1:16; see Deut. 34:3; Judg. 3:13; 2 Chron. 28:15). Jericho itself lay in ruins from the time of the conquest until the time of Ahab. Some identify the region with Zoar on the south side of the Dead Sea or with Tamar about 20 miles south of the Dead Sea. See Jericho.

CITY OF SALT City allotted to the tribe of Judah “in the desert” (Josh. 15:62). Its precise location is not known. Archaeological finds do not support identification with Qumran that some have tried to make.

CITY OF THE SUN (NRSV) Usually taken as a reference to Heliopolis (Isa. 19:18). Also translated “city of destruction.” See Heliopolis.

CITY OF WATERS City in Ammon, probably to be identified with part or all of Rabbah, the capital. Joab captured it for David (2 Sam. 12:27).

CIVIL LIBERTIES Civil liberty is grounded in the biblical teaching that all persons have integrity and worth before God (Gen. 1:26-28; Ps. 8:5-8; Rom. 5:6-8) and that governments are established to maintain order in society (Rom. 13:4). The same Spirit of God who provides liberty from sin and from enslavement to the Mosaic law (2 Cor. 3:17; Gal. 5:1) also provides the power and wisdom by which Christians may live under civil authority (Rom. 13:1-5; 1 Tim. 2:1-2; 1 Pet. 2:13-17).

Christians are enjoined to lead quiet lives (1 Thess. 4:11; 2 Thess. 3:12; 1 Tim. 2:2) and be good citizens (Rom. 13:6-7; 1 Pet. 2:17). Both Jesus and Paul called for the voluntary subordination of personal liberty for the sake of others (Luke 22:26; 1 Cor. 8:9-13; 9:12,15; Eph. 5:21; Phil. 2:4). By so doing, Christians are able to live freely yet responsibly in a pluralistic society (Gal. 5:13-15; 1 Pet. 2:16).

CIVIL RIGHTS Basis for civil rights is grounded in the impartiality of God (Deut. 10:17-18; Acts 10:34; cp. Luke 20:21), in the created order by which all persons are made in the image of God (Gen. 1:27-28; 9:6), and in the redemptive work of Christ (Gal. 3:28).

Mosaic law distinguished between sojourners (non-Israelite residents of the land of Israel) and foreigners (persons who were not resident in Israel). Sojourners were subject to the same laws as were Israelites (Exod. 12:49; Num. 15:15-16; cp. Deut. 10:18-19), but the rights of foreigners were somewhat restricted (Exod. 12:43; Deut. 15:3; 17:15).

Both the OT and NT acknowledged the practice of slavery in the ancient world and held that the rights of slaves were to be protected to a degree greater than was typically found among neighboring cultures (Exod. 12:44; Lev. 25:39-55).

The NT recognizes the fundamental equality of all who are in Christ (Gal. 3:28) and advocates the voluntary subordination of individual rights for the benefit of others (Luke 22:26; 1 Cor. 8:9-13; Phil. 2:4-8).

CLAN Term used to distinguish a kin group more extensive than a family. The boundaries of such a group are not always clearly delineated. Each clan was governed by the heads of the families (elders). Several clans formed a tribe, and 12 tribes formed Israel. The clan is sometimes referred to as “division,” “kindred,” “family,” “thousand,” or even “tribe.”

CLAUDA [Clou' dī á] KJV, NASB spelling of Cauda in Acts 27:16 for an island where Paul landed on his way to Rome. See Cauda.

CLAUDIA [Clau' dī á] Woman who sent greetings to Timothy (2 Tim. 4:21).

CLAUDIUS [Clau' di ūs] 1. Roman emperor from A.D. 41 to 54. He made Judea a Roman province in A.D. 44. He expelled Jews from Rome in about A.D. 49 (Acts 18:2), probably due to conflict between Jews and Christians in Rome. Apparently his fourth wife Agrippina poisoned him in A.D. 54 and took charge of the empire for her son Nero. The prophet Agabus announced a coming famine during Claudius' reign (Acts 11:28). See Caesar. 2. Roman army captain who protected Paul from Jews who wanted to assassinate him (Acts 23:26-27). Referred to as Claudias Lysias.

Marble bust of Claudius from the Island of Malta, dating from the first century.

CLAY Basic building and artistic material consisting of various types of earth combined with water to form a material that could be molded into bricks for building, sculptures, pottery, toys, or writing tablets. A piece of clay marked by a signet ring gave proof of ownership or approval. The type of soil—sand, quartz, flint, limestone, along with coloring patterns, gives archaeologists a key for dating deposits uncovered from ancient sites. See Archaeology and Biblical Study; Pottery.

CLEAN, CLEANNESS The idea of cleanness includes a surprisingly wide range of human behavior. On the purely physical side a person is considered clean when obvious indications of dirt or similar defilement have been removed. A clean person is also one who habitually maintains a pattern of personal cleanliness and hygiene, while at the same time taking care to ensure that his or her environment is in a clean condition so as to forestall possible accidents, infection, and disease.

Because the mind is an integral aspect of the human personality, cleanness must also be applied to attitudes and motives that govern particular forms of behavior. Impure thoughts as the expression of the mind can result in shameful activities (Mark 7:15), unless they are checked firmly, and bring disgrace to the individual concerned as well as harm to others. A “clean-living” person is generally understood to be one who does not give evidence of being a criminal, a victim of such vices as alcoholism and drug addiction, or an individual who habitually flaunts God's moral code.

Cleanness, however, is a relative term when the human condition is being considered. Mankind's fall from divine grace as a result of defying God's commands and yielding to temptation has made sin a genetic issue (Gen. 3:1-19). This means that the tendency to sin is inborn, with the inevitable result that, as the ancient psalmist said, there is none righteous (Ps. 14:3; Rom. 3:10). Paul stated the situation with equal emphasis by proclaiming that all have sinned and come short of God's glory (Rom. 3:23). Human sin places a barrier between sinners and a just, holy God. Sinners are unclean in God's eyes.

The religious rituals of Leviticus had much to say about the way in which the sinner could be cleansed from iniquity and be reconciled to God. This was a matter of great importance to the Israelites because God required them to be a kingdom of priests and a holy nation (Exod. 19:6). In the ancient Near Eastern religions the idea of holiness was applied to a person in a state of consecration to the service of a deity, whose cultic worship could, and frequently did, involve acts of a gross sexual nature. For the Hebrews holiness demanded that they should reflect in their living and thinking the exalted moral and spiritual qualities of God as revealed in His laws.

Cleanness was thus fundamental to the establishing and preservation of holiness in the Israelite community. As distinct from all other nations, the Hebrews were provided with specific instructions concerning cleanness and how to recover it when it had been lost through carelessness or disobedience. The principles of cleanness touched upon all aspects of individual and community life. They were ultimately capable of a moral interpretation since in the holy nation, secular and spiritual matters were closely connected.

God established for the Israelites a special group of laws dealing with clean and unclean animals (Lev. 11:1-47; Deut. 14:1-21) to provide guidance for dietary and other circumstances. While the nations of the ancient Near East maintained a general distinction between clean and unclean species, the principles of differentiation were in no sense as explicit as those provided for the Hebrews. Clean animals were allowed to be eaten, but unclean ones were prohibited strictly. The terms “clean” and “unclean” were defined by illustration, and clear principles were enunciated to enable anyone to make the distinction correctly.

Very simply, whatever animal had a cleft hoof and chewed the cud was clean and therefore suitable for food. Any animal that did not meet these specifications was unclean and consequently was not to be eaten. If an animal such as a camel possessed only one of the two stated requirements, it was still regarded as unclean. Because birds formed part of the Israelites' diet, a list of those species suitable for food excluded the ones that might carry communicable diseases.

There has been much discussion about the purpose of these regulations. Some writers claimed that they were designed so as to avoid pagan idolatrous practices. Others have focused upon preserving the separated nature of the Israelites in matters of food as well as in ethical and religious considerations. Yet another view emphasized the hygienic aspects of the laws as a means of preventing the spread of infectious ailments. Most probably, all three concerns underlay the legislation, and therefore each should be given due weight. Animals associated with pagan cults were prohibited as were unfamiliar or repulsive creatures and those species that fed upon carrion. If the rules for food were followed, the Hebrews could expect to enjoy good physical health. Clearly the overall objective of the dietary laws was the prevention of uncleanness and the promoting of holiness in the community (Lev. 11:43-44).

Uncleanness also applied to certain objects and situations in life that conveyed impurity to those involved. Thus contact with a dead person (Lev. 5:2; 21:1), a creeping insect or animal (Lev. 22:4-5), or the carcass of an animal (Lev. 11:28; Deut. 14:8) required ritual purification to remove it. Following childbirth, women were ritually unclean and had to go through a rite of purification (Lev. 12:4-5; Luke 2:22). Leprosy was particularly dangerous as a source of uncleanness and required special cleansing rituals (Lev. 14) when the sufferer was pronounced cured. Unclean persons transmitted their condition to whatever they touched so that others who handled such things became unclean also. Even God's sanctuary needed to be cleansed periodically (Lev. 4:6; 16:15-20).

As noted previously, cleanness had a specific moral dimension. Because God's priests were to be clothed with righteousness (Ps. 132:9), the entire nation was involved in manifesting the priesthood of all who believed sincerely in the covenant relationship with God that had been forged on Mount Sinai. Thus to be clean meant not merely the negative aspects of being free from disease or defilement but the positive demonstration in daily life of God's high moral and ethical qualities of absolute purity, mercy, justice, and grace.

Cleanness was a part of the moral stipulations of the Law. Thus murder was both a pollution of the land and a violation of the Decalogue's express commands. The killing of the innocent called for a response in justice from the entire Israelite community, based upon a principle of blood retribution (Num. 35:33; Deut. 19:10). Grave moral offenses that violated God's law and polluted the nation included adultery (Lev. 18:20)—a capital offense (Lev. 20:10)—and perverted sexual activity which included bestiality, with death as the prescribed punishment (Lev. 20:13).

Ceremonial holiness thus involved distinguishing between clean and unclean. Moral holiness required the Israelites to behave as a nation separated from the pollutions of contemporary society and to live upright and righteous lives in obedience to God's laws (Lev. 20:25-26). For the penitent transgressor a complex system of purificatory rites cleansed from both physical and moral defilement. These involved various kinds of washing by water as a natural cleansing process (Lev 6:28; 8:6; 14:8-9; Num. 8:7; 19:9); the use of ashes (Num. 19:17) and hyssop (Num. 19:18) for ritual and accidental contamination; and sacrificial blood, which made atonement for sin and reconciled the worshiper to God. The Law established the principle that blood made atonement for human life (Lev. 17:11), and thus a blood sacrifice involved the highest form of purification (Lev. 14:6,19-20) or dedication to God (Lev. 8:23-24). Yet even this form of sacrifice was powerless against sins deliberately committed against the spirituality of the covenant (Num. 15:30).

In the NT, cleansing was associated only with the ritual customs of contemporary Judaism. Thus the infant Jesus was presented in the temple for the traditional purification ritual (Lev. 12:2-8; Luke 2:22). Cleansing (katharismos) was a matter of contention between the Pharisees and the disciples of John the Baptist (John 3:25), but Christ obeyed the Law in sending healed lepers to the priest for cleansing (Lev. 14:2-32; Matt. 8:4). On other occasions He asserted His superiority to the ordinances that He would subsequently enrich and fulfill (Matt. 12:8; Mark 2:28; Luke 6:5).

In His teaching Christ made the OT cultic regulations concerning cleanness even more rigorous by stressing a person's motivation rather than the external or mechanical observance of rules and regulations. He taught that adultery had been committed just as fully by a man's lusting after a woman (Matt. 5:27-28) as if the physical act had occurred. In John 15:3 the word that Christ had proclaimed made them clean by regenerating their characters and instilling holiness of life.

Jesus was not only a moral Teacher. He came to earth to give His life as a ransom for humanity's sin (Mark 10:45). In this way He became the Lamb of God, taking away the sin of the world (John 1:29). His atoning death as our great High Priest transcended all that the Law's cleansing rituals could ever be expected to do in the single offering of Himself for us on Calvary (Heb. 7:27). There He instituted a new covenant of divine grace in His blood (Heb. 8:6), achieving human redemption and making possible eternal life for the penitent individual who has faith in His atoning work.

One of the most gracious assurances of His new covenant is that the blood of Jesus cleanses us from all sin (1 John 1:7). Sacrifices and offerings are now unnecessary, for what Jesus demands is a penitent spirit that confesses the merits of His atonement. For the Christian the cultic provisions of the OT are nullified. All meats have been declared clean (Mark 7:19; Acts 10:9-16), and the only sacrifices that God requires are those that emerge from a humble and contrite heart (Ps. 51:17).

R. K. Harrison

CLEMENT [Clēm' ēnt] Fellow worker in the gospel with Paul (Phil. 4:3). He was apparently a member of the church at Philippi. Otherwise, no more information about him is available.

CLEOPAS [Clé' ó-pás] Follower of Jesus, who with a companion was traveling toward the village of Emmaus on the day of Christ's resurrection (Luke 24:13-25). A person whom they did not recognize joined them. Later, they discovered that the stranger was Jesus Himself.

CLEOPHAS [Clé' ó-phás] (KJV, John 19:25) See Clopas.

CLOAK Outer garment. See Cloth, Clothing.

CLOPAS [Cló' pás] Relative of one of the Marys who were near the cross during the crucifixion (John 19:25). “Mary, who [was] of Clopas” is the literal Greek text and has been interpreted to mean that Clopas was the husband of Mary. See Mary.

CLOSET Private room in a dwelling where Jesus encouraged people to pray (Matt. 6:6). He also noted that not even words said in the inner room privacy could be kept secret (Luke 12:3), indicating the Pharisees' hypocrisy could not be hidden. A biblical closet is an actual room, not a storage place. See Architecture; Chamber.

CLOTH, CLOTHING Biblical and archaeological sources concur that the earliest clothing resources were the hides of wild animals (Gen. 3:21). The Bible contains little information, however, about the process of manufacturing clothes from vegetable fibers. Technological developments predate biblical history.

Natural Resources Cloth production in the ancient Near East dates to the Neolithic period when natural flax fibers were spun and woven into linen fabric. Nomadic cultures continued to prefer the hides of animals, some of which were left with small amounts of fur. The growing sedentary urban cultures preferred fabrics made from vegetable fibers such as flax and cotton and from animal fibers such as wool, goats' hair, silk, and the limited use of other wild animals.

Wild flax originated in the regions of Palestine and the Caucasus. Domesticated plants were brought to Egypt early where they grew abundantly and were used to produce fine linen (Gen. 41:42) for soft garments and sails (Ezek. 27:7). Linen from Syrian flax was deemed finer than Egyptian. The importance of flax production in Palestine is reflected in the Gezer calendar. Quality fabrics were made from plants grown in Galilee and the Jordan Valley. Flax stalks were also used in making sturdy baskets.

Cotton, which seems to have originated in the Indus Valley region, was grown on small trees. In the Iron Age the cotton tree was introduced into Assyria, but the climate of southern Mesopotamia was more suitable to crop cultivation. Cotton needs a warm humid climate for quality growth and processing and thus was produced less widely in Palestine. Still, it was highly prized by leaders from Egypt to Babylon for its bright color and its soft, yet durable, qualities. During the Hellenistic period, production and usage increased dramatically.

Wool was the most commonly used raw material among the Semitic peoples for felt and other fabrics. By patriarchal times wool spinning was advanced sufficiently to warrant no description in the Bible. Natural wool tones ranged from white to yellow to gray. These gave rise to a multitude of color possibilities in conjunction with natural dyes. The development of metallic shears in the Iron Age greatly facilitated removal of wool and hair. Wool was at first plucked by hand and later by a toothed comb. Wool fabrics were quite fashionable among the Sumerians, who spoke extensively of all aspects of wool production.

Other resources included silk, hemp, camel hair, and goat hair. Silk was imported from China and spread to Mesopotamia and eventually to the Mediterranean islands, where the moths were cultivated. Silk was generally reserved for royalty and the wealthy. Hemp and hair produced coarse garments when used alone but, when used with wool, produced rugged quality garments. The fuller would take the newly shorn wool or flax, and sometimes woven linen, and prepare the products for use in garments. Oil, dirt, or other residues were removed by first washing the material in an alkaline-based liquid made from ashes, lime, etc. and then repeatedly rinsing with clean water. Sometimes it would be tread upon and beaten against rocks in the rinse stage. Finally, the material would be left in the sun to dry, bleach, and shrink before final usage (Isa. 7:3). God's justice is compared to the fuller's wash soap (Mal. 3:2). In Jesus' transfiguration (Mark 9:3), His garments are said to have been whiter than the best fuller's work.

Weaving Biblical sources indicate that the raw materials were spun and woven into fabric sections about six feet in width and as long as necessary (Exod. 26:1-2,7-8). Egyptian murals indicate that their looms were large and technologically advanced. Three kinds of looms were employed during Bible times: the Egyptian vertical, the Greek vertical, and the horizontal. Models of the horizontal loom have been found in Egyptian tombs. The Greek vertical primarily was used in wool production. Primitive warp-weighted vertical looms, using hand-molded clay weights, were prominent even in the Iron II period in Israel. Examples of the baseball-sized loom weights have been excavated in numerous OT sites. These looms consisted of two uprights, a horizontal beam, and a warp stretched between the beam and a series of loom weights. Greek vase-paintings also show many excellent examples of this type.

In the construction of the tabernacle, skilled women spun wool with their hands and even interwove gold threads into the fabric (Exod. 35:25; 39:3). Spinning wheels were better developed in Egypt and Mesopotamia. The book of Proverbs depicts a woman who spends much time spinning and weaving fabric (Prov. 31:13-24).

Dyes and Colors Predynastic Egyptians (about 3000 B.C.) had begun to master the art of dyeing fabrics. Reds, purples, and blues (indigo) were the known natural dyes of the Mediterranean and African regions, having been derived from marine life, plants, and insects. Natural tones from different breeds of animals gave some variety to fabric colors (brown and black goat hair; white, gray, and yellow wool). Available natural dyes and variable natural tones offered a wide spectrum of color possibilities. Mixing of dyes and fabrics could result in colors such as green, orange, brown, yellow, black, and pink, each with varied shades. Natural Tyrian purple was considered the most beautiful color of all throughout ancient history, according to Strabo.

Modern Arab man wearing typical head cloth (called kaffiyeh) worn by Middle Easterners for millennia.

Those who could afford them preferred more colorful garments. Biblical descriptions indicate that dyed textiles were generally reserved for special garments and occasions. In Exod. 26:1, indigo, purple, and scarlet are listed as hues of tabernacle raiments. Jealousy over favoritism in the gift of a brightly colored coat is reflected in the Joseph conflict with his brothers (Gen. 37:3-4).

Clothing Styles The Bible gives only general descriptions of the types of garments worn in biblical times. Egyptian, Assyrian, Roman, and Hittite monuments provide extensive pictorial evidence of dress in the ancient world. The need for clothing derives its origin from the shame of nakedness experienced by Adam and Eve in the garden (Gen. 3:7-8). God's provision for His people is reflected in the animal skin garments given in response to human need.

Men and women wore tunics made of linen or wool hanging from the neck to the knees or ankles. The Beni Hasan Tableau from the tomb of Khnum-hotep in Egypt depicts tunics worn by Semitic peoples as having diverse patterns and colors.

Loincloths or waistcloths of linen (Jer. 13:1) or leather (2 Kings 1:8) were worn by men and used to gird up the tunic for travel. For comfort it could be loosened at night or when resting. Priests were to have their hips and thighs covered (Exod. 28:42) so as not to be exposed when in service to Yahweh.

The cloak was an outer garment used for a night covering, and thus was not to be loaned (Deut. 24:13). This article is often referred to as a mantle, which was worn by sojourners (Deut. 10:18; Ruth 3:3). In John 19:2 Jesus' outer cloak was draped over Him during the beatings inflicted by the Roman soldiers. Jesus' tunic was probably the garment for which the Roman soldiers cast lots at His death (John 19:23). Long sleeveless external robes of blue or purple fabric were worn by royalty, prophets, and the wealthy (1 Sam. 18:4; Ezra 9:3; Luke 15:22). Mantles of various types were worn by kings, prophets, and other distinctive persons. In times of sorrow or distress, this garment might be torn (Job 1:20). Another kind of outer garment was the ephod, usually a special white robe (1 Sam. 2:18).

Women likewise wore inner and outer garments, but the differences in appearance must have been noticeable since wearing of clothes of the opposite sex was strictly forbidden (Deut. 22:5). The undergarments were loose-fitting or baggy apparel (Prov. 31:24), and the outer robes were more flowing. The woman also wore a head cloth of brightly colored or patterned material which could be used as a wrapped support for carrying loads (Isa. 3:22), a veil (Gen. 24:65; Song 5:7) or a hanging protective garment against the hot sun. A long train or veil adorned women of high social stature (Isa. 47:2).

Festive clothing for both men and women was generally made of costly white material, adorned with colorful outer wrappings and head cloths. Gold, silver, or jewels further decorated one's festive attire (2 Sam. 1:24). Priestly dress (Exod. 39:1-31) likewise consisted of only the best of fine linen, which was dyed scarlet, indigo, and purple, and of gold ornamentation. See Linen; Silk; Wool.

R. Dennis Cole

CLOUD, PILLAR OF Means by which God led Israel through the wilderness with His presence and still hid Himself so they could not see His face. By day Israel saw a pillar of cloud, while by night they saw a pillar of fire (Exod. 13:21-22). The night before the exodus, the cloud gave light to Israel but darkness to the Egyptians so they could not come near one another (Exod. 14:19-20). God came down to speak to Israel in the cloud during crisis times (Num. 11:25; 12:5). Coming to the tabernacle in the cloud, God spoke to Moses face-to-face (Exod. 33:11; Num. 14:14). Paul used the protection of the cloud theme to warn Christians that living under God's presence calls for holy living (1 Cor. 10:1-14).

CLOUDS OT uses eight different Hebrew words in 167 passages to refer to clouds of rain, dust, smoke, storm, and fog. Both meteorological (1 Kings 18:44-45) and metaphorical meanings appear. The latter can be both positive (beneficial to life, Prov. 16:15; Isa. 25:5) and negative (hindrance to life, Eccles. 12:1-2). Clouds symbolize fluidity and transitoriness (Job 30:15; Isa. 44:22; Hos. 6:4), massive expansion and height (Ps. 36:5; Ezek. 38:9,16). More important are the statements in contexts speaking of God.

Old Testament Clouds demonstrate the power of God as Creator. Particularly Job 36-38 witnesses to the sovereignty of the Creator, who directs and controls the clouds. The clouds accompany God's revelation. God dwells in the dark clouds (1 Kings 8:12; Ps. 18:11). When He comes forth from His unapproachable holy being for judgment or for salvation, rain, lightning, and thunder break out from the clouds (Judg. 5:4; Pss. 68:33-35; 77:14-18; 97:2). When Yahweh appears as a Warrior, the clouds are His battle chariots in which He travels (Pss. 68:33; 104:3; Isa. 19:1) and from which He shoots down the lightning as arrows (Pss. 18:14; 77:17; Zech. 9:14). Dark clouds overshadow the judgment day of Yahweh, which the prophets announced (Ezek. 30:3,18; Joel 2:2; Zeph. 1:15).

Clouds conceal and reveal the secrets of God at the same time. In the tent of revelation during the wilderness period (Exod. 40:34-38), in the Jerusalem temple (1 Kings 8:10-11), on Mount Sinai (Exod. 34:5), and in His direction and protection by means of the clouds and the pillar of fire, Israel experienced that God came to them (Exod. 33:7-11) but still remained wholly other (Lev. 16:2,13) even when he came as the Son of Man (Dan. 7:13).

New Testament Strictly meteorological meaning appears only in Luke 12:54. Metaphorical meaning occurs in Jude 12; 2 Pet. 2:17; Heb. 12:1 (using a distinct Greek word). Clouds are not used in the NT to point to the power of God as Creator except for indirect references (Matt. 5:45; Acts 14:17). All other references to clouds in the NT have a relationship to God.

Clouds accompany the revelation of God in Jesus Christ. As God on Sinai was glorified and concealed in the clouds, so was Jesus on the mountain of transfiguration and in His ascension to heaven (Mark 9:7; Acts 1:9). The clouds, into which Jesus entered with Moses and Elijah as Moses had once entered on Mount Sinai (Exod. 24:18), are “light” but at the same time concealing. The voice out of the clouds no longer referred to the Torah of Moses but to the teaching of the Son. No longer must a tent be set up to experience the presence of God, for the clouds have set God's presence free to appear in Jesus alone. As the resurrected One was exalted to the Father, the clouds veiled Him.

Clouds mark the conclusive and final revelation of the lordship of Christ. Mark 13:26; 14:62; and Rev. 1:7 combined the motif of the Son of Man from Dan. 7 with the word of judgment from Zech. 12:10 and referred them to the parousia or coming of Christ. Clouds thus became only signs of the revealing of the lordship and majesty of the Lord; they no longer concealed anything. In Rev. 14:14-16 the returning Christ sits on “white” (light, shining, majestic) clouds. In this transparent purity, both the living and the deceased believers are joined with their Lord (1 Thess. 4:17).

In 1 Cor. 10:1-2 the clouds and the sea of the exodus of Israel form a type of the baptism of Christians that had been misunderstood by the Corinthians. Thus we see that the word “clouds” in the parabolic language of the Bible makes spiritual contexts clear.

Christian Wolf

CLOUT KJV translation in Jer. 38:11-12 for Hebrew word meaning “tattered clothes, rags.”

CLUB Weapon of war used in close combat to strike an enemy. See Arms and Armor.

CNIDUS [Cni' dūs] Place-name of city in southwest Turkey. Paul's ship passed by here on the way to Rome (Acts 27:7).

COAL Charred wood used for fuel. The altar of sacrifice burned coals (Lev. 16:12), as did the blacksmith's fire (Isa. 44:12) and the baker's (Isa. 44:19). Coals provided heat for refining metal (Ezek. 24:11). Burning coals became a symbol of divine judgment, apparently representing God's coming to earth and causing volcanoes to erupt and throw burning coals on His enemies (Ps. 18:13). See Cooking and Heating.

COAST Land bordering a major body of water and used by KJV in obsolete sense of territories, borders, frontiers.

COAT See Cloth, Clothing.

COAT OF MAIL Protective device worn from the neck to the girdle. Also called a brigandine (Jer. 46:4; 51:3 KJV) or habergeon (2 Chron. 26:14 KJV). Usually made of leather, though it may at times have been covered with metal scales of some kind. Part of the usual equipment of the soldier (1 Sam. 17:5; 2 Chron. 26:14; Neh. 4:16; Jer. 46:4; 51:3). David refused to wear Saul's coat of mail (1 Sam. 17:38). Leviathan's skin is described as a double coat of mail (Job 41:13 NRSV, NASB following early Greek translation). See Arms and Armor.

COBRA Poisonous snake. See Reptiles.

COCK Strutting, crowing bird (rooster), Zarzir motnayim (Prov. 30:31). The crowing of the cock is probably the most well-known bird sound in the Bible. All of the NT references to the cock (except the mention of “cockcrow” in Mark 13:35) relate to Peter's denial of Christ. Jesus warned Peter that before the cock crowed twice, Peter would deny Him three times (Mark 14:30). Roosters first crowed about midnight and a second time around three o'clock in the morning. Their crowing occurred so punctually that the Romans relied on this bird sound to signal the time to change the guard. See Chicken.

COCKATRICE KJV translation of legendary serpent and poisonous snakes (Isa. 11:8; 14:29; 59:5; Jer. 8:17). It is probably the Vipera xanthina. See Reptiles.

COCKCROWING The third watch of the night in the Roman system (Mark 13:35), thus midnight until 3 a.m. Jewish system had only three watches; Roman had four.

COCKLE Plant whose name derives from Hebrew word for “stink.” It appears in Scripture only at Job 31:40 and is identified as Lolium temulentum. Modern translations refer to brier or thorns.

A cobra pictured in the famous Nile Mosaic

CODEX A collection of manuscript pages, especially of the Bible or sections of it, bound together in book form.

The word comes directly from the Latin meaning “tree trunk,” possibly describing a stack of wooden tablets, each coated with wax on one side for writing and held together by leather thongs inserted in holes bored along one side. For centuries papyrus and parchment made from animal skins were popular writing materials because they could be shaped into long strips and rolled into a scroll. Using the scroll required both hands, however, and someone decided to cut a scroll into equal-sized sheets, stack them in order, and stitch them together along one edge. So, the scroll became a codex.

Biblical manuscripts produced in the codex form were all hand copied in Greek capital letters on parchment from older manuscripts. Nearly 250 of these manuscripts in codex form are now preserved in various libraries and museums. They have been dated from the fourth to the eleventh centuries. The oldest and most complete is Codex Sinaiticus now in the British Museum. It contains about 350 sheets that measure 15 by 13 1/2 inches with four columns of lettering per page. It was discovered accidentally in 1844 by a Russian scholar in a monastery at the foot of Mount Sinai. It contains all the NT and most of the OT. Another important codex from the fourth century is in the Vatican Library in Rome. A fifth-century manuscript of the four Gospels is known as Codex Washingtonianus and is housed in the Freer Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C.

William J. Fallis

COFFER Old English word for box in 1 Sam. 6:8,11,15 (KJV).

COHORT Roman military unit with capacity of 1,000 men; ten cohorts formed a legion. Cornelius (Acts 10:1) apparently belonged to a cohort of archers named the Cohors II Miliaria Italica Civium Romanorum Voluntariorum that had 1,000 members, Cornelius commanding 100 of them. Originally, the unit had been formed in Rome of freed slaves who received citizenship. It was transferred to Syria at least by A.D. 69. Bible narrative places the cohort in Caesarea before A.D. 41. An infantry cohort was stationed in Jerusalem and protected Paul from zealous Jews (Acts 21:31). They were stationed in the citadel Antonia on the northwest corner of the temple. A centurion attached to the cohort Augusta had command of Paul and other prisoners, transporting them from Caesarea to Rome (Acts 27:1). KJV translates “cohort” as “band.”

COINS are stamped metal disks issued by a government for trade and valuation.

Before money was invented, a man might trade or swap with a neighbor something he owned for something he wanted. Because of their intrinsic value and mobility, cattle were very popular in the barter system. Such trading took place also on a grand scale. When Hiram of Tyre agreed to furnish building materials for the temple, Solomon pledged large annual payments in wheat and olive oil (1 Kings 5:11). Eventually the discovery and use of metals for ornaments, implements, and weapons led to their dominating the primitive exchanges. Silver, gold, and copper in various forms, such as bars, bracelets, and the like represented wealth in addition to land, cattle, and slaves. The silver shekel, weighing about four-tenths of an ounce, became the standard measure. When Abraham bought the cave of Machpelah, he “weighed out...four hundred shekels of silver” (Gen. 23:16). At that time the shekel was a weight rather than a coin.

The talent was another weight frequently associated in the OT with gold and silver. The crown that David took from the king of the Ammonites weighed one talent (2 Sam. 12:30). After Judah's defeat at Megiddo, the victorious pharaoh appointed a puppet king and required the Jews to pay Egypt a heavy tribute in silver and gold (2 Kings 23:30). Although its weight varied slightly from one country to another, the talent was approximately 75 pounds.

Determining the weight and purity of any metal was a tedious business and sometimes subject to dishonesty. To establish some standards, the first coins were minted about the same time around 650 B.C. both in Greece and in Lydia of Asia Minor. Excavations in Shechem have uncovered a Greek silver coin dating after 600 B.C., about the time the Jews were returning from Babylon to Judah. First mention of money in the Bible appears in Ezra 2:69, describing funds collected for rebuilding the temple. KJV lists among other resources 61,000 “drams of gold,” but the RSV has “darics of gold,” (NASB, NIV, “drachmas”) referring to a Persian gold coin. Years later, about 326 B.C., after Alexander overran the Persian Empire, Greek coinage was circulated widely in Palestine, according to archaeological research.

A gold coin of Lysimachos from Thrace (323-281 B.C.).

The Maccabean Revolt began in 167 B.C. Twenty-four years later (123 B.C.), Judea became an independent state, and about 110 B.C. the reigning high priest minted in bronze the first real Jewish coins. Only dominant political entities could produce silver coins. In accord with the Second Commandment, Jewish coins did not bear the image of any ruler, but they used symbols such as a wreath, a cornucopia, or the seven-branched lampstand of the temple. Such symbols continued to be used by Herod and other appointed Jewish rulers after Palestine submitted to Roman domination. Many small copper coins from this early NT period have been discovered.

The coin most often mentioned in the Greek NT is the denarion, translated “penny” in the KJV and “denarius” in the RSV, NASB, NIV. It was a silver coin usually minted in Rome. It carried on one side the image of the emperor (Matt. 22:21), and on the reverse might be some propaganda symbol. Of course, the “penny” translation was an attempt to equate the value of an ancient coin with a familiar one of the King James era. Its value in NT times can be more accurately assessed by knowing the labor that the ancient coin could buy. The denarius was the daily pay for Roman soldiers and the wage of a day laborer in Palestine (Matt. 20:2).

Another reference to silver money occurs in Matt. 26:15 in the agreement between the high priest and Judas for betraying Jesus. Although the original text mentions only “silver” with no specific coin, scholars feel that the figure “30” recalls the compensation required by law for killing a slave by accident (Exod. 21:32). So, Judas' pay could have been 30 silver shekels. By this time the shekel had developed from only a measure of weight to a specific coin weighing a little less than half an ounce. It is possible also that the “large money” (KJV) paid to the soldiers guarding Jesus' tomb (Matt. 28:12) referred to large silver coins or shekels.

A third coin mentioned in the NT was the one the poor widow put into the temple treasury as Jesus watched (Mark 12:42). KJV translates the original words as “two mites, which make a farthing” while the RSV reads “two copper coins, which made a penny” (NIV: “two very small copper coins, worth only a fraction of a penny”). The first noun describes the smallest Greek copper coin (lepta) and the second noun translates the Greek (Kodrantess) for the smallest Roman copper coin. In either case they were the smallest coins available, but Jesus said they were greater in proportion than the other donations.

From two parables told by Jesus, we get the impression that the word “talent” had come in NT times to represent a large sum of money instead of just a measure of weight. In Matt. 18:24 He told of a man who owed a certain king “10,000 talents.” A few chapters later He described a wealthy man assigning different responsibilities to three servants. At the reckoning time he rebuked the one who had merely hidden his talent by saying that at least he could have deposited the money to let it earn interest (Matt. 25:27). Such a talent had been estimated to have a current value of about a thousand dollars.

William J. Fallis

A coin from Pamphylia (190-36 B.C.)

COLHOZEH [Cōl hō' zēh] Personal name meaning “he sees everything” or “everyone a seer.” Father whose son Shallun was ruler of part of Mizpah and who helped Nehemiah repair Jerusalem's gates (Neh. 3:15). Apparently he had a grandson living in Jerusalem in Nehemiah's day (Neh. 11:5). The name Colhozeh may indicate a family of prophets.

COLLAR Word used to translate various Hebrew words and may describe the opening for the head in a garment (Exod. 28:32 NIV; Job 30:18; Ps.

133:2 NIV); a decorative ornament around the necks of the Midianite Kings (NRSV) or their camels (Judg. 8:26; Prov. 1:9; Song 4:9); stocks or a pillory used to restrain a person (Jer. 29:26 NRSV, NASB); and a shackle of iron placed around the neck of a prisoner (Ps. 105:18 NRSV, REB,TEV).

COLLECTION FOR THE POOR SAINTS Near the end of Paul's ministry, he took up a collection for the poor of the Jerusalem church. Why the Jerusalem church had so much poverty is not clear. Jews in Jerusalem may have isolated Christian Jews from the economic system. Paul and Barnabas promised to help (Gal. 2:1-10), so Paul collected this money from the Gentile churches which he administered. These included churches in Philippi, Thessalonica, Corinth, and Galatia. He mentioned this offering on three occasions in his letters. In 1 Cor. 16:1-4 Paul indicated that he wanted the church to put something aside on the first day of each week. In 2 Cor. 8-9 Paul wrote that the churches of Macedonia had given liberally and Titus would oversee the completion of the offering in Corinth. Finally, in Rom. 15:25 Paul stated that at the present time he was going to Jerusalem to deliver the gift. A sense of spiritual indebtedness to the founding church in Jerusalem prompted the offering. Luke never mentioned the offering specifically in Acts. There is a list of men in Acts 20:4 who accompanied Paul to Jerusalem. (This trip corresponds to the plans of Rom. 15:25.) The importance of this offering for Paul was twofold. First, the offering met an economic need in Jerusalem. Political instability and general economic depression were problems in Palestine. There were dependent widows (Acts 6:1), and the sharing of property offered only temporary relief (Acts 4:32-37). For this reason Paul was anxious to "remember the poor" (Gal. 2:10). Second, the offering had a theological importance for Paul. The fact that the Gentiles were willing to aid the Jews in this manner validated Paul's Gentile mission. The offering was evidence that in the Christian family there was neither "Jew nor Greek" (Gal. 3:28).

Terence B. Ellis and Lynn Jones

COLLEGE KJV translation (2 Kings 22:14) of Hebrew word meaning “repetition, copy, second,” referring to the second district or division of Jerusalem (cp. Zeph. 1:10).

COLONY Only Philippi is described as a colony of Rome (Acts 16:12), though many cities mentioned in the NT were considered as such. Roman colonization as practiced under Julius Caesar provided land for veteran soldiers and healthy individuals on the relief rolls of Rome. The cities of Corinth and Philippi were Roman colonies during the time of Caesar. Augustus founded colonies in Antioch (Psidian), Lystra, Troas, and Syracuse (all mentioned in Acts). Other Roman colonies included Ptolemais (Acco) and Iconium. Colonies had autonomous local governments and in some cases were exempt from poll and land taxes. The functioning of the local governments of Roman colonies is seen in Acts 16:12-40.

COLORS Writers of biblical literature reflected little or nothing of an abstract sense of color. Nevertheless, they made frequent references to a select group of colors when their purposes in writing so demanded it.

References to Colors Moving beyond color in the abstract sense, one does find frequent references to certain objects that have color designations. When reference is made to a particular color or colors, it is likely made for one of two basic reasons. First, a writer may wish to use color in a descriptive sense to help identify an object or clarify some aspect about that object. Color usages in the descriptive sense may apply to such categories as the natural world, animate and inanimate objects, and aspects of personal appearance. For instance, earthly vegetation is depicted as green; clothes are often of varying shades of red or blue; horses are identified by colors such as red, black, or white; and human features such as eyes, hair, skin, and teeth are described colorfully as well.

A second reason for color designations in the Bible involves a more specialized usage. At times a writer may use color in a symbolic sense to convey theological truth about the subject of his writing. Color designations have general symbolic significance. For instance, white may be symbolic of purity or joy; black may symbolize judgment or decay; red may symbolize sin or lifeblood; and purple may be symbolic of luxury and elegance. Color symbolism became for the writers of apocalyptic literature (Daniel, Revelation) an appropriate tool for expressing various truths in hidden language. In their writings one may find white representative of conquest or victory, black representative of famine or pestilence, red representative of wartime bloodshed, paleness (literally “greenish-gray”) representative of death, and purple representative of royalty.

Color Designations of Frequent Use Color designations that appear in the Bible offer relatively little in the way of variety. The matter is further complicated by the fact that of those colors which appear, a precise translation of the underlying Hebrew and Greek terms is difficult.

Colors mentioned most frequently are those that refer to the dyed products manufactured by the peoples of Israel and her neighbors. Particularly common are the varying shades in the red-purple range. Purple was the most valued of the ancient dyes and was used in the coloring of woven materials. The peoples of Crete, Phoenicia, and Canaan produced the dye from mollusks taken from the Mediterranean Sea. Purple is noted to be the color of some of the tabernacle furnishings and priests' garments in the OT (Exod. 26:1; 28:4-6). In the NT the robe put on Christ and Lydia's occupation are associated with the color purple as well (Mark 15:17; Acts 16:14). By varying the dye-making process, other shades of blue became possible and are noted in Scripture (Exod. 28:5-6; Ezek. 23:6; Rev. 9:17).

Shades of red dye were produced from the bodies of insects, vegetables, and reddish-colored minerals. These were, likewise, used to color garments. In addition, natural objects are sometimes designated red, scarlet, or crimson, including such items as pottage, wine, the sky, and horses (Gen. 25:30; Prov. 23:31; Matt. 16:2-3; Rev. 6:4). Isaiah used the color red as a symbol of the nature of sin (Isa. 1:18).

The neutrals, white and black, are mentioned on occasion in the Bible. Natural objects such as milk, leprous skin, and snow are designated white (Gen. 49:12; Lev. 13:3-4; Isa. 1:18). White is used in the NT of the garments of Jesus and angels to indicate the glory of the wearer (Matt. 17:2; 28:3; Acts 1:10). Natural objects designated black include such items as hair, skin, the sky, and even the sun itself (Lev. 13:31; Job 30:30; 1 Kings 18:45; Rev. 6:12).

Other color designations used less frequently but not any less significantly are green, yellow, vermillion, and gray.

James Sexton

COLOSSAE See Asia Minor, Cities of; Colossians, Letter to the.

COLOSSIANS, LETTER TO THE [Cō-lōs'sians] Letter from Paul to the church at Colossae. It is one of the Prison Epistles (along with Ephesians, Philemon, and Philippians). Traditional date and place of writing is A.D. 61 or 62 from Rome. The letter itself does not name the place where Paul was imprisoned, and Caesarea and Ephesus have been suggested as alternatives to Rome. If written from Ephesus, the time of writing would be in the mid-50s; if from Caesarea, the late 50s. The primary purpose of Colossians was to correct false teachings that were troubling the church.

Authorship of Colossians The authenticity of Colossians has been debated, as has also the exact nature of the relationship between Ephesians and Colossians. In favor of Pauline authorship it may be noted that the early church accepted the letter as genuinely Pauline. While it is true that the style and vocabulary differ somewhat from Paul's other letters, this occurs primarily in the section which attacks the Colossian heresy (1:3-2:23). The unusual terminology in this section is at least partly the result of addressing an unusual problem.

A view of the tell of Colossae.

Some would rule out Pauline authorship by identifying the heresy attacked in Colossians as second century Gnosticism. Such arguments are not convincing, however, because the heresy cannot be identified with certainty, and gnostic thought was already encroaching on the church by the middle of the first century.

One should note also the relationship between Philemon and Colossians. They mention many of the same people and were apparently carried by the same messenger (Col. 4:7-18; Philem. 1-2,10,23-24). The undoubted authenticity of Philemon argues in favor of the Pauline authorship of Colossians as well.

The City of Colossae Colossae was located in the southwest corner of Asia Minor in what was then the Roman province of Asia. Hierapolis and Laodicea were situated only a few miles away. All three were in the Lycus River Valley. A main road from Ephesus to the east ran through the region. See Asia Minor, Cities of. Colossae was prominent during the Greek period. By Paul's day it had lost much of its importance, perhaps due to the growth of the neighboring cities. Extremely detrimental to all of the cities of the region were the earthquakes that occasionally did severe damage. Shortly after Paul wrote Colossians, the entire Lycus Valley was devastated by an earthquake (about A.D. 61) which probably ended occupation of the city.

The region included a mixture of people native to the area, Greeks, Romans, and transplanted Jews. The church probably reflected the same diversity. As far as we know, Paul never visited Colossae. His influence was felt, however, during his ministry in Ephesus. (Acts 19:10 records that all Asia heard the gospel.) The letters to Philemon and to the Colossians indicate that many of Paul's fellow workers (if not Paul himself) had worked among the churches of the Lycus Valley. As a result, the relationship between the apostle to the Gentiles and the Colossian church was close enough that when trouble arose some of the church turned to Paul for instruction.

Content Colossians may be divided into two main parts. The first (1:3-2:23) is a polemic against false teachings. The second (3:1-4:17) is made up of exhortations to proper Christian living. The introduction (1:1-2) is in the form of a Hellenistic, personal letter. The senders (Paul and Timothy) and the recipients (the Colossian church) are identified, and a greeting is expressed (the usual Pauline “grace and peace” replaced the usual secular “greeting”).

Typical of Paul, a lengthy thanksgiving (1:3-8) and prayer (1:9-14) lead into the body of the letter. Paul thanked God for the faith, hope, and love (1:4-5) which the Colossians had by virtue of their positive response to the gospel. He prayed that they might have a full knowledge and understanding of God's will and lead a life worthy of redeemed saints, citizens of the kingdom of Christ (1:9-14).

The doctrinal section which follows begins with a description of the grandeur of the preeminent Christ (1:15-20). Though the precise meaning of some words and phrases is uncertain, there is no doubt as to Paul's intent. He meant to present Jesus as fully God incarnate (1:15,19), as supreme Lord over all creation (1:15-17), as supreme Lord of the church (1:18), and as the only Source of reconciliation (1:20).

The origin of this grand statement on the nature and work of Christ is debated. The structure, tone, and vocabulary of the passage have led many to speculate that 1:15-20 is a doctrinal statement (hymn) that was in use in the church of Paul's day. This passage and Phil. 2:6-11 are thought by the majority of scholars to be the most obvious examples of pre-Pauline tradition in the letters of Paul. However, difficulty in recreating a balanced hymnic structure has convinced most that Paul rewrote portions of the hymn, if indeed he was not the author of the entire confession. Author or not, the apostolic stamp of approval is on these words which Paul used to state unambiguously that Christ is Lord and Savior of all.

The purpose of the first two chapters was to correct the false teaching that had infiltrated the church. The heresy is not identified, but several characteristics of the heresy are discernible. (1) An inferior view of Christ is combated in 1:15-20. This christological passage implies that the heretics did not consider Jesus to be fully divine or perhaps did not accept Him as the sole Source of redemption. (2) The Colossians were warned to beware of plausible sounding “philosophies” which were antichrist (2:8). (3) The heresy apparently involved the legalistic observance of “traditions,” circumcision, and various dietary and festival laws (2:8,11,16,21; 3:11). (4) The worship of angels and lesser spirits was encouraged by the false teachers (2:8,18). (5) Asceticism, the deprivation or harsh treatment of one's “evil” fleshly body, was promoted (2:20-23). Finally, (6) the false teachers claimed to possess special insight (perhaps special revelations) that made them (rather than the apostles or the Scriptures) the ultimate source of truth (2:18-19).

The Lycus River Valley as seen from Colossae.

Scholars cannot agree on who these false teachers were. Some of the characteristics cited above seem to be Jewish; others sound like gnostic teachings. Some see the teachings of a mystery religion here. Dozens of alternatives have been proposed by very capable authors. It is even argued that Paul was not attacking one specific heresy (or if he was, he did not have a clear understanding of it himself) but rather was warning the Colossians about a variety of false teachings which had troubled the church or which might trouble it in the future. While the passage does not clearly identify the heretics, it does clearly state that Christ (not angels, philosophies, rituals, traditions, asceticism, or anything else) is the Source of redemption.

Colossians 3:1-4 provides the link connecting the theology of chapters 1 and 2 with the exhortations to live a Christian life in chapters 3 and 4. The command to “put to death” (3:5 NIV) and to “rid yourselves of all such things” which will reap the wrath of God (3:5-11) is balanced by the command to “clothe yourselves with” (3:12 NIV) those things characteristic of God's chosen people (3:12-17). The changes are far from superficial, however. They stem from the Christian's new nature and submission to the rule of Christ in every area of one's life (3:9,10,15-17).

Rules for the household appear in 3:18-4:1. The typical first-century household is assumed, thus the passage addresses wives and husbands, fathers and children, masters and slaves. Paul made no comment about the rightness or wrongness of the social structures; he accepted them as givens. Paul's concern was that the structures as they existed be governed by Christian principles. Submission to the Lord (3:18,20,22; 4:1), Christian love (3:19), and the prospect of divine judgment (3:24-4:1) must determine the way people treat one another regardless of their social station. It is this Christian motivation which distinguishes these house rules from those that can be found in Jewish and pagan sources.

A final group of exhortations (4:2-6) and an exchange of greetings (4:7-17) bring the letter to a close. Notable in this final section are the mention of Onesimus (4:9), which links this letter with Philemon; the mention of a letter at Laodicea (4:16), which may have been Ephesians; and Paul's concluding signature which indicates that the letter was prepared by an amanuensis (secretary) (4:18).

Outline

- I. Warnings Against Heresy (1:1-2:23)
 - A. Greeting, thanksgiving, and prayer (1:1-14)
 - B. Christ and no other is supreme in the universe (1:15-17).
 - C. Christ, having reconciled all creation to God and embodying the fullness of God, is supreme in the church (1:18-20).
 - D. Believers experience Christ's supremacy in the saving power of the gospel (1:21-23).
 - E. The supreme Christ fulfills God's eternal saving purpose (1:24-29).
 - F. Christians should have full confidence in Christ's supremacy and forget heretical teachings (2:1-5).
 - G. Elemental human traditions must not lead away from faith in Christ (2:6-10).
 - H. Legal practices cannot supplement Christ's work of salvation on the cross (2:11-23).

II. The Supreme Rule of Christ Leads to Rules for Life with Christ (3:1-4:18).

- A. Believers seek the fullness of the new life in Christ (3:1-4).
- B. Life in Christ cleanses believers of old practices (3:5-11).
- C. The life in Christ gives power for unity, mutual love, and forgiveness. (3:12-14)
- D. Church life includes mutual encouragement and worship (3:15-17).
- E. Life in Christ brings faithfulness and compassion in family relationships (3:18-4:1).
- F. Closing greetings and blessings for those in Christ (4:2-18)

Michael Martin

COLT Young of various riding animals. Modern understanding is that of a young male horse, but in the sixteenth century, the range of meaning was broader. 1. Young camels (Gen. 32:15), noted by the Hebrew term for “sons.” 2. Young donkeys (Gen. 49:11), also “son” in Hebrew (cp. Judg. 10:4; 12:14, where Hebrew is “donkeys”). The NT uses the reference in Zech. 9:9 as a prediction of Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem (Matt. 21; Mark 11; Luke 19; John 12:15). Zechariah apparently used parallelism, the basic structure of Hebrew poetry, to describe a rider on one young donkey. Mark, Luke, and John told the story of Jesus' entry with reference to one animal. Matthew mentioned two animals, including both the ass and the colt from Zechariah as separate animals.

COMFORTER Commonly used translation of the Greek word paracletos. The compound noun refers to “one called alongside.” John's Gospel features five passages in which this word details the work and ministry of the Comforter for believers. Jesus told His disciples He was going away and that it was to their advantage because He would send another Comforter, the Holy Spirit, who would never be taken away from them. There are a number of ministries that the Comforter would carry out in the life of the believer. He will teach believers all things (John 14:26), bear witness to Christ (15:26), expose the world's error and bring conviction of sin (16:8), guide believers in the way of truth (16:13), and glorify Jesus (16:14).

The same word is rendered in 1 John 2:1 as “Advocate” and is a reference to Jesus' intercessory work for believers. The “two Comforters” can be seen as working simultaneously: the Spirit Paraclete working in and for us on earth, and Jesus the Paraclete, working for us in heaven, as One who “always lives to intercede” for us (Heb. 7:25 HCSB). See Advocate; Holy Spirit; Paraclete.

W. Dan Parker

COMMANDER See Chancellor.

COMMANDMENTS, TEN See Ten Commandments.

COMMERCE Commercial activity in the ancient Near East took many forms. The economy centered around agriculture, but some manufactured goods were produced and natural resources mined. Farm goods, products, and resources had to be transported to market centers and other countries. Barter and the buying and selling of goods and services held a prominent place in the life of villages and towns. This is demonstrated by the large number of economic texts uncovered in excavations and the importance placed on transactional dialogue and the use of commercial scenes to highlight major events in the biblical text.

Products The irrigated fields of Mesopotamia and Egypt and the terraced hillsides of Palestine produced a variety of agricultural products. Barley and wheat were crushed, winnowed, sieved, and distributed on the threshing floor (goren) for local consumption (Deut. 15:14; Ruth 3:15). Surpluses were transported to regional marketplaces and major cities. Whole grain, meal, flax, nuts, dates, olive oil, fish in the Galilee area, and a variety of animal by-products found their way into every home and paid the taxes imposed by the government. The kings like Uzziah (2 Chron. 26:10) also had large holdings of land and vast herds that contributed to the overall economy.

Village craftsmen produced pottery, metal and wooden implements, weapons, and cloth. Evidence of their commercial self-sufficiency is seen in the recovery of loom weights in excavations of private homes throughout

Israel. These balls of clay provide evidence of how widespread the local weaving and cloth-making industries were in ancient times. Manufactured products were distributed among the inhabitants of the village. The finer items were traded to traveling merchants or transported overland to Jerusalem or some other commercial center.

Manufactured goods most commonly introduced into national or international commerce included fine pottery, weapons, glassware, jewelry, cosmetics, and dyed cloth. Distinctive styles or fine workmanship created markets for these products and thus made it worth the costs and hazards of sea and overland transport. Evidence of how widespread trade was in the ancient world can be traced by the different styles and decoration of pottery. Seal markings showing place of origin are also found on many jugs and storage jars used to transport wine, oil, grain, and spices.

Another indication of the diversity of trading products that circulated throughout the ancient Near East is found in Ezekiel's "lamentation over Tyre," one of the principal Phoenician seaports (Ezek. 27:12-24). Their ships and those of Tarshish carried iron, tin, and lead, exchanging them for slaves, horses, mules, ivory, and ebony at various ports of call. Aram or Edom (NIV with footnote) traded "emeralds, purple, embroidered work, fine linen, coral, and rubies" (27:16 NASB), and Judah sent honey, oil, and balm along with wheat as trade goods to Tyre (Ezek. 27:17). The Phoenicians also supplied their trading partners with wool and cloth dyed purple with a glandular secretion from the murex mollusk.

Merchant quarters were established in many trading centers like that at Ugarit, a seaport in northern Syria (1600-1200 B.C.). Phoenician seaports of Tyre and Sidon also had their resident alien communities, adding to the cosmopolitan nature of these cities and facilitating the transmission of culture and ideas. Economic and political importance of these trading communities is seen in Solomon's construction of storehouse cities in Hamath (2 Chron. 8:4 and in Ahab's negotiations with Ben-Hadad of Syria for the establishment of "market areas in Damascus" (1 Kings 20:34 NIV).

Places of Business Metropolitan centers, like Babylon and Thebes, had open areas or market squares where commerce took place. This was also the case in the Hellenistic cities of the Near East that had one or more agoras. The narrow confines of the villages and towns in Palestine, however, restricted commercial activity to shops or booths built into the side of private homes or to the open area around the city gate.

For most Palestinian villages and towns, the gate was a vital place where commercial, judicial, and social activities of all sorts took place. Lot sat in the gate, demonstrating his status as a privileged resident alien (Gen. 19:1). The gate of Samaria served as a market center where the people purchased measures of barley and fine meal (2 Kings 7:18). In Prov. 31:23 one sign of a prosperous man with a well-ordered house was his ability to sit with the elders in the gate.

Large urban centers, like Jerusalem, had several gates and commercial districts, thus allowing for diversification of commercial activity throughout the city. Jeremiah 18:2 speaks of the Potsherd Gate (author's translation; known as the Dung Gate in Neh. 2:13) where Jeremiah enacted a prophecy of doom by smashing a pot. He also mentions the bakers' street as the principal area of production and supply of bread in Jerusalem (Jer. 37:21). In the Roman period, Josephus lists several commercial activities in the city: wool shops, smithies, and the clothes market.

Weights and Measures Inscribed stone, clay, or metal weights were used throughout the Near East and have been found in large quantities by archaeologists. They range from the talent (2 Sam. 12:30; 2 Kings 18:14) to the mina (Ezra 2:69 NASB), the shekel (2 Sam. 14:26; Ezek. 4:10), and various smaller weights. Until the establishment of the monarchy, commercial transactions were governed in each Israelite town by a local standard of exchange. Evidence has been found (markings on the weights) of the use of both the Egyptian standard of weights as well as Babylonian measures. Even these standards were apparently negotiable, however, and sometimes subject to abuse. Thus, Abraham was forced before witnesses in the gate of Hebron to pay an exorbitant rate (400 shekels of silver) for the cave of Machpelah (Gen. 23:16), and Amos condemned those merchants who planned “to make the bushel smaller and the shekel bigger, and to cheat with dishonest scales” (Amos 8:5 NASB).

Until coinage was introduced after 600 B.C., foodstuffs and other goods were obtained through barter in the marketplace or purchased with weights of precious metals (Gen. 33:19; Job 42:11). When minted coinage came into general use during the Hellenistic period (after 200 B.C.), it created a revolution in commerce. Transactions in accepted coinage, known to bear a definite weight, added to the confidence of the public and eliminated some of the abuses of the marketplace. Coins also facilitated the payment of taxes (Mark 12:15-17) and wages (Matt. 20:2). See Coins.

Business Law Hammurabi's law code (about 1750 B.C.) contains a model of business law in the ancient Near East. Many facets of trade are governed by this code. They are sometimes echoed in the biblical codes as well. For instance, Hammurabi's law protected a man who consigned a portion of his grain to storage from losses due to natural events and the corrupt practices of the owner of the storage room (cp. Exod. 22:7-9). Lending at interest to fellow Israelites was forbidden in Exod. 22:25 and Deut. 23:19. This injunction, however, does not seem to apply to the practice of investment of surplus capital found in Matt. 25:14-30 and Luke 19:12-25.

The parables of the pounds and the talents suggest the existence of a sophisticated banking and investment community, which lent out sums for commercial enterprises and garnered profits for those who left their money with them. A portion of the vast sums that came into the temple treasury in Jerusalem as taxes each year (Matt. 17:24) were probably lent out as investment capital. Several of Hammurabi's laws speak of similar practices requiring that those who engage in commercial transactions obtain receipts to show proof of their investments and sales.

Trade and Trade Routes From earliest times caravans of traders carried goods throughout the Near East. Obsidian, brought by Neolithic traders from Anatolia, has been discovered at sites hundreds of miles from its place of origin. Palestine, situated on a land bridge between Mesopotamia and Africa, naturally became a center of commercial travel. Groups of Semitic traders, like the Ishmaelites and Midianites (Gen. 37:27-28), are recorded in Egyptian texts and on the walls of tombs, such as the Beni-hasen tomb paintings (about 1900 B.C.), which depict whole families with their donkeys transporting “ox-hide” ingots of metal. They used hill-top pathways as well as the Via Maris coastal highway and the King's Highway in Transjordan to move between Mesopotamia and Egypt. Eventually, the introduction of the camel and the establishment of caravansaries (inns where caravans can rest at night) as storage and rest centers, made it possible for merchants to take a more direct route across the deserts of northern Syria and Arabia. These lucrative trade routes were controlled in the Roman period by the city of Tadmor, the capital of the Palmyran kingdom, and by the Nabateans.

During the monarchy period, Israel's trade horizon expanded. Solomon imported vast quantities of luxury and exotic goods (ivory, apes, peacocks —1 Kings 10:22b) from all over the Near East. He also purchased horses and chariots for his fortress garrisons like those at Gezer, Hazor, and Megiddo (1 Kings 10:26). The nation had no deep-water ports on its coastline, so the Gulf of Aqaba became the prime point of entry for goods coming from Africa (spices, precious stones, gold from Ophir, algum wood). The Aqaba port of Elath (Ezion-geber) served the needs of the court of Solomon and subsequent kings as well. The shipping trade of Israel, as well as many other nations, joined with or was carried by Phoenician merchantmen (1 Kings 10:22). These more experienced sailors could avoid the storms and other hazards that sank many ships in the Mediterranean (2 Chron. 20:37 NIV).

Even in NT times, shipping was restricted to particular routes and seasons (Acts 27:12). Travel seems to have been more common in this period as seen by the movements of Paul, the other apostles, and those associated with the establishment of the early church, such as Aquila and Priscilla (Rom. 16:3). Passengers and cargo might be transported on one leg of a journey on one ship and then transferred to a number of others to complete their journey (Acts 27:1-8). Underwater excavations off Cyprus and the Herodian port of Caesarea Maritima demonstrate, however, that many of these ships never made it to port (Acts 27:39-44).

For those who chose to take the overland routes, the Romans constructed paved roads that facilitated the movement of their armies, as well as people and wagons loaded with goods for sale. Mile markers set up along these roads show how often they were repaired and which emperors took a special interest in the outlying districts of his domain. See Agriculture; Banking; Economic Life; Marketplace; Transportation and Travel; Weights and Measures.

Victor H. Matthews

COMMON In the OT that which was common (alternately profane) was contrasted with that which was holy. Thus common bread was contrasted with the bread of the Presence (1 Sam. 21:4); the common journey was contrasted with the military campaign for which David and his men would need to be consecrated (1 Sam. 21:5). The common people ('am ha'arets, "people of the land") were contrasted with rulers or people of standing in the community (Lev. 4:22,27) and were buried in cemeteries for the common people (2 Kings 23:6; Jer. 26:23). By NT times the concept of "common" also carried with it the connotation of "unclean." Thus Peter declares that he has never eaten anything "common or unclean." The response to Peter was: "What God has made clean, you must not call common" (Acts 10:14-15 HCSB).

COMMON LIFE See Community of Goods.

COMMONWEALTH Group of people united by common interests. Before the coming of Christ, the Gentiles were separated from the commonwealth of Israel (Eph. 2:12). Paul reminded the Philippians that more important than their citizenship in a Roman colony was their citizenship in heaven (Phil. 3:20). See Citizen, Citizenship.

COMMUNION Paul's term describing the nature of the Lord's Supper and thus the term used by many church groups to refer to their celebration of Jesus' final, memorial supper with His disciples. Paul used the Greek term koinonia to express the basic meaning of the Christian faith, a sharing in the life and death of Christ which radically creates a relationship of Christ and the believer and of the believers with one another in a partnership or unity. See Fellowship; Lord's Supper.

COMMUNITY OF GOODS Jerusalem church's practice of having "everything in common" (Acts 2:41-47; 4:32-37) had contemporary parallels: the Greek utopian ideal of common property among friends, the compulsory communalism of the Jewish sect at Qumran, and even the precedent of Jesus and the Twelve (Luke 8:3; John 13:29). The immediate context of both references in Acts (2:1-40; 4:31) indicates that the community of goods was not an ideal to which the church aspired but was itself evidence of the community's nature: that the entire range of their life together was shaped and directed by the Holy Spirit.

"Common" (koina) in 2:44 and 4:32 has the same root as koinonia ("fellowship" in 2:42); thus the issue was not economic theory but the common life together ("daily" in 2:46) with no separation between physical and spiritual needs. (See 6:1-6, which depicts the investment in care for the needy.) The parallel between Acts 4:34 and Deut. 15:4 indicates that the early church fulfilled God's intention for Israel to be generous.

The Jerusalem church chose to practice the selfless generosity in a form that closely resembled the lifestyle of Jesus and the Twelve. Other early churches practiced sacrificial generosity in different forms (Acts 11:27-30; 1 Cor. 16:1-4; Rom. 12:13; 1 John 3:17), for Jesus' call to set aside possessions took more than one form (cp. Matt. 19:16-22 with Luke 19:1-10). What these incidents have in common is an emphasis on sacrificial giving (Luke 21:1-4), requiring a complete change of heart so that God, not possessions, is served (Matt. 6:24) with a clear recognition of riches' dangers (Mark 10:23-31; Luke 6:24; 12:13-31).

This danger of riches manifested itself in the context of the community of goods (Acts 4:36-5:11). In contrast to Barnabas who sold some land and gave the proceeds to the apostles, Ananias and Sapphira held back some of the proceeds from their sale. Their subsequent deaths testified to the severity of abandoning the common life for selfish interest. Possessiveness led to lying to the Spirit (5:3,9) and therefore rejecting the bond ("one heart and of one soul” in 4:32) created by the Spirit. The voluntary nature of this community of goods was therefore not a matter of individuals independently choosing when and if to give, but the ongoing spontaneous generosity of a community unified and directed by the Spirit. See TEV translation of Acts 2:45 and 4:34b (“would sell”) which identifies the ongoing nature of the generosity. See Ananias; Borrow; Essenes; Fellowship; Gift, Giving; Holy Spirit; Mammon; Qumran

David Nelson Duke

COMPANY See Cohort.

COMPASSION Meaning “to feel passion with someone” or “to enter sympathetically into one's sorrow and pain.” In various translations of the Bible, this English word is used to translate at least five Hebrew words in the OT and eight Greek words in the NT. The subtle variations in the original terms are emphasized below, with the inevitable overlapping of meanings being apparent.

Old Testament Chamal means “to regret,” “to be sorry for (i.e., to pity),” “to grieve over,” or “to spare someone.” See 2 Sam. 12:4 for an example in which a rich man “spared” [KJV] his own sheep (“refrained” [NIV] from taking his own lamb) and took the lamb of a poor man to feed his guest. He obviously had more compassion for his sheep than he had for his poor neighbor. Pharaoh's daughter “had pity” on the baby Moses (Exod. 2:6); David “spared” Mephibosheth (2 Sam. 21:7); in anger, God often showed no “pity” on rebellious people (Zech. 11:6); but, in exercising grace, God more often showed “compassion for” or “grief over” His people (Joel 2:18; Mal. 3:17; Gen. 19:16; 2 Chron. 36:15; Isa. 63:9).

Chen represents “grace” and “charm.” The term identifies what is “gracious.” For example, God planned to demonstrate a spirit of “grace” or “compassion” (NRSV) on His people (Zech. 12:10). He would enable them to “mourn” the one they pierced (possibly a messianic reference). The term is used again in Job 8:5 where Bildad instructed Job to implore the “compassion of the Almighty” (NASB).

Chus seems to be close in meaning to the English word “empathy,” which suggests an identification with the person with whom one is “sympathizing” or for whom one is having “compassion.” With the emotional content goes the intellectual intent to help. God forbade Israel to have such “pity” on the tribal peoples who were to be driven from the promised land (Deut. 7:16). God, Himself, refused to have such “pity” on a disobedient people, either Israel or its neighbors (Ezek. 5:11). An interesting contrast appears where Jonah had “compassion” on a plant (Jon. 4:10 NASB) while he did not want God to have “compassion” on the entire population of a city (Jon. 4:11).

Nichum or nocham are two forms of another Hebrew word for “compassion” which contains more than emotion. It means to “be sorry for,” “regret,” “comfort,” or “console.” This word includes the will to change the situation. God “was sorry” He made people (Gen. 6:6), but He still acted to preserve human life (Gen. 8:21). Though, in His basic nature, God does not “change His mind” (a translation of the Hebrew word nicham 1 Sam. 15:29 NASB), there is a sense in which God (YAHWEH) does “repent” (which means normally to change one's mind and action). Examples are found in a number of OT texts (Exod. 32:14; 2 Sam. 24:16; and Jon. 3:10). Basically, what happened in each case was that the people or the circumstances changed enough for God to deal with them differently. Thus, Hos. 11:8 is translated, “My repentings are kindled together” (KJV) and “All my compassion is aroused” (NASB), suggesting a compassionate change in God which favored His people.

Racham is related to the Hebrew word for “womb” and expresses a mother's (Isa. 49:15) or a father's (Ps. 103:13) compassion for a helpless child. This deep emotion seeks expression in aggressive acts of selfless service (Gen. 43:14; Deut. 13:17). In Scripture, this compassion is protective, reflecting the feelings of the more powerful for the inferior. The majority of Bible uses of racham have God as the subject (the giver) and someone or something in the temporal world as the object (the recipient). Compare Hos. 2:4,23; Zech. 1:16; 10:6, and Ps. 145:9.

New Testament Eleos is one of the two principle NT words for compassion. The other is splanchnizomai. The first, eleos, is used in the Greek OT, the Septuagint, to translate most of the Hebrew words listed above. In the NT eleos is the word Jesus chose to challenge the Pharisees to learn of God's desire for compassion (Matt. 9:13; 12:7). Jesus used the term again when He challenged Peter to understand that even slaves should practice compassion and forgiveness (Matt. 18:33). Paul reminded his readers that the demand for compassion is rooted in the very nature of God, who is full of compassion (Eph. 2:4; 1 Pet. 1:3).

Splanchnizomai is related to the Greek noun for “inward parts” or “bowels of mercies” [KJV]. The expression “pit of the stomach” suggests that the “inward parts” are the seat of human emotion. This and similar contemporary expressions like “go with your gut” show that this concept of compassion is still valid. The common first-century practice was to use the term to refer to courage rather than to mercy or compassion, even though some nonbiblical Jewish writings before Christ used the term to mean mercy.

Jesus took the term a step further and used it to define the attitude that should capture the life of every believer. In the parable of the unforgiving servant, the master had compassion and forgave the servant's debt (Matt. 18:27). The prodigal son's father had compassion on him (Luke 15:20). The good Samaritan had compassion on the injured traveler (Luke 10:33). Jesus had compassion on the crowd (Mark 6:34). People needing help asked Jesus for compassion (Mark 9:22; cp. Matt. 9:36; 20:34).

Oiktirmos is another of the eight Greek terms translated “compassion” in the NT. It is normally related to mourning the dead, expressing sympathetic participation in grief. In the Septuagint, the Greek OT, translated approximately 250 B.C., this Greek term is used to translate the Hebrew words chen and racham. Such compassion stands ready to help the one who is sorrowing. Paul taught that God is the source of the believer's capacity for showing genuine compassion (2 Cor. 1:3; cp. James 5:11).

Sumpathes is the fourth term translated “compassion.” Sun, the Greek preposition meaning “with” is changed to sum when prefixed to the verb form patheis, from pascho, the basic verb meaning “to suffer.” The word means “to suffer with” or “to suffer alongside.” The English language borrowed this word directly from the Greek and spells it “sympathize.” Peter listed sumpathes (compassion) among the basic Christian virtues (1 Pet. 3:8). Don H. Stewart

CONANIAH [Cōn á nî' áh] Personal name meaning “Yahweh has established.”
1. Levite in charge of collecting temple offerings under King Hezekiah (2 Chron. 31:12). 2. Perhaps the grandson of 1. He and other Levites contributed 5,000 sheep and goats and 500 bulls for Josiah's Passover offering (2 Chron. 35:9).

CONCISION Archaic English noun meaning “a cutting off.” KJV uses “concision” in Phil. 3:2 to describe Paul's opponents who insisted on circumcision as necessary for right relationship with God (Phil. 3:2). See Circumcision; Paul.

CONCOURSE KJV translation of Hebrew “noisy places” in Prov. 1:21 referring to a place of community gathering and meeting.

CONCUBINE A wife of lower status (usually a slave) than a primary wife. Taking of concubines dates back at least to the patriarchal period. Both Abraham and Nahor had concubines (Gen. 22:24; 25:6; 1 Chron. 1:32). Tribal chiefs, kings, and other wealthy men generally took concubines. Gideon had a concubine (Judg. 8:31). Saul had at least one concubine named Rizpah (2 Sam. 3:7; 21:11). David had many (2 Sam. 5:13), but Solomon took the practice to its extreme, having 300 concubines, in addition to his 700 royal wives (1 Kings 11:3). Deuteronomy 17:17 forbids kings to take so many wives.

The concubines (and wives) of chiefs and kings were symbols of their virility and power. Having intercourse with the concubine of the ruler was an act of rebellion. When Absalom revolted against his father David, he “went in to his father's concubines in the sight of all Israel” (2 Sam. 16:22 NASB) on the palace roof. When David returned to the palace, the 10 concubines involved were sent away to live the rest of their lives in isolation (2 Sam. 20:3).

A concubine, whether purchased (Exod. 21:7-11; Lev. 25:44-46) or won in battle (Num. 31:18), was entitled to some legal protection (Exod. 21:7-12; Deut. 21:10-14) but was her husband's property. A barren woman might offer her maid to her husband hoping she would conceive (Gen. 16:1-3; 30:1-4).

Although the taking of concubines was not explicitly prohibited, monogamous marriage was set forth as the biblical pattern (Gen. 2:24; Mark 10:6-9). See Family; Marriage; Polygamy; Slavery.

Wilda W. Morris

CONCUPISCENCE KJV translation of Greek epithumia, “desire, lust.” The Greeks used the term to mean excitement about something in a neutral sense and then in an evil sense of wrongly valuing earthly things. The NT knows desire can be good (Matt. 13:17; Luke 22:15; Phil. 1:23; 1 Thess. 2:17). In fact, the NT uses the verb form more often in a good sense than in a bad one.

The bad sense of epithumia is desire controlled by sin and worldly instincts rather than by the Spirit (Gal. 5:16). Everyone has been controlled by such desires before their commitment to Christ (Eph. 2:3; Titus 3:3). Such desire is part of the old life without Christ and is deceitful (Eph. 4:22). Such desire can be for sex (Matt. 5:28), material goods (Mark 4:19), riches (1 Tim. 6:9), and drunkenness (1 Pet. 4:3). The Christian life then is a war between desires of the old life and desire to follow the Spirit (Gal. 5:15-24; 1 Pet. 2:11), the Spirit-led life crucifying worldly desires (Gal. 5:24). (Note the list of fleshly desires in Gal. 5:19-21.) As the new life comes through the Spirit, so old desires come through Satan (John 8:44) and the world of which he is prince (1 John 2:16). Such desires can make slaves of people (2 Pet. 2:18-20). Desire brings temptation, leading to sin, resulting in death (James 1:14-15). People cannot blame God, for He allows them freedom to choose and gives them over to what they choose (Rom. 1:24). God did give the law which defined wrong desires as concupiscence or sin. The power of sin then changed the good commandment into an instrument to arouse human desires to experience new arenas of life. Thus they sin and die rather than trust God's guidance through the law that such arenas are outside God's plan for life and thus should not be experienced (Rom. 7:7-8). Either sin brings death, or believers in Christ murder evil lusts (Col. 3:5).

In a very limited sphere of life, Paul called on believers to rise above the normal activities caused by lust in society. He called on faithfulness in marriage rather than on the immoral practices of the Greek and Roman world of his day (1 Thess. 4:4-5).

CONDEMN Act of pronouncing someone guilty after weighing the evidence.

Old Testament The word appears first in the context of a court of law (Exod. 22:9) where a judge hears a charge against a thief and condemns the culprit. Another juridical instance appears in Deut. 25:1 where judges are instructed to hear cases, decide on the issue, and “condemn the wicked.” In Ps. 94:20-21 the writer accuses corrupt judges who “condemn the innocent,” and in Ps. 109:31 he thanks God for saving the poor man “from those who condemn him to death” (TEV).

“Condemn” is also used in making everyday personal judgments as in the book of Job. Feeling helpless before God's power and righteousness, Job knew that no matter how he tried to defend himself, his own mouth would condemn him (9:20). He begged God not to condemn him but to explain why He was making him suffer (10:2). After Job's advisors had had their say, Elihu saw that all three “had condemned Job” (32:3). Other instances of the word being used in everyday judgments appear in Isa. 50:9; 54:17.

The more significant use of “condemn” is in connection with God's judgment. In dedicating the new temple, Solomon prayed that God would judge His people, “condemning the wicked...and justifying the righteous” (1 Kings 8:32 NASB). The writer of Proverbs expected the Lord to condemn “those who plan evil” (12:2 TEV). The psalmist was sure God would not forsake a good man or allow him “to be condemned when he is on trial” (37:33 TEV). On the other hand, the Lord asked Job whether he wanted to condemn Him just to prove his own righteousness (40:8).

New Testament Several Greek words are translated “condemn” and “condemnation” with a progression of meaning from just making a distinction to making an unfavorable judgment. The three-way usage of the word in the OT continued into the NT. The law court context is seen in Jesus' prediction of His coming trial in Jerusalem (Matt. 20:18), in a remark of one of the men crucified with Jesus (Luke 23:40), and in the final vote of the Sanhedrin (Mark 14:64).

“Condemn” was also used in Jesus' day in making personal judgments of others. For instance, Jesus said the men of Nineveh would condemn His own unrepentant generation (Matt. 12:41); James warned the brethren that teachers were subject to greater criticism (James 3:1); and Paul urged Titus to use healthful speech in his teaching to avoid criticism (Titus 2:8). As in the OT, God is also the source of condemnation in the NT. He was responsible for the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (2 Pet. 2:6), and He condemned sin in human nature by sending His own Son (Rom. 8:3).

NT usage of “condemn” is unique in its reference to the final judgment, especially in John 3:17-19. A similar teaching appears in John 5:24. Paul felt that avoiding that final condemnation was a reason for accepting the Lord's chastening in this life (1 Cor. 11:32).

William J. Fallis

CONDUIT Water channel or aqueduct in or near Jerusalem channeling water into the city (2 Kings 18:17; 20:20; Isa. 7:3). The same Hebrew word refers to a trench built up to conduct water flow (1 Kings 18:32-38; Job 38:25; Ezek. 31:4). The location of the Jerusalem conduit is a matter of debate with different scholars favoring the Pool of Siloam, the Gihon Spring, or outside the wall to the northwest of the city beside the major north-south highway leading to Samaria. The latter location may be the most likely. Aqueducts had been built for Jerusalem before David conquered it with a tunnel providing water for the city (2 Sam. 5:8). Israel's kings evidently supplemented this. In a marvelous engineering feat, Hezekiah had workmen start at both ends and meet in the middle to construct a water tunnel connecting Gihon Spring and the Pool of Siloam (2 Kings 20:20; 2 Chron. 32:2-4,30). The tunnel was discovered in 1880.

CONEY Wild hare—Procavia syriaca, also called Hyrax syriacus.

Resembled a rabbit in size and color. The badger of Exod. 23:5; 26:14 has been identified by some scholars as the Syrian coney. It was unclean because it did not have divided hooves (Lev. 11:5; Deut. 14:7). It established its home in the rocky cliffs (Ps. 104:18; Prov. 30:26) from the Dead Sea Valley to Mount Hermon. The design of its feet helped the coney maintain footing on the slippery rocks.

CONFESSION Admission, declaration, or acknowledgment, that is a significant element in the worship of God in both OT and NT. The majority of the occurrences of the term can be divided into two primary responses to God: the confession of sin and the confession of faith.

Confession of Sin Numerous OT passages stress the importance of the confession of sin within the experience of worship. Leviticus speaks of ritual acts involving such admission of sin: the sin (or guilt) offering (5:5-6:7) and the scapegoat that represents the removal of sin (16:20-22). Furthermore, confession can be the act of an individual in behalf of the people as a whole (Neh. 1:6; Dan. 9:20) or the collective response of the worshiping congregation (Ezra 10:1; Neh. 9:2-3). Frequently, it is presented as the individual acknowledgment of sin by the penitent sinner (Ps. 32:5; Prov. 28:13; Pss. 40 and 51, which are individual confessions although the word “confession” is not used).

Likewise, in the NT confession of sin is an aspect of both individual and corporate worship. At the Jordan, John's followers were baptized, confessing their sins (Matt. 3:6; Mark 1:6). Similar confessions were made by Paul's converts in Ephesus (Acts 19:18). Christians are reminded that God faithfully forgives the sins of those who confess them (1 John 1:9). James admonished his readers not only to pray for one another but also to confess their sins to one another (5:16), probably within the context of congregational worship. By the end of the first century, routine worship included confession as the prelude to the observance of the Lord's Supper as seen in Didache 14:1. See Apostolic Fathers.

Confession of Faith Closely related to the confession of sin in the OT is the confession of faith, that is, the acknowledgment of and commitment to God. In 1 Kings 8:33,35 (as well as 2 Chron. 6:24,26) acknowledgment of the name of God results in forgiveness of sins. Such acknowledgment came to be standardized in the confessional formula known as the Shema (Deut. 6:4-5).

Such declaration of commitment to God, or particularly to Christ, is also found in the NT. One's public acknowledgment of Jesus is the basis for Jesus' own acknowledgment of that believer to God (Matt. 10:32; Luke 12:8; cp. Rev. 3:5). Furthermore, as Paul described the process by which one is saved, he explicitly drew a parallel between what one believes in the heart and what one confesses with the lips (Rom. 10:9-10)—belief and confession are two sides of the same coin. Probably the earliest confession of faith was the simple acknowledgment of the lordship of Christ (Rom. 10:9; 1 Cor. 12:3; Phil. 2:11), but the rise of heresy seems to have caused the addition of specific data about Christ to the confession—for example, that He is Son of God (1 John 4:3,15) or that He has come in the flesh (1 John 4:2). A firmly set outline of Christian beliefs then appears to be what is meant by confession in later NT writings (Heb. 4:14). See Faith; Scapegoat; Sin; Repentance.

Naymond Keathley

CONFESSIONS AND CREDOS Theological statements of faith. Although individual Christians can produce such treatises, Christian groups or denominations normally produce confessions and credos. These proclamations are intended to declare the doctrinal perspective of the group on the matters addressed in the document.

The OT depicts the people of God confessing truths about Him and then offering their allegiance to him. Deuteronomy 6:4-25 calls for Israel to confess the truth about God (His oneness) and salvation (deliverance from Pharaoh's armies), and then to offer allegiance to Him in terms of personal devotion (love Him with all your heart, v. 5), passing on the heritage of God's message (teach [the commands] diligently to your children, v. 7), be always remembering God's Word (vv. 8-10), telling the story of their deliverance to the next generation (vv. 20-15). This passage has for centuries served a confession used regularly in Jewish homes. Psalm 78 demonstrates how Israel regularly called to mind God's work in its history. It speaks in narrative form of God's sovereignty (vv. 12,22-26), His wrath (vv. 21,27-29), His salvation (vv. 12-16,70-72), His mercy (vv. 38-39), His judgment (vv. 41-67), and His elective grace (vv. 67-72). Other confession texts can be found in Exod. 19-20, Josh. 24, Deut. 26.

The NT gives evidence of the early church's use of confessions and credos. The expression "Jesus is Lord" is an early confession intended to signify those who were genuinely born again and in whom the Holy Spirit dwelt (Rom. 10:9; 1 Cor. 12:3; Phil. 2:11). A baptismal candidate immediately prior to baptism may have used the confession to profess faith in Christ. Such public confessions often resulted in persecution and death. Credos may have been tools used to instruct new converts or to combat heresy. For example, the expression "Jesus Christ has come in the flesh" appears to be a credo designed to refute the false teaching that Jesus Christ only appeared to be a human being (1 John 4:2; 2 John 7). Other examples of succinct statements that encapsulate the faith of the early church in a confessional/creedal format are: Col. 1:15-20; 1 Tim. 3:16; 1 Pet. 3:18-22; Heb. 1:1-3; Phil. 2:5-11.

In the early church, confessions and credos were used to profess the faith of martyrs or those who withstood persecution. The concept eventually came to mean a resolved affirmation of religious convictions. These declarations may or may not be in conjunction with persecution.

Following the biblical precedent, confessions and credos ultimately developed into formal doctrinal statements. This concept has several forms. One form of confessionalism is the production of confessions of faith. Confessions of faith are theological documents intended to provide doctrinal identity and promote denominational unity. Confessions of faith often identify and articulate common areas of belief among different Christian denominations. Most denominations have used confessions of faith throughout their history. Exceptions would include Campbellites (followers of Alexander Campbell, now represented by these denominations: Church of Christ, Christian Church, Disciples of Christ) and Quakers. The former have held that the NT is sufficient, and thus there is no need for any confession of faith, while the latter have held to a radical individualism in which each person under the guidance of the Spirit's "inner light" is the arbiter of truth. Baptists and other Protestants have generally rejected such arguments.

Another understanding of confessionalism is the formal presentation of beliefs produced by Protestants. These presentations provide interpretative guides to Scripture, usually expounding the recognized creed of faith of a particular denomination. Confessionalism in this sense concerns formal theological treatises that are classified as "confessional theologies." These confessional theologies normally profess a Protestant understanding of the faith, often in contrast to Roman Catholicism, or even to other Protestant traditions.

Confessionalism can also be the endeavor of deriving doctrinal, core insights from within a particular Christian community of faith. This form of confessionalism finds its theological starting point from a perspective that is unique to a particular Christian religious community. This doctrinal interpretation may or may not be an interpretation of the formal creedal statements of a particular denomination.

Debate today surrounds the distinction between confessions of faith and creeds. Distinctions between the two are often difficult to clarify and define. Confessions of faith and creeds both provide denominational and doctrinal identity to particular Christian denominations. Further, both articulate explicit doctrinal statements that require a voluntary, conscientious adherence. One distinction, however, may be in the use of such documents. Creeds can be used to require conformity by all members of a particular tradition. In other words, creeds require a complete subscription by an individual in order to be a member of the denomination. Confessions of faith, while providing a consensus opinion of the majority of adherents, do not generally require such a subscription in order to belong to the specific body.

Stan Norman and Chad Brand

CONFIRM To establish an agreement and to show that a word is true and reliable. English translations use “confirm” for general Hebrew terms meaning “to prove reliable, trustworthy,” “to be strong,” “to fill, fulfill,” “to stand,” “to rise.” The Greek terms mean “to be reliable” and “to set up.” The terms are regularly used to speak of humans establishing God's words, covenant, or law by practicing them (Deut. 27:26) and more often of God confirming His message or His covenant by setting it up with His people and bringing to pass the promises He made (Lev. 26:9; 2 Sam. 7:25; 1 Chron. 16:17; Isa. 44:26; Rom. 15:8). At times human agreements or promises are confirmed (Ruth 4:7; 1 Kings 1:14; Esther 9:29; Jer. 44:25; Heb. 6:16). One could also establish oneself in a position or institution (2 Kings 15:19; 1 Chron. 17:14). Believers seek to confirm the gospel message through a Christian life (1 Cor. 1:6; Phil. 1:7). In so doing one also confirms the individual's calling and election (2 Pet. 1:10).

CONFISCATION Appropriation of private property for public or governmental use. Confiscation was not practiced in Israel until the rise of the monarchy and was not permitted by God. This practice was foretold by Samuel before Israel elected its first king (1 Sam. 8:14) as an inherent danger of kings following Near Eastern patterns. Ahab exercised this royal right when he confiscated the property of a person (Naboth) executed by the state (1 Kings 21:15-16), but he had to bear God's punishment for his act (1 Kings 21:18-19). Ezekiel reacted strongly against the abuses of this royal prerogative (Ezek. 45:7-8; 46:16-18).

CONFLICT, INTERPERSONAL The Bible illustrates, explains, and offers solutions for interpersonal conflict. Among the more notable instances of interpersonal conflict recorded in the Bible are the hostilities between Cain and Abel (Gen. 4:1-16), Abram and Lot (Gen. 13:8-18), Jacob and Esau (Gen. 25-27; 32-33), Jacob and Laban (Gen. 29-31), Saul and David (1 Sam. 18-31), Mary and Martha (Luke 10:38-42), Jesus' disciples (Mark 9:33-37; Luke 22:24-27), Paul and Barnabas (Acts 15:36-41), and the Corinthian believers (1 Cor. 1:10-12; 3:2-4; 11:18).

The root cause of interpersonal conflict is sin (Gal. 5:19-20). James explains that fighting is the result of uncontrolled passions and desires (James 4:1-3). The book of Proverbs characterizes those who stir up conflict as persons given to anger (Prov. 15:18; 29:22), greed (Prov. 28:25), hate (Prov. 10:12), gossip (Prov. 16:28), and worthless perversions (Prov. 6:12-15). Such conflicts inevitably result in personal destruction (Prov. 6:15), discord (Prov. 6:14), and strife (Prov. 10:12; 16:28). It is no wonder that “the Lord hates...one who stirs up trouble among brothers” (Prov. 6:16,19 HCSB).

The Bible places great value on the ability to live at peace with one another (Ps. 34:14; Mark 9:50; Rom. 14:19; 1 Thess. 5:13; Heb. 12:14; 1 Pet. 3:11), in unity (Ps. 133:1), and harmony (Rom. 15:5-6). At the same time, the Bible declares unequivocally that such peace is given only by God (Num. 6:26; John 14:27; 16:33; 2 Cor. 13:11; 2 Thess. 3:16) and lived out only as believers pattern their lifestyles after that of Jesus (Phil. 2:3-8).

CONGREGATION Assembled people of God. Congregation translates the Hebrew words ‘edah and qahal primarily. These terms may apply to any individual or class collectively such as “the wicked,” “the hypocrites,” and others. While ‘edah is once used to refer to a herd of bulls (Ps. 68:30) and once to a hive of bees (Judg. 14:8), both words primarily describe the Israelite people as a holy people, bound together by religious devotion to Yahweh rather than by political bonds. There is no apparent distinction in meaning between the two. Every circumcised Israelite was a member of the congregation. The congregation was subdivided into the tribe and then the most basic unit, the family. The congregation of Israel functioned in military, legal, and punishment matters.

In the Greek OT edah was usually translated by sunagoge, qahal by ekklesia. In late Judaism sunagoge depicted the actual Israelite people and ekklesiathe ideal elect of God called to salvation. Hence ekklesia became the term for the Christian congregation, the church. Sunagoge in the NT is almost entirely restricted to the Jewish place of worship. (An exception is James 2:2, which may refer to a Christian assembly.) The English word “synagogue” is merely a transliteration of sunagoge. Ekklesia means “called out,” and in classical Greek referred to the body of free citizens called out by a herald. In the NT the “called out ones” are the church, the assembly of God's people. There is a direct spiritual continuity between the congregation of the OT and the NT church. Significantly the Christian community chose the OT term for the ideal people of God called to salvation (ekklesia), rather than the term which described all Israelites collectively (sunagoge).

Joe E. Luceford

CONGREGATION, MOUNT OF Mountain considered by Israel's neighbors to stand in the far north and serve as a meeting place of the gods (Isa. 14:13).

CONIAH [Cō-ni' āh] See Jehoiachin.

CONQUEST OF CANAAN The book of Joshua and the first chapter of the book of Judges describe the conquest of Canaan, which resulted in Israel's settlement in the land of promise.

Historical Setting Israelite conquest came at a time when Egyptian control of Canaan was weakened. Historians disagree over when the conquest of Canaan occurred because they disagree over the date of the exodus. Archaeological evidence is largely ambiguous because of the close similarities between the Israelite and Canaanite cultures and because the Israelites refrained in general from destruction and burning of cities. The traditional date of the exodus based on a literal interpretation of 1 Kings 6:1

is about 1445 B.C., placing the conquest at about 1400-1350 B.C. Those who place more faith in archaeology than in the biblical data, and those who understand 1 Kings 6:1 and similar passages as figurative, commonly date the exodus around 1280 B.C. Such a date would place the conquest at about 1240-1190 B.C.

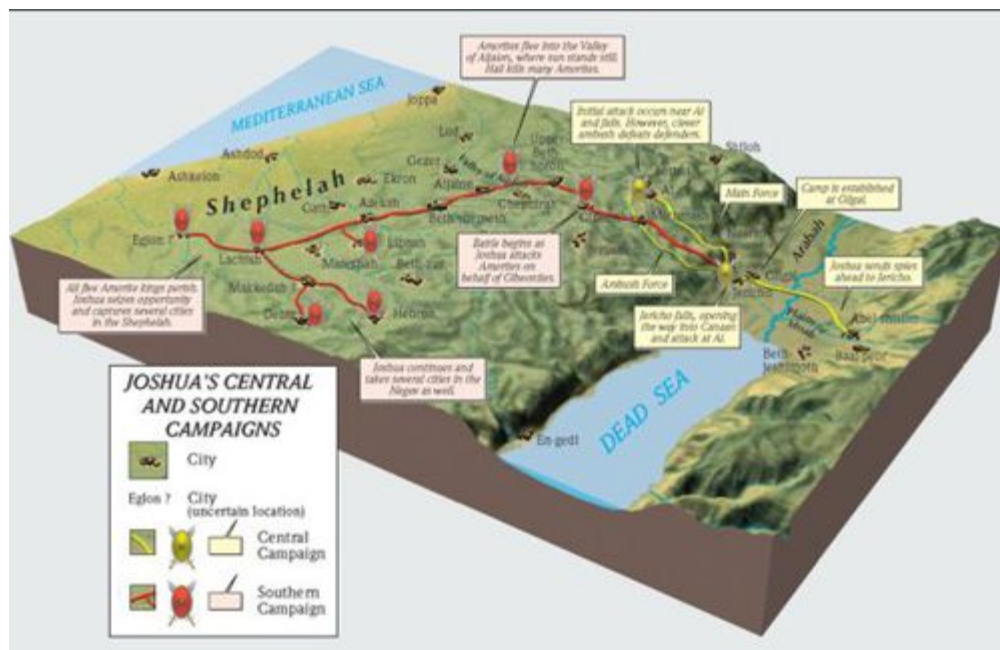

While it is not possible to be definitive about the date of the conquest, it is possible to draw some general conclusions regarding the situation of Canaan in the approximate time frame of the conquest. Shortly after 1500 B.C. Egypt subdued Canaan. Canaanite society operated according to a feudal system whereby the kings of city-states paid tribute to their Egyptian overlords. The city-states were numerous in the heavily populated Palestinian coastal plain; the mountainous regions were lightly populated. From about 1400 B.C. onward, Egyptian control of Canaan weakened, opening the land up for possible invasion by an outside force.

Joshua's Strategy Joshua led a three-campaign invasion of Canaan. At the close of the wilderness wanderings the Israelites arrived on the plains of Moab in the Transjordan (“beyond the Jordan”). There they subdued two local kings, Sihon and Og (Num. 21:21-35). Some of the Israelite tribes—Reuben, Gad, and half of the tribe of Manasseh—chose to settle in this newly conquered territory (Num. 32).

After Moses died, Joshua became the new leader of the Israelites. As God instructed him, Joshua led the people across the Jordan River into Canaan. The crossing was made possible by a supernatural separation of the water of the Jordan (Josh. 3-4). After crossing the river the Israelites camped at Gilgal. From there Joshua led the first military campaign against the Canaanites in the sparsely populated central highlands, northwest of the Dead Sea. The initial object of the attack was the ancient stronghold of Jericho. The Israelite force marched around the city once a day for six days. On the seventh day they marched around it seven times, then blasted trumpets and shouted. In response the walls of Jericho collapsed, allowing the invaders to destroy the city (Josh. 6).

The Israelites then attempted to conquer the nearby city of Ai, where they met with their first defeat. The reason for the failure was that Achan, one of the Israelite soldiers, had kept some booty from the invasion of Jericho—an action which violated God's orders to destroy everything in the city. After Achan was executed, the Israelites were able to destroy Ai (Josh. 7–8).

Not all of the Canaanites tried to resist Israel's invasion. One group, the Gibeonites, avoided destruction by deceiving the Israelites into making a covenant of peace with them (Josh. 9). Alarmed by the defection of the Gibeonites to Israel, a group of southern Canaanite kings, led by Adonizedek of Jerusalem, formed a coalition against the invading force. The kings threatened to attack the Gibeonites, causing Joshua to come to the defense of his new allies. Because of supernatural intervention, the Israelites were able to defeat the coalition. Joshua then launched a southern campaign that resulted in the capture of numerous Canaanite cities (Josh. 10).

Joshua's third and last military campaign was in northern Canaan. In that region King Jabin of Hazor formed a coalition of neighboring kings to battle with the Israelites. Joshua made a surprise attack upon them at the waters of Merom, utterly defeating his foe (Josh. 11:1-15).

The invasion of Canaan met with phenomenal success; large portions of the land fell to the Israelites (Josh. 11:16-12:24). However, some areas still remained outside their control, such as the heavily populated land along the coast and several major Canaanite cities like Jerusalem (Josh. 13:1-5; 15:63; Judg. 1). The Israelites struggled for centuries to control these areas.

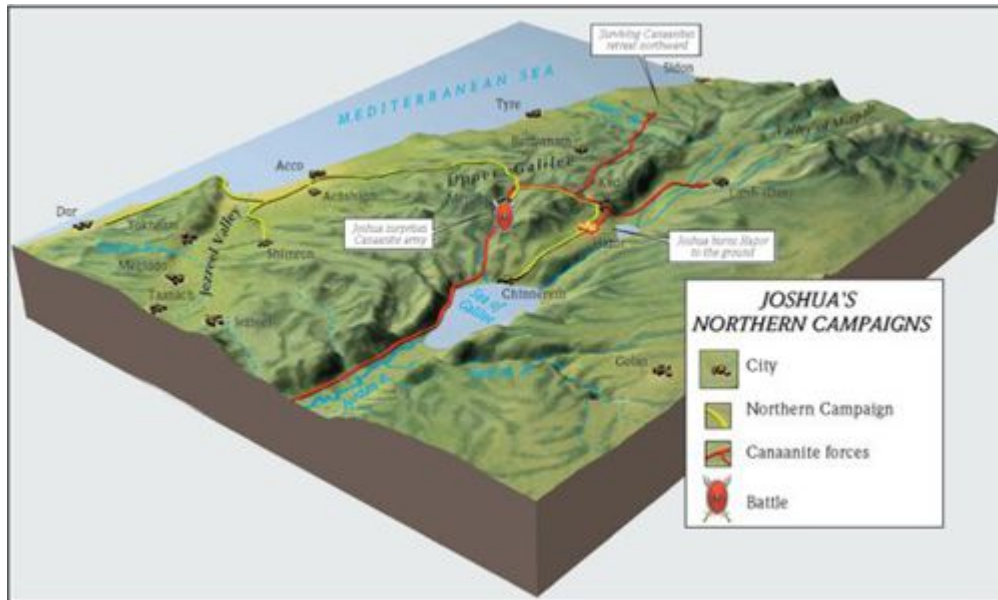

Israelite Settlement The Israelite tribes slowly settled Canaan without completely removing the native population. Even though some sections of the land remained to be conquered, God instructed Joshua to apportion Canaan to the tribes which had not yet received territory (Josh. 13:7). Following the land allotments, Israel began to occupy its territory. Judges 1 describes the settlement as a slow process whereby individual tribes struggled to remove the Canaanites. In the final analysis the tribes had limited success in driving out the native population (Judg. 1). As a result, Israel was plagued for centuries by the infiltration of Canaanite elements into its religion (Judg. 2:1-5).

Conquest Reconstructions Scholars have proposed varying models for understanding the conquest of Canaan. The previous description of the nature of the conquest and settlement presents a traditional, harmonizing approach to the interpretation of the biblical material. Some scholars have proposed other interpretive models. One is the immigration model, which assumes that there was no real conquest of Canaan but that peoples of diverse origins gradually immigrated into the area after 1300 B.C. They eventually took control of the city-states and became the nation of Israel. The difficulty with this model is that it ignores the general biblical picture of God constituting the nation of Israel in the desert and leading them to invade the promised land.

Other scholars have put forth a revolt model for understanding the nature of the conquest. This approach suggests that there was no major invasion of Canaan from an outside force but simply the immigration of a small group of people who inspired a revolt of the Canaanite peasants. The result was the overthrow of the feudal city-state kings and the emergence of what became the Israelite nation. This interpretation of the conquest diverges from the biblical record in its claim that the bulk of the population of Israel was made up of former Canaanite peasants. It also reveals a tendency to read back into Israelite history modern Marxist theory about the struggle between classes. The best approach to understanding the conquest of Canaan is one that is rooted in the biblical materials. See Achan; Ai; Exodus; Gilgal; Jericho; Joshua.

Bob R. Ellis and E. Ray Clendenen

Ruins of a temple at Hazor destroyed by Joshua in the conquest of Canaan.

CONSCIENCE Human capacity to reflect upon the degree to which one's behavior has conformed to moral norms. For the believer these norms should be those established by God. The word does not occur in the OT, although clearly there are times when the concept is present (1 Sam. 25:31 NLT). The primary background for conscience, however, is Greek. While it originally referred simply to one's self-awareness, conscience gradually came to be associated with moral awareness. The Jewish writer Philo (ca. A.D. 40) is probably the first to state explicitly that the conscience is given by God to reprove unacceptable behavior.

In the NT two-thirds of the occurrences of the term are in Paul's writings. The majority of these are in his letters to the Corinthians, which hints to some that the Corinthians were the ones who had first used the term in a letter to Paul. Paul states that his "boasting" about his ministry is the witness of his conscience (2 Cor. 1:12; 5:11). He goes on to state that this witness is based on the fact that he has conducted himself in sincerity and purity in the grace of God, not in "fleshly" wisdom, before both unbelievers ("the world") and the believing recipients of his letter (Acts 23:1; 24:16). Thus, the conscience examines both one's behavior, as well as one's motives. If one thinks and acts consistently with what one's conscience dictates, then a believer has reason to believe that others will ultimately respond positively to one's message (1 Pet. 3:16).

Weak Conscience In 1 Cor. 8:7 the phrase "weak conscience" does not refer to a conscience that is less sensitive than it should be. In context, Paul refers to persons who may know intellectually there is only one God, yet when they eat meat in an idol temple, they still feel as if they are worshiping an idol. Thus, a "weak conscience" refers to a conscience that may be overly sensitive or one that does not act in concert with what the person knows to be true. Nevertheless, other believers, then, must not influence the "weak" to engage in any practice that would go against or "defile" the conscience (1 Cor. 8:7-10).

The conscience should not limit the believer's freedom in Christ, however. In 1 Cor. 10:25 Paul addresses the practice of eating meat purchased in the market which probably had been slaughtered in an idol temple. Paul states believers may eat this meat and should not ask questions “because of conscience.” He means that consumption of this meat is permissible, and the conscience must not dictate otherwise. In matters of indifference (diaphors) the conscience should not limit Christian freedom. Those with “seared” consciences are those who deceive others by prohibiting actions that are entirely permissible (1 Tim. 4:2-3). The conscience, then, is not one's ultimate judge. Paul uses the verbal form of the word when he states in 1 Cor. 4:4 (HCSB), “I am not conscious (sunoida) of anything against myself, but I am not justified by this. The One who evaluates me is the Lord.” As Martin Luther pointed out, the conscience must be obeyed, but the conscience must be “captive” to God's Word.

The Conscience of Unbelievers In Rom. 2:15 Paul states that the consciences and thoughts of Gentiles, who do not know the law of God, act as witnesses in both an accusatory and apologetic manner. While the focus is on past behavior, it appears that the conscience here could direct future conduct as well. Nevertheless, verse 16 makes clear that the ultimate verdict will be at the last judgment. While the conscience can be an important component in evaluation of thoughts and behavior, both believers and unbelievers stand ultimately under God's judgment.

C. Hal Freeman, Jr.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS While the Bible does not speak directly to the issue of conscientious objectors, it does offer principles which can help an individual determine whether it is proper to invoke the status of conscientious objector in any given situation.

The Bible entreats Christians to be good citizens, and in principle this involves subjection to the governing authorities (Rom. 13:1-7; Titus 3:1; 1 Pet. 2:13-17). As much as it depends on the ability of each individual believer, Christians are commanded to live peaceably with others (Rom. 12:18).

At times Christians find it necessary to disobey the laws of men in order to follow higher standards set by God (Acts 4:19-20; 5:29). Each individual is given a conscience which, when purified by God, helps that person determine a proper course of action within a given set of circumstances (Rom. 14:4; 1 Tim. 1:5,19; Heb. 13:18; 1 Pet. 3:16). When Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan. 3:16-18), Daniel (Dan. 6:10-16), the apostles (Acts 5:40-42), and Paul (Acts 25:11) chose to disobey the civil government, they willingly accepted the consequences of their actions.

The issue of a “just war” is complex. While at times God called His people to battle (Josh. 6:2-5; Judg. 1:1-2), the Bible records other instances when war was to be opposed (cp. Isa. 7:1-16; 22:8b-11). It is incumbent on every believer to trust God for guidance in each situation. Paul H. Wright

CONSECRATION Persons or things being separated to or belonging to God. They are holy or sacred. They are set apart for the service of God. The Hebrew qadesh and Greek hagiozo are translated by several different English words: holy, consecrate, hallow, sanctify, dedicate.

Old Testament God is said to be qadesh or “holy.” When persons or things were “consecrated,” they were separated to or belonged to God. “You shall be holy, for I the Lord your God am holy” (Lev. 19:2 NASB). “You shall be to Me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation” (Exod. 19:6 NASB). When persons were “consecrated,” they were set apart to live according to God's demands and in His service.

In the OT the ordination of persons to the service of God is indicated by the phrase “to fill the hand.” This phrase is usually translated “consecrate” or “ordain.”

Numbers 6:1-21 sets forth the vow of the Nazirite. Nazir from which Nazirite is derived, means “to separate” and is translated “consecrate” in Num. 6:7,9,12.

New Testament This ethical understanding of God's holiness is found throughout the NT. In Matt. 23:16-24 Jesus criticized the scribes and Pharisees on the basis of their neglect of justice, mercy, and faith. He said it is “the altar that sanctifies the gift” (Matt. 23:19 HCSB). The cause to which persons give themselves determines the nature of the sacrifice. When the cause is God's, the gift is consecrated. Jesus' mission was to sanctify persons. Paul said that Christians are called to be “saints,” and their sanctification comes through Christ.

H. Page Lee

CONSERVATISM Disposition to appreciate, conserve, and foster in the present teachings and values that are rooted in the past. In the Bible, conservatism is most clearly seen in the attitude that Paul took toward faith and Scripture. Paul recognized that he was heir to a body of sacred writings and traditions which must be learned, believed, and carefully taught to others (1 Cor. 11:2; 2 Thess. 2:15; 2 Tim. 1:13-14; 3:14-15; Titus 1:9).

The Pharisees, who placed great stress on observing the traditions of their elders (Mark 7:3-4; cp. Deut. 6:6-7; Prov. 1:8; 4:1-4), criticized Jesus for His apparent lack of conservatism (Mark 7:5). Jesus' response was to distinguish between human traditions and the words of God (Mark 7:6-13), the latter which, by implication, were intended to enliven men's hearts in a way that mere tradition could not.

CONSOLATION Comfort which eases grief and pain. The Hebrew terms are closely related to the words for compassion—nichum, nocham. Job's integrity with God's instructions gave him consolation despite his grief and pain (Job 6:10). David sent servants to console Hanun, king of Ammon, after his father died (2 Sam. 10:1-2). People brought food and drink to console the grieving (Jer. 16:7; cp. John 11:19). God's response to prayer brings consolation to the worried soul (Ps. 94:19). Even as God destroyed Jerusalem, He provided consolation in the person of faithful survivors (Ezek. 14:22-23).

Israel's ultimate hope was the consolation that only the Messiah could bring. The faithful waited expectantly for this (Luke 2:25; cp. Isa. 40:1-2). Those who trust in riches rather than in the coming of the Son of Man have all the consolation they will receive (Luke 6:24). Believers receive consolation through the ministry of proclamation (1 Cor. 14:3). See Compassion.

CONSTELLATIONS See Heaven; Stars.

CONSUMMATION End of history and the fulfillment of God's kingdom promises. The term comes from Dan. 9:27 speaking of the complete destruction God had decreed on the prince who threatened His sanctuary. See Eschatology.

CONSUMPTION Wasting or emaciating disease that would be inflicted upon those who disobeyed the law (Lev. 26:16; Deut. 28:22). The disease has been identified as pulmonary tuberculosis (phthisis) or as the side effects of wasting and emaciation from prolonged bouts of malarial fever. Some have even suggested cancer. The KJV uses consumption in Isa. 10:22; 28:22 where modern versions translate “destruction.”

CONTAINERS AND VESSELS See Basin; Basket; Glass; Pottery; Vessels and Utensils.

CONTENTMENT Internal satisfaction which does not demand changes in external circumstances. The NT expresses this with the Greek word arkeo and its derivatives. Hebrews 13:5 summarizes the teaching in advising believers to be free of the love of money and to depend on God's promise not to forsake His people. Food and lodging should be enough for the godly (1 Tim. 6:6-10; cp. Matt. 6:34; contrast Luke 12:19). The believer can be content no matter what the outward circumstances (Phil. 4:11-13). Believers are content to know the Father (John 14:8-9) and depend on His grace (2 Cor. 12:9-10; cp. 2 Cor. 9:8-11).

CONTRITE To be humble and repentant before God, crushed by the sense of guilt and sinfulness. This OT concept is expressed by the Hebrew word daqaq and its derivatives. The basic meaning is to be crushed or beaten to pieces. This meaning appears in the crushing of the golden calf (Exod. 32:20) or the crushing of grain during threshing (Isa. 28:28). Crushing enemies is a frequent theme (Ps. 89:10). God taught Israel not to crush the poor (Prov. 22:22). Indeed, the king is to crush the oppressor who harms the poor (Ps. 72:4). In Ps. 9:9 the poor are referred to as the crushed (literal translation) and assured that God is their “refuge” (cp. Ps. 143:3). They can thus come to God in prayer, knowing what God wants is a broken spirit and a contrite heart (Ps. 51:17). God will revive the spirit of such a one (Isa. 57:15; cp. 66:2; Ps. 34:18).

God's plan of salvation rests on God being pleased to crush His Suffering Servant (Isa. 53:10 NASB). This One will finally be exalted (Isa. 52:13).

CONVERSATION Communication between two or more people (Jer. 38:27 in modern translations) or personal conduct or behavior in KJV's now obsolete use of the term (Ps. 37:14; Gal. 1:13; James 3:3).

CONVERSION Turning or returning of a person to God, a crucial biblical and theological concept. The word itself is relatively rare in Scripture. In the OT the word is shub, translated usually as “turn” or “return.” In the NT the basic verb is epistrepho, and the noun is epistrephe. This word group is more similar to our common conception of conversion. Metanoeo (and the related noun) is usually translated “repent(ance).” Theologically, “conversion” is usually understood as the experiential aspect of salvation, founded on the logically prior divine work of regeneration (the “new birth”; John 3:3,5-8; Titus 3:5). It refers to a decisive turning from sin to faith in Jesus Christ as the only means of salvation (John 14:6; Acts 4:12; 1 Tim. 2:5). It is a once-for-all unrepeatable and decisive act. One is either converted or not. There is no middle or third way. Humanly speaking, conversion is the initiation of the overall process of salvation. In only one case is epistrepho used in the NT of a believer “returning” to obedience and faith—when Peter “turned back” after denying Christ (Luke 22:32).

In the OT the concept of conversion occurs in a number of ways. (1) One can speak of a group conversion such as that of a pagan city like Nineveh in the past (Jon. 3:7-10) or the nation of Egypt (Isa. 19:22) or all the nations in the future (Ps. 22:27). More commonly the concept applies to a turning of Israel back to God. Israel's conversion is marked by the making of a covenant and a renewed commitment to loyalty and faithfulness to God, whom they had forsaken in the past (Josh. 24:25; 2 Kings 11:4; 2 Chron. 15:12; 29:10; 34:31). (2) There are accounts of individuals turning to God (Ps. 51:13; 2 Kings 5:15; 23:25; 2 Chron. 33:12-13). (3) There are even occasions when it is God who is said to be the one who turns or returns to His people (Isa. 63:17; Amos 9:14).

The psalmist affirms that the word of God is essential in conversion (19:7). Isaiah connects conversion with righteousness (1:27), healing (6:10), mercy and pardon (55:7). Jeremiah identifies conversion with the putting away of idols (4:1-2). Conversion is a genuine turning to God, which involves repentance, humility, a change of heart, and a sincere seeking after God (Deut. 4:29-30; 30:2,10; Isa. 6:9-10; Jer. 24:7). It results in a new knowledge of God and of His purposes (2 Chron. 33:13; Jer. 24:7).

In the NT a key text is Matt. 18:3, “unless you are converted and become like children, you will never enter the kingdom of heaven” (HCSB). Conversion is possible for anyone who comes to God with simple trust like a child before his parents.

In Acts we discover calls to be converted as well as the record of a number of conversion experiences. Peter connected conversion with repentance and having one's sins blotted out (3:19). Acts 11:20-21 affirms that believing in Jesus is involved in conversion. Paul affirms at Lystra that conversion involves turning from useless things to the living God (14:15, cp. 1 Thess. 1:9; 1 Pet. 2:25). The only occurrence of the noun form of the word “conversion” in the NT describes Gentiles coming to salvation and the great joy it caused (15:3; cp. Luke 15:7,10).

In recounting his own conversion, Paul said the Lord commissioned him to preach to the Gentiles in order “to open their eyes that they may turn from darkness to light and from the power of Satan to God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and a share among those who are sanctified by faith in Me” (Acts 26:18 HCSB). There are conversions of various groups recorded in Acts: Jews at Pentecost (2:22-41), Samaritans (8:5-25), Gentiles (10:44-48), and disciples of John (19:1-7). There are also the conversion experiences of individuals. Some are quite dramatic with accompanying physical manifestations (e.g. Paul, 9:5-18; Cornelius, 10:44-48; also 15:7-35; note 15:19; the Philippian jailer, 16:29-34). Others are quiet and calm (the man from Ethiopia, 8:26-40; Lydia, 16:14). It is also interesting to note that Luke has three accounts of the conversion of Paul (9:5-18; 22:6-21; 26:12-23) as well as of the Gentile Cornelius (10:44-48; 11:15-18; 15:7-35). God makes no racial distinction concerning those who may turn to Him. James adds a word of encouragement to the faithful evangelist, informing us that “whoever turns a sinner from the error of his way will save his life from death and cover a multitude of sins” (James 5:20).

In a biblical theology, conversion has two sides, divine and human. It represents the infusion of divine grace into human life and a resurrection from spiritual death to eternal life. We can turn only through the power of God's grace and the calling of the Holy Spirit. Conversion is an event that initiates a process. It signifies the moment in time we are moved to respond to Jesus Christ in repentance and faith. It begins the sanctifying work of the Holy Spirit within us, purifying us and conforming us to the image of Christ. Conversion is the beginning of our journey to Christian maturity. We can and should make progress toward perfection, but we can never attain it in this life. Even the converted need to maintain a life of ongoing repentance, and even the sanctified need to turn again to Christ and be cleansed anew (cp. Ps. 51:10-12; Luke 17:3-4; 22:32; Rom. 13:14; Eph. 4:22-24; 1 John 1:6-2:2; Rev. 2:4-5, 16; 3:19). See Regeneration; Repentance.

Daniel L. Akin

CONVICTION Sense of guilt and shame leading to repentance. The words “convict” and “conviction” do not appear in the KJV. The word “convince” (KJV) comes closest to expressing the meaning of “conviction.”

The Hebrew word yakah expresses the idea of conviction. It means “to argue with,” “to prove,” “to correct.” God may be the subject and persons the object (Job 22:4), or a person may be the subject who convicts another person (Ezek. 3:26).

The Greek term meaning “convict” is elencho. It means “to convict” “to refute,” “to confute,” usually with the suggestion of shame of the person convicted. Young ministers like Timothy and Titus had the responsibility of “convicting” (rebuking, refuting) those under their charge (1 Tim. 5:20; 2 Tim. 4:2; Titus 1:13; 2:15). John the Baptist “convicted” Herod Antipas because of his illicit marriage to Herodias, his brother's wife (Luke 3:19). No one could convict Jesus of sin (John 8:46).

John 16:8-11 is a classic passage on conviction. The Holy Spirit is the One who convicts, and the (inhabited) world is the object of conviction. A study of this passage yields the following results. First, conviction for sin is the result of the Holy Spirit awakening humanity to a sense of guilt and condemnation because of sin and unbelief. Second, more than mental conviction is intended. The total person is involved. This can lead to action based on a sense of conviction. Third, the conviction results in hope, not despair. Once individuals are made aware of their estranged relationship with God, they are challenged and encouraged to mend that relationship. The conviction not only implies the exposure of sin (despair) but also a call to repentance (hope). See Forgiveness; Repentance; Sin.

Glenn McCoy

CONVOCATION, HOLY See Festivals.

COOKING AND HEATING Only in recent times have cooking and heating become separated, so that central heating, for example, works independently of the microwave. In Bible times the means of heating was the means of cooking. Heating was by open fire, and cooking was done at the same time. This is not to say that fire was always produced in the same way or that the methods of cooking were identical; it is the differences that provide the interest.

The basic focus for cooking and heating was the open fire. The Bedouin encampment could be recognized by the fires at night outside and in front of the tents. The fire was laid in a hollow scooped out of the ground or on flat stones. The fire was ignited by friction or by firing tinder with sparks

(Isa. 50:11). Many of the stories of the Bible were preserved, originally as folk memories, remembered word-for-word around the campfires lit for warmth on cool evenings in the arid climate or in the high terrain. The people of the Bible were fortunate because the white broom plant was useful in making fires. Its embers stayed hot for a long time and could be fanned into a blaze even when they looked dead. Less useful but equally combustible materials were thorns (Isa. 10:17), dried grass (Matt. 6:30), charcoal (John 18:18 NRSV,HCSB), sticks, and dried animal dung (Ezek. 4:15).

When people of the Bible moved from tents and settled in houses, fires for cooking were still generally lit out-of-doors. If the house had a courtyard, the fire was made somewhere in the corner as the farthest place away from the smoke. Very few houses had a chimney; and even though the fire was put into an earthenware box or was contained in a metal brazier, there was no exit for the smoke. Life must have been quite miserable during the damp and cold winters of the Holy Land. A fire was necessary to keep warm, but the only window needed rough curtaining with a blanket. The smoke had little space to exit, so it blackened the rough ceiling and made the householders choke and splutter. Later better homes were provided with a chimney, and the houses of royalty actually had a form of central heating in which the heat of under-floor fires was ducted underneath paved rooms.

In patriarchal times food consisted basically of bread, milk products, meat, and honey. Wine was the most common drink. Cooking, therefore, consisted of the preparation of such foods. Grain (spelt, barley, or wheat—preferred in that order) had first to be cleaned and selected. It was necessary to remove any poisonous seeds such as darnel (tares, Matt. 13:25). Then it was ground either in a pestle and mortar or in a hand mill. The hand mill was made of two disks of stone about 12 inches in diameter. The lower stone had an upright wooden peg at its center, and the upper stone had a hole through the center that fitted over the peg. A handle fixed to the upper stone allowed it to be rotated about the peg. Grain was fed through the central hole. As the upper stone was rotated, the grain was crushed, coming out as flour between the two stones and falling onto a cloth placed below. Any woman could manage a hand mill, but it was much easier if two women shared in the task, sitting with the mill between them and alternately turning the handle (Matt. 24:41). It was a chore and was therefore given to the slaves when this was possible (Lam. 5:13), but it was a chore which made a sound always associated with home (Jer. 25:10). The flour was mixed with water and formed into dough cakes in a trough called a kneading trough. Salt was added, and most days of the year, leaven was added too. Leaven was fermented dough from the previous day's baking. It took longer to penetrate the dough than if fresh yeast was used, but that was reserved for the time following the festival of unleavened bread, and the normal method was just as certain. Some of the grain was finely ground and was given a special name. It was the finely ground flour which was used in sacrificial offerings (Exod. 29:40).

Middle Eastern woman sifting grain with a type of sifting frame.

Cooking consisted of the application of (relatively) clean heat. In some cases large flat stones were put in the hot fire. When the flames had died down, the dough was placed on the hot stones. In other cases, where the fire was placed in a hole in the ground, the dough was actually placed on the hot sides of the depression. Another common method was to invert a shallow pottery bowl over the fire and place the dough cakes on the bowl's convex surface. It was many years before the pottery “oven” was invented. It consisted of a truncated cone that was placed over the fire. The cakes of bread were then placed on the inside of the cone at the top, away from the flames. Not until Roman times were pottery ovens in use where the firebox was separated from the cooking area by a clay dividing piece. This method was maintained for centuries. The cooking resulted in different shapes of bread. Some loaves were paper-thin and were most suitable for scooping food from a common pot (Matt. 26:23). Other loaves (John 6:9) were heavier, like biscuits, and a still heavier loaf is described in Judg. 7:13 where it knocked down a tent.

As communities grew larger, the baker developed his trade and provided facilities for the whole village. His oven was tunnel shaped. Shelves lined the sides for the dough, and fires were lit on the floor. It was possible for the housewife to take her own dough to be cooked in the communal oven and possible for the children to collect hot embers at the end of the day for kindling fires in their homes (Hos. 7:4-7). Jeremiah received a bread ration from the local bakery while he was in prison (Jer. 37:21).

Bread is being cooked in an outdoor truncated cone-shaped “pottery oven.”

Not all of the grain was ground. A metal baking sheet was sometimes placed over the hot fire and grain put on the metal surface. The grain “popped” and provided what the Bible calls parched corn (1 Sam. 25:18), which was used as an occasional snack.

The basic food to go with the bread was vegetable soup prepared from beans, green vegetables, and herbs. A large cooking pot was put directly on the fire and was used for this purpose. The pottage that Jacob gave to Esau was lentil soup (Gen. 25:30). It was eaten by forming a scoop with a piece of bread, and dipping it in the central pot. When soups were made, the cook had to remember that ritual law forbade the mixing of seeds for this purpose (based on Lev. 19:19). When a special occasion was called for, as at the arrival of a guest, meat would be added to the stock. Most meat was boiled or stewed in this way and was taken either from the herd or in the hunt. Boiling was the easiest way to deal with meat because ritual law required that the blood should be drained from the animal (Lev. 17:10-11). It was therefore easiest to cut up the carcass before putting it in a stew. Meat was normally roasted only at festivals and very special days such as Passover (Exod. 12:8-9). It was sometimes roasted on a spit that was speared through the animal and supported over the fire. Since the main altar at temple and tabernacle was a kind of barbecue in which the carcass was laid on a grill above a fire, it would be unusual if similar arrangements were not sometimes used domestically. Meat was always available from the sheep and goats of the flock, but hunting wild animals that came up from the jungle in the Jordan Valley was popular. Veal was served to Abraham's guests in Gen. 18:7, while Gideon's guests ate goat meat (Judg. 6:19). Milk, too, was used as a basic cookery material; but it was forbidden to stew a kid in its mother's milk (Exod. 23:19). The reason for this is not clear. Guesses have been made that the commandment was given for “humanitarian” reasons or that the practice was somehow associated with magic in contemporary religious life.

By the time the Jewish people had settled in the promised land, additions had been made to their diet. While they were in Egypt, they had gotten used to some of the food which was popular in that country—cucumber, garlic, leeks, onions, and melons (Num. 11:5). Some of these plants were uncooked and were used to eat with bread or as a salad. Others were cooked to give additional flavor to the cooking pot. The leek was a salad leek, and the cucumber was the “snake cucumber” which was common in Egypt. With the growth of trade under the Israelite monarchy, these items became fairly common in the diet. In addition to onions and garlic, herbs were used in cooking to add to the flavor. Salt was collected during the hot season from the shores of the Dead Sea after evaporation had left it behind. Salt was used for preservation as well as for seasoning. Liberal use was made of dill, cumin (Isa. 28:25-27) and coriander, and sugar. Spicy chutneys were also prepared to give added flavor to the food. The charoseth used at the Passover was chutney made of dates, figs, raisins, and vinegar.

Arab woman using an ancient hand mill to grind grain.

The big difference when the settlement took place was that the Jews began to use fruit from the trees. They built plantations and orchards. Most significant in this respect was the olive. After the olives had been beaten from the trees and crushed in the olive press, the olive oil was used instead of water for binding the flour and for frying. A whole new era of cookery was opened. The woman from Zarephath who cared for Elijah needed only some flour (meal) and some olive oil to be able to survive through the time of famine (1 Kings 17:12). Other trees provided basic food which was eaten either raw or stewed—figs, sycamore figs, pomegranates, and nuts.

Milk has already been mentioned as a liquid for stewing meat and vegetables. It was also drunk for itself and used in the preparation of other foods. Some milk was fermented to produce yogurt. It is in fact still called “milk” in some versions of the Bible (Judg. 4:19). Milk was used to make cheese (1 Sam. 17:18), and when placed in a skin bag to be shaken and squeezed by turn, butter was produced. Buttermilk was presumably used as well, but there is no mention of this in the Bible.

By NT times fish was a common addition to the diet. Much of the fish was imported from the Phoenicians, who caught fish in the Mediterranean. Fishing industry also thrived on the Sea of Galilee. Fish was most commonly grilled over a fire (John 21:9) or was salted and eaten later. Magdala, the home of Mary Magdalene, was a well-known center for the salting of fish.

Wine was always available, even among the nomadic people. When entry to the promised land took place, it was possible for the people of the Bible to go into viticulture in a big way, and the preparation of the grapes was an important aspect of cooking. Some grapes were dried in the hot sun to become raisins—a substantial snack when they were needed. Most of the grapes however were crushed to obtain their juice. This was a long “cooking” operation. Picked between July and September, the grapes were placed in a winepress—a stone “tank” cut out of the ground with an exit hole in the bottom where the juice ran out and could be collected outside. The juice stood in the collecting vessels for about six weeks to allow natural fermentation to take place. It was then carefully poured off to leave any sludge undisturbed in the bottom and was placed in another jar, sealed except for a small hole to allow gases to escape until the fermentation process was complete. Wine was the most natural and safest drink because water supplies were often suspect. Not all of the wine was used for drinking. The housewife sometimes boiled up the juice to make a simple grape jelly or jam, which was spread on the bread. This was so plentiful that it may well be one of the senses of “honey” which is referred to in the phrase “land flowing with milk and honey” (Exod. 3:8,17).

Ralph Gower

COOS [Cō' õs] (KJV) See Cos.

COPING Traditional translation of a Hebrew architectural term in 1 Kings 7:9. The meaning of the Hebrew word is unknown. NIV, TEV reads “eaves.” Recent scholars see it as the “framework,” meaning a row of stone or wood headers and stretchers above the various levels of the foundation on which bricks were laid.

Bread being cooked on an inverted shallow skillet over an open flame.

COPPER Reddish metal that can be shaped easily by hammering and can be polished to a shining finish.

While gold was probably the first metal humans used, the oldest tools and utensils recovered by archaeologists in Bible lands are of copper, usually combined with some alloy. The word “copper” appears in the KJV only in Ezra 8:27 and in the word “coppersmith” in 2 Tim. 4:14. On the other hand, the word “brass” appears about 100 times in the KJV. In most instances the same Hebrew word is translated as “bronze” in the RSV. Copper had limited use by itself in Bible times. Combining copper with from two to 16 percent tin produced bronze that was hard enough to be used for weapons, armor, utensils, and sculpture.

Cyprus was the chief source of copper in the Mediterranean world, but Egypt probably secured some from the Sinai Peninsula. Besides the usual promised bounty of Canaan, Deuteronomy said it would include “a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills you can dig copper” (8:9 RSV; cp. NASB, NIV). The Hebrews mined a limited supply in the Arabah, the region south of the Dead Sea. Palestinian remains of copper mines have been found only in that area, and archaeologists have discovered at the north end of the Gulf of Aqaba the remains of copper mines. The original excavator thought these were built by Solomon for processing both copper and iron, but subsequent research has shown them to be earlier than Solomon.

In the OT the Hebrew word for copper may refer to that basic metal or to bronze. If an object described as copper could be shaped by hammering, it was probably made of pure copper. However, if the metal for an object had to be melted and cast into a form, the word meant bronze. Thus, the fixtures and furnishings of the tabernacle were of bronze (Exod. 26:11-39:39). So also were the two huge pillars, the mammoth tank, and other major features for the temple designed by Hiram of Tyre for Solomon (1 Kings 7:14-47). Also before the days of iron, bronze was the best metal for weapons and armor, as shown in the equipment of Goliath (1 Sam. 17:5-6). While not considered a precious metal, bronze was a significant prize of conquest (2 Kings 25:13-15). See Minerals and Metals.

William J. Fallis

Miniature copper tools for shawabtis (small god symbols) from Egypt, New Kingdom.

COPPERSMITH Term applied in ancient times to metalworkers or blacksmiths in general. The name Kenite means “smith.” A certain Alexander was a coppersmith who caused trouble in the early church (2 Tim. 4:14). See Kenites.

COR Large liquid and dry measure of unknown quantity. See Weights and Measures.

CORAL Calcareous or horny skeletal deposit produced by anthozoan polyps. The red or precious coral found exclusively in the Mediterranean and Adriatic seas (Corallium rubrum) is the type known to the biblical writers. The value of wisdom surpasses the value of gold, silver, a variety of precious stones, crystal, or coral (Job 28:12-18). Coral was among the goods of trade between Israel and Edom (Ezek. 27:16).

CORBAN [Côr' bān] Gift particularly designated for the Lord and so forbidden for any other use (Mark 7:11). Jesus referred to some persons who mistakenly and deliberately avoided giving needed care to their parents by declaring as “corban” any money or goods that could otherwise be used to provide such care. Thus what began as a religious act of offering eventually functioned as a curse, denying benefit to one's own parents. See Sacrifice and Offering.

Gene Henderson

CORD See Lace.

CORE [Cō' rə] KJV transliteration of Greek spelling of Korah in Jude 11. See Korah.

CORIANDER SEED Herb (Coriandrum sativum) of the carrot family with aromatic fruits used much as poppy, caraway, or sesame seeds are today. The manna of the wilderness period was like coriander seed either in appearance (Exod. 16:31) or taste (Num. 11:7).

CORINTH One of four prominent centers in the NT account of the early church, the other three being Jerusalem, Antioch of Syria, and Ephesus. Paul's first extended ministry in one city was at Corinth. On his first visit to Corinth, he remained for at least 18 months (Acts 18:1-18). Paul's three longest letters are associated with Corinth. First and Second Corinthians were written to Corinth, and Romans, from Corinth. Prominent Christian leaders associated with Corinth include Aquila, Priscilla, Silas, Timothy, Apollos, and Titus.

History of Corinth Located on the southwest end of the isthmus that joined the southern part of the Greek peninsula with the mainland to the north, the city was on an elevated plain at the foot of Acrocorinth, a rugged hill reaching 1,886 feet above sea level. Corinth was a maritime city located between two important seaports: the port of Lechaion on the Gulf of Corinth about two miles to the north and the port of Cenchreae on the Saronic Gulf about six miles east of Corinth.

Corinth was an important city long before becoming a Roman colony in 44 B.C. In addition to the extant works of early writers, modern archaeology has contributed to knowledge of ancient Corinth.

The discovery of stone implements and pottery indicates that the area was populated in the late Stone Age. Metal tools have been found that reveal occupation during the early Bronze Age (between 3000 B.C. and 2000 B.C.). The rising importance of Corinth during the classical period began with the Dorian invasion about 1000 B.C.

Located at the foot of Acrocorinth and at the southwest end of the isthmus, Corinth was relatively easy to defend. The Corinthians controlled the east-west trade across the isthmus as well as trade between Peloponnesus and the area of Greece to the north. The city experienced rapid growth and prosperity, even colonizing Siracuse on Sicily and the Island of Corcyra on the eastern shore of the Adriatic. Pottery and bronze were exported throughout the Mediterranean world.

For a century (about 350 to 250 B.C.) Corinth was the largest and most prosperous city of mainland Greece. Later, as a member of the Achaean League, Corinth clashed with Rome. Finally, the city was destroyed in 146 B.C. L. Mummius, the Roman consul, burned the city, killed the men, and sold the women and children into slavery. For a hundred years the city was desolate.

The columns of the temple of Apollo at Corinth.

Julius Caesar rebuilt the city in 44 B.C., and it quickly became an important city in the Roman Empire. An overland ship road across the isthmus connected the ports of Lechaion and Cenchreae. Cargo from large ships was unloaded, transported across the isthmus, and reloaded on other ships. Small ships were moved across on a system of rollers. Ships were able, therefore, to avoid 200 miles of stormy travel around the southern part of the Greek peninsula.

Description of Corinth in Paul's Day When Paul visited Corinth, the rebuilt city was little more than a century old. It had become, however, an important metropolitan center. Except where the city was protected by Acrocorinth, a wall about six miles in circumference surrounded it. The Lechaion road entered the city from the north, connecting it with the port on the Gulf of Corinth. As the road entered the city, it widened to more than 20 feet with walks on either side. From the southern part of the city a road ran southeast to Cenchreae.

Approaching the city from the north, the Lechaion road passed through the Propylaea, the beautiful gate marking the entrance into the agora (market). The agora was rectangular and contained many shops. A line of shops divided the agora into a northern and a southern section. Near the center of this dividing line the Bema was located. The Bema consisted of a large elevated speaker's platform and benches on the back and sides. Here is probably the place Paul was brought before Gallio (Acts 18:12-17).

Religions of Corinth Although the restored city of Paul's day was a Roman city, the inhabitants continued to worship Greek gods. West of the Lechaion road and north of the agora stood the old temple of Apollo. Probably partially destroyed by Mummius in 146 B.C., seven of the original 38 columns still stand. On the east side of the road was the shrine to Apollo. In the city were shrines also to Hermes, Hercules, Athena, and Poseidon.

Corinth had a famous temple dedicated to Asclepius, the god of healing, and his daughter Hygieia. Several buildings were constructed around the temple for the sick who came for healing. The patients left at the temple terra cotta replicas of the parts of their bodies that had been healed. Some of these replicas have been found in the ruins.

The most significant pagan cult in Corinth was the cult of Aphrodite. The worship of Aphrodite had flourished in old Corinth before its destruction in 146 B.C. and was revived in Roman Corinth. A temple for the worship of Aphrodite was located on the top of the Acropolis.

Summary The city of Corinth as Paul found it was a cosmopolitan city composed of people from varying cultural backgrounds. Being near the site of the Isthmian games held every two years, the Corinthians enjoyed both the pleasures of these games and the wealth that the visitors brought to the city. While their ships were being carried across the isthmus, sailors came to the city to spend their money on the pleasures of Corinth. Even in an age of sexual immorality, Corinth was known for its licentious lifestyle.

R. E. Glaze

CORINTHIANS, FIRST LETTER TO THE First Corinthians is a practical letter where Paul dealt with problems concerning the church as a whole and also with personal problems.

Paul's First Ministry in Corinth A brief survey of Paul's contacts with Corinth will aid in understanding his correspondence with Corinth. In a vision at Troas on his second missionary journey, Paul heard the call, "Cross over to Macedonia and help us!" (Acts 16:9 HCSB). Paul and his party went to Philippi and established work there. Following their release from prison, Paul and Silas went to Thessalonica. Although a work was established there, persecution arose due to the jealousy of the Jews. Paul and Silas moved on Berea, where they were well received. However, Jews from Thessalonica came and stirred up the crowds.

The decision was made for Paul to minister alone in Athens. A comparison of Acts 17:13-15 with 1 Thess. 3:6 indicates that Timothy returned to Thessalonica. Silas probably remained at Berea. Paul's ministry was brief in Athens. Some converts were made, but a church was not established. Paul left Athens alone and probably discouraged.

Paul went from Athens to Corinth, where later Silas and Timothy joined him (Acts 18:5). Paul ministered in Corinth at least 18 months (Acts 18:1-18). He began working with Aquila and Priscilla in tent making. Probably, they were already Christians.

Paul left Corinth accompanied by Aquila and Priscilla (Acts 18:18). He left them at Ephesus and promised the Ephesians that he would return. In the meantime, Aquila and Priscilla instructed Apollos; and he left for Corinth, where he preached for some time (Acts 18:24-28). After visiting Jerusalem and Antioch of Syria, Paul returned to Ephesus for a ministry of more than two years (Acts 19:8-10).

Paul's Contacts with Corinth During His Ephesian Ministry During Paul's Ephesian ministry a series of disturbing events took place relative to Corinth: (1) A party spirit arose in Corinth (1 Cor. 1:12-13; 3:3-4). (2) A series of reports came to Paul, some by those of Chloe (1 Cor. 1:11). These reports included attacks upon Paul (1 Cor. 2:1-10) and problems of immorality (1 Cor. 5:1). (3) Paul wrote a letter warning against fellowship with sexually immoral people (1 Cor. 5:9). This letter is lost unless a portion of it remains in 2 Cor. 6:14-7:1. (4) The Corinthians wrote to Paul (1 Cor. 7:1) asking about certain problems concerning marriage, fornication, and disorders in public worship. (5) A delegation came from Corinth (Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus) with news from Corinth (1 Cor. 16:17). (6) Apollos quit his work in Corinth and returned to Ephesus. Even under Paul's urging, he refused to go back to Corinth (1 Cor. 16:12). (7) Paul sent Timothy to Corinth (1 Cor. 4:17) in an effort to heal the problems. Timothy probably went by way of Macedonia (Acts 19:22; 1 Cor. 16). (8) Paul wrote 1 Corinthians from Ephesus (1 Cor. 16:8), expecting them to receive the letter before the arrival of Timothy (1 Cor. 16:10).

Purpose for Writing First Corinthians Paul wrote 1 Corinthians to give instruction and admonition that would lead to the solving of the many problems in the congregation. Some of these problems may have arisen out of a "super spiritualist" group that had been influenced by incipient gnostic teachings. All of the problems in chapters 1-14 were grounded in egocentric or self-centered attitudes in contrast to self-denying, Christ-centered attitudes. Chapter 15 concerning the resurrection may reflect sincere misconceptions on the part of the Corinthians.

Theme of First Corinthians The egocentric life is contrasted with the christocentric life, or, the mature Christian is characterized by "giving," not "getting."

A street in Corinth from the first century A.D. with the Acrocorinth in the background.

Outline

I. Introduction (1:1-9)

II. Divisions Revealing Carnality and Immaturity Rather than Growth Under the Lordship of Christ (1:10-4:21).

A. Fragmentized by a party spirit (1:10-17)

B. Christ crucified: a stumbling block to the world in its wisdom, yet the power and wisdom of God (1:18-31)

C. Paul's preaching by the power of God, not by the wisdom of the world (2:1-5)

D. God's wisdom revealed to those having the mind of Christ (2:6-16)

E. The inability of the Corinthians to receive the full message of the gospel (3:1-9)

F. Responsibility and judgment (3:10-23)

G. The role of the apostles—"ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God" (4:1-13)

- H. The intent of Paul's rebuke—not to shame but to admonish (4:14-21)
- III. Problems of Sexual Immorality (5:1-6:20)
 - A. A case of incest (5:1-8)
 - B. The right attitude and relationship of the church to fornicators (5:9-13; 6:9-11)
 - C. The error of antinomianism in relation to sex (6:12-20)
 - D. Litigation in pagan courts (6:1-8)
- IV. Marriage and Celibacy (7:1-40)
 - A. The sexual relation in marriage (7:1-7)
 - B. Advice to the unmarried in view of the sex drive (7:8-9)
 - C. Admonition to Christian partners to remain married (7:10-11)
 - D. The Christian's responsibility when the marriage partner is not a Christian (7:12-24)
 - E. Circumstances under which Paul advised the unmarried to remain as they were (7:25-35)
 - F. The responsibility of a father for his virgin daughter (7:36-38)
 - G. Advice to widows (7:39-40)
- V. Meat Offered to Idols and Christian Liberty (8:1-11:1)
 - A. Liberty and responsibility in relation to meat offered to idols (8:1-13)
 - B. Paul's own surrender of apostolic privileges (9:1-23)
 - C. The necessity for self-discipline (9:24-27)
 - D. Admonition from Israel's wilderness history (10:1-13)
 - E. The impossibility of partaking both of the table of the Lord and the table of demons (10:14-22)
 - F. A summary of guiding principles (10:23-11:1)
- VI. Problems in Public Worship (11:2-14:40)
 - A. The veiling of women (11:2-16)
 - B. Disorders connected with the Lord's Supper (11:17-34)
 - C. Spiritual gifts and the supremacy of love (12:1-14:40)
- VII. The Resurrection (15:1-58)
 - A. The resurrection of Jesus (15:1-29)
 - B. The relevance of the hope of the resurrection for the struggles of this life (15:30-34)
 - C. The resurrection of the body (15:35-58)

VIII. Practical and Personal Matters (16:1-24)

R. E. Glaze

The bema or judgment seat at Corinth.

CORINTHIANS, SECOND LETTER TO THE After writing the first letter to the Corinthians, Paul continued his ministry at Ephesus. This ministry was so successful that “the inhabitants of the province of Asia, both Jews and Greeks, heard the word of the Lord” (Acts 19:10 HCSB). Not so successful, however, was his attempt to solve the problems at Corinth. Even after the writing of 1 Corinthians, trouble continued to grow worse, especially the Corinthians' harsh attacks upon Paul. Divisions within the church and their attacks upon Paul denied the very essence of the gospel that “in Christ, God was reconciling the world to Himself...and He has committed the message of reconciliation to us” (2 Cor. 5:19 HCSB).

Contacts between Paul and the Corinthians continued. Reports from Corinth indicated increasing hostility toward Paul. Timothy, whom Paul had sent with the hope that he could resolve the problems, returned to Ephesus and was with Paul when he wrote 2 Corinthians (2 Cor. 1:1).

Paul made a painful visit to Corinth that is not recorded in Acts. Second Corinthians contains three references to this visit. After making this visit, Paul wrote, "I made up my mind about this: not to come to you on another painful visit" (2 Cor. 2:1 HCSB). The first visit of Acts 18:1-18 was not a painful visit; therefore, the painful visit was a second visit. Also, 2 Cor. 12:14 and 13:1 indicate that Paul's forthcoming visit would be his third visit.

Paul also wrote a letter of strong rebuke that he regretted after sending it (2 Cor. 7:8). Later he rejoiced because the letter provoked them to repentance. Titus probably was the bearer of this letter (2 Cor. 8:7,16-17). This letter was not preserved unless it is chapters 10-13 of 2 Corinthians.

After Titus departed for Corinth, Paul left Ephesus. His heart was heavy because of Corinth. He expected Titus to meet him at Troas with news of reconciliation. Titus did not meet him. Even though Paul found an open door at Troas, his heart was so heavy that he could not minister (2 Cor. 2:12-13). He went on to Macedonia, where Titus finally met him (2 Cor. 7:6-7) and reported improved conditions at Corinth. In response Paul wrote 2 Corinthians, promising an early visit to them.

Questions have been raised concerning the unity of 2 Corinthians. These questions concern 6:14-7:1 and chapters 10-13. Some see 6:14-7:1 as a part of the previous letter mentioned in 1 Corinthians 5:9. Two arguments favor this view: (1) The verses interrupt the thematic connection between 6:13 and 7:2. (2) Their content fits the description of the letter in 1 Corinthians 5:9. Two arguments oppose this view: (1) There is no manuscript evidence for these verses ever existing outside of 2 Corinthians. (2) It was characteristic of Paul to insert other matters into his main argument.

The suggestion has been made that chapters 10-13 refer to the letter written "out of an extremely troubled and anguished heart" (2 Cor. 2:4 HCSB). Two arguments favor this: (1) The tone changes between chapters 9 and 10. Chapters 1-9 reflect restored relations and the absence of hostility. Chapters 10-13 are filled with rebuke and Paul's defense of his apostleship and conduct. (2) Chapters 1-9 reflect Paul's joy and optimism. This is hard to account for if even a minority remained stubborn. Two arguments are given against chapters 10-13 being the harsh letter: (1) There is no manuscript evidence for such a division. (2) Chapters 1-9 could be addressed to the repenting majority and chapters 10-13 to an unrepentant minority.

The excavations at Corinth showing the shops in the Agora.

We can be sure that all was written by Paul and is God's message given to Paul through divine inspiration. Paul wrote 2 Corinthians to deal with problems within the church and to defend apostolic ministry in general and his apostleship in particular. In so doing Paul revealed much about himself, his apostleship, and his apostolic ministry. This epistle is essential for anyone who would know as much as possible about Paul.

Second Corinthians is relevant for today in its teachings concerning ministers and their ministries. Among these teachings are the following: (1) God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself and has given to us a ministry of reconciliation. (2) True ministry in Christ's name involves both suffering and victory. (3) Serving Christ means ministering in His name to the total needs of persons. (4) Leaders in ministry need support and trust from those to whom they minister.

Outline

- I. Salutation (1:1-3)
- II. The Nature of Apostolic Ministry (1:3-7:16)
 - A. Defined in terms of Paul's relations with the Corinthians (1:3-2:17)
 - B. Defined in light of its glory and shame (3:1-7:16)
- III. The Expression of Apostolic Ministry through the Collection for Jerusalem (8:1-9:15)
 - A. Examples of sacrificial giving (8:1-15)
 - B. Care in handling the collection (8:16-24)
 - C. An appeal for a generous response (9:1-15)
- IV. Paul's Defense of His Apostolic Ministry (10:1-12:13)
 - A. Defended by answering allegations (10:1-18)
 - B. Defended by resorting to the foolishness of boasting (11:1-12:13)
- V. Paul's Future Plans (12:14-13:10)
 - A. Anticipation of a third visit to Corinth (12:14-21)
 - B. Paul's warning that he will deal forthrightly when he comes (13:1-10)
- VI. Farewell (13:11-14)

R. E. Glaze

CORMORANT Large sea fowl (Phalacrocorax carbo carbo) listed among the unclean birds (Lev. 11:17; Deut. 14:17). Other translators call it a fisher owl (REB).

CORN General term used by the translators of the KJV for any grain.

CORNELIUS [Côr nê' ñ ūs] Centurion in the Roman army who lived at Caesarea (Acts 10:1). Although he was a Gentile, he was a worshiper of the one true God. He also treated the Jewish people with kindness and generosity. After an angel appeared to this pious soldier, he sent to Joppa for Simon Peter, who came to him with the message of forgiveness of sins through faith in the crucified and risen Christ. Cornelius became a Christian as a result of this incident. His conversion marked the beginning of the church's missionary activity among Gentiles. It also helped to set the stage for an important early controversy in the church, for it raised the question of the possibility of salvation for those who were not Jews. See Acts of the Apostles; Peter.

CORNER BUTTRESS (NASB, 2 Chron. 26:9) See Turning of the Wall.

CORNER GATE Gate of Jerusalem in the northwest corner of the city not far from the Ephraim Gate (2 Kings 14:13; 2 Chron. 25:23). It is not mentioned in Nehemiah's restoration of Jerusalem. See City Gate.

CORNERSTONE Stone laid at the corner to bind two walls together and to strengthen them. Used symbolically as a symbol of strength and prominence in the Bible. The figure is often applied to rulers or leaders (Pss. 118:22; 144:12; Isa. 19:13 NIV, REB, NASB; Zech. 10:4). God promised through Isaiah that Zion would be restored, resting on the cornerstone of the renewed faith of Israel (Isa. 28:16). Jeremiah declared that Babylon would be so utterly devastated that nothing useful would remain, not even a stone for use in a foundation (Jer. 51:26).

In the NT Ps. 118:22 and Isa. 28:16 are quoted (or alluded to) and applied to Christ. The symbolism is clear: Jesus Christ is the only sure foundation of faith. The Synoptic Gospels quote Ps. 118:22 after the parable of the wicked tenants to show the rejection and ultimate triumph of Christ (Matt. 21:42; Mark 12:10; Luke 20:17; cp. Acts 4:11; Eph. 2:20-22).

In 1 Pet. 2:4-8 the two cornerstone passages are quoted in addition to Isa. 8:14. Here the appeal to the reader is to come to the living stone (Jesus) the people rejected but precious in God's sight. This is substantiated by a quote from Isa. 28:16. There then comes a warning: those who believe consider the stone to be something precious, but those who do not believe are warned that the stone which they have rejected has become the head of the corner (Ps. 118:22), and further, this stone will make them stumble and fall (Isa. 8:14; cp. Rom. 9:33). Believers are encouraged to themselves become living stones like the Living Stone and be built into a spiritual house (1 Pet. 2:5). See Rock; Stone.

Phil Logan

CORNET KJV for several different kinds of musical instruments. See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

CORNFLOOR KJV for threshing floor in Hos. 9:1.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT Punishment of, relating to, or affecting the body. The Bible teaches that corporal punishment can play an important role in correcting misbehavior (Prov. 20:30). Proverbs especially encourages parents to “use the rod” of discipline judiciously in child rearing (Prov. 13:24; 22:15; 23:13-14).

Other instances of corporal punishment are noted in the Bible. Gideon beat the men of Succoth with thorns and briars for refusing to help in pursuing the Midianite kings Zebah and Zalmunna (Judg. 8:16). God declared that David's son would be subject to punishment “with floggings inflicted by men” should he do wrong (2 Sam. 7:14), a figurative use of corporal punishment indicating subjection to his enemies. The Mosaic law regulated the severity of a beating as punishment for a crime (Deut. 25:1-3).

The Bible recognizes that corporal punishment, like other forms of discipline, is most effective if received with a willing and submissive spirit. A fool, however, will not be responsive to a large number of lashes (Prov. 17:10).

Paul H. Wright

CORRUPTION Used especially in the KJV to denote the transient nature of the material world—that is, the world's bent toward change and decay (Rom. 8:21; 1 Cor. 15:42-57; 1 Pet. 1:4). The world's corruption stands in contrast to the permanent, eternal nature of the resurrection hope.

CORRUPTION, MOUNT OF Hill east of Jeru salem near the Mount of Olives where Solomon built altars to the gods of his foreign wives (1 Kings 11:7). These places of worship were destroyed by Josiah (2 Kings 23:13). The name is probably a wordplay by the biblical writer on Mount of Oil, an early name of the Mount of Olives and a word spelled much like Mount of Corruption or Destruction.

COS [Cōs] Island and its chief city between Miletus and Rhodes where Paul landed briefly on his return voyage after his third missionary journey (Acts 21:1). It was a center for education, trade, wine, purple dye, and ointment. Hippocrates founded a school of medicine there. It is modern Kos.

COSAM [Cō' sām] Personal name meaning “diviner.” Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:28).

COSMETICS Materials used for personal care and beautification. In the ancient Near East, both men and women used cosmetics. Men primarily made use of oil, rubbing it into the hair of the head and the beard (Ps. 133:2; Eccles. 9:8). Women used cosmetic preparations which included eye paint, powders, rouge, ointments for the body, and perfumes. There are only limited references made to cosmetics in the Bible.

Utensils, Colors, and Manufacture of Cosmetics Cosmetic utensils of glass, wood, and bone have been found in archeological excavations in Palestine, Egypt, and Mesopotamia. In Ur, utensils have been discovered dated as early as 2500 B.C. In Egypt a scene on a sarcophagus dated about 2000 B.C. depicts a woman holding a mirror. In Palestine most frequently uncovered are limestone bowls or palettes. These are ordinarily in the form of small bowls, about four inches in diameter, with flat bases and a small shallow hole in the center. The wide rim was usually decorated with incised geometric designs. They were used to prepare colors for making up the face. Mixing was done by means of bone spatulas or small pestles. Possibly imported from Syria, the palettes were common in the northern part of Palestine from about 1000 B.C. on.

Other paraphernalia uncovered include small glass vials and small pottery juglets used as perfume containers, alabaster jars used for ointments, ivory flasks, cosmetic burners, and perfume boxes such as that mentioned in Isa. 3:20. Ivory combs, bronze mirrors, hairpins, kohl sticks, unguent spoons, and tweezers also were used by women in biblical times. In the excavations at Lachish, an object was discovered which appears to be a curling iron and is dated about 1400 B.C. In the Cave of Letters, one of the hiding places of some rebels of the Bar Kochba War (A.D. 132-135), findings included a woman's mirror and cosmetic utensils of glass, wood, and bone.

The colors for cosmetic preparations came from various minerals. Red ocher was used for lip color. White was obtained from lead carbonate. Green eyelid coloring was derived from turquoise or malachite, and black was often made from lead sulfate. Kohl or manganese was used for outlining the eyes. Colors were also produced from ivories, bitumen, and burned woods.

Expert craftsmen made the cosmetics. They imported many of the raw ingredients from India and Arabia. Oils for skin creams were extracted from olives, almonds, gourds, other trees and plants, and animal and fish fats. Fragrances came from seeds, plant leaves, fruits, and flowers, especially roses, jasmines, mints, balsams, and cinnamon.

Eye Paint Women painted their eyelids to make their eyes appear larger (Jer. 4:30 NASB). There may also have been some medicinal value by preventing dryness of the eyelid or discouraging disease-carrying flies. However, biblical references often seem to associate the practice of painting the eyes with women of questionable reputation (2 Kings 9:30; Ezek. 23:40).

Dry powders for eye coloring were stored in pouches, reeds, reed like tubes of stone, or small jars. The reference to Job's daughter, "Kerenhappuch" (horn of antimony or eye paint, Job 42:14), indicates the powders were also carried in horns. The powders were mixed with water or gum and applied to the eyelids with small rods made of ivory, wood, or metal.

Egyptian women favored the colors of black and green, painting the upper eyelid black and the lower one green. Mesopotamian women preferred yellows and reds. Heavy black lines were traced around the eyes to make them appear more almond-shaped.

Ointments and Perfumes Creams, ointments, and perfumes were especially important in the hot Near Eastern climate. Creams protected the skin against the heat of the sun and counteracted body odors. Ointments were applied to the head (Matt. 6:17) or to the whole body (Ruth 3:3) as part of hygienic cleansing. They were considered part of the beautification process (Esther 2:12). Anointing one's head with oil was a sign of gladness (Ps. 45:7). In worship services anointing was a special part of consecration (Exod. 30:30-32). The formula was given by God and was a priestly secret (Exod. 30:22-38). Ointments were used by prophets in anointing new kings. Elijah anointed Jehu (2 Kings 9:3), and Jehoiada anointed Joash (2 Kings 11:12). In NT times a good host displayed hospitality by anointing guests with ointments (Luke 7:37-50). Ointment was sometimes used to anoint the sick (James 5:14). Perfumed ointments were part of the preparation for burial (Mark 14:8; Luke 23:56).

The use of perfume is an ancient practice. The first recorded mention is on the fifteenth century B.C. tomb of Queen Hatshepsut who had sent an expedition to the land of Punt to fetch frankincense. Herodotus (450 B.C.) mentioned Arabia's aromatics. To the magi who bore gifts to the Christ child, the offering of frankincense symbolized divinity.

Perfumes mentioned in the Bible include aloes (Num. 24:6); balm (Ezek. 27:17); cinnamon (Prov. 7:17); frankincense (Isa. 43:23; Matt. 2:11); myrrh (Song 5:5; Matt. 2:11); and spikenard (John 12:3). The perfumes were derived from the sap or gum of the tree (frankincense, myrrh), the root (spikenard), or the bark (cinnamon). They were often quite expensive and imported from Arabia (frankincense, myrrh) and India (aloes, spikenard, and Ceylon (cinnamon)).

The perfumes could be produced as a dry powder and kept in perfume boxes (Isa. 3:20), or as an ointment and kept in alabaster jars, such as the spikenard with which Mary anointed Jesus (John 12:3). They could also be obtained in the natural form as gum or pellets of resin. In this form they were placed in cosmetic burners and the resin burned. In close or confined quarters, the resulting incense smoke would act as a fumigation for both the body and the clothes, such as that which seems to be described in the beautification process noted in Esther 2:12. See Anoint; Perfume, Perfumer.

Darlene R. Gautsch

COULTER KJV word for both mattock and plowshare.

COUNCIL, HEAVENLY A meeting of God and the heavenly hosts which points to God's role as King of the universe. Some scholars have proposed an analogy with Mesopotamian and Canaanite myths about meetings of the pantheon of gods to decide the fate of the cosmos. For example, angels are depicted as presenting themselves before God, perhaps to report their contributions to His plan (Job 1:6; 2:1) or to discuss how that plan will be effectuated (1 Kings 22:20b; possibly Gen. 1:26, though this is doubtful). However, important differences exist. The monotheism of the Hebrew people is proclaimed, rather than called into question, by the council texts. Yahweh (the LORD) sits enthroned amidst the adoration and worship of the angelic creaturely beings (Ps. 29:1), and in the assembly He is greatly feared as well as praised (Ps. 89:5-8). His presiding over the assembly is directly tied to His sole claim as Ruler and Judge (Ps. 82:1,8).

Humans are sometimes privy to the workings of God's council. A true prophet of Yahweh is someone who has stood in God's council. In his ordeal with the false prophets, Micaiah reports his observation of council deliberations (1 Kings 22:19-23). Likewise, Eliphaz asks Job if he stood in God's council, implying that his claims would thereby be substantiated (Job 15:8). Jeremiah condemns those prophets who have not stood in God's council, for if they had, they would know God's plan and would not lead His people astray (Jer. 23:18,22). Participation in the council by the prophet, then, leads to predictive success.

Demons sometimes appear before the council. In the story of Ahab's fall, an evil spirit is enlisted to deceive the false prophets. God questions the spirits regarding Ahab's enticement, but this does not mean that God is consulting the angels about His plan. His response to the lying spirit indicates that its success has been ordained (1 Kings 22:23). Satan appears before God's throne to accuse the saints (Job 1:9-11; 2:4-5; Zech. 3:1-2), yet he does not seem to be a regular attendee. The text states that Satan came with the angels (Job 1:6; 2:1) after roaming the Earth (Job 1:7; 2:2). This is to be contrasted with the angelic beings who perpetually stand around God's throne (Rev. 4:6b-8). It may be safely concluded that evil spirits participate in the council when they have a function to serve in God's plan. See Sons of God.

John Laing

COUNCIL OF JERUSALEM Name given to the meeting described in Acts 15:6-22. The purpose of the council was to determine the terms on which Gentile converts to Christianity would be received into the church. The occasion of the meeting was a significant turning of Gentiles to Christ as a result of missionary activity by Barnabas and Paul. Some maintained that all Gentile converts must submit to circumcision and observe the whole of the Mosaic law. Paul and Barnabas, however, contended that imposing such requirements on Gentiles was unreasonable. The solution proposed by the Jerusalem Council was that Gentile believers would not be required first to become Jewish proselytes but that they would be asked to refrain from idolatry, from sexual misconduct, and from eating blood. See Acts of the Apostles; Paul.

COUNSELOR One who analyzes a situation and gives advice to one who has responsibility for making a decision. Israelite kings seem to have employed counselors on a regular basis (2 Sam. 16:23; 1 Kings 12:6-14; Isa. 1:26; 3:3; Mic. 4:9). God is often regarded as a counselor (Pss. 16:7; 73:24) as is His Messiah (Isa. 9:6; 11:2) and the Holy Spirit (John 14:16,26; 15:26; 16:7). See Advocate; Comforter.

COUNTENANCE One's face as an indication of mood, emotion, or character (Gen. 4:5-6; Prov. 15:13; Eccles. 7:3; Mark 10:22). Having God's countenance upon one is a way of speaking about being in God's presence (Ps. 21:6). Being in God's presence may bring peace (Num. 6:25-26), blessing (Pss. 4:6; 89:15), or victory (Ps. 44:3). It may also bring destruction (Ps. 80:16) or judgment for sin (Ps. 90:8).

COUNTERVAIL Old English word meaning “to equal,” “be commensurate with,” “compensate for” in Esther 7:4.

COURIERS Members of the royal guard who carried messages throughout the kingdom (2 Chron. 30:6,10; Esther 3:13,15; 8:10,14). Roman couriers were empowered to confiscate transportation or the help of citizens of the empire in the fulfillment of their duties (Matt. 5:41; Mark 15:21).

COURT OF THE GUARD or COURT OF THE PRISON Open court in the Jerusalem palace reserved for the detention of prisoners during the day of Jeremiah (Jer. 32:8,12; 33:1; 37:21; 38:6,13,28; 39:14-15 KJV). Translated in the modern versions as “court of the guard.”

COURTS OF THE GENTILES, WOMEN, ISRAELITES, PRIESTS
See Temple.

COURT SYSTEMS Court systems of ancient Israel are not fully described in the OT or in any extrabiblical source. Laws governing the conduct of judges and witnesses, reports about leaders who were consulted for legal decisions, and nar of judicial proceedings supplement the accounts of Moses' appointment of assistant judges (Exod. 18) and Jehoshaphat's judicial reform (2 Chron. 19). Archaeological investigation has not yet discovered court documents from ancient Israel.

Legal disputes could be settled at the level of society in which they arose. The head of a family had authority to decide cases within his household without bringing the matter before a professional judge (Gen. 31; 38). The law codes limit his authority in some cases (Num. 5:11-31; Deut. 21:18-21; 22:13-21). When persons from more than one family were involved, the case was taken before the elders of the town, who were the heads of the extended families living together in that place and represented the community as a whole. The elders would serve as witnesses to a transaction (Deut. 25:5-10; Ruth 4:1-12), decide guilt or innocence (Deut. 19; 22:13-21; Josh. 20:1-6), or execute the punishment due the guilty party (Deut. 22:13-21; 25:1-3). The elders helped to preserve the community by seeing that disputes were settled in a manner that everyone would recognize as just.

Disputes between tribes were more difficult to resolve. When a Judahite woman who was the concubine of a Levite living in the territory of Ephraim was raped and murdered in Gibeah of Benjamin, several tribes were involved (Judg. 19-21). The Levite, therefore, appealed to all the tribes of Israel for justice. The initial attempts at negotiation were rebuffed when the men of Benjamin refused to hand over the guilty persons for punishment. Israel then went to war against the whole tribe of Benjamin, defeated them, and vowed not to let them intermarry with the rest of the tribes. The biblical historian comments regretfully that this sort of thing happened when there was no king to execute the law (Judg. 21:25).

During the period of Israelite history covered by the book of Judges, several individuals appointed by God possessed special judicial authority. The so-called “minor judges” (Judg. 10:1-5; 12:8-15) are not credited with delivering Israel from oppression by military means, so their function may have been purely judicial or political. Some scholars have identified their office as “judge of all Israel” in the tribal league, but others have argued that their jurisdiction was over a smaller area. Deborah, and later Samuel, also decided cases. Their judicial activities took place in a limited area (Judg. 4:4-5; 1 Sam. 7:15-17). We do not know whether they only heard cases on appeal. The Bible does not say how any of these individuals came to possess their authority as judges. Both Deborah and Samuel were prophets. The other deliverer judges were called by God and possessed by God's Spirit, so judicial authority was probably also a divine gift.

A hierarchical system of courts and judges could exist when political authority was centralized. In Exod. 18:13-26 Moses appointed assistant judges to decide the smaller cases so that his own energy could be preserved for the difficult ones. A system in which local courts referred complex cases to the supreme judges is described in Deut. 17:2-13; 19:16-19. This was not an appeals court to which dissatisfied parties could bring their cases for reconsideration; it was a court of experts who could pass judgment in cases too complicated for the local judges to decide themselves. The court system instituted by Jehoshaphat also followed this pattern (2 Chron. 19:4-11). Although appointed by the king, the judges were responsible directly to God (2 Chron. 19:6). It is not clear whether the residents of Jerusalem went directly to the central court. We only know that Jeremiah was tried in Jerusalem by “the princes of Judah” after being charged by the priests and prophets with a crime worthy of death. The system described in Deut. 17; 19 and 2 Chron. 19 has both priests and secular officials as judges in the central court in Jerusalem.

The king possessed limited judicial authority. Despite his supreme political power, he was not personally above the law. Saul's death sentences on Jonathan (1 Sam. 14:39) and the priests at Nob (1 Sam. 22:6-23) were not accepted by the people. Jonathan was not punished, and the priests were finally killed by a non-Israelite. David was led to convict himself of his crimes against Uriah and his mistreatment of Absalom (2 Sam. 12:1-6; 14:1-24). Unlike Saul, David and Solomon were able to exercise authority to execute or spare persons who represented a threat to their reigns (2 Sam. 1:1-16; 4:1-12; 19:16-23; 21:1-14; 1 Kings 2:19-46). Jezebel used the existing town court to dispose of Naboth and confiscate his vineyard. God, however, punished her and Ahab, for having Naboth executed on trumped-up charges even though Ahab was king (1 Kings 21-22). Deuteronomy 17:18-20 places the king at the same level as his subjects with respect to the requirements of God's law. In Israel the king did not have the authority to enact new laws or to make arbitrary legal rulings contrary to the prevailing understanding of justice.

The ideal of the just king who oversees the dispensing of justice for all his subjects was known in Israel. In this role the king himself was the leading example of a just and honest judge and was personally involved in hearing cases as well as appointing other judges. Absalom was able to take advantage of David's failure to live up to this ideal (2 Sam. 15:1-6).

Solomon is the supreme example of the just king, having been granted discernment and wisdom by God (1 Kings 3).

The relationship of the king's court to the rest of the judicial system is uncertain. The wise woman from Tekoa appealed to David a decision that had been made within her extended family (2 Sam. 14). The Shunammite widow successfully appealed to the king of Israel for the restoration of her house and land, which she had abandoned during a time of famine (2 Kings 8:1-6). The famous case of the two prostitutes and their infant sons was brought directly to Solomon without any previous judgment (1 Kings 3:16-28). All of these cases seem to be exceptional. Powerful third parties were involved in the first two cases; Joab set up the audience with David, and the Shunammite had an advocate present in the person of Gehazi, Elisha's servant. The two prostitutes had no families to settle their dispute. We are not certain, therefore, what these accounts can tell us about how cases usually came to be heard by the king. There are no OT laws that define the process of judicial appeal to the king.

Priests also possessed judicial authority. The passages about the high court in Jerusalem mention priests alongside the secular judge (Deut. 17:9; 19:17; 2 Chron. 19:8,11). Some scholars believe that this division between religious and civil courts reflects the Postexilic period, in which the secular authority was that of the Persian king and Jewish priests who administered the law of God (Ezra 7:25-26). Israelite priests, however, possessed a body of knowledge from which they ruled on matters pertaining to the worship of God and the purity of the community. The cult and the judicial system were both concerned with removing bloodguilt from the community (Deut. 21:1-9). We cannot determine how the priestly judges were related to the other court systems or how cases were assigned to the various judges.

Actual court procedures may be partially reconstructed as follows. There were no prosecutors or defense attorneys; accuser and accused argued their own cases. The burden of proof lay with the defendant. Physical evidence was presented when necessary (Deut. 22:13-21), but proving one's case depended primarily on testimony and persuasive argument. The word of at least two witnesses was required to convict (Deut. 19:15). The system depended on the honesty of witnesses and the integrity of judges (Exod. 18:21; 20:16; 23:1-3,6-9; Lev. 19:15-19; Deut. 16:19-20; 19:16-21; 2 Chron. 19:6-7). The prophets condemned corrupt judges (Isa. 1:21-26; Amos 5:12,15; Mic. 7:3) and those who supported them (Amos 5:10). Cases brought by a malicious witness giving false testimony were referred to the central court (Deut. 19:16-21). In some circumstances the accused could submit to an ordeal or an oath to prove his or her innocence (Exod. 22:6-10; Num. 5:11-31; Deut. 21:1-8). If guilty, he or she would be punished directly by God. Casting lots to discover the guilty party was another extraordinary procedure. In both cases reported in the Bible the person identified also confessed his guilt (Josh. 7; 1 Sam. 14:24-46). The judges were responsible to administer punishment, often with the whole community participating (Deut. 21:21). The court systems could only function well when the community agreed with their decisions and cooperated to enforce them. By judging justly, the courts taught God's law and the principles of divine justice. The courts worked together with the people to restore the community to peace and wholeness under God whenever they recognized the one in the right and imposed an appropriate penalty on the guilty one.

Pamela J. Scalise

COUSIN At times the KJV uses “cousin” when a distant relative is referred to (Mark 6:4; Luke 1:36,58; 2:44; 14:12). The same Greek word in all these passages means relatives, kin, or countryman.

COVENANT Oath-bound promise whereby one party solemnly pledges to bless or serve another party in some specified way. Sometimes the keeping of the promise depends upon the meeting of certain conditions by the party to whom the promise is made. On other occasions the promise is made unilaterally and unconditionally. The covenant concept is a central, unifying theme of Scripture, establishing and defining God's relationship to man in all ages.

In the OT, the Hebrew word translated “covenant” is berit. The term probably derives from the verb bara, “to bind.” The noun berit originally denoted a binding relationship between two parties in which each pledged to perform some service for the other. The NT, following the Septuagint, uniformly uses the Greek word diatheke for the covenant idea, avoiding the similar term suntheke, which would wrongly portray a covenant as a mutual contract or alliance rather than an oath-bound promise. This does not mean that a covenant may not, in some cases, take on characteristics common to a mutual agreement or contract, but the essence of the covenant concept is clearly that of a binding pledge.

Covenant Rituals and Signs The technical language used when covenants were made was “to cut a covenant” (karat berit). This terminology referred to ritual sacrifices that accompanied covenant making. Often animals sacrificed would be cut in two. In some covenant rituals part of the animal would be eaten by the covenanting parties and part burned in honor of their god. Sometimes the parties would walk symbolically between the pieces of the animal. In any case, the shedding of blood in such rituals signified the solemnity of the covenant, each party vowing not to break the covenant on pain of death.

The making of covenants often included signs as well. A sign served as a memorial, reminding the parties of their promises. Abraham gave Abimelech seven ewe lambs “as a witness” to their covenant (Gen. 21:30); Jacob and Laban used a heap of stones (Gen. 31:46-48); the sign of God's covenant with Noah was the rainbow (Gen. 9:12-15); circumcision was the sign of the Abrahamic and Mosaic covenants (Gen. 17:10-14; Exod. 12:47-48); and baptism is the sign of the new covenant (Col. 2:9-12; Rom. 6:3-4).

Covenants Between Humans The Bible records many covenants between human beings. Abraham and Abimelech made a covenant at Beersheba (Gen. 21:22-34), Abraham promising to deal kindly with Abimelech's family, and Abimelech promising to recognize Abraham's ownership of a well. Jacob and Laban made a covenant (Gen. 31:44-54), swearing to do each other no harm. Jonathan and David cut a covenant in which Jonathan acknowledged David's right to the throne of Israel (1 Sam. 18:3; 23:18).

The Gibeonites, who were under God's ban to be slaughtered, deceived Joshua into a covenant to live in peace and protect them (Josh. 9:15). Abner covenanted with David to lead the northern tribes of Israel to break with Ish-Bosheth and join David (2 Sam. 3:12-13). Solomon made a covenant of peace with Hiram, King of Tyre, committing their countries to mutual trade (1 Kings 5:12). King Asa led Judah to make a covenant to seek the Lord after many years of rebellion (2 Chron. 15:9-15).

There are many other human covenants in the Bible, some of which were ill advised. For example, Hosea warned Israel of God's judgement for her covenant with Assyria (Hos. 12:1), and God punished Asa for a covenant with BenHadad of Aram (2 Chron. 16:2-13). The dire consequences of these covenants were brought about because Israel relied upon foreign military power rather than God (cp. 2 Chron. 16:7).

Of special interest among human covenants is marriage. Malachi 2:14 clearly indicates that marriage was understood as a covenant. In marriage one man and one woman vow to live together in a lifelong commitment (Gen. 2:24; Matt. 19:4-6), involving sexual union, sacrificial love, and mutual support.

The Divine Covenants Most significant in Scripture are several covenants God makes with man. These covenants provide a unifying principle for understanding the whole of Scripture and define the relationship between God and man. The heart of that relationship is found in the phrase, "I will be their God and they shall be My people" (cp. Gen. 17:7-8; Exod. 6:6-7; Lev. 26:12; Deut. 4:20; Jer. 11:4; Ezek. 11:20).

The first covenant that God made is the covenant of redemption. This was a covenant that God the Father established with God the Son to redeem fallen humanity. In 2 Tim. 1:9-10 (HCSB) we learn that God has saved us not by works but by grace "which was given to us in Christ Jesus before time began." And in Titus 1:2 (HCSB) Paul declares that God promised the elect eternal life "before time began." The term "covenant" is not here, but the concept of an oath-bound promise is evident. This promise was made to Christ who came to fulfill an eternal plan to save those the Father gave him (John 6:37-40; 17:1-5). God the Father bestowed (lit. “covenanted”) upon Him a kingdom which He in turn bestows upon His disciples (Luke 22:28-30).

The biblical covenant that appears first is the Edenic covenant or covenant of works which God made with Adam in the garden of Eden (Gen. 2:15-17). Hosea 6:6-7 states plainly that this arrangement was a covenant. God promised man in his state of innocence that he would give him everlasting life on the condition of his perfect obedience. Obedience would be measured by whether he kept God's command to refrain from eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. However, Adam and Eve ate the forbidden fruit, thus breaking this covenant and falling under its terrible curse: “in the day that you eat of it you shall surely die.”

It is important to note that the covenant of works provided no method of restoration. Since it demanded perfection, this covenant, once broken, left Adam and his posterity without hope. It is in this context that we find the inauguration of another covenant, the covenant of grace. After the fall, God cursed the serpent and promised the seed of the woman would crush the serpent's head, though his own heel would be bruised (Gen. 3:15). This promise was an unconditional guarantee that God would graciously rescue fallen man from the curse of the covenant of works. The NT makes clear that the “seed of the woman” who fulfills this promise is Christ (Gal. 3:19; Col. 2:13-15; 1 John 3:8). The covenant of Grace, then, is God's promise to save sinful humanity from the fall's curse by grace alone through the redemptive work of Christ. This redemptive work is foreshadowed even in Gen. 3 where God apparently slays an animal to provide coverings for Adam and Eve's nakedness (v. 21).

Genesis 4–6 describes the rapid moral decline of the human race after the fall that led God to destroy most of them with a flood. However, “Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord” (Gen. 6:8), and God preserved the human race by instructing him to build an ark in which he and his family and the animal species could survive the floodwaters. After the flood, God established the Noahic covenant (Gen. 9:9-17), promising never again to flood the earth. This covenant called for no human response. God simply and graciously bound himself to preserve the human race and other living creatures.

The next biblical covenant is the Abrahamic covenant (cp. Gen. 12:1-3; 15:1-19; 17:1-14; 22:15-18). God called Abraham out of Ur to go to Canaan, promising to make him a great nation which in turn would bless all nations (Gen. 12:1-3). The utter graciousness of this covenant is seen clearly in the ratification ceremony in Gen. 15. God promised the aging Abraham that he would have a son and heir from his own body and that he would inherit the land of Canaan. Abraham believed God, which resulted in God's declaring him righteous (v. 6). Yet Abraham desired confirmation, asking, "How shall I know that I will inherit it?" In response God had Abraham cut several animals in two in accordance with the custom for cutting a covenant. However, unlike the custom, God alone passed between the animal pieces, signifying that His promise was unconditional and demonstrating to Abraham that He would certainly fulfill the promises He had made. God repeats His oath in Gen. 22:18, adding further that it would be through Abraham's seed that all nations would someday be blessed. Paul applies the singular noun "seed" as a reference to Christ (Gal. 3:16). It is through Christ, Abraham's prophesied descendent, that the blessings of the Abrahamic Covenant would come to every nation. Paul understands that the blessing the nations receive is, like Abraham, to be justified by faith alone rather than works, and to receive the gift of the Holy Spirit (Gal. 3:8-14).

In the course of time, Abraham's descendants were enslaved in Egypt. They cried out to God for deliverance, and because God "remembered His covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob" (Exod. 2:24 NASB), He sent Moses to confront Pharaoh and lead the people out of bondage. Once free, the Israelites gathered at Mount Sinai. There God established with them the Sinai or Mosaic covenant (Exod. 19:5). This covenant bears the closest resemblance to the suzerainty treaties found in other ancient near-eastern nations. In such treaties, the suzerain (i.e., overlord or king) would pledge to provide benevolent rule and protection to conquered peoples in exchange for their loyalty. Suzerainty treaties had certain stylized features that are paralleled in the Mosaic covenant (Exod. 19-23). These features include:

1. a historical prologue reviewing the past relationship between the parties;
2. a statement of obligations the parties have to each other;
3. provisions for occasionally reading the treaty in public; and
4. lists of blessings and curses to follow from keeping or breaking the treaty.

Though the Mosaic covenant followed this familiar pattern, its purpose and content differed significantly. For one thing, the Mosaic covenant was brought about not by an act of conquest but by God's gracious deliverance of Israel from bondage. Further, God's covenant with Israel established not simply an agreement between a suzerain and his vassals, but an intimate relationship based on loyal love (Hb. chesed).

The unique feature of the Mosaic covenant was the Law, summarized in the Ten Commandments (Exod. 20:10-17). By promulgating the Law, God established Israel as a distinct people and nation, existing under His own theocratic rule. God promised Israel that they would be His special possession, His "holy nation," and the Lord promised to be their God (cp. Exod. 19:5-6; 20:2). This promise was conditioned on Israel's obedience to the Law. God's grace singled out Israel as the recipient of this covenant (Deut. 7:7), but they were warned that the temporal blessings promised would be theirs only if they kept his commandments (Deut. 7:12-26; 28:1-14). Failure to keep God's commandments would result in calamitous curses including being "divorced" by God and no longer being His special people (Deut. 8:19-20; 28:15-68; cp. Jer. 3:6-8; Hos. 1:1-8). Under the Mosaic covenant, Israel repeatedly rebelled against God, incurring divine wrath on numerous occasions, but God mercifully limited the severity of judgment because of His promise to Abraham (cp. 2 Kings 13:22-23). However, God's patience finally wore out, and He imposed the curses first on Israel (722 B.C.) and then Judah (586 B.C.) by the Assyrian and Babylonian exiles. But, again, because of the unconditional promises to Abraham and David, God preserved a remnant of Judah and brought them back to Palestine (cp. 1 Kings 11:11-13; Neh. 9:7-8,32).

The NT adds insight into the meaning and significance of the Mosaic covenant. Hebrews indicates that the covenant's stipulations for animal sacrifices were “a shadow of the good things to come” and that they were not efficacious in atoning for sin (Heb. 10:1-4). Rather they were symbolic pointers to the substitutionary sacrifice of Christ that alone can wash away sins (Heb. 10:11-14). Paul explains that the Mosaic covenant was added to the Abrahamic covenant “until the Seed to whom the promise was made would come” (Gal. 3:18-19 HCSB). That is, God established the Mosaic covenant with national Israel as a temporary arrangement whose purpose would be completed at the first coming of Christ. Further, the purpose of this covenant was that the law would serve as “our guardian until Christ” (Gal. 3:24 HCSB). It does so by giving God's righteous demands, which sinners are incapable of keeping (cp. Rom. 5:13,20; 8:7-8), and the breaking of which earns them the wrath of God. Realizing their helplessness before law, penitent sinners may see their need of a Savior and be driven to Christ.

God made another unconditional covenant with David (2 Sam. 7:1-17; 23:1-5). In the Davidic covenant, God made a promise that He would establish for David a perpetual kingdom, one of his descendants sitting upon the throne of Israel forever. Moreover, God promised David's seed, “I will be a father to him and he will be a son to Me” (2 Sam. 7:14 NASB). The promise is unconditional, God being determined to keep it despite the wickedness of subsequent kings descended from David (1 Kings 11:11-13; 2 Kings 20:4-6). Of course, the eventual destruction of the Davidic dynasty seems to call into question the perpetuity of this covenant, but the prophets looked forward to eventual restoration of David's kingdom (Amos 9:11).

The NT also provides insight into the Davidic covenant. For example, several NT authors use the theme of the king's sonship to God to connect the Davidic King to Jesus Christ (cp. Ps. 2:6-7; Heb. 1:5-6; Acts 13:32-34; Rom. 1:3-4). As the actual Son of God, He is the ultimate fulfillment of the covenant with David. Further, Christ's resurrection and ascension mark His coronation as the Davidic King seated on David's throne (Acts 2:29-36).

And the establishment of the church with the influx of Gentile converts is taken by James as marking the restoration of David's kingdom prophesied by Amos (Amos 9:11-12; Acts 15:13-18).

Finally, God established what both testaments call the new covenant. Jeremiah was the first to speak of it (Jer. 31:27-34). In the wake of Israel's covenant-breaking disobedience, God promised that He would someday establish a new covenant with Israel unlike the old covenant that they broke. In this new covenant God says, "I will put My law within them, and on their heart I will write it; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people...[and] they shall all know Me...for I will forgive their iniquity, and their sin I will remember no more" (vv. 33-34 NASB). Ezekiel echoes this theme, saying that in the new covenant God will "give you a new heart and put a new spirit within you...and cause you to walk in My statutes" (Ezek. 36:26-27 NASB). This new covenant is contrasted with the old Mosaic covenant and promises several blessings that the old covenant could not provide: regeneration or new birth, the full forgiveness of sins, an intimate knowledge of God, and the assurance that this new covenant is unbreakable. The promises of the new covenant signify the fulfillment of all of the redemptive purposes that God established in the covenant of grace, bringing to an end the curse of the Fall and providing full salvation for the human race.

Jesus announced the fulfillment of the new covenant in His institution of the Lord's Supper (Luke 22:20; 1 Cor. 11:23-25). Jesus' substitutionary death on the cross, which the Lord's Supper symbolizes, brought the new covenant into being and made the old covenant obsolete (cp. Heb. 8:6-13; 9:11-15). In the new covenant, Christ brings to fulfillment the promises and purposes of the previous covenants. As indicated above, Christ is the "seed of the woman" that God promised would crush the serpent's head; He is the seed of Abraham who would bless all the nations; He is the goal of the Mosaic law; He is the King who sits forever on David's throne. Moreover, as Christ is "Immanuel" or "God with us" (Matt. 1:23; John 1:14), He brings to its consummation the intercovenantal theme that God "will be their God, and they shall be [His] people." Also the new covenant fulfills all the OT promises to Israel in the life and ministry of the New Israel, the church (cp. Gal. 6:16; 1 Pet. 2:9-10; Acts 15:14-17; Heb. 11:8-16; Rev. 21:12-14). Of course, not all the blessings of the New Covenant have been fully realized. The ultimate consummation of the new covenant awaits the return of Christ.

The Unity of the Divine Covenants Despite their differences, the divine covenants exhibit a structural and thematic unity which unifies the whole of Scripture. Their structural unity is seen in the fact that each successive divine covenant grows out of and depends upon previous ones. Each covenant forms a new phase in one overarching divine plan. Both the covenant of works and the covenant of grace are the historical outworking of the more fundamental covenant of redemption. The covenant of grace, in which God unilaterally promises graciously to redeem fallen humanity, presupposes the failure of the covenant of works. But both of these covenants depend upon that eternal covenant made between God the Father and God the Son to redeem sinners from sin and misery. Before time began, God promised to give salvation to a sinful human race. That promise necessitated the establishment in history of the covenants of works and grace.

All of the subsequent divine covenants are stages of the covenant of grace in which God progressively unfolds the promise made in Gen. 3:15. The covenant with Noah preserves the human race from destruction so that the seed of the woman might be born. It demonstrates the grace of God in that God promises to forbear patiently with the human race until the coming of Christ (cp. Acts 17:30). The Abrahamic covenant follows from the covenant of grace as well, creating a historical lineage through which the promised seed would come. In all subsequent covenants, God graciously preserves this lineage despite the wickedness of Abraham's descendants. The Mosaic covenant, too, is part of the covenant of grace and an extension of the Abrahamic covenant. Indeed, the Scriptures explicitly state that the Mosaic covenant is established because God “remembered His covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob” (Exod. 2:24). By delivering Israel from Egypt and forming them into a nation through the promulgation of the Law, God established an arrangement in which all of mankind might see their inability to live up to the covenant of works and thus realize their need for a Savior. Within the context of national Israel, God also founded the Davidic covenant that provided the divine monarchy through which God will govern His redeemed people for all eternity. God also kept this covenant unconditionally, preserving the rebellious Hebrew nation and bringing them back from exile “for My own sake and for My servant David's sake” (2 Kings 20:4-6 NASB). Lastly, the new covenant brings the covenant of grace to its consummation with the life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus Christ who is the promised seed of the covenant of grace. Thus, in the progressive revelation of these covenants, we can see the unfolding of one eternal plan.

The unity of the covenants is further seen in the single theme present in all of them: “I will be your God and you shall be My people” (cp. Gen. 17:7-8). The divine covenants are designed to bring fallen human beings into intimate personal relationship with God. This theme is developed in Scripture in close connection with the “Immanuel Principle” of God actually dwelling in the midst of his people. The OT tabernacle was the place where God met personally with Israel. When the tabernacle was consecrated, God Himself connected the Immanuel Principle with the covenant theme: “I will dwell among the sons of Israel and will be their God” (Exod. 29:45 NASB). Christ embodies the consummate form of this principle in the new covenant. He is called “Immanuel, which is translated ‘God with us’” (Matt. 1:23), and John explicitly states that in Christ God “became flesh and took up residence [lit. ‘tabernacled’] among us” (John 1:14 HCSB). The final mention of this covenant theme is found in Rev. 21:3. After the second coming of Christ, we find God's covenant promise fully and finally realized: “Look! God's dwelling is with men, and He will live with them. They will be His people, and God Himself will be with them and be their God” (HCSB).

Steven B. Cowan

COVENANT BOX (TEV) See Ark of the Covenant.

COVENANT OF SALT Often utilized in covenant making, probably as symbolic of that which preserves and prevents decay. The hope was that the covenant thus enacted would endure (Num. 18:19; 2 Chron. 13:5). Salt was an essential element of the cereal offerings made to God (Lev. 2:13).

COVERING OF THE LIVER See Caul.

COVERING THE HEAD In 1 Cor. 11:1-16 Paul dealt with the matter of covering the head in worship services. This extended treatment shows that this must have been a subject of considerable interest in Corinth.

The Jewish custom was for all women to cover their heads with a veil when they went outside their homes. To appear in public without a veil was a sign of immodesty and lack of virtue. To appear in a worship service without a veil was unthinkable.

Some of the Corinthian Christian women had evidently appeared in worship without a veil on their heads. Perhaps they had understood Paul's emphasis on Christian freedom to mean that they no longer had to observe any of the old Jewish customs—including that of wearing a veil.

The effects of such a change in dress style had been disruptive to the worship services and Christian witness in Corinth. This led Paul to state that a woman should cover her head during the worship service. At the same time, he encouraged the men to follow the Jewish custom of worshiping with uncovered heads.

Paul cited various reasons in 1 Cor. 11:1-16 for his position. He referred to: (1) the order in creation (v. 3), (2) social customs of the time (vv. 4-6), (3) the presence of angels (v. 10), (4) nature itself (vv. 13-15), and (5) the common practice in the churches (v. 16).

The principle here is that Christians must be sensitive to the cultures in which they live. They should not needlessly flout local customs unless there is some moral reason to do so. To be insensitive to the culture in which one lives causes one to offend many of the people whom the church is trying to win to Jesus Christ. It diverts attention away from the most important thing and focuses it on peripheral matters. See Corinth; Woman; Worship.

Lynn Jones

COVET, COVETOUS Inordinate desire to possess what belongs to another, usually tangible things.

While the Hebrew word for “covet” can also be translated “to desire,” in the tenth commandment it means an ungoverned and selfish desire that threatens the basic rights of others. Coveting was sinful because it focused greedily on the property of a neighbor that was his share in the land God had promised His people. After Israel's defeat at Ai, Achan confessed that his selfish desire for treasure was so great that he disobeyed God's specific commandment (Josh. 7:21). In defense of Judah's poor, Micah declared the Lord's judgment against the land-grabbers for coveting small farms and actually seizing them from their powerless owners (Mic. 2:2). Although the commandment against coveting seems concerned only with motivation, some passages indicate that coveting in the heart was expected to end with taking what was desired.

In the NT the same Greek word is translated “covet” in the KJV and “earnestly desire” in the RSV (1 Cor. 12:31). So covet could be used in a good sense. Another Greek word describes the ruthless self-assertion that the Tenth Commandment forbids (Luke 12:15; Eph. 5:5). In the Luke passage Jesus said that the covetous man will not be “rich toward God.” In the Ephesian passage Paul classed the covetous man with the idolater. So the greedy person—one who covets—denies his faith in God and scorns His values.

William J. Fallis

COW Designates domestic bovine animals, especially the female. Cows are mentioned in relation to giving birth and nurturing calves (Lev. 22:27-28; 1 Sam. 6:7). They were among the cattle gift that Jacob offered to Esau (Gen. 32:15). Amos called the wealthy, selfish women of Samaria “cows of Bashan” (Amos 4:1), referring to the area that was wellknown for raising cows (Deut. 32:14). See Cattle.

COZ ^[ˈkɔz] (KJV, TEV) See Koz.

COZBI [Cōz' bi] Personal name meaning “my falsehood.” A Midianite woman who was slain by Phinehas after being brought into the tent of an Israelite man named Zimri (Num. 25:15). When both she and Zimri were executed, a plague that was sweeping through the Israelite camp was stopped.

COZEBA [Cō zē' bā] Place-name meaning “deceptive.” Home of descendants of Judah (1 Chron. 4:22). Its location is uncertain.

CRACKNEL Old English word for a hard brittle biscuit (1 Kings 14:3 KJV).

CRAFT Occupation or trade requiring manual dexterity or artistic skill. Several crafts were practiced in biblical times: carpentry, boat building, carving (wood, ivory, ebony, and alabaster), metalworking (gold, silver, bronze, and iron), weaving and spinning, tanning, tent making, basket weavers, potter's trade, fuller's trade, dyeing, sculpting, jeweler's trade, glassmaking, perfumery, embroidering, masonry, plastering, etc. See Occupations and Professions.

CRANE KJV translation of the Hebrew word in Isa. 38:14; Jer. 8:7. Modern translations read “swift” (NIV, NASB, REB) or dove (REB). See Birds.

CRAWLING THINGS NRSV translation of Hebrew term in Mic. 7:17. The Hebrew word also appears in Deut. 32:24,33 where it refers to poisonous snakes. See Creeping Things.

CREATION The nature of the Bible's teaching on creation is at once theological, doxological, and factual. Theologically the Bible counters pagan cosmological theories both ancient and modern: this world is not ultimate reality. Doxologically not only the creation itself declares the glory of God, but even the teaching of creation in Scripture is presented as praise to God. For instance, scholars recognize the pleasing literary symmetry in the structure of the creation days in Genesis. Factually the biblical texts reveal something about God's creative and formative actions in this world. Therefore, though the doctrine of creation is more than science, it is not unscientific—otherwise biblical theology and doxology are groundless.

Indeed these emphases are bound together in the doctrine of creation as a central theme throughout the Bible.

The Message of Creation God is eternal and transcendent; creation is not (Gen. 1:1; cp. Jesus' allusions to the "beginning of creation which God created" Mark 13:19 KJV; cp. Matt. 19:4; Mark 10:6). Everything owes its creaturely existence (Isa. 44:24; 45:12; Ps. 33:6; Rev. 4:11) to the work of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit (cp. Gen. 1:1; John 1:1; Gen. 1:2), with Christ as the preeminent agent of creation (John 1:10; Col. 1:16). Biblical teaching implies that God created the world out of nothing (Heb. 11:3). Unlike God, any created thing can be shaken; only what He desires will continue to exist (Heb. 1:3; 12:27; Col. 1:17).

In spite of its present subjection to ethical and material corruption, God's creation still bears the original impress of its complete goodness (Gen. 1:31; 1 Tim. 4:4). The human race alone enjoys the privilege of bearing His image (Gen. 1:27—all subsequent people, though not directly created as were Adam and Eve, are regarded as God's special handiwork; Ps. 89:47; cp. Ps. 102:18). Divine purpose (Col. 1:16) and design (e.g., the marking of time by the movements of the heavenly bodies in Gen. 1:14) pervade creation. The creation speaks of the glory of God in bold contrast with man (Pss. 8; 19:1-4).

The defacement of creation, then, is not original. Due to Adam's sin, creation now bears evidence of its subjection to futility, slavery to corruption, groaning and suffering (Rom. 8:20-22). Nevertheless, God's handiwork faithfully continues to attest of His eternal power and divine nature, despite the rebellion and idolatry of a race which chooses to turn away from this revealed knowledge (Rom. 1:18-23). The good news is that though God's image in the human race is marred due to the fall, the image is being renewed (Col. 3:10; Eph. 4:24) in those who are new creatures in Christ (2 Cor. 5:17; Gal. 6:15). One day the entire creation will be released into the freedom of the coming glory of the children of God (Rom. 8:20-22). Therefore, as foreshadowed by Adam, Christ is the true prototype for the company of the redeemed (Rom. 5:14; 1 Cor. 15:45).

Care in Interpreting Scripture and Science Especially since the Enlightenment, the scriptural teaching of creation has become the object of dissection and doubt. Relevant biblical texts are commonly treated today as prescientific mistakes or mythology. In this milieu teachers and preachers of the doctrine of creation can expect inquiry as to the truthfulness of the Bible in relation to the physical and literary “sciences.”

Historical critics typically view the creation narrative in Genesis as dependent on Mesopotamian or Egyptian parallel accounts. Yet none of the various scholarly reconstructions of dependence in Genesis has captured a scholarly consensus. Creation stories certainly do exist which are similar to Genesis in some aspects, but differences, even radical ones, are often ignored in the comparisons. For instance, the serene monotheism of Genesis stands in bold relief to the turbulent polytheism typically found in Babylonian tales. Some points of contact between Genesis and other creation accounts are, in fact, likely due to the biblical repudiation of the pagan ideas in those cosmogonies.

What has become a standard charge of modernist biblical critics is that Genesis not only contains mythology but is even comprised of two conflicting mythological accounts of creation in its opening chapters. Attempting to explain the first two chapters as a source and tradition compilation, the common conjecture is that a priestly source (P) underlying Gen. 1:1-2:4a is in conflict with the Yahwist (J) account in the rest of chapter 2. A growing scholarly tendency, however, is to reject the view that these chapters represent two competing creation accounts. Congruity in the literary structure of the two chapters indicates one hand rather than separate traditions. Rhetorical studies also imply that the two chapters present a unified narrative; and comparative studies indicate that origin stories in Sumeria and Babylon were told in doublet, with the general account followed by the more detailed. All of this lends support to the traditional view: chapter 2 presents a more detailed elaboration of the themes in chapter 1.

With the rise of modern science, another challenge to the biblical doctrine of creation has been mounted. An all too common perception is that the teachings of the Bible and science are either diametrically opposed or else completely irrelevant to each other. A healthier view, yet which requires more care and work, is that Scripture and science complement each other when each is correctly interpreted. Past interpretive mistakes and incomplete understandings of science and Bible are well known. For instance, Isaac Newton was mistaken in his corpuscular theory of light. Quantum phenomena continue to perplex our understanding. Biblical interpreters once believed the Bible taught a geocentric universe (also the scientific understanding of those times). Many interpretive biblical conundrums also remain such as the creation of light before the sun and stars in Gen. 1, or when and how to date creation. What is clear is that the church must not surrender to interpretive skepticism or doubts about biblical veracity and at the same time must resist interpretive fads.

The church must also stand firm in the face of speculative worldviews dressed up as scientific truth. The Bible does seem to recognize genetic variability within the various creaturely orders (e.g., since all humans have descended from Adam and Eve, there is only one human race—cp. Acts 17:26). But the almost infinite plasticity of species as postulated in Darwinism is rejected in the scriptural doctrine of creation (note that reproduction is “after their kind”; see Gen. 1:11-12). It is vital to recognize that the rejection of any possibility of design in macro-evolutionary theory flies in the face of the biblical creation account and cannot be harmonized with it.

Believers are grateful when science, intentionally or not, lends some confirmation of scriptural truth (e.g., recent cosmology has begun to debate again whether there is scientific evidence of a creation ex nihilo). Ultimately, however, faith in God's revealed word in Scripture is paramount for understanding the origin of all things (Heb. 11:3). Not dependent upon incomplete or faulty human understanding, the revealed truth of God's sovereign creative work is a settled matter (Ps. 119:89-91).

Ted Cabal

CREATION AND SCIENCE The forward progress of science has been made possible by the scientific method, which includes observing a phenomena, formulating a hypothesis to explain the observation, and performing a designed experiment to gather data to assess the validity of the hypothesis. These steps illustrate two important fundamentals of science. First, science is limited to the present. No matter how sophisticated the scientific equipment, it will never allow a person to analyze data other than in his present time. The scientist can examine artifacts, catalogue them, and make guesses using the techniques of historiography, but he can never perform a controlled experiment to discern what happened in the past.

Second, the scientific method provides data independent of the scientist's worldview. A scientist who is a Christian (and there are many) will arrive at exactly the same data using the scientific method as an atheist. Science does not depend upon a particular belief system and is, therefore, not the sole domain of evolutionists. Thus, the attempt to cast the debate between evolutionists and creationists as one of science versus religion or fact versus faith is erroneous.

Today, evolution stands as a theory in crisis. Experiments demonstrating how life could arise from non-life in a primordial, pre-biotic soup have all failed leaving evolutionists with no explanation for the presence of life today. Stanley Miller's 1953 experiment in which he produced a few amino acids is no longer considered valid even though it is still in every college textbook as proof of evolution. Miller assumed the earth's primitive atmosphere was a reducing atmosphere that contained ammonia and methane gases but no oxygen. Being a chemist, he knew that a reducing atmosphere was absolutely necessary if any molecules were to form spontaneously. New understanding of the data (from an evolutionary perspective) suggests that a neutral atmosphere produced by volcanic gases was present in the early earth. These gases form no building blocks of life in Miller's apparatus. To complicate matters for evolutionists, certain artifacts (rocks and water) suggest that oxygen was indeed present very early. A. G. Cairns-Smith, an evolutionist, has demonstrated that the production of naturally occurring, pure, usable chemicals to build molecules would be impossible in the waters of the primitive earth (Seven Clues to the Origin of Life, Cambridge University Press, 1985, p. 43).

One must ask, “If it was possible for building blocks of life to form, could they spontaneously assemble into a living cell?” Sir Fred Hoyle calculated this probability (which is a very conservative number) and determined that there is only one chance in 1040.000 that a cell could be assembled from organic molecules (The Universe: Past and Present Reflections, University College, 1981). Most scientists consider probabilities greater than 1050 to be impossible. Francis Crick, the biologist who won the Nobel Prize for discovering the structure of DNA, determined that the four billion years evolutionists have determined was available for evolution was not enough time for life to arise out of a primordial soup (Life Itself: Its Origin and Nature, Simon and Schuster, 1981).

The shortcomings of the Darwinian theory continue to manifest themselves. Darwin wrote, “If it could be demonstrated that any complex organ existed which could not possibly have been formed by numerous, successive, slight modifications, then my theory would absolutely break down” (The Origin of the Species, New York University Press, 1988, p. 154). How does Darwin fare today? Two lines of scientific research provide evidence against Darwin.

The first line of evidence shows that mutations do not build new genes. Pierre-Paul Grassé, past president of the Académie des Sciences, stated that mutations are only trivial changes resulting from the alteration of genes already present, whereas creative evolution requires the synthesis of new genes (Evolution of Living Organisms, Academic Press, 1977, p. 217). His studies provided evidence that mutations do not take succeeding generations farther away from a starting point, but instead the succeeding generations stay within firmly fixed boundaries. Bacteria, despite their innumerable mutations, have not transgressed the structural framework within which they have always fluctuated and still do. Lee Spetner has not only confirmed these findings but has shown that mutations result in a loss of genetic information—exactly the opposite of what Darwinism predicted. Spetner concluded, “The failure to observe even one mutation that adds information is more than just a failure to find support for a theory. It is evidence against the theory” (Not by Chance: Shattering the Modern Theory of Evolution, Judaica Press, 1998, p. 160). Worse yet, a key piece of evidence long held as “proof” for evolution through mutation was the development of antibiotic resistance in bacteria. Antibiotic resistance is caused by switching on a gene already present in the bacteria. As it turns out, there was no mutation at all.

The other line of scientific proof that discredits evolution is irreducible complexity. Darwin's simple-to-complex scheme has not stood up under scientific scrutiny. Biochemist Michael Behe declared that irreducible complexity extends not only to the cell but to the parts that make up the cell (Darwin's Black Box: The Biochemical Challenge to Evolution, Free Press, 1996). This means that the cell could not have been built by a process of simple steps. In order for the cell to function, it had to have all its complexity from the start. Anything less would have been nonfunctional, organic rubbish. Behe's famous mousetrap example illustrates the fallacy that part of an eye (organ, limb, etc.) is better than no eye at all. Part of an eye works no better than having only half the parts of a mousetrap. One simply does not expect to catch fewer mice with half the parts of a mousetrap missing. Irreducible complexity down to the smallest parts demands an intelligent Creator who by His wisdom created an amazingly complex cell to confound the wisdom of the world.

The impossibility of life appearing spontaneously is an insurmountable problem for evolutionists but clearly fits within the truth claims of the Scripture that God, in the beginning, created life. The reason life looks as if an organizing “principle” worked itself out in a definite plan is because God, the Great Designer, formed life in intricate detail. God did not create the cell and set things in motion (theistic evolution), but God created every living thing as He said in the first two chapters of Genesis.

As the mainstays of evolution crumble, creation remains the only realistic explanation of life. It best explains the artifact evidences seen today, such as the absence of transitional forms of life witnessed by the fossil record. Missing links between fish and amphibians, amphibians and reptiles, etc., in the fossil record are missing because they did not exist. God created the kinds to bring forth after their own kind. Yet God designed genetic diversity within the cell which allows for the variation observed within the kinds.

If evolution is in such a state, then why do so many cling to it? As it turns out, the argument is not really between creation and science. The argument is on a philosophical level. Rationalistic thinking rules out the supernatural and looks for other explanations than the work of an all wise Creator, who left His imprint in a designed creation. Should the theory of rationalistic, fallible man mold our thinking, or ought we to acknowledge the God, who is our Sovereign Creator, and believe His word?

David Mapes

CREATURE Something having life, either animal or human. The phrase used in the Hebrew Bible nephesh chayah is translated by “creature,” “living [thing, soul],” and “beast.” In Gen. 2:7 it is used of mankind and translated “living soul.” In all of the other references the phrase applies solely to animals. Because the same term is used of mankind and the other creatures, interpreters believe that it applies to the similar physical makeup (same matter) rather than the higher relationship with God that is special to humans.

Mike Mitchell

CREDIT, CREDITOR The biblical attitude toward borrowing is summarized in Prov. 22:7, which declares that to be a borrower is tantamount to being a lender's slave. Paul taught that it is better to owe no one anything (Rom. 13:8). Nevertheless, the Bible recognizes that some loans are necessary and so counsels against unjust interest rates (Ps. 15:5; Prov. 28:8; Ezek. 18:8,13). Those who borrow and do not repay are called “wicked” (Ps. 37:21) and will face a day of economic reckoning (Hab. 2:6-7).

The social and economic difficulties incumbent on heavy borrowing were anticipated by the Mosaic law, which commanded that fellow Israelites should not be charged interest on loans (Exod. 22:25; Deut. 23:19-20; cp. Neh. 5:7-12). This practice runs counter to the modern banking and credit card industries, as does Jesus' maxim to lend without expecting repayment (Luke 6:34). See Loan.

Paul H. Wright

CREEPING THINGS English translation sometimes used for a general Hebrew term designating small animals that appear to creep or crawl along the ground. English translators sometimes use “moving things” or other equivalents for the Hebrew word. The term was applied to all land animals in general (Gen. 1:24-26,28; 7:23; 9:3), fish (Pss. 69:34; 104:25; Hab. 1:14), forest animals (Ps. 104:20), and “creatures that swarm” (Lev. 11:29-30,44,46 NRSV, NASB, that is, weasels, mice, lizards, snails, moles, and perhaps even crocodiles). See Reptiles.

CREMATION Referred to in the OT by the phrase “burning the bones of” (1 Kings 13:2; 2 Kings 23:16, 20; Amos 2:1). In ancient Israel, death by burning was reserved as a punishment for the worst of criminals (Gen. 38:24; Josh. 7:15, 25; Lev. 20:14; 21:9). Both it and cremation, burning the body after death, were stigmatized as abhorrent by the Israelites. Because burning human bones was considered to be the ultimate desecration of the dead (1 Kings 13:2; 2 Kings 23:16, 20), it was subject to punishment by God (Amos 2:1).

The ancient Greeks cremated bodies after a plague or battle for sanitary reasons or to prevent their enemies from mutilating the dead. A similar attitude was found among the Israelites and perhaps explains why the dead bodies of Saul and his sons were burned (1 Sam. 31:12; cp. 2 Sam. 21:11-14). Saul's cremation also reflects God's rejection of his ignominious reign. When Amos (6:9-10 NIV) described the burning of bodies after battle, evidently for sanitary reasons, he intended to depict the horrors faced by victims of war.

Early Christians were hesitant to practice cremation because of their understanding that the body was the temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 6:19) yet recognized that cremation has no effect on the integrity of one's eternal state (Rev. 20:13).

Paul H. Wright

CRESCENS [Crēs' cēns] Personal name meaning “growing.” Christian worker with Paul who had gone to Galatia when 2 Timothy was written (2 Tim. 4:10).

CRESCENTS Translation used in some modern versions for the ornamental jewelry on necklaces in the shape of the crescent moon. It probably had magical connotations. Midianites (Judg. 8:21,26) and unfaithful Israelites (Isa. 3:18) wore them.

CRETANS [Crē' tāns], CRETES, CRETIANS Citizens of Crete. See Crete.

CRETE (Crēt) Long, narrow, mountainous island south of mainland Greece, running 170 miles east-west but never more than about 35 miles wide. Crete was the center of the Minoan maritime empire named after the legendary King Minos and associated especially with the famous palaces of Cnossos and Phaestos, which flourished from 2000 to 1500 B.C. This artistically brilliant civilization fell suddenly, perhaps by earthquake followed by conquest, about 1400 B.C., leaving written tablets in the oldest known scripts of Europe, including the undeciphered “Linear A” and the apparently later proto-Greek “Linear B,” found also on the mainland. The Minoans of Crete were known to the Egyptians as “Keftiu,” which may be the same as biblical “Caphtor,” though the biblical term may include a wider reference to coastlands and islands of the Aegean area. The Philistines came to Palestine from Caphtor (Jer. 47:4; Amos 9:7) and may have been part of the widespread migrant “Sea Peoples” rather than Cretans proper.

In classical Greek times Crete had many citystates, but they played relatively little part in mainstream Greek history. It had become a center of piracy before the Roman occupation in 67 B.C. Under the Romans it became part of a double province, Crete with Cyrene, under a governor with the title “proconsul,” who ruled the island and the opposite coast of North Africa from the Roman capital Gortyna. This had already been among the cities to whom the Romans had appealed a century before for fair treatment of their Jewish minorities (1 Macc. 15:23). Cretans were among those listed as present in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:11), and the gospel may first have reached the island through them.

Paul made his voyage to Rome as a prisoner on a Roman grain ship. The voyage followed the route south of Crete, which gave partial shelter from the northwest winds and avoided the peril of the lee shore on the north coast, while still involving the need to beat against largely adverse winds. The journey had already been very slow, and it was getting dangerously late in the summer sailing season. The ship doubled Salmone, the eastern cape of Crete, and with difficulty reached Fair Havens, a small anchorage near the city of Lasea (Acts 27:8). There the emergency council called by the centurion and shipmaster overruled Paul's advice, and a risky attempt was made to reach Phoenix, a regular port for servicing the grain ships, some 40 miles further west along the coast. The gentle south wind gave way to a violent northeaster (Euroclydon, Acts 27:14) when they came out of the shelter of Cape Matala (Loukinos) into an open bay, and the ship was driven helplessly, managing only some emergency action in the lee of the offshore island of Cauda, and thence to shipwreck on Malta.

The only other references to Crete in the NT are in the epistle to Titus. Paul had left Titus in Crete to exercise pastoral supervision over the churches there (Titus 1:5). The character of the people is described in a quotation from a prophet of their own: "Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons" (Titus 1:12 HCSB), words attributed to the Cretan seer Epimenides, who was also credited with having advised the Athenians to set up altars to unknown gods (cp. Acts 17:23).

A harbor on Crete through which Paul likely passed on his journey from Caesarea Maritima to Rome.

It is a problem to know when Paul (or Titus) visited Crete, apart from Paul's voyage as a prisoner. It is difficult to fit the occasions of the Pastoral Epistles (to Timothy and Titus) into Paul's life as recorded in Acts. The most satisfactory answer to this difficulty still seems to be that which argues that Paul was released from his two years' imprisonment in Rome (Acts 28:30) and undertook further travels in the East which can only be traced in these epistles. At this last period of his life he may have focused his work on establishing and strengthening the churches throughout the Greek East.

Colin J. Hemer

CRIB Feeding trough for the ox (Prov. 14:4 KJV) or the ass (Isa. 1:3; cp. Job 39:9) and probably for any number of other domesticated animals.

CRICKET Hebrew term translated “cricket” (Lev. 11:22 NIV, NASB, NRSV, TEV) is difficult to identify, probably a locust or grasshopper. See Insects.

CRIMES AND PUNISHMENTS Israel, like most peoples in the ancient Near East, considered their law to be the direct revelation from God. Since the law came from God, any transgression of the law was a transgression of God's revealed will.

The responsibility for the fulfillment and enforcement of the law lay with the entire community. The transgression of the law by one person or group within Israel involved the whole community in the guilt of the act. This is especially true in cases of homicide, idolatry, and sexual offenses (Deut. 19:10; 21:1-9; 2 Kings 24:1-7). When Israel failed to purge the offender and rebellion against God's Law from their midst, God punished Israel (Lev. 18:26-28; 26:3-45; Deut. 28).

Israelite law with respect to crime and punishment was distinct from the laws of other cultures in several ways. First, Israel, in contrast to many of its neighbors, did not consider crimes against property to be capital crimes. Israel observed a system of corporal punishment and/ or fines for lesser crimes. Second, Israel restricted the law of retaliation (eye for an eye; lex talionis) to the person of the offender. Other cultures permitted the family to be punished for the crimes of the offender. Third, Israel did not observe class differences in the enforcement of the Law to the extent that their neighbors did. Nobility and commoner, priest and lay people were treated equally in theory. However, slaves and sojourners (foreigners) did not have an equal standing with free Israelites—though their treatment in Israel was often better than in surrounding nations; women did not have equal standing with the men in Israelite culture—especially in regard to marriage and divorce laws and laws pertaining to sexual offenses. Finally, Israelites (in contrast to the people of surrounding nations) could not substitute sacrifices for intentional breaches of the law; sin and guilt offerings were allowed only in the cases of unwitting sins (Lev. 4–5).

Crimes and Capital Punishment in the Old Testament Israelite law considered some crimes serious enough to warrant capital punishment. See Capital Punishment.

Being “Cut Off” from Israel Often in the OT the punishment for a particular crime is termed being “cut off” from Israel. The meaning of the phrase is somewhat ambiguous. Some interpret the phrase to mean excommunication or exile from Israel or the community of faith, while others interpret it as the pronouncement of the death penalty. The latter position is accepted in this article. Often the phrase “cut off” is used in parallel with words or phrases or in contexts which clearly indicate death (Exod. 31:14; 2 Sam. 7:9; 1 Kings 11:16; Jer. 7:28; 11:19; Zech. 13:8). See Excommunication.

The offenses that make one liable to being “cut off” are: the men of Israel who are uncircumcised (Gen. 17:14; cp. Exod. 4:24; Josh. 5:2-9), eating leavened bread during the feast of unleavened bread (Exod. 12:15,19), trying to copy or using the holy anointing oil on outsiders (30:33), profaning the Sabbath (Exod. 31:14), partaking of sacrifices in an unclean state (Lev. 7:20-21,25; 19:8; cp. 1 Sam. 2:33), eating blood (Lev. 7:27; 17:10,14), offering sacrifices in a place other than the tabernacle (Lev. 17:3-4,8-9), certain sexual offenses (18:29; 20:17-18), child sacrifices to Molech (Lev. 20:3,5), consulting wizards or mediums (Lev. 20:6; Mic. 5:12), approaching holy things in an unclean state (Lev. 22:3; Num. 19:13,20), improperly observing the Day of Atonement (Lev. 23:29), not observing the Passover (Num. 9:13), committing a high-handed sin (sinning intentionally or defiantly; Num. 15:30-31), idolatry (1 Kings 9:6-7; 14:9-10,14; 21:21; Ezek. 14:7-8; Mic. 5:13; Zeph. 1:4; Zech. 13:2), and those God curses (Ps. 37:22). The idea of being “cut off” is also mentioned in the NT (Rom. 9:3; 11:22; cp. 1 Cor. 16:22; Gal. 1:6:5:12).

Crimes and Corporal Punishment in the Old Testament Crimes of a lesser nature (usually those involving premeditated bodily injury) were punished with some sort of corporal punishment. The law of retaliation (eye for an eye; lex talionis) was the operative principle in most cases involving corporal punishment (Exod. 21:23-25; Lev. 24:19-22; Deut. 19:21).

The law of retaliation may seem to some to be rather harsh and even crude. In our own modern world, we would sue a person responsible for putting out an eye before we would put that person's eye out. In the ancient world, however, the law of retaliation served to restrict the vengeance taken on one who inflicted bodily injury. For example, it prevented the killing of a person who had put out the eye of another. The law of retaliation helped make the punishment fit the crime.

Besides the law of retaliation, corporal punishments also included scourging (Deut. 25:1-3), blinding (Gen. 19:11; 2 Kings 6:18; cp. Judg. 16:21; 2 Kings 25:7), plucking out hair (Neh. 13:25; Is. 50:6), and the sale of a thief into slavery who could not pay the monetary penalties (Exod. 22:1-3; cp. Lev. 25:39; 2 Kings 4:1; Neh. 5:5). In one instance, mutilation is prescribed (Deut. 25:11-12).

Crimes and Fines in the Old Testament Fines were always paid to the injured party. Fines were prescribed for causing a miscarriage (Exod. 21:22), deflowering a virgin (Exod. 22:16-17; cp. Deut. 22:29), sexually violating a slave woman promised to another man in marriage (Lev. 19:20), and in some cases where an ox gored a person causing death (Exod. 21:28-32). A thief (one who steals by stealth) may be fined double, fourfold, or five-fold the value of the stolen goods, depending on what was stolen (Exod. 22:1-4,9). A robber (one who steals by force or intimidation) must return the stolen property plus one-fifth of its value plus make a guilt offering (Lev. 6:1-7). The difference between the penalties for thievery and robbery is difficult to explain. Should a man falsely accuse his bride of being unchaste, the man is fined double the marriage present (100 shekels of silver; Deut. 22:19). One who inflicted unpremeditated bodily injury must compensate the victim for the loss of income plus pay the costs of recovery (Exod. 21:18-19). If a person should cause the loss of eye or tooth of his slave, the slave was freed (Exod. 21:26-27).

Crimes and Punishments in the New Testament There is no body of legal material in the NT comparable to that found in the OT. Jesus did comment in the Sermon on the Mount on some of the matters discussed above. He expanded the prohibition of killing to include anger (Matt. 5:21-26) and the prohibition against adultery to include lust (Matt. 5:27-30). In contrast to the OT, Jesus forbade divorce except on the grounds of unchastity (Matt. 5:31-32). With regard to the law of retaliation, Jesus desired that his disciples waive their rights to reparations (Matt. 5:38-42).

During the period of the NT, the Jews seem to have had relative autonomy in the matters of their religious law and customs. Even Jewish communities outside Palestine were under the authority of the high priest (Acts 9:1-2) and were allowed some measure of autonomy in religious matters (Acts. 18:12-17).

Whether the Jews had the authority under the Roman government to impose the death penalty is a debated question. When Jesus was brought to trial, the Jews' reason for bringing him to Pilate was that they did not have the power to execute criminals (John 18:31). One ancient rabbinic tradition in the Babylonian Talmud (Abodah Zarah 8b) holds that the Jews lost the power to execute criminals for about 40 years. However, incidents in the NT seem to indicate otherwise: statements made at Peter's trial (Acts 5:27-42), the stoning of Stephen (Acts 7:57-60), attempted lynchings (Acts 9:23-24; 14:19; 23:12-15), the authority to kill foreigners caught trespassing in certain areas of the temple (Acts 21:28-31, a practice reported by Josephus, an ancient Jewish historian), and a statement made by Paul (Acts 26:10). Other ancient Jewish records of stonings and burnings indicates that the Jews may have had the authority to impose the death penalty.

The Jews during the period of the NT had the power to impose corporal punishment. This consisted primarily of scourgings (Matt. 10:17; Acts 5:40; 22:19; 2 Cor. 11:24) and excommunication (Luke 6:22; John 9:22; 12:42; 16:2).

The procurator was Rome's legal representative in the provinces of the Roman Empire. He intervened in local affairs when the public peace and order were threatened—especially by sedition, riot, or brigandage (cp. Acts 5:36-37). The charge against Jesus was a claim to be “King of the Jews” (Matt 27:37). Roman punishments included crucifixion (usually reserved only for slaves and the lower classes), beheading (Matt. 14:10; Rev. 20:4), lifetime sentences to work in the mines (that is, kept in bonds; Acts 23:29; 26:31), scourging (Acts 16:22; 22:24), and imprisonment (Acts 16:23-24). See Appeal to Caesar.

Phil Logan

CRIMSON Red color taken from the bodies of dead kermes (Coccus ilicis, which attached itself to the kermes oak—Quercus coccifera) or cochineal insects (Coccus cacti). The same Hebrew words translated as crimson are also translated “scarlet” (“red” comes from a root word from which the Hebrew word for “blood” comes and designates a different color). Crimson or scarlet thread (Gen. 38:28,30), cord (Josh. 2:18,21), and cloth (Lev. 14:4; Num. 4:8; 2 Sam. 1:24; 2 Chron. 2:7,14; 3:14; Prov. 31:21; Jer. 4:30; Nah. 2:3) are mentioned in the Bible. Crimson or scarlet along with purple were considered royal colors (Matt. 27:28; Rev. 17:3-4; 18:11-12,16). Isaiah used scarlet as the imagery to describe sins (Isa. 1:18). See Colors.

CRISPING PIN KJV translation in Isa. 3:22. A crimping pin was used for curling the hair. Modern versions translate the word “handbag,” or “flounced skirt” (REB). See Bag.

CRISPUS [Cris' pūs] Personal name meaning “curly.” Leader of synagogue in Corinth (Acts 18:8) and one of few whom Paul personally baptized (1 Cor. 1:14). Church tradition says he became bishop of Aegina.

CROCUS Plant with abundant blossoms. Several species of crocus grow in Palestine. The flower mentioned in Song 2:1 and Isa. 35:1 has been identified as either the narcissus (N. tazetta), the meadow saffron (genus Calchicum), or the asphodel (asphodelos). The Hebrew word is sometimes translated “rose” (cp. KJV, NRSV, REB, NASB, NIV Song 2:1 and Isa. 35:1). See Flowers.

CROSS, CRUCIFIXION Method the Romans used to execute Jesus Christ. The most painful and degrading form of capital punishment in the ancient world, the cross became also the means by which Jesus became the atoning sacrifice for the sins of all mankind. It also became a symbol for the sacrifice of self in discipleship (Rom. 12:1) and for the death of self to the world (Mark 8:34).

Historical Development Originally a cross was a wooden pointed stake used to build a wall or to erect fortifications around a town. Beginning with the Assyrians and Persians, it began to be used to display the heads of captured foes or of particularly heinous criminals on the palisades above the gateway into a city. Later crucifixion developed into a form of capital punishment, as enemies of the state were impaled on the stake itself. The Greeks and Romans at first reserved the punishment only for slaves, saying it was too barbaric for freeborn or citizens. By the first century, however, it was used for any enemy of the state, though citizens could only be crucified by direct edict of Caesar. As time went on, the Romans began to use crucifixion more and more as a deterrent to criminal activity, so that by Jesus' time it was a common sight.

The eastern form of crucifixion was practiced in the OT. Saul was decapitated and his body displayed on a wall by the Philistines (1 Sam. 31:9-10), and the "hanging" found in Esther 2:23; 5:14 may mean impalement (cp. Ezra 6:11). According to Jewish law (Deut. 21:22-23) the offenders were "hung on a tree," which meant they were "accursed of God" and outside the covenant people. Such criminals were to be removed from the cross before nightfall lest they "defile the land." During the intertestamental period the western form was borrowed when Alexander Jannaeus crucified 800 Pharisees (76 B.C.), but on the whole the Jews condemned and seldom used the method. Even Herod the Great refused to crucify his enemies. The practice was abolished after the "conversion" of the emperor of Constantine to Christianity.

A person crucified in Jesus' day was first of all scourged (beaten with a whip consisting of thongs with pieces of metal or bone attached to the end) or at least flogged until the blood flowed. This was not done just out of cruelty but was designed to hasten death and lessen the terrible ordeal. After the beating, the victim was forced to bear the crossbeam to the execution site in order to signify that life was already over and to break the will to live. A tablet detailing the crime(s) was often placed around the criminal's neck and then fastened to the cross. At the site the prisoner was often tied (the normal method) or nailed (if a quicker death was desired) to the crossbeam. The nail would be driven through the wrist rather than the palm, since the smaller bones of the hand could not support the weight of the body. The beam with the body was then lifted and tied to the already affixed upright pole. Pins or a small wooden block were placed halfway up to provide a seat for the body lest the nails tear open the wounds or the ropes force the arms from their sockets. Finally the feet were tied or nailed to the post. Death was caused by the loss of blood circulation and coronary failure. Especially if the victims were tied, it could take days of hideous pain as the extremities turned slowly gangrenous; so often the soldiers would break the victims legs with a club, causing massive shock and a quick death. Such deaths were usually done in public places, and the body was left to rot for days, with carrion birds allowed to degrade the corpse further.

Four types of crosses were used: (1) The Latin cross has the crossbeam about two-thirds of the way up the upright pole; (2) St. Anthony's cross (probably due to its similarity to his famous crutch) had the beam at the top of the upright pole like a T; (3) St. Andrew's cross (supposedly the form used to crucify Andrew) had the shape of the letter X; (4) the Greek cross has both beams equal in the shape of a plus sign.

The Crucifixion of Jesus Jesus predicted His coming crucifixion many times. The Synoptic Gospels list at least three (Mark 8:31; 9:31; 10:33-34 and parallels), while John records three others (3:14; 8:28; 12:32-33). Several aspects of Jesus' passion are predicted: (1) it occurred by divine necessity ("must" in Mark 8:31); (2) both Jews ("delivered") and Romans ("killed") were guilty (Mark 9:31); (3) Jesus would be vindicated by being raised from the dead; (4) the death itself entailed glory (seen in the "lifted up" sayings which imply exaltation in John 3:14; 8:28; 12:32-33).

The narration of Jesus' crucifixion in the Gospels emphasized Jewish guilt, but all four carefully separated the leaders from the common people, who supported Jesus all along and were led astray by the leaders at the last. Yet Roman guilt is also obvious. The Sanhedrin was no longer allowed to initiate capital punishment; only the Romans could do so. Furthermore, only Roman soldiers could carry it out. Roman customs were followed in the scourging, mock enthronement, bearing the crossbeam, and the crucifixion itself. The site on a hill and the size of the cross (the use of the hyssop reed shows it was seven to nine feet high) showed their desire for a public display of a "criminal." The Jewish elements in the crucifixion of Jesus were the wine mixed with myrrh (Mark 15:23), the hyssop reed with vinegar (Mark 15:36), and the removal of Jesus' body from the cross before sunset (John 19:31).

The four Gospels look at Jesus' crucifixion from four different vantage points and highlight diverse aspects of the significance of His death. Mark and Matthew centered upon the horror of putting the Son of God Himself to death. Mark emphasized the messianic meaning, using the taunts of the crowds to "save yourself" (15:30-31) as an unconscious prophecy pointing to the resurrection. Matthew took Mark even further, pointing to Jesus as the royal Messiah who faced His destiny in complete control of the situation. Jesus' vindication was found not only in the rending of the veil and the centurion's testimony (Matt. 27:51,54 paralleling Mark) but in the remarkable raising of the OT saints (vv. 52-53) which links the cross and the open tomb. For Matthew the cross inaugurated the last days when the power of death is broken and salvation is poured out upon all people.

Luke has perhaps the most unique portrayal, with two emphases: Jesus as the archetypal righteous Martyr who forgave His enemies and the crucifixion as an awesome scene of reverence and worship. Luke omitted the negative aspects of the crucifixion (earthquakes, wine with myrrh, cry of dereliction) and overturned the taunts when the crowd "returned home beating their breasts" (23:48 RSV). Luke included three sayings of Jesus which relate to prayer (found only in Luke): "Father, forgive them" (v. 34, contrasted with the mockery); "today you will be with Me in paradise" (v. 43 HCSB, in response to the criminal's prayer); and "Father, into Your hands I entrust My spirit" (v. 46 HCSB). A wondrous sense of stillness and worship color Luke's portrayal.

John's narration is perhaps the most dramatic. Even more so than Luke, all the negative elements disappear (the darkness and taunts as well as those missing also in Luke), and an atmosphere of calm characterizes the scene. At the core is Jesus' sovereign control of the whole scene. The cross becomes His throne. John noted that the inscription on the cross ("JESUS THE NAZARENE, THE KING OF THE JEWS") was written in Aramaic, Latin, and Greek (19:19-20), thereby changing it into a universal proclamation of Jesus' royal status. Throughout the account to the final cry, "It is finished" (v. 30), Jesus was in complete control.

One cannot understand Jesus' crucifixion until all four Gospels are taken into account. All the emphases—the messianic thrust, Jesus as Son of God and as the righteous Martyr, the sacrificial nature of His death, the cross as His throne—are necessary emphases of the total picture of the significance of His crucifixion.

Theological Meaning While a theology of the cross is found primarily in Paul, it clearly predates him, as can be demonstrated in the "creeds" (statements of belief/teaching) Paul quoted. For instance, 1 Cor. 15:3-5 says Paul had "received" and then "passed on" to the Corinthians the truth that Jesus "died for our sins according to the Scriptures." Three major themes are interwoven in this and other creeds (Rom 4:25; 6:1-8; 8:32; Col. 2:11-12; 1 Tim. 3:16; Heb. 1:3-4; 1 Pet. 1:21; 3:18-22): Jesus death as our substitute (from Isa. 53:5; cp. Mark 10:45; 14:24); Jesus' death and resurrection as fulfilling Scripture; and Jesus' vindication and exaltation by God.

For Paul the "word of the cross" (1 Cor. 1:18 NASB) is the heart of the gospel, and the preaching of the cross is the soul of the church's mission. "Christ crucified" (1 Cor. 1:23; cp. 2:2; Gal. 3:1) is more than the basis of our salvation; the cross was the central event in history, the one moment which demonstrated God's control of and involvement in human history. In 1 Cor. 1:17–2:16 Paul contrasted the "foolishness" of the "message of the cross" with human "wisdom" (1:17-18), for only in the cross can salvation be found and only in the foolish "message of the cross" and "weakness" can the "power of God" be seen (1:21,25). Jesus as the lowly One achieved His glory by virtue of His suffering—only the crucified One could become the risen One (1:26-30). Such a message certainly was viewed as foolish in the first century; Roman historians like Tacitus and Suetonius looked upon the idea of a "crucified God" with contempt.

The cross is the basis of our salvation in Paul's epistles (Rom. 3:24-25; Eph. 2:16; Col. 1:20; 2:14), while the resurrection is stressed as the core in the book of the Acts (2:33-36; 3:19-21; 5:31). Romans 4:25 makes both emphases. The reason for the distinct emphases is most likely seen in the fact that Acts chronicles the preaching of the early church (with the resurrection as the apologetic basis of our salvation) and the epistles the teaching of the early church (with the crucifixion the theological basis of our salvation). The three major terms are: “redemption,” stressing the “ransom payment” made by Jesus’ blood in delivering us from sin (Titus 2:14; 1 Pet. 1:18); “propitiation,” which refers to Jesus’ death as “satisfying” God’s righteous wrath (Rom. 3:25; Heb. 2:17); and “justification,” picturing the results of the cross, the “acquittal” (“declaring righteous”) of our guilt (Rom. 3:24; 4:25; Gal. 2:16-21; 3:24).

The cross did even more than procure salvation. It forged a new unity between Jew and Gentile by breaking down “the dividing wall of hostility” and “made the two one” (Eph. 2:14-15 NIV), thereby producing “peace” by creating a new access to the Father (v. 18). In addition the cross “disarmed” the demonic “powers” and forged the final triumph over Satan and his hordes, forcing those spiritual forces to follow his train in a victory procession (Col. 2:15 NIV). The cross was Satan’s great error. When Satan entered Judas in betraying Jesus, he undoubtedly did not realize that the cross would prove his greatest defeat. He could only respond with frustrated rage, knowing that “his time is short” (Rev. 12:12 NIV). Satan participated in his own undoing.

The Symbolic Meaning Jesus Himself established the primary figurative interpretation of the cross as a call to complete surrender to God. He used it five times as a symbol of true discipleship in terms of self-denial, taking up one’s cross, and following Jesus (Mark 8:34; 10:38; Matt. 16:24; Luke 9:23; 14:27). Building upon the Roman practice of bearing the crossbeam to the place of execution, Jesus intended this in two directions: the death of self, involving the sacrifice of one’s individuality for the purpose of following Jesus completely; and a willingness to imitate Jesus completely, even to the extent of martyrdom.

Closely connected to this is Paul’s symbol of the crucified life. Conversion means the individual “no longer live(s)” but is replaced by Christ and faith in Him (Gal. 2:20). Self-centered desires are nailed to the cross (Gal. 5:24), and worldly interests are dead (Gal. 6:14). In Rom. 6:1-8 we are “buried with him” (using the imagery of baptism) with the result that we are raised to “a new way of life” (v. 4). This is taken further in 2 Cor. 5:14-17. The believer relives the death and resurrection by putting to death the old self and putting on the new. In one sense this is a past act, experienced at conversion. Yet according to Eph. 4:22,24 this is also a present act, experienced in the corporate life of the church. In other words, both at conversion and in spiritual growth, the believer must relive the cross before experiencing the resurrection life. The Christian paradox is that death is the path to life. See Atonement; Christology; Justification; Passion; Propitiation; Redemption.

Grant Osborne

CROWN Special headdress worn by royalty and other persons of high merit and honor. The crown probably evolved from the cloth headband or turban worn by a tribal leader; the headband eventually became a metal diadem, with or without ornamentation. Some years ago archaeologists discovered in a Jericho tomb a copper headband or crown dating from about 2000 B.C.

Both the king and the high priest of Israel wore crowns, but we have been told more about the latter than the former (Exod. 28:36-37; 29:6, Lev. 8:9). David's golden crown was a prize of battle (2 Sam. 12:30). As a symbol of his authority, the crown was worn when the king was on his throne and when leading his forces in combat (2 Sam. 1:10). The word “crown” was also used figuratively referring to the old man's gray head (Prov. 16:31), a man's virtuous wife (Prov. 12:4), and God's blessings on mankind (Ps. 8:5). Occasionally the word referred to a festive wreath (Song 3:11).

While most references to “crown” in the OT point to the actual headdress, in the NT it usually has a figurative significance. Paul envisioned “a crown of righteousness” for himself and others (2 Tim. 4:8), and James anticipated “the crown of life” (James 1:12). While the winning runner of that day received a garland of myrtle leaves, Paul looked forward to a crown that would not decay (1 Cor. 9:25). Not even the victorious athlete would receive his reward unless he obeyed the rules (2 Tim. 2:5). Conversely, the word evokes revulsion when we read of Roman soldiers weaving briars into a crown of Jesus' head (Matt. 27:29).

In the book of Revelation, crowns are both realistic and figurative. The 24 elders seated around God's throne were wearing "gold crowns" (4:4), and as they worshiped, they "cast their crowns before the throne" (4:10). Later, a seven-headed dragon appeared wearing a crown on each head (12:3), but opposing all the evil forces was the "Son of Man" wearing "a golden crown" (14:14). In each case the crown symbolized power, either good or evil.

William J. Fallis

CROWN OF THORNS Crown made by the Roman soldiers to mock Jesus, the "King of the Jews" (Matt. 27:29; Mark 15:18; John 19:3; not mentioned in Luke). The identification of the plant used to plait this crown is unknown. Jesus used the imagery of "thorns" in his teaching in a negative sense (Matt. 7:16; Mark 4:7,18; Heb. 6:8). See Plants.

CRUCIBLE Melting pot or "fining pot" (KJV), probably made of pottery, used in the refining of silver. The crucible is used in the Bible as a figure for testing of people (Prov. 17:3; 27:21).

CRUSE Elongated pottery vessel about six inches tall used for holding liquids such as oil (1 Kings 17:12,14,16) or water (1 Kings 19:6). Modern readers would understand the vessels to serve the purpose of a modern canteen (1 Sam. 26:11-16). The bowl (2 Kings 2:20 NIV) reflects a different Hebrew term but a similar type vessel. See Flask.

CRYSTAL Nearly transparent quartz that may be colorless or slightly tinged. "Crystal" is the modern translation of several Hebrew and Greek words used to describe something valuable (Job 28:17), a clear sky (Ezek. 1:22), a calm sea or river (Rev. 4:6; 22:1), or the radiance of the new Jerusalem (Rev. 21:11). Translators differ in their usage in the various passages.

Fragment of a slate measuring rod divided into fractions of the cubit, from Egypt around the time of Akhenaton's reign.

CUB See Chub.

CUBIT Unit of measure. It was reckoned as the distance from a person's elbow to the tip of the middle finger, approximately 18 inches. See Weights and Measures.

CUCKOW KJV for an unclean bird (Lev. 11:16; Deut. 14:15); also spelled “cuckoo.” Since the bird in question is grouped with carrion-eating or predatory birds, the cuckoo would seem to be eliminated since it only eats insects. Modern versions read “seagull.”

CUCUMBER See Plants.

CUMIN, CUMMIN Herb of the carrot family (Cuminum cyminum L.) mentioned with dill. Used in Bible times to season foods. Isaiah portrayed the planting and threshing of cumin (Isa. 28:25,27). Jesus faulted the Pharisees for giving attention to small things like tithing mint, dill, and cumin while ignoring the weightier matters of the law (Matt. 23:23; Luke 11:42). See Plants.

CUN (Cūn) Place-name of city in Syria belonging to Hadadezer, king of Zobah. David took bronze from the city as tribute, and Solomon used the materials in furnishing the temple (1 Chron. 18:8). The parallel passage in 2 Sam. 8:8 reads “Berothai.” The two are apparently separate cities, Cun being northeast of Byblos and Berothai southeast of Byblos. Evidently, Cun was more familiar to the Chronicler's readers than Berothai. See Berothai

CUNEIFORM [Cū-nē' ɪ-fōrm] Most widely used system of writing in the ancient Near East until it was supplanted by alphabetic scripts like Aramaic. The word “cuneiform” is derived from the Latin cuneus, “wedge,” and is used to refer to characters composed of wedges. The system of writing was originated apparently by the Sumerians before 3000 B.C. The earliest documents are commercial tablets consisting of pictographs (of sheep, grain, etc.) and numbers. Because the documents were written on tablets of moist clay, the scribes soon found it more convenient to indicate objects with stylized pictures composed of wedges made by a stylus. The earliest cuneiform signs were ideographs (a sign standing for a word); but as literary needs increased, the signs were given phonetic values.

Cuneiform tablet and its envelope dealing with the sale of some land.

The cuneiform system of writing was adapted and developed to suit the requirements of several other languages, including Akkadian, Hurrian, Hittite, Elamite, and Eblaite. The people at Ugarit and the Persians used wedges to form their alphabetic scripts.

The decipherment of the cuneiform scripts of Mesopotamia was aided by the existence of trilingual inscriptions, such as the Behistun Rock inscriptions written in Persian, Babylonian, and Elamite cuneiform. The decipherment of the Persian written in an alphabetic cuneiform opened the way for the decipherment of the more difficult syllabic Babylonian and Elamite scripts. Due to the pioneering efforts of H. Rawlinson, E. Hincks, and J. Oppert and others, by the end of the 19th century it was possible to read with confidence the cuneiform inscriptions known up to that time.

The decipherment of the Ugaritic alphabetic cuneiform script was accomplished simultaneously but independently by H. Bauer, E. Dhorme, and Ch. Virolleaud in 1930–31. Unlike any other cuneiform writing, Ugaritic consists of 31 signs or characters used to record documents in a language similar to Phoenician and Hebrew. The Ugaritic inscriptions and documents date from the 14th century and are of crucial importance for the study of the Bible. See Akkadian; Assyria; Babylon; Sumer; Writing.

Thomas Smothers

CUP Drinking vessel made of pottery or various metals such as gold, silver, or bronze. During biblical times cups came in two different forms. Some resembled their modern counterparts. However, most ancient cups were shallow bowls that were produced in a multitude of sizes. They also could be used in divination (Gen. 44:5). In addition, the term “cup” was used to designate the receptacles for holding lamps on the lampstand of the tabernacle (Exod. 25:31-35 NASB).

In the Bible the word “cup” frequently is used in a figurative sense. The contents of the cup are accentuated, since symbolically God serves the drink. Thus the cup might represent blessings or prosperity for a righteous person (Pss. 16:5; 23:5; 116:13). Likewise, it portrayed the totality of divine judgment on the wicked (Pss. 11:6; 75:8; Isa. 51:17,22; Jer. 25:15; 49:12; 51:7; Ezek. 23:31-34; Rev. 14:10; 16:19; 17:4; 18:6). Jesus voluntarily drank the cup of suffering (Matt. 20:22; 26:39,42; Mark 10:38; 14:36; Luke 22:42; John 18:11). For Jesus that cup was His death and everything that it involved.

The cup had a prominent place in the liturgy of the Jewish Passover meal and so, subsequently, in the Lord's Supper. In the Christian ordinance the cup is a symbolic reminder of the atoning death of Jesus (Matt. 26:27-28; Mark 14:23-24; Luke 22:20; 1 Cor. 11:25-26). See Divination and Magic; Lamps, Lighting, Lampstand; Lord's Supper; Passover; Pottery; Vessels and Utensils.

LeBron Matthews

CUPBEARER High-ranking official in the courts of ancient Near Eastern kings. The cupbearer was responsible for serving wine at the king's table and protecting the king from poisoning. The cupbearer was often taken into the king's confidence and had no small amount of influence on the king's decisions. The “chief cup bearer” of the Joseph story (Gen. 40:2) was one who was overseer of a staff of his own. Nehemiah was the highly esteemed cupbearer for Artaxerxes (Neh. 1:11; 1 Kings 10:5; 2 Chron. 9:4). The Rabshakeh may have been the title given to cupbearers in the Assyrian court (2 Kings 18:17-37; Isa. 36:2). See Occupations and Professions.

Gold cup decorated with gazelles, late second millennium B.C., from southwest Capian region.

CURSE See Blessing and Cursing.

CURTAIN Piece of cloth or other material, sometimes arranged so that it can be drawn up or sideways, hung either for decoration or to cover, conceal, or shut off something. “Curtain” is often used synonymously with “tent” (Song 1:5; Isa. 54:2; Jer. 4:20; 10:20; 49:29; Hab. 3:7). The tabernacle which was constructed to house the ark of the covenant was made of 10 curtains (Exod. 26:2). At a later time in Israelite history, two curtains were used to close off the holy place and the holy of holies in the temple. The curtain separating the holy of holies and the holy place was torn from top to bottom at the time of Jesus’ death signifying the access that all people had to God from that time forward (Matt. 27:51). The writer of Hebrews speaks of the curtain in the heavenly sanctuary (Heb. 6:19; 9:3). Jesus also opened this curtain to his followers by his death (Heb. 10:20).

CUSH ^[Cūsh] 1. Member of the tribe of Benjamin about whom the psalmist sang (Ps. 7:1). Nothing else is known of him. 2. Son of Ham and grandson of Noah (Gen. 10:8). Thus in the Table of Nations he is seen as the original ancestor of inhabitants of the land of Cush. 3. Nation situated south of Egypt with differing boundaries and perhaps including differing dark-skinned tribes (Jer. 13:23) at different periods of history. The Hebrew word Cush has been traditionally translated “Ethiopia,” following the Septuagint, or earliest Greek translation, but Cush was not identical with Ethiopia as presently known. Moses' wife came from Cush (Num. 12:1), probably a woman distinct from Zipporah (Exod. 2:21). Cush was an enemy of Egypt for centuries, being controlled by strong pharaohs but gaining independence under weak pharaohs. Zerah, a general from Cush, fought against Asa, king of Judah (910–869 B.C.) (2 Chron. 14:9). Finally, Pi-ankhi of Cush conquered Egypt and established the Twenty-fifth Dynasty of Egyptian rulers (716–656) with their capital at Napata above the fourth cataract. Isaiah 18 may describe some of the political activity involved in Cush's establishing their power in Egypt. Tirhakah (2 Kings 19:9) was one of the last of the pharaohs from Cush. Isaiah promised that people who fled from Judah and were exiled in Cush would see God's deliverance (Isa. 11:11; cp. Zeph. 3:10). Isaiah acted out judgment against Cush, probably as the rulers of Egypt (Isa. 20:3-5; cp. 43:3; 45:14; Ps. 68:31; Jer. 46:9; Ezek. 30:4-5,9). In Ezekiel's day Cush represented the southern limit of Egyptian territory (Ezek. 29:10). Cush's strength could not help Thebes escape from Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria, in 663 B.C. Nahum used this historical example to pronounce doom on Nineveh, the capital of Assyria (Nah. 3:9). Ezekiel listed Cush as one of the allies of Gog and Magog in the great climatic battle (Ezek. 38:5). The psalmist proclaimed that God's reputation had reached even unto Cush (Ps. 87:4). Job saw Cush as a rich source of minerals, especially topaz (Job 28:19). By the time of Esther, Cush represented the southwestern limits of Persian power (Esther 1:1). Cambyses (530-522) conquered Cush for Persia.

Cush is mentioned in Gen. 2:13 as surrounded by the Gihon River. The Gihon is usually associated with Jerusalem as a spring (1 Kings 1:33). Some Bible students identify Cush here with the Kassites, the successors to the old Babylonian Empire, who controlled Babylon between about 1530 and 1151 B.C. Such students connect this with Gen. 10:8 where Cush is associated with Nimrod, whose kingdom centered in Babylon (Gen. 10:10). Other Bible students would see Gihon here as another name for the Nile River and Cush as referring to the land south of Egypt. A clear solution to this problem has not been found.

CUSHAN [Cú' shān] Tent-dwelling people that Habakkuk saw experiencing God's wrath (Hab. 3:7). The parallel with Midian makes people think of an Arabian tribe, possibly nomads. Some identify Cushan with Cush, either as a territory controlled by Cush or as an otherwise unknown kingdom of Cush on the northeast shore of the Gulf of Aqaba near Midian. This would account for Cushites near Arabs (2 Chron. 21:16).

CUSHAN-RISHATHAIM [Cú' shān rīsh á thā' 1m] Personal name meaning “dark one of double evil.” King of Aram Naharaim to whom Yahweh gave Israel in the early period of the Judges (Judg. 3:8). Othniel finally defeated him. We have no other information about him. Some have tried to see Aram as an unintentional copying error for an original Edom, but no evidence exists for this conjecture. See Aram-Naharaim.

CUSHI [Cú' shī] Personal name meaning “Cushite.” 1. Father of the prophet Zephaniah (Zeph. 1:1). 2. Ancestor of a royal official under King Jehoiakim (Jer. 36:14).

CUSHITE [Cú' shī] Citizen or inhabitant of Cush. The Hebrew word is the same as the proper name “Cushi.” God has concern for and control over them just as He does for His own people (Amos 9:7). 1. Unnamed Cushite served as Joab's messenger to bring the news of Absalom's death to David (2 Sam. 18:21-32). 2. Eunuch under King Zedekiah who helped Jeremiah escape from a cistern into which the king had had him thrown (Jer. 38:6-12; 39:16). See Cush; Ebed-melech.

CUSTODIAN Wealthy Greek and Roman families often had a slave who attended boys under the age of about 16. The major responsibilities of the custodian were to escort the boys to and from school and to attend to their behavior. The pedagogue or custodian had responsibility to discipline or punish the boy. Once the boys reached manhood, they no longer needed the services of the custodian. Often the young man rewarded the custodian by granting him freedom. Paul spoke of the law as the custodian of God's people until Christ came (Gal. 3:23-26). The law could not save; but it could bring us to the point where we could have faith in Christ by showing us our unrighteousness (Gal. 3:19; cp. Rom. 7:7-12). Of course, the law was not nullified by Christ's death or by becoming Christians. We are still expected to live according to the moral principles found in the law (Rom. 7:12,16; cp. Matt. 5:17-48). See Guardian; Schoolmaster.

CUTH [Cūth], CUTHAH Place-names with two spellings in Hebrew and English. Cuthah was the center of worship of Nergal, god of death in Mesopotamia. Residents of the city were exiled by the Assyrians to live in Israel (2 Kings 17:24). Once settled, they made an idol to worship Nergal (2 Kings 17:30), thus aggravating the tendency to worship Yahweh of Israel along with other gods. Cuth was located at Tell Ibrahim, about 18 miles northeast of Babylon. See Nergal.

CUZA [Cu' za] (NIV) See Chuza.

CYMBAL See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

CYPRIOT [Cy' pri ot] Citizen or resident of Cyprus. See Cyprus.

CYPRUS [Cy' prūs] Large island in the eastern Mediterranean Sea mentioned most prominently in Acts. In the OT scattered references refer to the island as Kittim ("Chittim," Isa. 23:1; Jer. 2:10), although in some passages the term has a wider scope and includes lands other than Cyprus lying west of Palestine (Dan. 11:30). The island is 138 miles long east to west and 60 miles wide from north to south; it is eclipsed in size only by Sicily and Sardinia. Much of Cyprus is mountainous; the Troodos Mountains (5,900 feet) dominate the western and central sections, while the Kyrenia Mountains (3,100 feet) extend along the northern coast.

Historically Cyprus was important as a source for timber used in shipbuilding and copper, both vital commodities in the ancient world. The strategic position of Cyprus just off the coasts of Asia Minor and Syria coupled with the presence of favorable currents and reliable summer winds encouraged wide-ranging trade contacts. Evidence of trade with Cyprus between 2000 and 1000 B.C. has been found in Asia Minor, Egypt, Palestine, and Syria; contacts also were maintained with Crete, the Aegean Islands, and Greece. After 1500 B.C. Cyprus was influenced heavily by the Mycenaean culture of mainland Greece which left an indelible stamp.

After 1000 B.C. several city-states, each ruled by a king, were the basis of the political structure on Cyprus. Among the most important cities were Salamis and Kition. The Phoenicians, a Semitic people who established a trading empire throughout the Mediterranean, colonized Kition about 850 B.C. Tyre and Sidon were the center of Phoenician trade, and the OT underscores the connection between these cities and Cyprus in several passages (Isa. 23:1-2,12; Ezek. 27:4-9).

From the time the kings of Cyprus submitted to Sargon II of Assyria in 707 B.C., the political fortunes of the island were determined by successive empires that dominated the Near East. Egyptian and Persian kings controlled Cyprus prior to the coming of Alexander the Great in 333 B.C. After his death, Cyprus became a part of the Ptolemaic Empire (294–258 B.C.). During this period many Jews settled on the island, forming an important part of the population. In 58 B.C. Rome annexed Cyprus; with the establishment of the Roman Empire under Augustus, the island became a Senatorial Province in 22 B.C. governed by a proconsul from Paphos.

Limassol, a modern city on the southern coast of Cyprus.

Cyprus is first mentioned in the NT as the birthplace of Joseph surnamed Barnabas, a Hellenistic Jewish convert who later accompanied Paul (Acts 4:36-37). As a result of the persecution associated with the martyrdom of Stephen in Jerusalem, Jewish Christians journeyed to Cyprus and preached the gospel to the Jewish community on the island (Acts 11:19-20). In A.D. 46 or 47 Paul undertook his first missionary journey accompanied by Barnabas and John Mark (Acts 13). Arriving at Salamis on the eastern side of Cyprus, the group crossed the island to Paphos, preaching the new faith. The reference to Paphos is to Neapaphos, "New Paphos," founded in the fourth century B.C., and the center of Roman government on Cyprus. The conversion of the deputy, Sergius Paulus, was brought about in part by the blinding of the magician Bar-jesus. Whether Paul visited Paleapahos, "Old Paphos," is unclear; Paleapahos was an ancient city associated with the worship of the Greek goddess Aphrodite, who reputedly emerged from the foam of the sea nearby.

A portion of the agora area at the site of ancient Salamis on the island of Cyprus.

The excavations at Paphos on Cyprus showing the traditional site where Paul was beaten.

John Mark and Barnabas returned to Cyprus a second time after parting company with Paul (Acts 15:39). Later, Paul twice passed by the island on voyages, once on a return to Jerusalem (Acts 21:3) and finally while traveling to Rome (Acts 27:4). See Elisha; Kittim; Phoenicians.

Thomas V. Brisco

CYRENE [Cy rē' nē] Home of a certain Simon who was compelled to carry Jesus' cross to the place of crucifixion (Matt. 27:32). Located in northern Africa, it was the capital city of the Roman district of Cyrenaica during the NT era. Cyrenaica and Crete formed one province. Simon of Cyrene may have belonged to the rather large population of Greek-speaking Jews who resided in the city during the first part of the first century A.D.

CYRENIAN [Cy rē' nī ān] Citizen and/or resident of Cyrene. See Cyrene.

CYRENIUS [Cy rē' nī ūs] Roman official mentioned in Luke 2:2 as the governor of Syria when the birth of Jesus took place. Some translations of the NT use the name Cyrenius, an Anglicized form of his Greek name, while others use the Latin form Quirinius. His full name is Publius Sulpicius Quirinius.

Throughout his varied career Quirinius served as consul of Rome, military leader, tutor to Gaius Caesar, and legate (governor). He died in A.D. 21.

Luke's reference to Quirinius as governor during the nativity has caused some scholars to question Lukan historical accuracy. It is established that Quirinius was legate in Syria from A.D. 6 to 9, but this date is far too late for Jesus' birth, which occurred prior to the death of Herod the Great who died in 4 B.C. Luke's historical reference seems in direct conflict with nonbiblical sources establishing that either Saturninus (9–7 B.C.) or Varus (6–4 B.C.) was legate of Syria during Christ's birth.

The discovery of an ancient inscription has shown that a legate fitting the description of Quirinius served two different times in Syria. Apparently the nativity occurred during Quirinius' first tenure in Syria as legate with primary responsibilities for military affairs, while Varus was the legate handling civil matters. Quirinius served a second term in A.D. 6–9.

This solution affirms Lukan accuracy without overlooking other known historical sources.

Stephen Dollar

CYRUS [Cy' rüs] Third king of Anshan, Cyrus (the Great) assumed the throne about 559 B.C. According to the best histories, Cyrus was reared by a shepherd after his grandfather, Astyages, king of Media, ordered that he be killed. Apparently, Astyages had dreamed that Cyrus would one day succeed him as king before the reigning monarch's death. The officer charged with the execution instead carried the boy into the hills to the shepherds.

As an adult, Cyrus organized the Persians into an army and revolted against his grandfather and father (Cambyses I). He defeated them and claimed their throne.

One of his first acts as king of Medio-Persia was to launch an attack against Lydia, capital of Sardis and storehouse for the riches of its king, Croesus. Turning eastward, Cyrus continued his campaign until he had carved out a vast empire, stretching from the Aegean Sea to India.

The Babylonian Empire next stood in his path, an obstacle that appeared to be insurmountable. Engaging the Babylonian army at Opis, Cyrus' troops routed them and moved on Babylon. The people in the capital welcomed Cyrus with open arms, seeing him as a liberator rather than a conqueror. All that remained was Egypt, which he left for his son, Cambyses II. Cyrus truly was the ruler of the world.

Cyrus' military exploits have become legendary. However, he is best remembered for his policies of peace. His famous decree in 539 B.C. (2 Chron. 36:22-23; Ezra 1:1-4) set free the captives Babylon had taken during its harsh rule. Among these prisoners were the Jews taken from Jerusalem in 586 B.C. They were allowed to return to rebuild the temple and city. Along with this freedom Cyrus restored the valuable treasures of the temple taken during the exile. Since the Jews had done well in Babylon financially many of them did not want to return to the wastes of Judah. From these people Cyrus exacted a tax to help pay for the trip for those who did wish to rebuild Jerusalem.

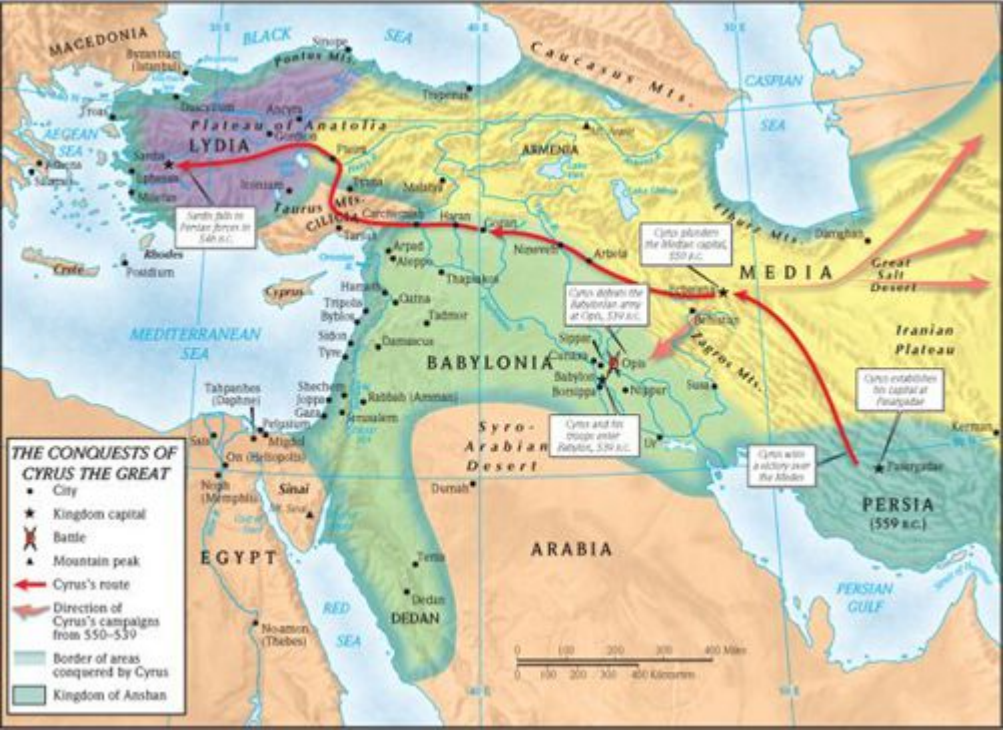

The Cyrus Cylinder, inscribed with the famous Edict of Cyrus the Great in 538 B.C. (2 Chron. 36:23; Ezra 1:2-3).

An astute politician, Cyrus made it a practice publicly to worship the gods of each kingdom he conquered. In so doing he won the hearts of his subjects and kept down revolt. He is referred to as Yahweh's shepherd and anointed (Isa. 44:28–45:6) because of his kindness to the Jews and worship of Yahweh.

His last years are obscure. Cyrus was killed while fighting a frontier war with the nomadic Massagetae people. His tomb is in Pasargadae (modern Murghab).

Mike Mitchell

The Dead Sea

DABAREH [Dāb' á rēh] (KJV, Josh. 21:28). See Daberath.

DABBASHETH [Dāb' bá shēth] or DABBESHETH Place-name meaning “hump.” A border town of the tribe of Zebulun (Josh. 19:11). It is modern Tell esh-Shammam northwest of Jokneam.

DABERATH [Dāb' ē rāth] Place-name meaning “pasture.” Border city of Zebulun near Mount Tabor (Josh. 19:12). In Josh. 21:28 it is a city given the Levites from the territory of Issachar. It is modern Daburiyeh at the northwest foot of Mount Tabor.

DAGGER KJV translation for the short, double-edged weapon of Ehud, the judge (Judg. 3:16-22). Other translations use “sword.” Ehud's weapon was one cubit in length (18-22 inches), enabling him to conceal it under his cloak.

DAGON [Dā' gōn] Name of a god meaning “little fish” or “dear.” Dagon is a god associated with the Philistines. However, his origin was in Mesopotamia during the third millennium B.C. By 2000 B.C. a major temple was erected for him in the maritime city of Ugarit. Ugaritic commerce carried his cult into Canaan when Canaan was still a part of the Egyptian Empire. When the Philistines conquered the coastal region of Canaan, they adopted Dagon as their chief deity.

According to a popular etymology of Dagon, the name came from the Hebrew word for fish, and so it was postulated that he was a sea god. However, archaeological evidence does not support this view. The name probably was derived originally from the word for grain or possibly from a word for clouds. Thus Dagon was a grain god or a storm god, much like Baal. According to Ugaritic documents from the fourteenth century B.C., Dagon was the father of Baal. Little else is known about his mythology or cult.

After the Philistines subdued Samson, they credited the victory to Dagon (Judg. 16:23). However, when Samson collapsed Dagon's temple upon himself and the Philistines, he proved the superiority of Israel's God.

Likewise, the overthrow of the idol of Dagon before the ark of the covenant demonstrated God's predominance (1 Sam. 5:1-7). Nevertheless the Philistines later displayed the head of Saul as a trophy in the temple of Dagon (1 Chron. 10:10). See Philistines.

LeBron Matthews

DALAIAH [Dá láí' áh] (KJV) See Delaiah.

DALMANUTHA [Dál má nū' thá] Place to which Jesus and His disciples came following the feeding of the 4,000 (Mark 8:10). Its location is not known. The parallel reference in Matt. 15:39 suggests it was in the area of Magdala. See Magdala.

DALMATIA [Dál má' shí á] Place-name referring to the southern part of Illyricum, north of Greece and across the Adriatic Sea from Italy. At the writing of 2 Timothy, Titus had left Paul to go to Dalmatia (2 Tim. 4:10). Paul had preached in Illyricum (Rom. 15:19). Illyricum included most of modern Yugoslavia and Albania.

DALPHON [Dál' phôn] Personal name apparently derived from Persian word, perhaps meaning "sleepless." One of 10 sons of Haman, chief enemy of Mordecai and Esther. The sons were killed when the Jews protected themselves against the Persian attack (Esther 9:7).

DAMARIS [Dám' á rís] Personal name meaning "heifer." An Athenian woman who became a Christian following Paul's sermon at the Aeropagus, the highest court in Athens (Acts 17:34).

DAMASCENE [Dám' á sèn] Resident and/or citizen of Damascus. See Damascus.

DAMASCUS [Dá mäs' cüs] Capital of important city-state in Syria with close historical ties to Israel. Apparently Damascus has been occupied continuously for a longer period of time than any other city in the world and can claim to be the world's oldest city.

Wall of the New Testament period in Damascus from which Paul escaped to begin his ministry.

Setting Its geographical location enabled Damascus to become a dominant trading and transportation center. Standing 2,300 feet above sea level, it lay northeast of Mount Hermon and about 60 miles east of Sidon, the Mediterranean port city. Both major international highways ran through Damascus: the Via Maris from Mesopotamia in the east through Damascus and the Jezreel Valley to the Plain of Sharon and the Mediterranean coast, then south to Egypt; and the King's Highway from Damascus south through Ashtaroth, Rabbath-ammon, and Bozrah to Elath on the Red Sea and to Arabia. By the same token, Damascus saw armies march along the highways, often using Damascus as the staging area.

History Archaeology cannot contribute much to the study of Damascus since the continued existence of the city makes excavation difficult, if not impossible. Explorations do indicate settlement from before 3000 B.C. Tablets from the Syrian center of Ebla mention Damascus about 2300 B.C. Thutmose III of Egypt claimed to have conquered Damascus about 1475 B.C. The Hittites battled Egypt for control of Damascus until the Hittites were defeated by the Sea Peoples about 1200 B.C. At this time Arameans from the nearby desert came in and took control of an independent Damascus, gradually establishing a political power base.

In the Bible Abraham chased invading kings north of Damascus to recover Lot, who had been taken captive (Gen. 14:15). Abraham's servant Eliezer apparently came from Damascus (Gen. 15:2).

Soldiers of Damascus attempted to help Hadadezer, king of Zobah another Syrian city-state against David. David won and occupied Damascus (2 Sam. 8:5-6). The weakness of Zobah encouraged Rezon to organize a renegade band, much as David had in opposing Saul (1 Sam. 22:2). Rezon became the leader of Syria headquartered in Damascus (1 Kings 11:23-25). God used him to harass Solomon.

The new Syrian city-state faced a strong opponent from the east as Assyria rose to power. Ben-hadad strengthened Damascus to the point that Asa, king of Judah (910–869), paid him tribute to attack Baasha, king of Israel, and relieve pressure on Judah (1 Kings 15:16-23). This gave Damascus reason to interfere repeatedly in politics in Palestine.

The city wall of biblical Damascus.

First Kings 20 also features Ben-hadad of Damascus, giving reason to believe that Benhadad (literally, “son of Hadad”) was a royal title in Syria, identifying the king of Damascus as a worshiper of the god Hadad, another name for Baal. The Syrian king attacked Samaria under King Ahab (874– 853). A prophet revealed the way to victory for Ahab over a drunken Benhadad. The Syrian king decided Israel's God controlled the hills but not the plains, so he attacked at Aphek (1 Kings 20:26). Again a prophet pointed the way to Israel's victory. Ahab agreed to a covenant treaty with the defeated Syrian king, for which he met a prophet's strong judgment (1 Kings 20:35-43).

The window in the city wall of Damascus which may be the site of Paul's escape in a basket from the city.

The traditional street called Straight in Damascus, Syria.

Naaman, a Syrian officer, sought Elisha's help in curing his skin disease but decided Abana and Pharpar, the great rivers of Damascus, offered greater help than did the Jordan (2 Kings 5:12). These rivers made Damascus an oasis in the midst of the desert. Elisha helped deliver Samaria when Ben-hadad besieged it (2 Kings 6-7). Elisha also prophesied a change of dynasty in Damascus, naming Hazael its king (2 Kings 8:7-15). Shalmaneser III of Assyria (858-824) claimed to have defeated both Ben-hadad and Hazael. The first important battle came at Qarqar in 853 B.C. Ahaziah, king of Judah (841), joined Joram, king of Israel (852-841), in battle against Hazael with Joram being wounded. Jehu took advantage of the wounded king and killed him (2 Kings 8:25-9:24).

Having fought against Damascus in campaigns in 853, 849, 848, and 845, Shalmaneser III of Assyria severely weakened Damascus, besieging it in 841 and then receiving tribute again in 838. After this, Hazael of Damascus exercised strong influence, gaining influence in Israel, Judah, and Philistia (2 Kings 10:32-33). His son Ben-hadad maintained Damascus' strength (2 Kings 13:3-25). Finally, Jehoash, king of Israel (798-782), regained some cities from Damascus (2 Kings 13:25). Jeroboam II, king of Israel (793-753), expanded Israelite influence and gained control of Damascus (2 Kings 14:28). This was possible because Assyria threatened Syria again, as Adad-nirari III, king of Assyria (810-783), invaded Syria from 805 to 802 and again in 796. About 760 B.C. Amos the prophet condemned Damascus and its kings Hazael and Ben-hadad (Amos 1:3-5).

Tiglath-pileser III, king of Assyria (744–727), threatened Damascus anew. King Rezin of Damascus joined with Pekah, king of Israel, about 734 B.C. in an effort to stop the Assyrians. They marched on Jerusalem, trying to force Ahaz of Judah to join them in fighting Assyria (2 Kings 16:5). The Prophet Isaiah warned Ahaz not to participate with Syria and Israel (Isa. 7). He also said that Assyria would destroy Damascus (Isa. 8:4; cp. chap. 17). Rezin of Damascus had some military success (2 Kings 16:6), but he could not get Ahaz of Judah to cooperate. Neither could Isaiah. Instead, Ahaz sent money to Tiglathpileser, asking him to rescue Judah from Israel and Damascus. The Assyrians responded readily and captured Damascus in 732 B.C., exiling its leading people (2 Kings 16:7-9). Damascus had one last influence on Judah; for when Ahaz went to Damascus to pay tribute to Tiglath-pileser, he liked the altar he saw there and had a copy made for the Jerusalem temple (2 Kings 16:10-16). Damascus sought to gain independence from Assyria in 727 and 720 but without success. Thus Damascus became a captive state of first the Assyrians, then the Babylonians, Persians, Greeks, Ptolemies, and Seleuccids. Finally, Rome gained control under Pompey in 64 B.C. Jews began to migrate to Damascus and establish synagogues there. Thus Saul went to Damascus to determine if any Christian believers were attached to the synagogues there so that he might persecute them (Acts 9). Thus the Damascus road became the site of Saul's conversion experience and Damascus the site of his introduction to the church. He had to escape from Damascus in a basket to begin his ministry (2 Cor. 11:32-33). Damascus gained importance, eventually becoming a Roman colony. See Baal; Ben-hadad; Hadad; Syria.

Trent C. Butler

DAN [Dān] Personal name meaning “judge.” First son born to Jacob by Rachel's maid Bilhah (Gen. 30:6). He was the original ancestor of the tribe of Dan. When the Israelites entered Canaan, the tribe of Dan received land on the western coast. They could not fully gain control of the territory, especially after the Philistines settled in the area. The last chapters of Judges show Samson of the tribe of Dan fighting the Philistines. Eventually Dan migrated to the north and was able to take a city called Laish. They renamed the city Dan and settled in the area around it. Dan was always a small tribe, and it never exercised significant influence in Israel. The most prominent Danites mentioned in the Bible are Oholiab and Samson.

Excavations at Dan showing the stone steps leading to the mud-brick gate in the background.

The biblical city of Dan is often mentioned in the description of the land of Israel, namely “from Dan even to Beersheba” (Judg. 20:1). It has been identified with modern Tell el-Qadi (or Tell Dan). The tell, which covers about 50 acres, is situated at the northern end of the richly fertile Huleh Plain at the base of Mount Hermon. The abundant springs of the site provide one of the three main sources of the Jordan River.

The city was formerly named Laish (Judg. 18:7, or Leshem in Josh. 19:47) when occupied by the Canaanites. This city is mentioned in the Egyptian execration texts and Mari tablets from the eighteenth century B.C. Later Thutmose III listed Laish among the cities conquered in his 1468 B.C. campaign.

Excavation of Tell Dan has been led by A. Biran of Hebrew University in Jerusalem since 1966. Laish was founded at the end of the early Bronze II Age (about 2700 B.C.) near the springs and flourished until about 2300 B.C. Significant pottery remains of this era were uncovered along with remains of floors and walls. The city probably remained unoccupied until the middle Bronze II period (about 2000 B.C.), when a large, well-fortified city was constructed. A massive earthen rampart similar to that of Hazor was built for defensive purposes, and set into the rampart (about 1750 B.C.) was a well-preserved, mud-brick “triple-arched gate.” The 15-meter square gate system stood 12 meters above the surrounding plain and contained the earliest arched entryways known in the world.

View of the mud-brick arched gateway just after its discovery and before it was completely uncovered.

The late Bronze Age is represented by a richly supplied tomb containing Mycenaean and Cypriote imported wares; ivory inlaid cosmetic boxes; gold, silver, and bronze objects; and 45 skeletons of men, women, and children.

Iron Age Laish was rebuilt by local inhabitants in the late thirteenth century B.C. but destroyed about 1100 B.C. by the migrating tribe of Dan. Scripture describes the conquest of the city as if the local people were unsuspecting of the coming invasion. Danites utilized the earlier rampart for defense and built their homes on the ruins of the previous city. The first Danite city, which contained some Philistine pottery remnants, was destroyed a century after its founding. The city was soon rebuilt and became a prominent Israelite city of the Iron Age.

Canopied structure at Dan, possibly a throne from Ahab's time.

Following the establishment of the Israelite kingdom under David and Solomon, Jeroboam led the Northern tribes in revolt against Rehoboam (about 925 B.C.). As an alternative to worship in Jerusalem, Dan and Bethel were fortified as border fortress/sanctuaries (1 Kings 12:29) with temples containing golden calf representations of Yahweh. This may have represented a combination of Baal worship with worship of Yahweh. The extent to which the Baal cult influenced Northern Israel is seen in the reign of Jehu, who did not destroy the altars at Dan and Bethel, despite eradicating the Baal priests from the land (2 Kings 10:23-29). Excavations at Dan have uncovered the “high place” of Jeroboam along with a small horned altar, the city gate (with royal throne) and walls (12 feet thick), hundreds of pottery vessels, buildings, and inscribed objects. This city was soon taken by Ben-hadad of Aram and then recaptured by Jeroboam II in the eighth century B.C. (2 Kings 14:25). The Israelite city of Dan fell to the Assyrians under Tiglath-pileser III (Pul of OT) about 743 B.C. (2 Kings 15:29). He annexed the city into an Assyrian district. Many Danites were deported to Assyria, Babylon, and Media following the fall of Samaria in 722 or 721 B.C. (2 Kings 17:6) to Sargon II. Foreigners were brought in from Babylon, Aram, and other lands to settle Israel's territory. The writer of Kings ascribed the fall of the kingdom to the worship of gods other than Yahweh (2 Kings 17:7-20), and Dan was one of the key centers of this idolatry.

As Josiah came to the throne of Judah in 639 B.C., Assyria was on the decline. Josiah incorporated the former Northern Kingdom territories into a united country, restoring the classical borders of Israel to “from Dan to Beersheba.” An upper gate to the city was built during this period, and the inscription found at this level, “belonging to Ba'alpelet,” demonstrates that Baal worship continued to influence this area after the Assyrian destruction. The partially rebuilt city survived until the onslaught of the Babylonian army of Nebuchadnezzar (about 589 B.C.; cp. Jer. 4:14-18).

Base for a canopy at Dan, probably from the time of Ahab.

Dan again was occupied in the Hellenistic, Roman, and Byzantine periods. In the area of the high place, statues and figurines of Greco-Roman and Egyptian gods such as Osiris, Bes, and Aphrodite have been excavated. The Greek and Aramaic inscription, “To the god who is in Dan, Zoilos made a vow,” further evidences the religious significance of the city. See Patriarchs; Tribes of Israel.

R. Dennis Cole

DANCING Essential part of Jewish life in Bible times. According to Eccles. 3:4, there is “a time to mourn, and a time to dance” (NASB). Dances were performed on both sacred and secular occasions, though the Hebrew mind would not likely have thought in these terms.

The OT employs 11 terms to describe the act of dance. This suggests something about the Hebrew interest in the subject. The basic Hebrew term translated “dance” means to twist or to whirl about in circular motions. Other terms for dance mean “to spring about,” “to jump,” “to leap,” “to skip.” One term seems to have been used of processional marches or dances at feasts and holidays.

The Greek terms for dance mean “row” or “ring.” The two terms are used five times in the NT (Matt. 11:17; 14:6; Mark 6:22; Luke 7:32; 15:25). Dances were performed for different purposes. The mood behind the dance was one of celebration and praise.

Military victories were celebrated with dances. Women sang and danced, accompanied by musical instruments. Miriam and other Israelite women sang and danced in celebration of the victory at the Red Sea (Exod. 15:20-21). Jephthah's daughter danced before her victorious father (Judg. 11:34) as did the Israelite women when David returned from having defeated the Philistines (1 Sam. 18:6). Men also danced to celebrate military victory (1 Sam. 30:16).

Dances were customary at weddings. On some occasions young ladies, dressed in their best clothing, danced in a bride-choosing ceremony (Judg. 21). Dances were performed in honor of the bride (Song 6:13b NRSV, NIV).

Some dances were performed for the sheer entertainment of guests. Salome danced before the princes and politicians gathered to celebrate her father's birthday (Matt. 14:6; Mark 6:22). Children played games of “dance” (Job 21:11), often with the accompaniment of a musical instrument (Matt. 11:17; Luke 7:32). The return of a long lost son was cause for celebration and dancing (Luke 15:25).

Jewish men dancing during a private ceremony in the Court of the Men at the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem.

Religious celebration was most often the occasion for dancing. David danced before the ark as it was brought into Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:14,16; 1 Chron. 15:29). The psalmist exhorted others to praise God with music and dancing (Pss. 149:3; 150:4). Also pagans used the dance as a means of honoring their gods (1 Kings 18:26).

In summary, the dance of the Jewish people was similar to what we today call the folk dance. It was performed by both males and females, though apparently not in mixed groups. Both group and individual dances were performed. See Music, Instruments, Dancing.

Glenn McCoy

DANIEL [Dān' yēl] Personal name meaning “God is judge” or “God's judge.”

1. Son of David and Abigail, the Carmelitess (1 Chron. 3:1), who is also called Chileab in 2 Sam. 3:3. 2. Priest of the Ithamar lineage (Ezra 8:2; Neh. 10:6) who returned with Ezra from the Babylonian captivity. 3. Daniel of Ezek. 14:14,20; 28:3 is spelled differently in Hebrew from all the other forms in the OT. This Daniel was a storied figure of antiquity mentioned with Noah and Job. He was famous for wisdom and righteousness. Due to the similarity in the spelling of the name and the common attributes of wisdom and righteousness, some interpreters identify this Daniel with the Daniel of the canonical book of Daniel. Most interpreters, however, take note of the differences in the spelling and also the fact of antiquity. Some identify the “Daniel” of Ezekiel with “Danel” of ancient Ugaritic literature.

4. The most common usage of “Daniel” refers to the hero of the book of Daniel. This young man of nobility was taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and elevated to high rank in the Babylonian and Persian kingdoms. The Babylonians sought to remove all vestiges of Daniel's nationality and religion. For this reason they sought to change the name of Daniel to Beltshazzar (Dan. 1:7; 2:26; 4:8-9,18-19; 5:12; 10:1).

Daniel was transported from Judah to Babylon in his early youth after the battle of Carchemish, 605 B.C. The text does not indicate his precise age. Daniel was given the name Beltshazzar and his three Hebrew companions, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, came to be called Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan. 1:6-7). He was trained in the arts, letters, and wisdom in the Babylonian capital. Eventually, he rose to high rank among the Babylonian men of wisdom. He was active throughout the long reign of Nebuchadnezzar (604-562 B.C.). NO mention is made in Daniel of the times of Evilmerodach (561-560 B.C.), Neriglissar (559-555 B.C.), or Labashi-Marduk (555 B.C.). However, much information is provided concerning Daniel's involvement during the reign of Nabonidus (555-539

B.C.). While Nabonidus was absent from his country for extended periods of time, he put his son Belshazzar in charge of the affairs of government.

Daniel was in Babylon when the forces of Cyrus, the Persian, captured Babylon. Successively, Daniel was a high governmental official during the reigns of Cyrus (539-529 B.C.) and Cambyses (529-522 B.C.). He served also during his old age into the reign of Darius I, the son of Hystaspes (522-486 B.C.). Daniel would probably have celebrated his one hundredth birthday during the reign of Darius. He had outstanding physical attraction. He demonstrated at an early age propensities of knowledge, wisdom, and leadership. In addition to his wisdom, he was skilled in dream interpretation. Throughout his entire life he demonstrated an unshakable faith in his God. It took courage to resist the temptations and threats that confronted him repeatedly. He recognized that God was continuously judging him. He remained faithful.

J.J. Owens

DANIEL, BOOK OF The book of Daniel is one of the most intriguing works in the Bible. Its stories are beautifully told and its visions are awe inspiring. Timeless truths fill its pages. Yet it is also one of the most controversial books in Scripture with key differences centering on interpretation and authorship and date of composition.

Daniel and the Canon In the English versions, Daniel appears as the last of four major prophetic books, whereas in the Hebrew Bible it is grouped with the section of Scripture known as the Hagiographa or the Writings. Daniel is referred to in Scripture as a prophet in a general sense, like Abraham (Gen. 20:7) or Moses (Deut. 18:15) because he received messages from God and shared these with the people, but primarily Daniel was a statesman and an administrator. He never preached sermons to the nation of Israel in the manner of Isaiah or Jeremiah, and for this reason those responsible for finalizing the canon of the Hebrew Bible did not include the book with the prophets. Daniel's position in the prophetic section in the English versions follows the pattern of the majority of Greek translations.

Authorship and Date The traditional position is that Daniel wrote the book in the sixth century B.C., the prophecy is historically reliable, and its predictions are supernatural and accurate. In modern times some scholars have maintained the view (first proposed by the Neo-Platonist Porphyry in the third century A.D.) that the prophecy in its present form was produced by an anonymous Jew during the second century B.C. writing under the pseudonym (false name) Daniel. The book consists of non-historical accounts and pseudo-prophecies (vaticinia ex eventu). Its purpose was to encourage Jewish believers in their struggle against the SyrianGreek tyrant, Antiochus IV Epiphanes (175–163 B.C.) during the Maccabean period. According to this Maccabean thesis, the book of Daniel would be the latest of the OT Scriptures. Generally, those who hold the Maccabean view consider chapters 7–12 essentially to be an original creation of the second-century author who introduced his material with the tales of chapters 1–6, a collection borrowed from a Danielic corpus dating to the previous century. Often the second century writer is identified as a member of the religious sect known as the Hasidim.

Those who espouse the Maccabean hypothesis contend that the book's language, theology, position in the Hebrew canon with the Writings rather than the prophets (discussed above), and inaccuracies concerning historical events before the second century suggest a late date of composition. However, the historical reliability of the book has been confirmed in many instances by archaeological discoveries (e.g., the historicity of Belshazzar and the invasion of Jerusalem by the Babylonian armies in 605 B.C.), and the alleged historical inaccuracies on close examination are found to have reasonable solutions. Neither does the language necessitate a late date. Daniel completed his book after the Persian conquest of Babylon and even served in the new administration, thus the presence of Persian loan words is not surprising. Actually, the Persian expressions seem to be rather strong evidence for an early time of composition, for they are old Persian words that ceased to be used by about 300 B.C. Neither would the three Greek loanwords in the book (3:5,7,10,15) demand a late date since archaeological evidence has demonstrated extensive contact between Greece and the nations surrounding the Mediterranean Sea well before the sixth century B.C. On the other hand, if the book was written between 170-164 B.C.

during Greek control of Palestine, we would expect to find a plethora of Greek words in the text. The Aramaic of Daniel (and Ezra) exhibits striking parallels with early examples of the language found in documents (e.g., the Elephantine papyri) also written in Imperial Aramaic and dated to the fifth century B.C. and earlier. Furthermore, the Aramaic of the book does not conform to later samples of the language found at Qumran (e.g., Genesis Apocryphon). Finally, arguments for dating documents based on theology are precarious. If Daniel is dated to the sixth century by other objective criteria, the theology in the book is sixth-century theology.

Arguments for the traditional view are: (1) The NT writers and Jesus Himself seem to have accepted the traditional understanding of the prophecy (cp. Matt. 24:15 to Mark 13:14; Matt. 26:64 to Mark 14:62 to Luke 22:69; Heb. 11:32-34). (2) The book professes to have been written by Daniel (cp. 7:1; 12:4), to be an account of a historical individual who experienced the exile and lived in Babylon, and to be a prediction of future events (e.g., Dan. 7:2,4, 6-28; 8; 9:2-27; 10:2-21; 12:4-8). (3) One of the eight manuscripts of Daniel discovered at Qumran (4QDan^C) has been dated to ca. 125 B.C. and may have been written earlier. Some scholars have argued that there would have been insufficient time for the book of Daniel to have gained such universal acceptance if written only forty years earlier. (4) The Septuagint (LXX) is the name commonly designated for a Greek translation of the OT by Jewish scholars in Egypt (Alexandria) that came to be used widely by the Jews of the Diaspora. Scholars generally agree that at least the Pentateuch was translated in the middle of the third century B.C. It is probable that all of the Bible books were translated into Greek about the same time. Certainly by ca. 130 B.C. (when the grandson of Ben Sirach wrote the Prologue to Ecclesiasticus) Daniel had been translated into Greek. According to the Maccabean hypothesis, only 30 years after Daniel was written, the book had been received into the canon and carried to Alexandria, Egypt, approximately three hundred miles away, and there translated into Greek. Such a proposal seems unlikely. (5) Ezekiel, the sixth-century prophet, alluded to Daniel three times in his book (14:14,20; 28:3), and these references would appear to be decisive evidence for the traditional view. Since the discoveries at Ras Shamra, however, scholars who accept the late date have attempted to explain these passages by declaring that Ezekiel was referring to a mythological figure named, Danel, who appears in the Ugaritic epic, "The Tale of Aqhat." A devastating argument against the theory that Ezekiel's Daniel is this Ugaritic hero is that Danel was an idolater! Ezekiel must have been referring to the author of the book of Daniel. If so, the historicity of Daniel and his book would seem to be established.

Type of Literature The first division of the book (chaps. 1-6) consists of historical material and some prophecy (chap. 2); the second division (chaps. 7-12) contains both history and apocalyptic messages. Daniel is the classic example of the apocalyptic genre. The term "apocalyptic" is derived from a Greek word, apokalupsis, "revelation, disclosure." In this genre a divine revelation is given to a prophet through a divine mediator concerning future events. Symbolism and numerology are often employed. The major theme of apocalyptic is the eschatological triumph of the kingdom of God over the kingdoms of the earth. Apocalyptic grants the world a glimpse of God and the future.

Language An unusual feature of the book is that it is written in two languages. Daniel 1:1-2:4a and 8:1-12:13 (157 ½ verses) are written in Hebrew, whereas 2:4b-7:28 (199 ½ verses) are in Aramaic. Various theories have been offered to explain this phenomenon, but the most satisfying proposal is that the employment of the two languages was a deliberate device on Daniel's part. Aramaic (the lingua franca of this period) was reserved for the parts of the book that had universal appeal or special relevance to the Gentile nations, and Hebrew was employed for those portions that most concerned the Jewish people.

Texts and Versions The Hebrew and Aramaic text of Daniel has been well preserved, and few of the textual variations are significant. Of the versions, the Greek translations designated Theodotion and the Septuagint (LXX) are by far the most important. Theodotion's translation more exactly corresponds to the Hebrew text and for this reason largely replaced the LXX for Christian usage. Three lengthy additions are inserted in the LXX that are not found in the Hebrew-Aramaic text of Daniel: the Prayer of Azariah and the Song of the Three Young Men, Susanna, and Bel and the Dragon. Although these expansions make for interesting reading, they were not accepted by the Jews in Palestine as Scripture and were not included in the Palestinian canon. Since none of the LXX additions is found in the Qumran texts, it is reasonable to assume that they originated outside of Palestine, possibly in Egypt. Today Protestants and Jews include these works in the Apocrypha, whereas in Roman Catholic editions the first is inserted in the book itself following 3:23, and the last two appear at the end as chapters 13 and 14.

Eight manuscripts of the text of Daniel have survived two millennia in the caves of Qumran. These documents were produced sometime between the second century B.C. and the first century A.D. The Qumran fragments demonstrate the faithfulness with which the biblical text was preserved over the centuries.

Theological Emphases Without doubt the principal theological theme of the book is the sovereignty of God. Every page reflects the author's conviction that his God is the Lord of individuals, nations, and all of history. Daniel also emphasizes the person and work of the Messiah (e.g., 7:13-14, 9:24-27). Eschatology is another prominent theme in Daniel's prophecies. Believers will experience tribulation in the last days (7:21,25; 9:27; 12:1), but the Messiah will appear and establish a glorious, eternal kingdom (2:44-45; 7:13-14,26-27; 9:24). In this wonderful new world, the saints will be rewarded and honored (12:2-3).

Structure That the book of Daniel should be divided according to the type of literature—the stories of Daniel (1:1-6:28) and the prophecies of Daniel (7:1-12:13)—is indicated by the chronological scheme set forth by the author of the book and by the fact that the author himself grouped homogeneous literary accounts together.

Interpretation Those who hold to the Maccabean thesis interpret virtually every aspect of the book of Daniel to address the persecutions of the Jews by Antiochus IV in the second century B.C. The author believed that the kingdom of God would be ushered in upon the death of the Syrian-Greek tyrant. Among those who follow the traditional view, key differences of interpretation concern whether the kingdom of God described in chapter 2 refers to Christ's first or second coming, the nature of the 70 weeks in chapter 9 (symbolic periods or weeks of years) and their culmination (first century A.D. or Christ's second coming), and whether certain prophetic passages refer to the nation of Israel or the church, as a spiritual Israel (e.g., 9:24).

Outline

I. The Ministry of Daniel in Babylon (1:1-6:28)

A. Daniel's identity and godly character are described (1:1-21).

B. Daniel interprets Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the four Gentile empires and the coming kingdom of God (2:1-49).

C. Daniel's three friends refuse to bow before the king's idolatrous statue, are thrown into the fire, but are miraculously delivered (3:1-30).

D. Nebuchadnezzar is humbled by the Lord of heaven for his pride (4:1-37).

E. The handwriting on the wall warns Belshazzar of his doom for blaspheming Israel's God at an immoral feast (5:1-31).

F. Daniel is thrown into a den of lions for his faithfulness to God but is delivered (6:1-28).

II. The Visions of Daniel in Babylon (7:1-12:13)

In vision Daniel is shown four world empires (symbolized by beasts), the last of which will be overcome by the "son of man" who establishes an everlasting kingdom populated by the saints of the Most High (7:1-28).

The vision of the ram, the goat, and the little horn symbolizes the victories of Alexander the Great over Persia and the coming of Antiochus IV from a division of the Greek Empire (8:1-27). In response to Daniel's prayer, God assures the prophet through the vision of the 70 weeks that Israel will be reestablished and preserved as a nation (9:1-27).

Daniel's final vision furnishes a preview of great world empires, a description of the deliverance of the saints in the end times, and final instructions to the prophet (10:1-12:13).

Stephen R. Miller

DANITE [Dän' it] Resident and/or citizen of city of Dan or member of tribe of Dan. See Dan.

DAN-JAAN [Dän-já' án] Place-name of uncertain meaning in 2 Sam. 24:6. Many Bible students think the scribes have not preserved the correct Hebrew text at this point and read only “Dan” (NRSV) or “Dan and Ijon” (NEB). If the present Hebrew text is correct, the location of the town is not known except that it is apparently in the territory of the tribe of Dan.

DANNAH [Dän' nāh] Place-name meaning “fortress.” Town assigned tribe of Judah in the hill country (Josh. 15:49). Its location is uncertain.

DAPPLED Variegated gray color of the horses in the vision in Zech. 6:3,6. KJV translates the rare Hebrew term as “bay.” Modern translators follow the earliest Greek translation in reading “dappled.” The Hebrew term also appears in Gen. 31:10,12 and in a few manuscripts of Neh. 5:18. KJV reads “grisled,” while modern translations have “spotted,” “speckled,” or “mottled.”

DARA [Dār' á] Hebrew reading in 1 Chron. 2:6 for Darda of 1 Kings 4:31. See Darda.

DARDA [Dār' dá] Personal name possibly meaning “pearl of knowledge.” Famous wise man whose father is listed as Mahol in 1 Kings 4:31 but as Zerah in what appears to be a parallel list in 1 Chron. 2:6. Mahol may mean “dancer,” “musician,” or “chorister,” representing an occupation or guild rather than the father's name.

DARIC Persian gold coin equivalent to four days' wages, probably introduced by Darius I (522-486 B.C.) and possibly the earliest coined money used by the Jews who became acquainted with it during the exile. Offerings for the reconstruction of the temple were made in darics (Ezra 2:69 ESV; Neh. 7:70,72). Some interpreters understand the 20 gold basins in Ezra 8:27 to be worth 1,000 darics each. Others take this as a weight of about 19 pounds or 8.5 kilograms. See Coins.

DARIUS [Dā-rī' ūs] Name of several Medo-Persian kings, three of whom are mentioned in the OT. 1. Darius the Mede (Dan. 5:31), ruler who took Babylon from Belshazzar. Against his own will, he had Daniel thrown to the lions and later decreed that “in all...my kingdom men are to fear and tremble before the God of Daniel” (Dan. 6:26 NASB). He was an enigma to scholars because ancient sources indicate that the Persian Cyrus was the conqueror of Babylon. Furthermore, archaeological evidence for him is lacking. Some deny the existence of Darius the Mede and say the biblical text is a fictional attempt to fulfill prophecies of Median conquest over Babylon (Isa. 13:17-18; 21:2; Jer. 51:1,27-28). Others have suggested several possibilities, but evidence points to only one likely candidate. This person was Gubaru (or Gobyrus), governor of Gutium, who seized Babylon for Cyrus and was viceroy over Mesopotamia, exercising royal powers. His age and ancestry are unknown, but Gutium was in Median territory, and an army he led would have been Median. Daniel 6:28 seems to indicate that Cyrus and Darius ruled simultaneously. 2. Darius I (521-486 B.C.), also known as Darius Hystaspes or the Great, was both extremely cruel and generous. Darius seized power following the death of Cambyses II, son of Cyrus. Being only a cousin of Cambyses, Darius emphasized his royal ancestry, but his rule was not recognized in all provinces, and he endured numerous revolts. Once control was established, Darius demonstrated great military prowess. He extended his empire from northern India in the east to the Black Sea and parts of Greece in the west, making his the largest empire known to that time. He made two attempts to invade mainland Greece. The first was stopped by a storm in the Aegean, and the second came within 20 miles of Athens. The Athenians defeated him at Marathon (490 B.C.), stopping westward expansion. Darius unified the Persian Empire, establishing 20 satrapies or provinces and decreeing Aramaic the official language. He instituted a system of weights and measures, extended trade routes, and probably introduced gold coins (darics) as currency. Also, he undertook several impressive building projects. This is the Darius of Ezra (Ezra 4-6; Haggai; Zech. 1-8), under whom the temple in Jerusalem was reconstructed, completed in the sixth year of his reign. Darius continued

Cyrus' policy of restoring disenfranchised peoples who were victims of Assyrian and Babylonian conquests. Darius reaffirmed Cyrus' authorization and also provided for maintenance of the temple. 3. Darius the Persian (Neh. 12:22), although scholars differ as to his identity, is believed by many to be Darius III Codomannus (336-331 B.C.). He was defeated by Alexander the Great, which brought an end to Persian rule. But this is highly unlikely, as his rule postdates Nehemiah. This Darius coincides with the priesthoods of Jaddua and Johanan (Neh. 12:11,22-23), which identifies him as Darius II (423-404 B.C.), given name Ochus. He was son of Artaxerxes I by a Babylonian concubine and was the governor of Hyrcania on the Caspian Sea. His half brother, Sogdianus, killed Xerxes II and seized his throne in 423 B.C. Ochus soon executed Sogdianus and seized the throne for himself. Uprisings and corruption plagued his reign, but he won the Peloponnesian War, conquering Greek coastal cities on the Aegean.

T. J. Betts

Relief of Darius I giving an audience.

Remains of the throne of Darius the Great.

DARKNESS Absence of light is used in both physical and figurative senses in both the OT and NT. The darkness that covered the deep before God's creation of light symbolizes chaos in opposition to God's orderly creation (Gen. 1:2-3). Elsewhere darkness, as well as light, is recognized as the creation of God (Isa. 45:7). Darkness is a place where “workers of iniquity may hide” (Job 34:22 NASB); however, darkness does not hide one from God (Ps. 139:11-12; Dan. 2:22).

Darkness was thought of as a curse. Thus the OT speaks of death as a land of darkness (Job 10:21-22; 17:13; Ps. 88:6). Darkness is frequently associated with supernatural events involving the judgment of God, such as the plagues of Egypt (Exod. 10:21), the coming of the Lord (Isa. 13:9-10; Joel 2:31; Matt. 24:29), and Christ's crucifixion (Matt. 27:45). The day of God's judgment is often described as a day of darkness (Joel 2:2; Amos 5:18-20). Elsewhere darkness forms part of God's punishment on the disobedient (Deut. 28:29; 1 Sam. 2:9; Job 5:14; 15:30; 20:26; Ps. 107:10; Isa. 47:5; Jer. 13:16; Ezek. 32:8).

In the NT the place of punishment for humans and sinful angels is designated “the outer darkness” (Matt. 8:12; 22:13; 25:30; cp. 2 Pet. 2:4; Jude 6,13). Darkness often has an ethical sense. Scripture speaks of ways of darkness (Prov 2:13; 4:19), walking in darkness (John 8:12; 1 John 1:6; cp. 2 Cor. 6:14; Eph. 5:8), and works of darkness (Rom. 13:12; Eph. 5:11). In this ethical sense God has no darkness in Himself (1 John 1:5). Powers hostile to God can be termed darkness. People thus face a choice of whether to yield allegiance to God or to darkness (Luke 22:53; John 1:5; 3:19; Col. 1:13; 1 Thess. 5:5). Darkness also symbolizes ignorance, especially of God and of God's ways (Isa. 8:22; 9:2; John 12:46; Acts 26:18; 1 Thess. 5:4; 1 John 2:9). God's deliverance (either from ignorance or hostile powers) is described as lighting the darkness (Isa. 9:2; 29:18; 42:7-16; Mic. 7:8; 1 Pet. 2:9). See Light.

Chris Church

DARKON [Dār' kōn] Personal name, perhaps meaning "hard." A servant of Solomon whose descendants returned from exile with Zerubbabel about 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:56).

DART Thrusting or throwing weapon used for medium range combat, either similar to a spear or javelin (2 Sam. 18:14) or else an arrow (Prov. 7:23; Eph. 6:16). The use of flaming arrows (Pss. 7:13; 120:4) becomes in Eph. 6:16 a picture of the assault of the evil one on believers. KJV uses "darts" to translate two different Hebrew words, the first meaning "stick" or "staff," and the second, "arrows."

DATES Fruit of the date palm (Phoenix dactylifera), highly valued by desert travelers who consume dates fresh, dry them, or form them into cakes for a portable and easily storable food. As part of the celebration of bringing the ark to Jerusalem, David gave gifts of food to each Israelite gathered in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:19; 1 Chron. 16:3). The meaning of the Hebrew term is uncertain. NASB and NIV use "cake of dates" at 2 Sam. 6:19 (also TEV margin). Other modern translations follow the KJV, understanding the food as a piece of meat. The NIV, but not the NASB, uses "cake of dates" in the parallel account in 1 Chronicles.

The NASB of Song 5:11 describes the hair of the king as "like a cluster of dates," perhaps a reference to a full head of hair. The REB translates the same term as “like palm-fronds.” Other translations speak of bushy hair (KJV), curly hair (KJV margin), or wavy hair (NIV, NRSV, TEV). See Palms; Plants.

Dates growing on a date palm tree.

An Arab date vendor.

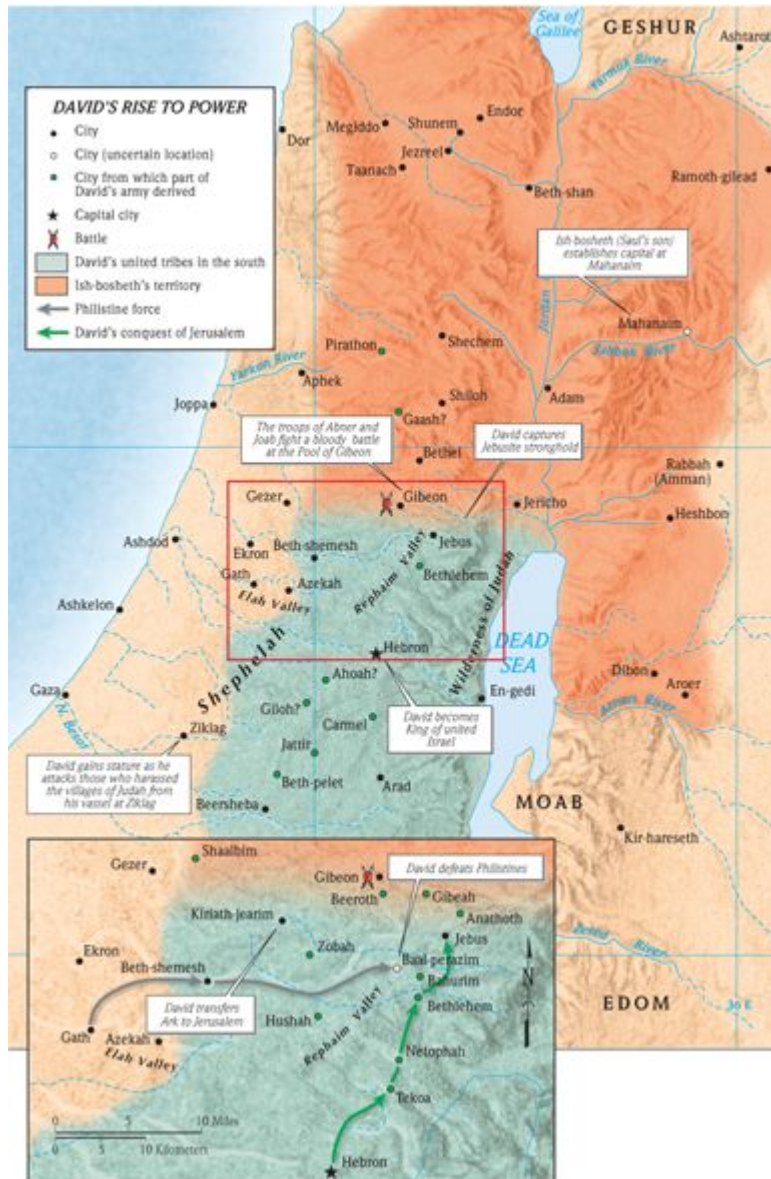

DATHAN [Dá' thán] Personal name meaning “fountain” or “warring.” The son of Eliab from the tribe of Reuben, Dathan and his brother Abiram were leaders of a revolt challenging Moses' authority over the Israelites. The attempted coup failed, and Dathan and Abiram, along with their families, were swallowed up by the earth (Num. 16). See Abiram; Numbers, Book of.

DAUGHTER-IN-LAW Wife of one's son. Famous daughters-in-law include Sarah, daughter-in-law of Terah (Gen. 11:31); Tamar, daughter-in-law of Judah (Gen. 38:11,16; 1 Chron. 2:4); and Ruth, daughter-in-law of Naomi (Ruth 2:20,22; 4:15). Daughters-in-law might be addressed simply as daughter (Ruth 2:2,8,22). Marriage made them an integral member of the family. Ruth was hailed as more to Naomi than seven sons (Ruth 4:15). The breakdown of the relationship between mothers-in-law and daughters-in-law illustrated the collapse of moral society (Mic. 7:6). In the NT differing responses to the gospel created the same breakdown of relationship (Matt. 10:35; Luke 12:53). Jewish law prohibited incest between a man and his daughter-in-law (Lev. 18:15). This crime was punishable by death (Lev. 20:12). In Ezek. 22:11 this crime illustrates the moral decline of the nation. See Family.

DAVID Personal name probably meaning “favorite” or “beloved.” The first king to unite Israel and Judah and the first to receive the promise of a royal messiah in his line. David was pictured as the ideal king of God's people. He ruled from about 1005 to 965 B.C.

Selection as King When Saul failed to meet God's standards for kingship (1 Sam. 15:23,35; 16:1), God sent Samuel to anoint a replacement from among the sons of Jesse, who lived in Bethlehem (1 Sam. 16:1). God showed Samuel He had chosen the youngest, who still tended sheep for his father (16:11-12). David's good looks were noteworthy.

In Saul's Court David's musical talent, combined with his reputation as a fighter, led one of Saul's servants to recommend David as the person to play the harp for Saul when the evil spirit from God troubled him (1 Sam. 16:18). Saul grew to love David and made him armor bearer for the king (16:21-22).

At a later date the Philistines with the giant Goliath threatened Israel (1 Sam. 17). David returned home to tend his father's sheep (17:15). Jesse sent David to the battlefield with food for his warrior brothers. At least one brother did not think too highly of him (17:28). Saul tried to persuade David, the youth, from challenging Goliath; but David insisted God would bring victory, which He did.

Saul's son Jonathan became David's closest friend (1 Sam. 18:1). David became a permanent part of Saul's court, not returning home (18:2). Saul gave David a military commission, which he fulfilled beyond expectations, defeating the Philistines and winning the hearts of the people. This stirred Saul's jealousy (18:8). Moved by the evil spirit from God, Saul tried to kill David with his spear; but God's presence protected David (18:10-12). David eventually earned the right to marry Michal, Saul's daughter, without being killed by the Philistines as Saul had hoped (18:17-27). With the help of Michal and Jonathan, David escaped from Saul and made contact with Samuel, the prophet (19:18). Jonathan and David made a vow of eternal friendship, and Jonathan risked his own life to protect David (1 Sam. 20).

Independent Warrior David gathered a band of impoverished and discontented people around him. He established relationships with Moab and other groups and gained favor with the people by defeating the Philistines (1 Sam. 22-23), but all Saul's efforts to capture him failed. God protected David, and David refused to injure Saul, instead promising not to cut off Saul's family (24:21-22).

Abigail of Maon intervened with David to prevent him from punishing her foolish husband Nabal. God brought Nabal's death, and David married Abigail. He also married Ahinoam of Jezreel, but Saul gave Michal, David's first wife, to another man (1 Sam. 25).

After again refusing to kill Saul, the Lord's anointed, David attached himself to Achish, the Philistine king of Gath. Saul finally quit chasing him. Achish gave Ziklag to David, who established a headquarters there and began destroying Israel's southern neighbors (1 Sam. 27). Despite the wishes of Achish, the other Philistine leaders would not let David join them in battle against Saul (1 Sam. 29). Returning home, David found the Amalekites had destroyed Ziklag and captured his wives. David followed God's leading and defeated the celebrating Amalekites, recovering all the spoils of war. These he distributed among his followers and among the peoples of Judah (1 Sam. 30).

King of Judah Hearing of the deaths of Saul and Jonathan, David avenged the murderer of Saul and sang a lament over the fallen (2 Sam. 1). He moved to Hebron, where the citizens of Judah crowned him king (2 Sam. 2). This led to war with Israel under Saul's son Ish-bosheth. After much intrigue, Ish-bosheth's commanders assassinated him. David did the same to them (2 Sam. 4).

King of Israel The northern tribes then crowned David king at Hebron, uniting all Israel under him. He led the capture of Jerusalem and made it his capital. After defeating the Philistines, David sought to move the ark of the covenant to Jerusalem, succeeding on his second attempt (2 Sam. 6). He then began plans to build a temple but learned from Nathan, the prophet, that he would instead build a dynasty with eternal dimensions (2 Sam. 7). His son would build the temple.

David then organized his administration and subdued other nations who opposed him, finally gaining control of the land God had originally promised the forefathers. He also remembered his promise to Jonathan and cared for his lame son Mephibosheth (2 Sam. 9).

A Sinner David was a giant among godly leaders, but he remained human as his sin with Bathsheba and Uriah showed. He spied Bathsheba bathing, desired her, and engineered the death of her faithful warrior husband, after committing adultery with her (2 Sam. 11). Nathan, the prophet, confronted David with his sin, and David confessed his wrongdoing. The newborn child of David and Bathsheba died. David acknowledged his helplessness in the situation, confessing faith that he would go to be with the child one day. Bathsheba conceived again, bearing Solomon (2 Sam. 12:1-25).

Family Intrigue Able to rule the people but not his family, David saw intrigue, sexual sins, and murder rock his own household, resulting in his isolation from and eventual retreat before Absalom. Still, David grieved long and deep when his army killed Absalom (2 Sam. 18:19-33). David's kingdom was restored, but the hints of division between Judah and Israel remained (2 Sam. 19:40-43). David had to put down a northern revolt (2 Sam. 20). The last act the books of Samuel report about David is his census of the people, bringing God's anger but also preparing a place for the temple to be built (2 Sam. 24). The last chapters of 1 Chronicles describe extensive preparations David made for the building and the worship services of the temple. David's final days involved renewed intrigue among his family, as Adonijah sought to inherit his father's throne, but Nathan and Bathsheba worked to ensure that Solomon became the next king (1 Kings 1:1-2:12).

A view of the excavations led by Kathleen Kenyon of the City of David.

Prophetic Hope David thus passed from the historical scene but left a legacy never to be forgotten. He was the role model for Israelite kings (1 Kings 3:14; 9:4; 11:4,6,33,38; 14:8; 15:3,11; 2 Kings 14:3; 16:2; 22:2). David was the “man of God” (2 Chron. 8:14), and God was “the God of your father David” (2 Kings 20:5 NASB). God's covenant with David was the deciding factor as God wrestled with David's disobedient successors on the throne (2 Chron. 21:7). Even as Israel rebuilt the temple, they followed “the directions of King David of Israel” (Ezra 3:10 NASB).

God's prophets pointed to a future David who would restore Israel's fortunes. “There will be no end to the increase of His government or of peace, on the throne of David and over his kingdom, to establish it and to uphold it with justice and righteousness from then on and forevermore” (Isa. 9:7 NASB). Jeremiah summed up the surety of the hope in David: “If you can break My covenant for the day, and My covenant for the night, so that day and night will not be at their appointed time, then My covenant may also be broken with David My servant that he shall not have a son to reign on his throne....As the host of heaven cannot be counted, and the sand of the sea cannot be measured, so I will multiply the descendants David My servant” (Jer. 33:20-22 NASB; cp. 33:15,17,25-26; Ezek. 34:23-24; 37:24-25; Hos. 3:5; Amos 9:11; Zech. 12:6-10).

New Testament The NT tells the story of Jesus as the story of the Son of God but also as the story of the Son of David from His birth (Matt. 1:1) until His final coming (Rev. 22:16). At least 12 times the Gospels refer to Him as “Son of David.” David was cited as an example of similar behavior by Jesus (Matt. 12:3), and David called Him “Lord” (Luke 20:42-44). David thus took his place in the roll call of faith given in Heb. 11:32. This was “David the son of Jesse, a man after My heart, who will carry out all My will” (Acts 13:22 HCSB).

DAVID, CITY OF Most ancient part of Jerusalem on its southeast corner representing the city occupied by the Jebusites and conquered by David (2 Sam. 5:7). The Kidron Valley bordered it on the east, and the Tyropoeon Valley on the west. The entire area occupied no more than 10 acres. It is also called Zion. This part of Jerusalem dates back at least to about 2500 B.C., when it is mentioned in the Ebla documents. Its strong defense walls on which the Jebusites prided themselves originated about 1750 B.C.

DAWN First appearance of light in the morning as the sun rises. Job 3:9 indicates that the stars are still visible at dawn. Dawn is used in the literal sense of the beginning of the day (Josh. 6:15; Judg. 19:26; Matt. 28:1; Acts 27:33). Matthew 4:16 uses the picture of the dawn in Isa. 9:2-3 as a figure for the new age of hope and promise that Jesus brought.

DAY OF ATONEMENT Tenth day of the seventh month of the Jewish calendar (Sept.-Oct.) on which the high priest entered the inner sanctuary of the temple to make reconciling sacrifices for the sins of the entire nation (Lev. 16:16-28). The high priest was prohibited from entering this most holy place at any other time on pain of death (Lev. 16:2). Nor was any other priest permitted to perform duties within the temple proper during the ritual for the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16:17). The day's ritual required the high priest to bathe and be dressed in pure linen garments as a symbol of purity (Lev. 16:4). The ceremony began with the sacrifice of a young bull as a sin offering for the priest and his family (Lev. 16:3,6). After burning incense before the mercy seat in the inner sanctuary, the high priest sprinkled the blood from the bull on and in front of the mercy seat (16:14). The priest cast lots over two goats. One was offered as a sin offering. The other was presented alive as a scapegoat (16:5,7-10,20-22). The blood of the goat used as the sin offering was sprinkled like that of the bull to make atonement for the sanctuary (16:15). The mixed blood of the bull and goat were applied to the horns of the altar to make atonement for it (16:18). The high priest confessed all of the people's sins over the head of the live goat which was led away and then released in the wilderness (16:21-22). Following the ceremony, the priest again bathed and put on his usual garments (16:23-24). The priest then offered a burnt offering for the priest and the people (16:24). The bodies of the bull and goat used in the day's ritual were burnt outside the camp (16:27-28). The Day of Atonement was a solemn day, requiring the only fast designated by the Mosaic law. All work was also prohibited (16:29; 23:27-28).

The writer of Hebrews developed images from the Day of Atonement to stress the superiority of Christ's priesthood (8:6; 9:7,11-26). Hebrews 13:11-12 uses the picture of the bull and goat burned outside the camp as an illustration of Christ's suffering outside Jerusalem's city walls. According to one interpretation, Paul alluded to the day's ritual by speaking of Christ as a sin offering (2 Cor. 5:21). See Atonement.

Chris Church

DAY OF CHRIST See Day of the Lord; Judgment Day.

DAY OF THE LORD Time when God reveals His sovereignty over human powers and human existence. The Day of the Lord rests on the Hebrew term, yom, “day,” the fifth most frequent noun used in the OT and one used with a variety of meanings: time of daylight from sunrise to sunset (Gen. 1:14; 3:8; 8:22; Amos 5:8); 24-hour period (Gen. 1:5); a general expression for “time” without specific limits (Gen. 2:4; Ps. 102:3; Isa. 7:17); the period of a specific event (Jer. 32:31; Ezek. 1:28). The “Day of the Lord” then does not give a precise time period. It may mean the daylight hours, the 24-hour day, or a general time period, perhaps characterized by a special event. Zechariah 14:7 even points to a time when all time is daylight, night with its darkness having vanished.

“Day of the Lord” does not in itself designate the time perspective of the event, whether it is past, present, or future. Lamentations 2:1 can speak of the “day of the Lord's anger” in past tense, describing the fall of Jerusalem. Joel 1:15 could describe a present disaster as the “Day of the Lord.”

The OT prophets used a term familiar to their audience, a term by which the audience expected light and salvation (Amos 5:18), but the prophets painted it as a day of darkness and judgment (Isa. 2:10-22; 13:6,9; Joel 1:15; 2:1-11,31; 3:14-15; Amos 5:20; Zeph. 1:7-8,14-18; Mal. 4:5). The OT language of the Day of the Lord is thus aimed at warning sinners among God's people of the danger of trusting in traditional religion without commitment to God and His way of life. It is language that could be aimed at judging Israel or that could be used to promise deliverance from evil enemies (Isa. 13:6,9; Ezek. 30:3; Obad. 15). The Day of the Lord is thus a point in time in which God displays His sovereign initiative to reveal His control of history, of time, of His people, and of all people.

New Testament writers took up the OT expression to point to Christ's final victory and the final judgment of sinners. In so doing, they used several different expressions (HCSB): “day of Christ Jesus” (Phil. 1:6), “day of our Lord Jesus Christ” (1 Cor. 1:8); “Day of the Lord” (1 Cor. 5:5; 1 Thess. 5:2); “day of Christ” (Phil. 1:10; 2:16); “day of judgment” (1 John 4:17); “this day” (1 Thess. 5:4); “that day” (2 Tim. 1:12); “day of wrath” (Rom. 2:5).

People who take a dispensational perspective on Scripture often seek to interpret each of the terms differently, so that the “day of Christ” is a day of blessing equated with the rapture, whereas the day of God is an inclusive term for all the events of end time (2 Pet. 3:12). In this view the Day of the Lord includes the great tribulation, the following judgment on the nations, and the time of worldwide blessing under the rule of the Messiah.

Many Bible students who do not take a dispensational viewpoint interpret the several expressions in the NT to refer to one major event: the end time when Christ returns for the final judgment and establishes His eternal kingdom. Whichever interpretation one makes of specific details, the Day of the Lord points to the promise that God's eternal sovereignty over all creation and all nations will one day become crystal clear to all creatures. See Dispensation.

DAY'S JOURNEY Customary, though inexact, measure of distance traveled in a day. The distance varied with the terrain and with the circumstances of the traveler. The typical day's journey of the Jews was between 20 and 30 miles, though groups generally traveled only 10 miles per day (Gen. 30:36; 31:23; Exod. 3:18; 8:27; Deut. 1:2; Luke 2:44).

DAYS MAN KJV term for a mediator, arbitrator, or umpire (Job 9:33). In the Near East such mediators placed their hands on the heads of the parties in a dispute. The mediator may have attempted to bring both parties together in reconciliation or may have had authority to impose a settlement on both parties. Job's point is that no human is capable of standing in judgment of God. The NT points to “the man Christ Jesus” as the “one mediator between God and men” (1 Tim. 2:5).

DAY STAR NRSV translation of Hebrew term called “Lucifer” by KJV and “morning star” or “star of the morning” by other translations. The planet Venus appears as a morning “star” at dawn. Isaiah 14:12 compares the splendor of the Babylonian king to the day star (NRSV). Second Peter 1:19 describes Christ as the morning star which outshines the light of the earlier prophetic witness. The Hebrew term appears only in Isa. 14:12. The translation “Lucifer” comes from the Latin translation called the Vulgate. See Lucifer.

DEACON Term “deacon” comes from the Greek noun diakonos, which occurs 29 times in the NT and is most commonly translated “servant” or “minister.” This noun is derived from the verb “to serve” and is used to signify various types of service. Paul not only refers to himself as a diakonos (1 Cor. 3:5; 2 Cor. 3:6; 6:4; Eph. 3:7; Col. 1:23,25), but he also applies this term to his coworkers Phoebe (Rom. 16:1), Apollos (1 Cor 3:5), Tychicus (Eph. 6:21; Col. 4:7), Epaphras (Col. 1:7), and Timothy (1 Tim. 4:6). This term is also used with respect to governments (Rom. 13:4) and Christ (Rom. 15:8; Gal. 2:17). Less frequently it is found as a designation for an officeholder in the local church (Phil. 1:1; 1 Tim. 3:8,12; possibly Rom. 16:1).

Although it is difficult to prove that the origin of the diaconate is found in the choosing of the seven in Acts 6:1-6, since the noun diakonos is not used, it is reasonable to believe that these seven leaders were at least the prototypes of the first deacons. For just as the apostles needed help taking care of logistics so that they might be freed up to devote themselves to prayer and teaching, what distinguishes the deacons from the bishops (or elders) is the bishops' ability to teach (1 Tim. 3:2; 5:17; Titus 1:9). The laying on of the apostles' hands in Acts 6:6 is often seen as the origin of ordaining deacons.

The first mention of deacons as officeholders in the local congregation appears in Phil. 1:1 where Paul addresses the church at Philippi “including the bishops and deacons.” Although the qualifications for deacons are found in 1 Tim. 3:8-13, there is no explicit text that states their duties. Because deacons are mentioned after bishops in Phil. 1:1 and 1 Tim. 3, and because of the connotations of the term diakonos, most agree that they fulfilled a supporting role to the bishops. In later centuries the deacons were involved in administering goods to the poor, assisting in the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper, and performing other ministerial and administrative tasks. Some have suggested that the qualification of not being double-tongued [hypocritical, HCSB] (1 Tim. 3:8) perhaps indicates close contact with church members in home visitations. Others maintain that the requirement of not being greedy (1 Tim. 3:8) indicates that deacons were responsible for collecting and distributing funds.

In Rom. 16:1 it is uncertain as to whether diakonos should be rendered “servant” or the more official “deacon.” Since diakonos most commonly is not used in its technical meaning of deacon, many conclude that Phoebe was not an officeholder in her church. Yet, there are several factors that might indicate otherwise. First, Paul uses the masculine diakonos to refer to a woman instead of a feminine form. Second, Paul specifically states that Phoebe is a diakonos of the church at Cenchrea, which is the only place Paul speaks of someone being a diakonos of a local church (cp. Eph. 6:21; Col. 1:7; 1 Tim. 4:6). Third, Paul urges the Romans to aid Phoebe since she is sent to perform an official task on behalf of the Apostle Paul and her church. It is argued that such an official task requires an official office.

Another text related to the question of women deacons (deaconesses) is 1 Tim. 3:11. The problem is that the text is ambiguous since Paul uses the Greek term gunaikes (“women” or “wives”), which could refer to the deaconesses or wives of deacons. The arguments for the latter position are the following: (1) First Timothy 3:11 begins with “likewise” as does v. 8 and therefore also introduces a new office. (2) Since there is no requirement for the bishops' wives, why should there be one for deacons' wives? (3) The word “their,” although added in some translations, is not found in the Greek. The text simply reads “wives” or “women,” not “their [i.e., deacons'] wives.” (4) A serving ministry would not require women to be in authority over men and thus not violate 1 Tim. 2:1 That is why deacons do not have to be “able to teach” as do the overseers since that is an authoritative act.

Yet, there are good arguments countering the four previously mentioned: (1) First Timothy 2:9 also begins with “likewise” but is not a parallel idea (men are to pray...likewise women are to dress appropriately). Also, it would seem awkward for Paul to address deacons in vv. 8-10, interrupt himself to introduce the office of deaconess, and then go back to speaking about deacons in vv. 12-13. (2) It is possible that the wives of deacons are mentioned but not the wives of bishops if the former participated in their husbands' ministry (such as ministering to widows). Furthermore, there are other requirements of deacons that are not made of overseers. (3) The possessive pronoun “their” is not required to make the passage refer to the wives of deacons in the present context. If Paul had meant to speak of an office of deaconess, he could have used the word “deaconess” rather than using the word often translated as “wives.” (4) Even if deacons do not teach, they still exercise authority, which would be inappropriate for women. See Bishop; Elder.

Ben L. Merkle

DEAD SEA Inland lake at the end of the Jordan Valley on the southeastern border of Canaan with no outlets for water it receives; known as Salt Sea, Sea of the Plain, and Eastern Sea. Its current English name was applied to it through writings after A.D. 100. It is about 50 miles long and 10 miles wide at its widest point. The surface of the sea is 1,292 feet below the level of the Mediterranean Sea. At its deepest point the lake is 1,300 feet deep. At its most shallow, it is only 10 to 15 feet deep.

The main source of water for the sea is the Jordan River, but other smaller rivers empty into the sea also. The Jordan River empties an average of six million tons of water every 24 hours into the sea. Despite this and the fact that the sea has no outlet, the surface does not rise more than 10 to 15 feet. Since the Dead Sea lies below sea level, the heat and aridity of its location cause rapid evaporation of the water.

This, plus other geographical factors, gives it a salt content that is approximately five times the concentration of the ocean. This makes the body of water one of the world's saltiest. The salt content also causes a condition in which no form of marine life can live, although some fish have reportedly been found in adjacent less salty pools. The surrounding land area, however, can support vegetation and life. These features of the Dead Sea as well as its location in a hot and arid area inspired the biblical writers to use it as an example of a life apart from the law of God.

Aerial photo of central Israel showing the topography of the Dead Sea region. Courtesy of NASA.

The Dead Sea's high salt content makes it virtually impossible for a person to sink in its waters.

Bob Sheffield

DEAD SEA SCROLLS A large collection of biblical and extra-biblical manuscripts and fragments discovered in caves and buildings in the vicinity of the western shorelines of the Dead Sea. The completion of the official publication of the scrolls (Discoveries in the Judean Desert) was celebrated in 2001.

Discovery and Excavation Discovery began in the winter of 1946-47 when two young bedouins, while herding their sheep and goats, discovered in a cave several large storage jars containing leather materials wrapped in linen. These collected materials were eventually sold to a cobbler/antiquities dealer in Bethlehem who then sought buyers for the scrolls. Two sets of scrolls were sold to the Archbishop of the Syrian Orthodox Church in Jerusalem and Eleazar Sukenik of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. Authentication was provided initially by Professor Sukenik, John Trever, the acting director of the American Schools of Oriental Research in Jerusalem, and the noted American scholar William F. Albright.

Two archaeologists were enlisted for a systematic exploration of the cave region, located about eight miles south of Jericho: Dr. G. L. Harding, Director of the Amman Dept. of Antiquities, and Fr. Roland de Vaux of the Ecole Biblique in East Jerusalem. In their exploration no additional caves were found, but they examined the surface remains of some ruins known to the Arabs as Khirbet Qumran, named after the nearby Wadi Qumran. Fr. De Vaux was appointed to carry out a systematic excavation of the Khirbet Qumran ruins, while the bedouins continued to search secretly for more scrolls in nearby caves.

Excavation began in the spring of 1952, two months after the bedouins had discovered Cave 2 near the first, and de Vaux soon realized the connection between the scrolls of Cave 1 and the ruins of Khirbet Qumran. During the first season of excavation, many caves were explored and among them were four additional caves containing scrolls, some found by the excavation team and some by the local bedouins. In Cave 4, immediately adjacent to the site, bedouins discovered the richest cache of written material, with 8,000+ fragments representing 200+ documents. In 1955-56 five more caves were found to contain manuscripts and fragments. On the Israeli side of the West Bank border, Yigael Yadin led a team of explorers in the deep precipitous wadis near En-gedi, including Mishmar, Muraba'at, Hever, and Zeelim. Many contained scrolls and papyri dated to the Second Jewish Revolt of Bar Kochba (A.D.132-135) along with coins dating variously from 40 B.C. to A.D. 135. In the excavation of the Herodian and Zealot fortress of Masada in 1964-65, the Yigael Yadin team uncovered several biblical and extrabiblical manuscript fragments.

The excavations of Qumran yielded remains dating back to the late Judahite kingdom, perhaps representing one of the towers in the wilderness built by Uzziah (2 Chron. 6:10). A large tower with storage rooms, two pottery kilns, and one two-story building on the interior of the site was interpreted as the Scriptorium. The excavated remains of the “scriptorium” included two inkwells and sections of long bench-like tables upon which the Qumran scribes are believed to have sown together pieces of sheepskin parchment and produced copies of the various documents. The site was dramatically destroyed by fire and earthquake between 40 and 31 B.C.

Scroll Contents The scrolls are divided among biblical and sectarian documents including a number of commentaries on biblical books. Apocryphal and pseudepigraphic texts abound in the collection that also contains numerous texts composed by the community that evidence their doctrines and practices. The original seven Cave 1 manuscripts included such a mixture of documents. The Syrian Archbishop purchased 1QIs^a, a complete scroll of Isaiah, 1QpHab, a commentary on Habakkuk 1-2 (p = peshet, a kind of interpretation by divine illumination), 1QGenApoc, an apocryphal version of Genesis, and 1QS, the Seder (order) of the Community consisting of doctrines and rules governing the sectarian group. This latter document also contained a portion identified as 1QSa, sometimes referred to as the “Messianic Rule.” These four scrolls were eventually sold to the Israeli Yigael Yadin through an intermediary for approximately $250,000. Professor Sukenik purchased three scrolls, identified as 1QIs^b, containing a major portion of Isaiah, 1QM (M=Hb. mil'hamah, “war”) known as the “War Scroll” and 1QH (H= Hb. hodayot, “thanksgivings”) containing numerous psalms and songs composed by the sect leaders and members.

All the 39 books of the Hebrew Bible are represented at least in fragments except for Esther and possibly Nehemiah. Esther is represented in a somewhat paraphrastic Aramaic version (six fragments). If Nehemiah was combined with Ezra at this time, as many scholars believe, then one can say it is represented since a portion of Ezra is extant in the corpus. Some biblical books, such as the Chronicles, are found with only a few verses in one small fragment, whereas others such as Isaiah are represented completely in the collective multiple copies (21). The largest numbers of biblical manuscripts occur in the Pentateuch, Isaiah, and the Psalms (36). Some of the biblical texts are found in the Greek Septuagint form and language, and a number of primarily Pentateuchal texts are written in the Paleo-Hebrew script used by Israelites prior to the Babylonian captivity. By paleographic analysis of the formation of the Hebrew characters, a few biblical manuscripts have been dated to the third century B.C., suggesting the original founders of the Qumran sect brought with them copies of biblical books which were already nearly 100 years old.

The sectarian documents are categorized into five categories: (1) Rules and Halakah, (2) Hymns, Liturgies, and Wisdom, (3) Bible Interpretation and Paraphrase, (4) Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha, and (5) Astronomical and Calendrical Texts. Some of these were known from earlier Jewish and Christian sources, yet many were unknown prior to the discoveries. The Damascus Document, which describes issues surrounding the founding of the sect as well as doctrinal and practical matters, was first found among the manuscripts discovered in excavations of a Karaite Jewish synagogue in Cairo, Egypt, in 1890. The popularity of some documents among the sectarians may be reflected in the number of manuscripts found. For example, Jubilees is represented by 15 copies found in Caves 1, 2, 3, 4, and 11. Twelve manuscripts each of the Damascus Document and the Community Rule were discerned among the scrolls. Seven copies of 1 Enoch were uncovered in Cave 4. From the same cave came six manuscripts of the Halakhic Letter (4QMMT), which posits certain beliefs and ritual practices that the Qumran sectarians held in contention with the established priestly circle in Jerusalem. This document may have served as a foundational treatise that led to the founding of the group by a leader known as the Righteous Teacher. Nine copies were discerned of the War Scroll, which describes the preparation for and a sequence of conflicts in the 50 years of eschatological battles leading up to the establishment of the messianic kingdom.

Caves at Qumran in which the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered.

The Qumran hermeneutic was governed by the principle of peshet, by which the Righteous Teacher was believed to be endowed by God with special illumination in order to discern the times and the Scriptures in understanding what God was doing in the present age of wrath. This perspective is evident in the Habakkuk peshet on 2:1-2, “and God told Habakkuk to write down that which would happen to the final generation, but He did not make known to him when the time would come to an end....This concerns the Righteous Teacher to whom God made known all the mysteries of the prophets.” Hence, the Qumran eschatology was governed by their view of themselves in God's plan as bringing the culmination of the ages to fruition in that day.

Sectarian Identity Since the early publication of the scrolls, the majority of scholars have noted the parallels between the content of the scrolls and the setting of the community with the Essenes who were known from the writings of Josephus, Philo of Alexandria, and Pliny the Elder. Other early suggestions included known groups such as the Pharisees, Sadducees, Zealots, and even the Medieval Karaites. L. Schiffman has continued to advocate a proto-Sadducean identity due to some of the strict purification rituals noted in the Qumran scrolls, which have affinity to later known Sadducee rituals that are specifically cited in the Mishnah. Others have proffered the idea that the scrolls were deposited in the caves by scribal leaders from Jerusalem just prior to the destruction of the city and the temple.

The Essenes described in the literature of the first century A.D. were a peaceful, communal, ascetic, and deeply religious sect of the Jews who were considered by most contemporary writers to live a most virtuous life, having greater love for one another than did any other group. In the Qumran documents the sectarians never refer to themselves by name but rather by descriptive terms, such as the “Way of Truth,” “Community” (or “Unity”), “Poor,” “Men of Holiness,” or “Keepers of the Covenant.” Of particular interest is their self-identity as the “Sons of Light” who in this age were in a spiritual eschatological battle against the “Sons of Darkness” composed of the Gentile nations and the ungodly of the covenant (unfaithful Jews). Among the arguments against the Essene hypothesis are the differences between initiatory stages for entry into the communities, the practice of marriage at Qumran vs. celibacy suggested by the writers on the Essenes, and the non-occurrence of the term Essene in the Qumran texts. Still a majority of the evidence points to the Essenes or possibly a sub-group among the several thousand Essenes in existence in the latter half of the first century A.D.

Community Life and Theology In the beginning of the Damascus Document the writer describes the setting for the founding of the community in an “age of wrath” which had continued since the Babylonian captivity. In the second century B.C. a group of repentant “guilty men” who sought God's forgiveness and favor were blessed by God with a Righteous Teacher who guided the faithful “in the way of His heart.” They were opposed by an unfaithful priest, called the “Scoffer,” who abandoned the true teaching of the covenant and who eventually forced them to withdraw from Jerusalem to an isolated location overlooking the Dead Sea where they could prepare themselves for the coming of God's kingdom. Calling themselves “the Sons of Zadok the Priest,” they took quite literally Isa. 40:3 and sought to “prepare the way for the Lord in the wilderness.” The community was led by a council composed of priests and lay persons devoted to the study and discussion of the Torah and exemplary in their faithfulness to the teachings of the Scriptures as interpreted by the Righteous Teacher. Sect members were to spend one-third of their hours in the study of the Scriptures, often in the context of a group of at least 10 men with a learned priest present. Various other members contributed to the whole by carrying out agricultural and animal husbandry practices, pottery production, tanning of skins for sandals and text parchment, preparing meals, and other daily necessities.

Entry into the sect was a three-year process during which one was taught thoroughly and was expected to exemplify in lifestyle the doctrines of the sect. An annual examination reviewed the initiate's progress, and gradually one could participate in the “holy things” of the community, such as the ritual washings, community meals, and festive activities. By the end of the process one's worldly goods, which had been registered at the initial stage, would be incorporated into the community possessions.

One was taught from the beginning to discern the ways of humanity, to determine whether they were of the spirit of light and truth or the spirit of darkness and falsehood, the two categories into which God has apportioned all of humanity. The sectarian theology ascribed to God as being the Creator of both spirits but that “He loves the one everlastingly and delights in its works forever; but the counsel of the other He loathes and for ever hates its ways” (1QS IV.2-3). The sectarians held the belief in the immortality of the soul in common with the Pharisees and the description of the Essenes in

Josephus (Jewish War II.154-55; Antiquities XVIII.i.2-6; 1QS IV; 1QH 3.19-23). Yet in the final stage of the eschaton (last days), the Community Rule (IV.10-11) suggests that the ultimate end of the wicked and spirit of falsehood is “shameful extinction in the fire of the dark regions. The times of all their generations shall be spent in sorrowful mourning and in bitter misery and in calamities of darkness until they are destroyed without remnant or survivor.”

The Dead Sea Scrolls and the Old Testament Text Prior to the discovery of these scrolls, the oldest complete or almost complete manuscripts of the Hebrew Old Testament were the Leningrad Codex (A.D. 1009) and the Aleppo Codex (A.D. 930). The discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls has extended our knowledge of the Hebrew text back 1,000 years. The most important lesson to be learned from this is how carefully the Jewish scribes preserved the integrity of the text during that time. Moreover, among the recovered manuscripts was the early textual tradition that later became the standard text, known as the Masoretic Text (MT). This discovery indicated that the Jewish Masoretes were not creating a text but were faithfully preserving an ancient form of the Hebrew Old Testament. The state of the Hebrew text at Qumran also witnesses that other forms of the Hebrew text existed at Qumran. Multiple scribal traditions can be discerned in some of the earliest texts in the areas of orthography (spelling; some more influenced by Aramaic than others), paleography (letter formation), and textual readings. Hebrew manuscript fragments of Jeremiah, 1 Samuel, Joshua, and others suggest that the Greek Septuagint, translated in Egypt in the third and second centuries B.C., was done from a Hebrew text that differed in some respects from the text later standardized and preserved by the Masoretes. Also, other Hebrew texts from Qumran agreed with different readings known in the Samaritan Pentateuch (ca. 150 B.C.). Scholars believe that the standard form of the Hebrew text was determined by ca. A.D. 100. Through the scholarly discipline of textual criticism (establishing the original words of the text), scholars are in a better position than ever before as a result of the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls to identify the best Hebrew readings. In summary, the field of OT textual criticism has advanced in its analysis and recovery of the Hebrew Scriptures.

Dead Sea Scroll fragment.

The Shrine of the Book (Museum for the Dead Sea Scrolls) in Jerusalem, Israel.

The Dead Sea Scrolls and Christianity Soon after the discovery of the first of the scrolls, certain scholars posited the idea that some of the ideology of early Christianity may have had its origins in the theology of the Qumran sectarians. Self-identifying phrases such as the “Called-out Ones” (ekklesia), “the Way,” “the Poor,” “the Elect,” and “the Saints” were common to both groups, as well as their general identities as messianic communities. Both held to a “new covenant” theology and saw their founders and leaders as the fulfillment of the prophetic promise of the OT. Both groups held that the religious leadership in Jerusalem had become corrupt and was in need of divine intervention to bring correction. Communal meals and property sharing in the early church were paralleled with those at Qumran, and both were seen as practicing forms of baptismal ritual. However these might appear as parallel upon a surface reading of the texts, there are notable differences. At the core of the distinctiveness is the personal identity, teaching, and work of Jesus of Nazareth. Qumran sectarians were looking for possibly two messiahs, one of the lineage of Aaron (priestly) and one of the branch of David (royal); whereas for Christianity the Messiah had come and fulfilled the Law and the Prophets and would return in the eschatological future for the saints.

In a number of cases the NT evidences that the biblical writers drew from a broad range of Jewish theological viewpoints, including those espoused at Qumran, in proclaiming the person and work of Jesus Christ. M. Abegg has suggested that Paul may have drawn upon concepts related in the 4QMMT (Halakic Letter) when he referred to the “works of the Law” in Gal. 2:16. The Hebrew equivalent of this phrase (ma 'asey haTorah) is only found in this work of all extant Jewish literature. John the apostle's use of dualistic imagery in referring to the “children of light” and “spirit of falsehood” have their closest parallels in the pronounced dualism of the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Several scholars have examined the parallels between John the Baptist and the Qumran sectarian life. Parallels include the general ascetic lifestyle, the meager diet composed of locusts and wild honey (both listed in the dietary supplements at Qumran), priestly background and lineage and yet, at the same time, strong confrontations with the religious leadership in Jerusalem, the relative closeness of John's baptismal activity to the Qumran location, and finally the messianic role as fulfillment of Isa. 40:3. The evidence is largely circumstantial, and yet some points may have validity. If John the Baptist had some contact with the community, by the time of his public ministry he had differentiated himself from the community teaching and saw anew his God-given role in preparing for the advent of the Messiah Jesus.

R. Dennis Cole and E. Ray Clendenen

DEAFNESS Inability to hear. According to the OT God makes persons deaf or hearing (Exod. 4:11). The deaf were protected by the Mosaic law (Lev. 19:14). The inability to hear is used as an image for waiting on God rather than resisting attackers (Ps. 38:13-14). Deafness is also symbolic of inattentiveness to and rebellion against God (Isa. 42:18-20; 43:8). Part of the future hope of the prophets is that the deaf will hear (Isa. 29:18). The enemies of Israel would experience deafness in response to God's restoration of Israel (Mic. 7:16).

The NT interprets Jesus' healing of the deaf as evidence of Jesus' messiahship (Matt. 11:5; Luke 7:22). Strangely, only Mark narrated the healing of a deaf person (Mark 7:33-35; cp. 9:14-29). Mark 9:25 attributes deafness to an evil spirit. The parallel narratives (Matt. 17:14-19; Luke 9:37-42) emphasize epileptic-like fits rather than deafness.

DEATH The biblical portrait of death is not that of a normal outworking of natural processes. Instead, the Bible presents human death as a reaffirmation that something has gone awry in God's created order. The Scriptures do not, however, picture death as a hopeless termination of human consciousness but instead brim with the hope of resurrection.

Biblical scholars group the Bible's teachings on death into three distinct but interrelated categories—physical, spiritual, and eternal.

Physical Death The opening chapters of the Pentateuch pinpoint the origin of human death in the Edenic rebellion (Gen. 3:19). This mortality eventually overtook Adam (Gen. 5:5) and is a certainty for all his descendants (1 Cor. 15:21-22). Apart from direct miraculous provision, as in the case of the prophet Elijah (2 Kings 2:11), God has fixed an hour of death for each human being (Heb. 9:27). In their fallen and finite state, human beings are powerless to avert the reality of death (Ps. 89:48).

The reality of death pervades the Scriptures. Within the OT community, the touching of a corpse rendered an individual unclean (Num. 5:2). Even contact with the bones of the dead or with a grave necessitated seven days of ritual uncleanness (Num. 19:16). The people of God were forbidden to mourn their departed with the customs of the pagan nations around them such as ceremonial cutting of skin and head shaving (Deut. 14:1).

Because God is the giver of life (Acts 17:25), He has the sovereign prerogative to take human life at His own good pleasure. At times in the old covenant theocracy, God by direct revelation through His prophets appointed His people to exercise His judgment on the enemies of the people of God (Num. 31:1-11; Deut. 7:22-26; 20; 1 Sam. 15:1-8). The new covenant church, however, was not given such authority. The church's power does not extend to bodily life or death but only to the power to expel unrepentant sinners from the body (1 Cor. 5:9-13). Even so, the Bible does speak of death as a drastic manifestation of God's divine discipline over those within the believing community who remain unrepentant in their sinful activity (Acts 5:1-11; 1 Cor. 11:27-34).

Throughout the Bible, death is a reminder of the brevity of human life. The Bible calls for joyful living in light of one's certain destiny in the grave (Eccles. 9:9-10), compares the shortness of life to the fleeting existence of a flower (Job 14:2), and contrasts the shortness of human life with the eternal faithfulness of God (Pss. 90:2-12; 103:14-17). Jesus spoke of the suddenness of death as a warning to those who trust in their earthly possessions rather than in the gracious provision of God (Luke 12:16-20). James, describing human existence as a “vapor,” argues that impending death exposes the tentativeness of all human plans (James 4:13-16).

The Bible nowhere presents physical death as a painless transition from material existence to the spiritual plane. Facing the death of His friend Lazarus, for instance, Jesus did not react with a detached resignation but was moved to tears of compassion by the pain death had left in its wake (John 11:35,38). The Apostle Paul seems ambivalent about his own foreseen death at the hands of the state. The goodness he finds in death is not an escape from life. Rather, Paul rejoices in the knowledge that in death he both would glorify and be in the presence of His Messiah, the Lord Jesus (Phil. 1:19-23).

Scripture closely associates death with the malevolent activity of Satan, whom Jesus labeled a “murderer from the beginning” (John 8:44 HCSB). The entrance of death into the creation came through the cunning temptation of the Serpent (Gen. 3:1-6). The writer of Hebrews ascribes to the evil one the “power of death,” namely a paralyzing and universal fear of death, from which believers are liberated by the atonement of Christ (Heb. 2:14-15).

Although physical death is sometimes compared to sleep (Deut. 31:16; John 11:11; 1 Cor. 11:30; 1 Thess. 4:15), Scripture does not teach that one's consciousness lapses after death to reawaken at the day of resurrection and judgment. Jesus promised the repentant thief on the cross that He would see paradise the very day of his death (Luke 23:43). Paul teaches that, for believers, being absent from the body means being present with Christ (2 Cor. 5:8).

Spiritual Death The cataclysmic results of Adam's fall are not limited to bodily death. Scripture characterizes fallen humanity as “dead in trespasses and sins” (Eph. 2:1; Col. 2:13). Human beings are born with the sentence of death hanging over their heads, but they are also born with corrupted desires and inclinations that render them completely “dead” to the peril of their own accumulating guilt (Eph. 4:18-19).

As such, humans are alienated from their Creator. The mind suppresses what can be clearly seen of God in His creation, preferring to worship idols (Rom. 1:21-23). The will refuses to acknowledge the truth of God's self-disclosure (Rom. 3:10). The affections cling to sinful cravings, preferring them to the righteousness of God (John 3:19; Phil. 3:19). This spiritual deadness, if not counteracted by the gracious activity of God in the gospel, will lead to eternal judgment (James 1:14-15).

Eternal Death Bodily death does not end the accountability of rebellious humans before the holy tribunal of God. After the appointed hour of death comes judgment (Heb. 9:27). The Bible uses the word “death” at times to describe the wrath of God visited upon unbelievers in the afterlife (Rev. 20:14). Though this hellish reality is sometimes called “perishing” (John 3:16; 2 Pet. 2:12) and “destruction” (Matt. 10:28; 2 Thess. 1:9), it cannot be understood as the annihilation of the person. In contrast with the momentary sting of physical death, the death that awaits the sinner at the last judgment is pictured as conscious (Matt. 8:12) and eternally unrelenting (Mark 9:43). The universality of sin means that each human being, with the exception of the sinless Jesus of Nazareth, stands deserving of this paramount expression of God's justice (Rom. 3:23).

Death and the Work of Christ The OT does not picture death as a permanent condition within the created order. Instead, the prophets point to the day when God will call the righteous from their graves and into everlasting life (Dan. 12:2). The prophets proclaim that death has no place in the consummation of the eschatological kingdom of God (Isa. 25:8). The resurrection from the dead at the last day is seen as a vindication of the glorious faithfulness of God to His covenant promises (Ezek. 37:12-14).

In Jesus of Nazareth, the promised destruction of death in the Kingdom of God has arrived. Jesus exercised His sovereignty over life and death by raising the dead (Matt. 9:18-26; Mark 5:35-43; Luke 7:11-17; 8:49-56), while claiming Himself as the source of bodily resurrection and eternal life (John 11:25). Jesus asserted that at the last day He personally would call His people from their graves (John 6:39), a promise reiterated in the apostolic preaching of the early church.

The decisive turning point in God's purposes to overturn the reign of death came in the sacrificial death and resurrection of Jesus. Jesus endured death for the world, bearing in His body the holy judgment of God against rebellious creation. His resurrection from the dead vindicated Him as the anointed Messiah and beneficiary of God's covenant promises (Rom. 1:3-4; Acts 2:22-36). The apostles preached Jesus' resurrection as His triumph over death. As the Second Adam, He is the firstfruits of the resurrection of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:20-23). Those who believe in Him will find themselves resurrected, not because of their righteousness, but because they are united to the resurrected Christ.

Paul, having established death as the consequence of a universal human depravity, heralds the resurrection of Jesus as pronouncing the death knell for death itself (2 Tim. 1:10). Proclaiming that the end times have come in Christ as the “last enemy” is destroyed in the resurrection of the Messiah (1 Cor. 15:26), Paul mocks the power of death in light of the victory of Jesus (1 Cor. 15:55). He assures believers on the basis of God's resurrection of Jesus that the same bodies buried in the graves will be raised to life in the new creation (1 Cor. 15:35-49). Believers, therefore, have no reason for despair in the face of death (1 Thess.4:13-18).

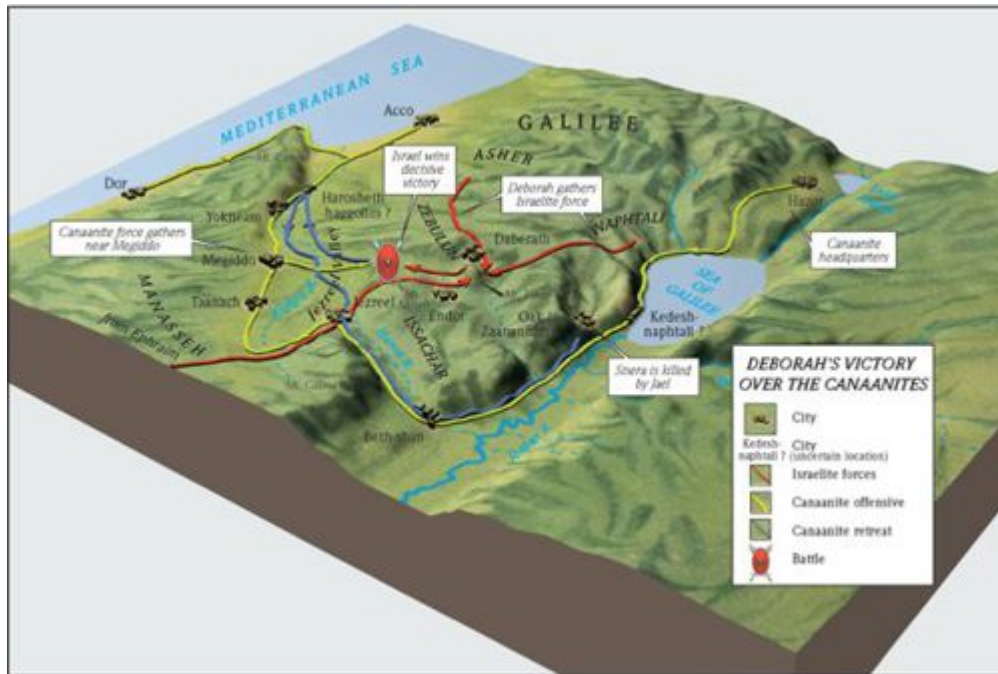

The Bible posits the believer's hope in the face of death not only in Jesus' resurrection triumph over death but also in the present ministry of the Holy Spirit. The OT prophets linked the resurrection from the dead to the coming of the Spirit of God in the eschatological kingdom (Ezek. 37:13-14). The Spirit's regeneration of the people serves as a guarantee of the coming regeneration of the universe (2 Cor. 1:22; 5:1-5; Eph. 1:14).

The Bible compares Jesus' reversal of physical death in resurrection with His reversal of spiritual death in the regeneration of the human heart, an act that is likened to God's calling light into existence at the creation event (2 Cor. 4:6). Regeneration is said to be God “making alive” those who had been “dead” in their sins (Eph. 2:1) that they may walk in the newness of the new creation (Rom. 6:4). See Resurrection.

Russell D. Moore

DEATH OF CHRIST See Cross, Crucifixion; Christ, Christology; Jesus Christ.

DEBIR [Dĕ-bĕr'] Personal and place-name meaning "back, behind." As a common noun, the Hebrew term refers to the back room of the temple, the holy of holies. 1. King of Eglon who joined in Jerusalem-led coalition against Joshua and lost (Josh. 10:3). Nothing else about him is known. See Eglon. 2. Important city in hill country of tribe of Judah whose exact location is debated by archaeologists and geographers. Joshua annihilated its residents (Josh. 10:38; cp. 11:21; 12:13). Joshua 15:15 describes Caleb's challenge to Othniel to capture Debir, formerly called Kiriath Sepher (cp. Judg. 1:11). Joshua 15:49 gives yet another name, Kiriath Sannah, to Debir. It became a levitical city for the priests (Josh. 21:15). Different scholars locate Debir at Tell Beit Mirsim, 13 miles southwest of Hebron; Khirbet Tarrameh, five miles southwest of Hebron; and Khirbet Rabud, seven and a half miles west of Hebron. It may have been the most important town south of Hebron. 3. A town on the northern border of Judah (Josh. 15:7). This may be located at Thoghret ed Debr, the "pass of Debir," 10 miles east of Jerusalem. 4. A town in Gad east of the Jordan given various spellings in the Hebrew Bible: Lidebor (Josh. 13:26); Lwo Debar (2 Sam. 9:4-5); Lo' Debar (2 Sam. 17:27); Lo' Dabar (Amos 6:13). The city may be modern Umm el-Dabar, 12 miles north of Pella. It apparently was near Mahanaim, where first Ish-bosheth and then David, while fleeing Absalom, made their headquarters. Some Bible students have suggested a location at Tell el-Chamme or Khirbet Chamid.

DEBORAH [Dēb' ō rāh] Personal name meaning “bee.” Deborah is the name of two women in the Bible, Rebekah's nurse (Gen. 35:8) and a leader of premonarchic Israel (Judg. 4–5).

Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, died and was buried near Bethel. She had been part of the household of Jacob, Rebekah's son.

Deborah, the leader of Israel, is identified as a prophetess, a judge, and the wife of Lapidoth (Judg. 4:4). She probably lived about 1200 B.C. or slightly later during a period of Canaanite oppression. Deborah is described in Judg. 5:7 as “a mother in Israel” because of her role in delivering God's people. After Moses, only Samuel filled the same combination of offices: prophet, judge, and military leader.

Deborah served regularly as a judge, hearing and deciding cases brought to her by the people of Israel. She held court at “the palm tree of Deborah,” in the southern part of the territory of Ephraim, between Ramah and Bethel (Judg. 4:4-5). Nothing is said about the procedures at her court or about the extent of her jurisdiction.

As a prophetess Deborah summoned Barak and delivered an oracle giving him God's instructions for a battle in the Jezreel Valley against the Canaanite army commanded by Sisera (Judg. 4:6-9; cp. Samuel, 1 Sam. 15:2-3, and the unnamed prophet, 1 Kings 20:13-15). Barak obeyed, and the Israelites won the battle. Some scholars believe that Deborah as prophetess also composed the victory poem she and Barak sang in Judg. 5. Deborah's authority under God was evidenced by Barak's desire to have her present with him in the army camp (Judg. 4:8,14) and by the testimony to her leadership in the song (Judg. 5:7,12,15).

Pamela J. Scalise

DEBT, DEBTOR See Loan.

DECALOGUE See Law, Ten Commandments.

DECAPOLIS [Də səp' ə līs] Place-name meaning "10 cities." A group of Greek cities referred to in Matt. 4:25; Mark 5:20; 7:31, originally 10 in number but including more cities at a later time. The second century A.D. writer Pliny named the 10 cities as Damascus, Philadelphia (modern Amman), Canatha, Scythopolis, Pella, Hippos, Gadara, Dion, Raphana, and Gerasa (modern Jerash). Ptolemy, another second-century writer, names 18 cities in the Decapolis, omitting Raphana but adding nine others. A later source mentioned 14 cities in the group. Thus the number varied from time to time. They were established after the time of Alexander the Great and were predominantly Greek in culture and influence. These cities were scattered south and east of the Sea of Galilee. Only Scythopolis was west of the Jordan River. Josephus named it as the greatest of the group.

Colonnade along the main road through the ruins of the ancient Decapolis city of Gerasa (modern Jerash).

The “Decapolis” is mentioned only in Matthew and Mark. In Mark 5:20 Jesus healed a demoniac after which the man “began to proclaim in the Decapolis how much Jesus had done for him” (HCSB). Mark 7:31 states that after Jesus went to the region of Tyre and Sidon He went “through the region of the Decapolis” (HCSB). Matthew 4:25 adds no more to our knowledge of these cities.

Greco-Roman theater in Amman, Jordan (the ancient Decapolis city of Philadelphia).

Traditionally the Decapolis is assumed to be a league of cities that preserved the stronghold of Greek thought and life in Palestine and resisted the Semitic influences of the Jews. According to Pliny, however, it was not a very solid political alliance. A recent view is that it was not even a league but a geographical region. These cities do seem to have much in common; they were centers for the spread of Greco-Roman culture and had no great love for the Jews. They were associated with one another closely enough that in some ways they were considered as a group, if not as a league. See Palestine.

W. Thomas Sawyer

DECISION, VALLEY OF (Joel 3:14) See Jehoshaphat, Valley of.

DECREE Royal order or decision. Decrees were proclaimed publicly by criers (Jon. 3:5-7), designated as “heralds” (Dan. 3:4), often throughout the territory of the monarch (1 Sam. 11:7; Ezra 1:1). Decrees were written and stored in archives for later reference (Ezra 6:1-2). Scripture attributes just decrees to divine wisdom (Prov. 8:15). Scripture also recognizes unjust decrees (Isa. 10:1). Some important decrees include: Cyrus's decree on rebuilding the temple (Ezra 6:3-5); Esther's decree on the celebration of Purim (Esther 9:32); and the decree of Caesar Augustus which set the scene for the birth of Christ (Luke 2:1).

As King of the earth, God issues decrees regulating the world of nature (the sea, Prov. 8:29; rain, Job 28:26) and of humanity (Dan. 4:24). God also decrees the reign of the Messianic King (Ps. 2:7).

The KJV uses “decree” to describe the decision of the Apostolic Council (Acts 16:4) and of a human inward decision not to marry (1 Cor. 7:37). NIV refers to God's righteous decree of death for sinners (Rom. 1:32). NASB uses “decree” for God's law that led to disobedience and death (Col. 2:14,20). NRSV uses “decree” to speak of God's eternal wisdom and plan for creation. Any translator using “decree” is interpreting the meaning of a more general Hebrew or Greek term, resulting in each translation using “decree” for several different words of the original language.

DEDAN [Dè' dān] Personal and place-name of unknown meaning. 1. The original ancestor of an Arabian tribe listed in the Table of Nations as a son of Cush (Gen. 10:7). See Cush. 2. Grandson of Abraham (Gen. 25:3). Here, as in 10:7, Dedan's brother is Sheba. Three otherwise unknown Arabian tribes descended from Dedan, according to Gen. 25:3. 3. Arabian tribe centered at al-Alula, 70 miles southwest of Tema and 400 miles from Jerusalem. It was a station on the caravan road between Tema and Medina. Jeremiah pronounced judgment against the Arabian tribes (Jer. 25:23), perhaps looking to Nebuchadnezzar's raid in Arabia in 599-598 B.C. Nabonidus, king of Babylon (556-539), left control of his kingdom to his son Belshazzar and worked in Arabia for a period, controlling Dedan among other cities. Dedan was a caravan center for incense trade (Isa. 21:13). Isaiah warned the traders from Dedan to avoid the regular caravan stations and spend the night in the wilderness. Neighbors from Tema would have to meet their food needs. Jeremiah warned merchants from Dedan working or staying in Edom to flee the country because God was bringing judgment on it (Jer. 49:8). Ezekiel warned Edom that their soldiers fleeing even to Dedan would be struck down (Ezek. 25:13). In judging Tyre, Ezekiel noted they, too, traded with Dedan (Ezek. 27:15,20; cp. 38:13).

DEDANIM [Dèd' á nīm] or DEDANITE [Dèd' á nīt] Resident or citizen of the tribe of Dedan. See Dedan.

DEDICATE, DEDICATION General term used to describe an act of setting apart or consecrating persons or things to God (or gods), persons, sacred work, or ends. The act is usually accompanied by an announcement of what is being done or intended and by prayer asking for divine approval and blessing. In the OT the people who were set apart included all Israel (Exod. 19:5,6; Deut. 7:6; 14:2) and the priests (Exod. 29:1-37). The things that were set apart included the altar in the tabernacle (Num. 7:10-88), images of pagan deities (Dan. 3:2-3), silver and gold (2 Sam. 8:11), temple (1 Kings 8:63; Ezra 6:16-18), walls of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:27), and private dwellings (Deut. 20:5). The idea of dedication is embodied in the NT word “saints.” The whole church is set apart to God (Eph. 5:26). The individual believer is one of a dedicated, sanctified, consecrated, priestly people; set apart “to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ” (1 Pet. 2:5 HCSB).

Ray F. Robbins

DEDICATION, FEAST OF Term for Hanukkah in John 10:22. See Festivals; Hanukkah.

DEEP, THE English translation of the Hebrew term tehom. The deep constitutes the primeval waters of creation in Gen. 1:2. This concept is echoed dramatically in Ps. 104:5-7, where God is pictured as rebuking the waters of the deep, separating the waters from the mountains and valleys, and setting the boundaries for each. Creation includes the concept of bringing order by separating or dividing what is made, and keeping each in its proper place (Prov. 8:22-31). This thought is expressed in an interesting metaphor in Ps. 33:7, where God is said to have gathered the waters into a bottle (NRSV) and put the deeps into a storehouse.

In the account of the Exodus from Egypt, God's action in parting the waters for the Israelites to pass is expressed poetically as a dividing of the waters of the deep (Exod. 15:8). God held the waters in place as the Israelites crossed the sea and released the waters when they reached the other side, shielding them from the Egyptians (Ps. 77:16-20). This was, theologically speaking, an act of creation—creating a people for the Lord, by freeing them from slavery in Egypt.

The waters of the deep can be destructive or constructive, curse or blessing. When the waters of the deep burst their bounds, the result is a flood (Gen. 7:11). At the extreme described in Gen. 7, it is a reversal of creation which can only be checked when God again sends the wind or spirit (ruach) which began creation (Gen. 1:2) and closes the fountains of the deep (Gen. 8:1-3). Storms at sea are also associated with the deep (Ps. 107:23-26; cp. Jon. 2:5-6). In the poetry of the Psalms, the deep is a metaphor for the trials of life that seem overwhelming (Ps. 69:14-15). It could even represent the abode of the dead (Ps. 71:20).

On the other hand, the waters of the deep are a blessing, without which life could not continue. Deuteronomy 8:7 describes the promised land as a land of brooks, fountains, and deeps, which irrigate the land so that grain and fruit can be grown (Ezek. 31:4). When Jacob blessed his son Joseph with “blessings of the deep that lies beneath,” he was attempting to bestow fertility on Joseph and his offspring and on their land (Gen. 49:25 NASB; cp. Deut. 33:13-17). As blessing and as curse, the deep reflects as power which only the Creator God can control (Ps. 95:4).

The Greek Bible or Septuagint translated tehom as “abyss,” bringing it into relationship with the pit, the abode of the dead (Rom. 10:7) and place of evil spirits (Luke 8:31), including the beast of the apocalypse (Rev. 17:8).

Wilda W. Morris

DEER Antlered animal (all male and some female have antlers) with two large and two small hooves. It is believed that three species of deer lived in Palestine in Bible times: red, fallow, and roe. The red deer seems to be the one most easily identified and probably was the species in the list of daily provisions for Solomon's table (1 Kings 4:23). The hart is the male red deer (Ps. 42:1), and the hind, the female (Job 39:1). The fallow deer, a small specie with especially large horns, is native to the Middle East and still survives in northern parts of that area. The tribe of Naphtali is described as “a doe set free that bears beautiful fawns” (Gen. 49:21). Certain characteristics of deer are noted in the Bible in the form of similes (Prov. 5:19; Isa. 35:6; Hab. 3:19).

DEFILE To make ritually unclean. See Clean, Cleanness.

DEGREES, SONG OF KJV phrase used in the titles of 15 psalms (Pss. 120-134). Modern speech translations render the phrase “Song of Ascents.” Though the origin of the phrase is obscure, the generally accepted view is that the Hebrew term ma'alot (goings up) is a reference to pilgrims going up to Jerusalem for the three required festivals (Pss. 42:4; 122:4). Jerusalem was surrounded by mountains (Pss. 121:1; 125:2; 133:3), thus such trips involved a literal going up. It is conjectured that these psalms were sung on such occasions (Isa. 30:29; Ps. 132:7). Others have suggested that “ascents” is a reference to the rising melody of the psalms, the steplike poetic form of some of the psalms, or to the steps upon which the Levites performed music in the temple. Jewish tradition relates the title to the 15 steps leading from the court of the women to the court of Israel in the temple.

DEHAVITE [Də hā' vit] KJV transliteration of Aramaic text in Ezra 4:9. Modern translators read the text as two Aramaic words—di-hu'— meaning “that is.”

DEKAR [Dè' kār] KJV reads “son of Dekar” in 1 Kings 4:9, where modern translations transliterate the Hebrew text to read “Ben-deker.” See Ben-deker.

DELALIAH [Də lā' yāh] Personal name meaning “the Lord rescued.” 1. Head of one of the 24 divisions of the priestly order organized by David (1 Chron. 24:18). 2. Son of Shemaiah and a courtier who counseled Jehoiakim not to burn Jeremiah's scroll (Jer. 36:12,25). 3. One of the exiles who returned under Zerubbabel to Jerusalem (Ezra 2:60; Neh. 7:62). 4. Descendant of David and son of Elioenai (1 Chron. 3:24). 5. Contemporary of Nehemiah (Neh. 6:10).

DELILAH [Dē lī' lah] Personal name meaning “with long hair hanging down.” A woman from the valley of Sorek who was loved by Samson (Judg. 16:4). She was probably a Philistine. She enticed Samson into revealing to her that the secret of his great strength lay in his hair, which had never been cut. Then she betrayed him to the Philistines. While he slept, she had his head shaved, and he was captured, blinded, and bound by the Philistines. See Judges, Book of; Samson.

DELIVERANCE, DELIVERER Rescue from danger. In Scripture God gives deliverance (Pss. 18:50; 32:7; 44:4), often through a human agent. In the OT deliverance most often refers to victory in battle (Judg. 15:18; 2 Kings 5:1; 13:17; 1 Chron. 11:14; 2 Chron. 12:7). Joseph was God's agent to deliver His people from famine (Gen. 45:7). The OT consistently stresses God as the giver of deliverance rather than the human agent. Thus Mordecai warned Esther that if she failed to act out her role as deliverer, God would provide another way (Esther 4:14). KJV also uses “deliverance” to describe the remnant that survives a battle or exile (Ezra 9:13). In KJV both NT uses of deliverance refers to release of prisoners (Luke 4:18; Heb. 11:35). Modern translations use “deliverance” to refer to rescue from danger in Acts 7:25; Phil. 1:19.

A deliverer is one who rescues from danger. Two of the judges, Othniel and Ehud (Judg. 3:9,15), are called deliverers in the sense of military heroes. More often God is spoken of as the Deliverer of His people (2 Sam. 22:2; Pss. 18:2; 40:17; 144:2). The picture of God as deliverer is paralleled with the images of a rock, fortress, helper, and strong tower. Acts 7:35 refers to Moses as a deliverer. Romans 11:26-27 refers to the Messianic King as the Deliverer who will take away Israel's sins.

The verb “deliver” is used in a wide range of contexts. According to Job 5:19-26, God delivers in seven ways: from famine, war, the scourge of the tongue, wild animals, to safety, abundant offspring, and long life. Scripture also speaks to deliverance from sin (Pss. 39:8; 79:9); the way of evil (Prov. 2:12); the power of evil (Matt. 6:13; Gal. 1:4; Col. 1:13); the law (Rom. 7:6); the body of death (Rom. 7:24); and the coming wrath of God (1 Thess. 1:10). God is the agent of deliverance in Col. 1:13 and Rom. 7:24-25. Christ is the agent in 1 Thess. 1:10 and Gal. 1:4, where He brings deliverance by giving Himself for sins.

DELUGE See Flood.

DEMÁS [Dě' más] Companion and coworker of Paul the apostle (Col. 4:14). Though in Philem. 24 Paul identified Demas as a “coworker,” 2 Tim. 4:10 indicates that this man later deserted Paul, having “loved this present world.”

DEMETRIUS [Də mē' trī ūs] Personal name meaning “belonging to Demeter, the Greek goddess of crops.” 1. Silversmith in Ephesus who incited a riot directed against Paul because he feared that the apostle's preaching would threaten the sale of silver shrines of Diana, the patron goddess of Ephesus (Acts 19:24-41). Demetrius may have been a guild master in charge of producing small silver copies of Diana's temple with a figure of the goddess inside. 2. Apparently a convert from the worship of Demeter, the god worshiped in the mystery religion at Eleusis near Athens. John commended him, saying, he “has a good testimony from everyone, and from the truth itself” (3 John 12 HCSB). He may have carried 3 John from John to its original readers.

DEMONIC POSSESSION Demons are identified in Scripture as fallen angels who joined Satan in his rebellion. They follow Satan, doing evil and wreaking havoc. They have limited power and like Satan are already defeated (Col. 2:15).

Old Testament In the OT no individuals are said to have been possessed, but demonic beings were attested. Two of the more prominent demonic beings are the Sedim and the Se'irim. The Sed are mentioned twice (Deut. 32:17; Ps. 106:37), as are the Se'irim (Lev. 17:7; 2 Chron. 11:15). These beings are referred to as “demons” and are the recipients of forbidden sacrifices. The sacrifices consisted of adults, children, or an unclean animal. Lilith and Azazel are also considered to represent the demonic. Lilith is pictured as a female associated with unclean animals and desolate places (Isa. 34:14). Azazel is mentioned in connection with the scapegoat sent into the wilderness (Lev. 16:8,10,26). An evil spirit is mentioned three times (1 Sam. 16:15-16; 18:10). The evil spirit was sent to King Saul to torment him.

New Testament Various kinds of activity are attributed to demons. In demonic possession an individual is so affected that his actions are influenced by a demonic spirit. Terms such as “evil spirit,” “deceitful spirits,” and “unclean spirits” are used to identify demons in the NT. Demonic possession has various manifestations which include: muteness (Matt. 9:32; 12:22; Mark 9:17,25; Luke 11:14); deafness (Mark 9:25); blindness (Matt. 12:22; John 10:21); convulsions (Mark 1:26; 9:26); superhuman strength (Mark 5:4); and self-destructive behavior (Matt. 17:15). The NT does not separate the actions of the person from those of the demon. Physical changes such as masochism (Mark 5:5) and an unnatural voice (Mark 5:7) are understood as the demon's control of the individual. Paul understands demons as idols which men sacrifice to and worship (1 Cor. 10:20-22).

The NT distinguishes between demonic possession and physical disease. Matthew 4:24 states that Jesus healed “all those who were afflicted, those suffering from various diseases and intense pains, the demon-possessed, the epileptics, and the paralytics” (HCSB). Thus the theory that demonic possession should be equated with epilepsy or any other neurotic ailment is weak. Some of the demons made assertions of Christ's divinity when the disciples did not show such recognition. Mental or physical illness would not impart this type of knowledge (Mark 5:13; Luke 4:33-35; 8:29-33).

The cure for demonic possession was faith in the power of Christ. Never were magic or rituals used to deliver one from demonic possession. The exorcisms of Jesus show His power over Satan and his demons. The Beelzebul passages (Matt. 12:25-29; Mark 3:23-27; Luke 11:17-22) demonstrate the presence of the kingdom of God in the present world order (Luke 11:20). The exorcisms of Jesus were accomplished by the power of His speech. He issued simple commands, such as “be quiet, and come out of him!” (Mark 1:25), or “you mute and deaf spirit, I command you: come out of him and never enter him again!” (Mark 9:25 HCSB). The disciples were given Christ's authority and cast out demons (Luke 10:17-20; Acts 16:18). This success led Jewish exorcists to include the names of Jesus and Paul in their rituals (Acts 19:13). Despite Christ's authority over demons, the Gospels portray a continuing battle in the present age (Matt. 13:36-49). The final outcome of the battle is not in doubt. The fate of Satan and his demonic hoard is assured (Rev. 20:10).

Joe Cathey

DENARIUS [De nār' i ūs] Coin representing a typical day's wage for an ordinary laborer (Matt. 20:2). KJV translates it “penny.” This unit of Roman currency is the most frequently mentioned coin in the NT. See Coins; Economic Life.

DEN OF LIONS Place where lions live, at times a thicket (Jer. 50:44) or cave (Nah. 2:12). See Lion.

A Roman denarius.

DENY To disown or disassociate oneself from someone or to dispute that an assertion (Mark 14:70) or event (Acts 4:16) is true. The OT speaks of disassociating oneself from God (Josh. 24:27; Prov. 30:9). Peter's denial of Jesus (Matt. 26:34,69-75; Mark 14:30,66-72; Luke 22:34, 56-62) should be understood in this sense, since Peter three times disassociated himself from Jesus, claiming not to be one of His group. Fear of death or persecution leads some to deny, that is, disassociate themselves from Jesus (Matt. 10:33; Mark 8:38; Luke 12:9; 2 Tim. 2:12), resulting in Jesus' disassociation from them at the judgment. It is possible that 2 Pet. 2:1 and Jude 4 should be understood in this sense as well. To deny oneself is a special case in which a person disassociates oneself from self-interest to serve a higher cause. Here the idea of denial is paralleled by the picture of taking up Jesus' cross and following Him (Matt. 16:24; Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23).

John the Baptist denied or disputed the assertion that he was the Christ (John 1:19-20). The “antichrists” of 1 John 2:22 disputed the teaching that Jesus is the Christ. Possibly 2 Pet. 2:1 and Jude 4 are to be understood in this sense.

DEPOSIT Something given as a down payment; money invested with a banker for the purpose of drawing interest (Matt. 25:27); something given to another for safekeeping (Exod. 22:7). Exodus 22:7-13 gives guidelines for cases in which property left for safekeeping is stolen or a deposited animal is injured or dies. Lev. 6:2-7 gives guidelines for one wishing to confess mishandling a deposit. See Pledge.

DEPTHS Deep places of the sea (Exod. 15:5,8; Pss. 68:22; 77:16; 78:15); an underground spring (Deut. 8:7; Prov. 8:24); the earth's interior (Ps. 95:4; Isa. 44:23); and by extension Sheol, the subterranean abode of the dead (Pss. 63:9; 71:20). “The depths” is used figuratively for the unsearchable (Prov. 25:3), for the womb (Ps. 139:15), and perhaps for tragedy (Ps. 130:1). See Deep, The.

DEPUTY Official of secondary rank (1 Kings 22:47); KJV term for a Roman proconsul (Acts 13:7; 18:12; 19:38). See Proconsul.

DERBE [Dér' bə] Important city in region of Lycaonia in province of Galatia in Asia Minor. It is apparently near modern Kerti Huyuk. The residents of Derbe and Lystra spoke a different language from the people to the north in Iconium. Paul visited Derbe on his first missionary journey (Acts 14:6), fleeing from Iconium. Persecution in Lystra led to a successful preaching mission in Derbe (14:20-21). On the second journey Paul returned to Derbe (Acts 16:1). He apparently visited again on the third journey (18:23). Paul's fellow minister Gaius was from Derbe (20:4). See Asia Minor, Cities of. DESCENT Path down a mountain (Luke 19:37); a genealogy, line of ancestors (Heb. 7:3,6).

DESCENT INTO HADES Phrase in the Apostles' Creed describing the work of Christ. Acts 2:27 says “You will not leave My soul in Hades, or allow Your Holy One to see decay” (HCSB). Acts 2:31 says, “He was not left in Hades, and His flesh did not experience decay” (HCSB). Ephesians 4:9 says that Christ “descended to the lower parts of the earth” (HCSB). First Peter 3:19 says Christ “went and made a proclamation to the spirits in prison” (HCSB). Many explanations have been offered for this. The time may be seen as the days of Noah (1 Pet. 3:20) and thus describe the activity of the preexistent Christ or the work of Christ's spirit through Noah. The time may have been immediately after the death of Christ on the cross or after the bodily resurrection of Christ. The content of His preaching may have been judgment; it may have been affirmation of His victory over “angels, authorities, and powers” (1 Pet. 3:22); it may have been release from Sheol or Hades for saints who preceded Him. The spirits may have been the “sons of God” of Gen. 6:2, the people of Noah's day, OT era sinners, OT people who were true to God, fallen angels (2 Pet. 2:4), or evil spirits (demonic powers) whom Jesus contested in His earthly ministry. The prison may have been Sheol or Hades, a special place of captivity for sinners, a place of punishment for fallen angels, a place of security for such angels where they thought they could escape Christ's power, or a place on the way to heaven where the faithful of old waited to hear the message of Christ's final atoning victory. Whatever the detailed explanations, the ultimate effect and purpose is to glorify Christ for His completed work of salvation through His death, burial, resurrection, and ascension, demonstrating His sovereign control of all places and powers.

Charles W. Draper

DESERT Areas with little rainfall to the east and south of Palestine and inhabited by nomads with flocks and herds. Three major deserts figure in biblical events: the plateau east of the mountains to the east of the Jordan River; the area south of Edom; and the triangle bordered by Gaza, the Dead Sea, and the Red Sea. The Bible pictures raiders from the desert—Amalekites, Midianites, Ishmaelites—threatening Palestine farmers. Saul relieved some of this pressure (1 Sam. 14:48).

Palestine's desert areas received brief hard rains in March and April. At times they blossomed briefly, but long dry spells returned its normal desert characteristics. The Hebrew language distinguishes with several words what English describes as desert or wilderness.

Midbar is the most prominent and inclusive term but is used in several different contexts with differing meaning. It can describe the southern boundary of the promised land (Exod. 23:31; Deut. 11:24). This southern wilderness can be divided into various parts: Shur (Exod. 15:22), Sin (Exod. 16:1), Paran (Num. 12:16), Zin (Num. 13:21). This entire southern desert region can be called the wilderness of Sinai (Exod. 19:1) above which rises Mount Sinai. North of this is the wilderness of Judah (Judg. 1:16), lying east of the road connecting Jerusalem and Hebron. Here deep, narrow gorges lead down from the Judean hills to the Dead Sea. Midbar also describes the area surrounding a settlement where herds are pastured (1 Sam. 23:24; 24:1; 2 Chron. 20:20; cp. Josh. 8:24). Settlements in the desert arose particularly during times of political stability and served as military stations against Bedouin invasions and as protection for commerce on the desert trade routes.

Wasteland of the northern Negev in southern Israel.

Arabah often appears as a synonym for midbar. This is the basic term for the long rift reaching from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea and on down to the Red Sea. It describes ground dominated by salt with little water or plants. Arabah is never used to describe pasturelands. It serves as the eastern boundary of the promised land and is often translated “plain,” if it is not transliterated as “Arabah” (Deut. 3:17; Josh. 12:1).

Yeshimon designates the wasteland, which is unproductive. The word appears either in parallel with midbar or as part of a territorial designation such as in 1 Sam. 23:24. God holds out hope for restoration of the wild lands (Isa. 43:19-20). See Jeshimon.

Chorbah describes hot, dry land or land with destroyed settlements. It can designate dry land opposed to water-covered land (Gen. 7:22; Exod. 14:21). It describes the desert in Pss. 102:7; 106:9; Isa. 25:5; 50:2; 51:3; 64:10; Jer. 25:9.

Tsiyyah points to a dry region (Job 30:3; Pss. 78:17; 105:41; Isa. 35:1; Jer. 50:12; Zeph. 2:13).

Shamamah is a desolate and terrifying land and often indicates God's destruction of a place (Exod. 23:29; Lev. 26:33, Jer. 4:27; Ezek. 6:14; 23:33).

Negev (Negeb) refers to the dry land and is a technical name for the southern desert whose northern border lies north of Beersheba. Annual rainfall ranges from 100 to 300 millimeters a year. Rainfall varies drastically year to year. Negev came to mean “south” in Hebrew and could be translated the “south country” (Gen. 24:62).

For Israel the dry, mostly uninhabited desert engendered fear and awe. It could be described like the original chaos prior to creation (Deut. 32:10; Jer. 4:23-26). Israel was able to go through the desert because God led them (Deut. 1:19). Its animal inhabitants caused even more fear—snakes and scorpions (Deut. 8:15); wild donkeys (Jer. 2:24). The desert lay waste without humans or rain (Job 38:26; Jer. 2:6). The desert was a “terrifying land” (Isa. 21:1 NASB). The only expectation for a person in the wilderness was death by starvation (Exod. 16:3).

God's judgment could turn a city into desert (Jer. 4:26), but His grace could turn the wilderness into a garden (Isa. 41:17-20).

In the NT the desert was the place of John the Baptist's ministry (Luke 1:80; 3:4) and where demon-possession drove a man (Luke 8:29). The crowds forced Jesus into the unpopulated desert to preach (Mark 1:45). Jesus took His disciples there to rest (Mark 6:31). See Wilderness. Trent C. Butler

DESIGN Modern translations' reading for an artistic pattern (Exod. 31:4; 39:3; 2 Chron. 2:14; KJV, "cunning works"); RSV translation for plans, generally in the negative sense of schemes or wiles (Job 10:3; 2 Cor. 2:11). KJV has "counsel" and "devices."

DESIRE See Concupiscence; Lust.

DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS Phrase that Haggai used in his prophecy of a renewed temple (Hag. 2:7). Some translations (KJV, NIV) interpret the underlying Hebrew as a prophecy of the coming Messiah. Other translations render the phrase "treasure" (TEV, NRSV, REB) or "wealth" (NASB) of all nations in parallel to the gold and silver of 2:8. The messianic interpretation first appears in the Latin Vulgate translation, while the treasures would show Yahweh's power to restore the glory of His house despite the people's poverty.

DESOLATION, ABOMINATION OF See Abomination, Abomination of Desolation.

DESTINY Word used in modern translations for God's act in electing or predestinating people and nations. See Election; Fate; Predestination.

DESTROYER Invading army (Isa. 49:17; Jer. 22:7) or a supernatural agent of God's judgment (Exod. 12:23; Heb. 11:28), often termed an angel (2 Sam. 24:15-16; 2 Kings 19:35; Ps. 78:49). All stand under God's sovereign control as he directs human affairs.

DESTROYING LOCUSTS See Insects; Locust.

DETAINED BEFORE THE LORD To remain in the presence of the Lord at the tabernacle or temple (1 Sam. 21:7). The reason for Doeg remaining at the tabernacle is not given. Perhaps he was there to fulfill a vow, receive an oracle, perform an act of penance, or to celebrate a holiday. First Samuel 21:6 suggests that it was the Sabbath (Mark 2:25-26).

DEUEL (Doo uhl) Personal name meaning "God knows." In Num. 1:14 the father of Eliasaph, the leader in the wilderness of the tribe of Gad. Numbers

2:14 identifies Eliasaph's father as Reuel. Deuel and Reuel may be alternative forms of the same name, probably representing a copyist's misreading of Hebrew "d" and "r," which are quite similar.

DEUTERONOMY, BOOK OF English name of fifth book of OT taken from Greek translation meaning "second law." Deuteronomy is the last of five books of Law and should not be read in isolation from the other four books (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers). Pentateuch (five books) is the familiar title associated with these five books of Law, the first and most important division of the Hebrew Bible. By longstanding tradition and for good reason, these books have been associated with Moses, the human instrument of God's deliverance of Israel from bondage in Egypt and the negotiator of the covenant between God and Israel. It is quoted or alluded to in the NT more than any other OT book except Psalms and Isaiah.

The probable origin of the title "Deuteronomy" is the translation in the Septuagint (Greek translation of the Hebrew OT) of Deut. 17:18-19. These two verses contain instructions to the king about making "a copy of this law" to be read regularly and obeyed faithfully. The Septuagint translators rendered the above phrase "this second law" instead of "a copy of this law." The Septuagint translation implies a body of legislation different from that contained in the previous books of Law. That does not seem to be the point of the instruction in Deut. 17:18-19. This apparent Greek mistranslation is the likely source of the title "Deuteronomy."

The title used in the Hebrew Bible, "these (are) the words" (two words in Hebrew), follows an ancient custom of using words from the first line of the text to designate a book. Sometimes the title in the Hebrew Bible was shortened to "words." This title more accurately defines the contents of the book than our familiar English title, Deuteronomy. In the main the book consists of the words by which Moses addressed Israel prior to their entry into the promised land. The style is sermonic, that of a preacher addressing his congregation with words designed to move them to obedience and commitment.

Background Deuteronomy is not primarily a law book or a book of history. It claims to be Moses' instruction to Israel on the eve of their entry into Canaan. Their wanderings in the wilderness were at an end. Their early efforts at conquest of the promised land east of the Jordan had met with success.

Israel's exodus from Egypt and the covenant at Sinai were the stages of Israel's birth as a nation. As yet they were a nation without a homeland. God's covenant with Israel at Sinai was in part a renewal of earlier covenants made with the patriarchs. Included in those covenants were the following promises: (1) that Israel would be God's special nation, (2) that Yahweh God would be their God, (3) that they would be obedient to God, and (4) that God would give them a homeland and innumerable descendants.

Now Israel was poised on the borders of Canaan ready to enter and to possess the land of promise. Moses, knowing that Israel's future hung on their obedience and commitment to God, led the people in a covenant renewal ceremony. Moses' approaching death and resulting transfer of human leadership to Joshua, plus Israel's approaching battles in conquest of the land, formed the basis for renewal of the covenant.

Contents Deuteronomy contains not one but three (or more) addresses from Moses to Israel. Most interpreters agree that the structure of the book is patterned after Near Eastern vassal treaties.

Deuteronomy 1:1-5 is an introduction, giving the time and place of the addresses. The time is "the fortieth year" (Deut. 1:3) of wilderness wandering, "in the eleventh month, on the first of the month" (HCSB). The place is "across the Jordan in the wilderness" (Deut. 1:1) and, more particularly, "in the land of Moab" (Deut. 1:5).

The hands of a Jewish man with the long strips of his phylactery intertwined with his fingers as he prays.

Deuteronomy 1:6-4:40 is Moses' first address in which he recounted Israel's journey from Horeb to Moab and urged Israel to be faithful to Yahweh. Moses used Israel's immediate past history to teach the present generation of Israelites the importance of trusting God. Israel's obedience was imperative if they were to expect to possess the land of Canaan. Moses set up cities of refuge on the east bank of the Jordan (Deut. 4:41-43).

Deuteronomy 4:44-28:68 contains Moses' second address to Israel. The address is introduced in Deut. 4:44-49. Then Moses proceeded to teach Israel lessons from the Law. These are not laws to be used in the courts to decide legal cases but instructions for life in the land of Canaan. Chapters 5-11 contain general laws, including the Ten Commandments (5:6-21) and the command to "Love the LORD your God with all your heart, with all your soul, and with all your strength" (6:5 HCSB). The specific laws are given in chapters 12-26, followed by a series of promised blessings or curses dependent on whether Israel would be loyal to God's covenant and keep His law.

Moses' third address is found in Deut. 29:1-30:20. The focus is upon covenant renewal. Repentance and commitment would assure life and the blessings of God. Rebellion would result in their death as a nation. The choice was theirs.

Deuteronomy 31:1-29 is Moses' farewell address. The song of Moses is given in Deut. 31:30-32:52. Moses' blessing is reported in chapter 33, and his death is recounted in chapter 34.

Date and Authorship The testimony of the text is that “These are the words Moses spoke to all Israel across the Jordan” (Deut. 1:1), “Across the Jordan in the land of Moab, Moses began to explain this law” (1:5), and “Moses wrote down this law and gave it to the priests”(31:9 HCSB). Jesus also identifies Deut. 24:1-4 as coming from Moses (Matt. 19:8), Paul identifies the law of the ox in Deut. 25:4 as coming from “the law of Moses” (1 Cor. 9:9), and the author of Hebrews regards the legal requirement of two or three witness in Deut. 17:2-6 as coming from “Moses' law” (Heb. 10:28). Nevertheless, scholars have hotly debated the extent of Moses' connection to the book of Deuteronomy. Did he write all, or part, or none of the book? Few would claim that the book came exactly as it is from the hand of Moses. The account of his death in chapter 34 suggests that some changes may have been made after his time. Evidence used to discount Mosaic authorship of much of the book, however, is inconclusive. Third person references to Moses, for example, would argue against the Mosaic authorship of most of the Pentateuch, which the Bible repeatedly refers to as “the book of Moses” (e.g., 2 Chron. 25:4, which quotes Deut. 24:16). Such references are apparently a matter of style. Reference to Moab as “across the Jordan” (Deut. 1:1) does not necessarily indicate the location of the writer west of the Jordan since the “Transjordan” tribes used the same expression in Gilead when describing their own inheritance in Num. 32:19.

The structural similarities between Deuteronomy and Near Eastern treaty texts from the second millennium B.C. have furnished strong evidence for the unity and antiquity of the book. Comparison to Hittite treaties suggests a date no later than about 1300 B.C. Scholars seeking to maintain an eighth or seventh century B.C. (or later) date for Deuteronomy have pointed to similarities to Neo-Assyrian treaties from the seventh century B.C. This later treaty form, however, is missing important elements found in Deuteronomy and the Hittite texts, such as the historical prologue (Deut. 1:6-4:43) and the list of blessings (Deut. 28:1-14). The conclusion is that Moses' authorship of Deuteronomy essentially as we have it is the most reasonable view for the person who accepts the testimony of Scripture.

The “book of the law” found during the repair of the temple in the 18th year of Josiah's reign (621 B.C.) has been identified as Deuteronomy since the early church fathers shortly after A.D. 300. That identity cannot be proved, but the nature of the reforms of Josiah and the contents of Deuteronomy show an interesting similarity. For example, the call for centralization of worship (Deut. 12) is matched by Josiah's destruction of all altars except the one in the temple in Jerusalem (2 Kings 23:4-20).

Purpose The theme of the land as a promised gift from God is the major theme of the book. References to the land as a gift occur at least 66 times. Israel is told 69 times they will “possess” and “inherit” the land. Moses' messages in Deuteronomy are necessary to prepare Israel to take possession of the land in view of the death of the first generation and Moses' impending death. It was time for Moses to turn around and remind Israel of who they were and what God expected them to do. They needed to bear in mind that the land was an undeserved gift and that they could not acquire it on their own. The land God promised was not just a location but represented the Lord's abundant provisions, His protection, and most important, His presence. Moses also warned Israel of threats to His gift: fear of the Canaanites, the corrupting influence of the Canaanites, and their own sinful tendency to forget the Lord. Most of all, Moses tried to impress Israel with the importance of complete and loving loyalty to the Lord, expressed in reverential obedience and in joyful, thankful worship.

Jewish man in prayer at the Walling Wall wearing his phylactery containing Scripture from Deuteronomy.

Teaching The truths in Deuteronomy have a perennial relevance. Jesus knew Deuteronomy well. When Satan tempted Him at the beginning of His ministry, He responded to each of the three temptations with a quotation from Deuteronomy. This book is either quoted or alluded to nearly 200 times in the NT.

Deuteronomy calls for a complete and undivided devotion to God. It sets forth the consequences of obedience and recognizes the inclination of God's people to forget who He is and what He has done for them. For that reason, Moses urges the people to continually be on guard against forgetting

God and not to allow their children to be ignorant of Him and His expectations.

Billy K. Smith and E. Ray Clendenen

Outline

I. Moses' First Address (1:1-4:43)

A. Narrative Preamble (1:1-5)

B. The Address: The Historical Prologue (1:6-4:40)

1. Moses' Survey of Israel's Recent History (1:6-3:29)

2. Call for Response to the Torah of the Lord (4:1-40)

a. The Grace of Torah (4:1-8)

b. The Grace of Covenant (4:9-31)

c. The Grace of Salvation (4:32-40)

C. The Narrative Postscript (4:41-43)

II. Moses' Second Address (4:44-29:1)

A. Narrative Preamble (4:44-49)

B. The Stipulations of the Covenant (5:1-26:19)

1. The General Stipulations of the Covenant (5:1-11:32)

a. The Origins of God's Covenant with Israel (5:1-33)

b. The Challenge of Covenant Relationship with the Lord (6:1-8:20)

c. The Grace of Covenant Relationship with the Lord (9:1-11:25)

d. The Call for Decision (11:26-32)

2. The Specific Stipulations of the Covenant (12:1-26:15)

a. The Religious Life of the Holy People (12:1-16:17)

b. The Government of the Holy People (16:18-21:9)

1. The Structures of Government (16:18-18:22)

2. The Conduct of Government (19:1-21:9)

c. Family Matters (21:10-22:30)

d. The Sanctity of the Holy Assembly (23:1-8)

e. Miscellaneous Regulations of Israelite Life (23:9-25:15)

f. Two Special Offerings (26:1-15)

- 3. The Concluding Covenantal Oath (26:16-19)
- C. Interlude: The Provision for Future Covenant Renewal (27:1-26)
- D. The Covenant Blessings and Curses (28:1-29:1)
 - 1. A Summary Preamble (28:1)
 - 2. The Covenant Blessings (28:2-14)
 - 3. The Covenant Curses (28:15-68)
 - 4. The Narrative Postscript (29:1)
- III. Moses' Third Address: A Paradigm For Covenant Renewal (29:2-30:20)
 - A. Recapitulation of the Basic Principles of the Covenant (29:1-30:10)
 - 1. A Summary Historical Prologue to Covenant Relationship (29:2-9)
 - 2. The Privilege of Covenant Relationship (29:10-13)
 - 3. The Responsibilities of Covenant Relationship (29:14-30:10)
 - a. The Scope of the Covenant (29:14-17)
 - b. The Way of Judgment (29:18-29)
 - c. The Sufficiency of the Torah for Israel (29:29)
 - d. The Way of Hope (30:1-10)
 - B. The Final Appeal (30:11-20)
 - 1. The Accessibility of the Covenant (30:11-14)
 - 2. The Promise of the Covenant (30:15-20)
- IV. Moses' Arrangements for the Future (31:1-32:47)
 - A. The Designation of a Successor (31:1-8)
 - B. The Provision of a Written Torah (31:9-13)
 - C. The Provision of an Anthem (31:14-32:47)
 - 1. The Context (31:14-29)
 - 2. The Song (31:30-32:47)
- V. The Death of Moses (32:48-34:12)
 - A. The Lord's Summons to Moses (32:48-52)
 - B. Moses' Blessing of the Tribes (33:1-29)
 - C. The Departure of Moses (34:1-12)

Daniel I. Block

A Jewish rabbi opening a Torah (Genesis through Deuteronomy) case for a ceremony at the Western, or Wailing, Wall in Jerusalem. Jewish people consider the wall sacred but were forbidden to worship at it during Turkish, British, and Jordanian rule.

DEVIL, SATAN, EVIL, DEMONIC Evil appears early in Genesis with the serpent figure (Gen. 3:1-5). While Genesis does not identify this figure as “Satan,” Revelation alludes to him as such (Rev. 12:9). The Scriptures portray Satan as a personal being in direct opposition to God and His purposes. Satan is not equal to God, nor does he threaten God's power (Isa. 45:5-7).

Old Testament The word satan is used as a verb or noun in the OT and translated as “adversary.” When used as a verb, it means to act as an adversary, accuser, or in a hostile manner (Gen. 27:41; 49:23; 50:15; Zech. 3:1). A person may act in such a manner toward others or God (1 Sam. 29:4; 1 Kings 5:4; 11:14,23,25; Pss. 71:13; 109:4,6,20).

Satan is chief of the fallen angels. From mankind's creation Satan and the fallen angels were active rebels against God. It appears that pride was the source of Satan's downfall (1 Tim. 3:6). The most extensive discussion of Satan is found in Job. In Job 1-2 Satan appears as an agent of God, whose purpose appears to be testing human beings (Job 1:8). When he appears before God, he comes with the “sons of God,” members of the heavenly council (Job 1:6). Satan asks God, “Does Job fear God for nothing?” (Job 1:9). Thus he impugns the faith of the righteous Job. In order to disprove Satan's claim God grants him certain powers. He attacks Job but only with God's permission. In Zech. 3:1 Satan stands at the high priest's right hand in order to accuse him. In 1 Chron. 21:1 Satan tempts King David to take a census of Israel.

Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha In the Intertestamental period the idea of Satan receives more detailed definition. In deuterocanonical books (Jubilees, The Assumption of Moses, and Tobit), Satan is portrayed as a much more malevolent force. These works identify Satan as the chief of the evil spirits. Many of these texts attribute some of God's questionable behavior (sacrifice of Isaac, the attacking of Moses on his way to Egypt) to Satan. During this period many of the demons were given names and personalities.

New Testament By the time of the NT, the doctrine of Satan was well developed. The origin of evil was placed in Satan, recognizing the reality of evil beyond the scope of human will. The NT mentions Satan over 35 times. The NT has many different names for Satan. The Gospels refer to Satan as “tempter” (Matt. 4:3), “ruler of demons” (Matt. 9:34; 12:24; Mark 3:22; Luke 11:15), “evil one” (Matt. 13:38), “enemy” (Matt. 13:39), “the father of lies” (John 8:44), “a murderer” (John 8:44), and “ruler of this world” (John 12:31; 14:30; 16:11). Paul referred to him as “the god of this world” (2 Cor.

4:4), “the prince of the powers of the air” (Eph. 2:2), “the ruler of the darkness of this age” (Eph. 6:12); and “tempter” (1 Thess. 3:5). Paul warned the Corinthians that Satan may appear as an “angel of light” (2 Cor. 11:14). In the General Epistles he is referred to as “an adversary” (1 Pet. 5:8) and “the evil one” (1 John 5:19). Revelation refers to him as “one who deceives” (Rev. 12:9), “an accuser” (Rev. 12:10), “a serpent” (Rev. 12:9), and “a dragon” (Rev. 12:3-17; 13:2,11).

In the Synoptic Gospels Satan is responsible for the temptation of Christ in the wilderness (Matt. 4:1). He is the leader of demonic forces which are able to inflict disease (Matt. 17:14-18; Luke 13:16) and possess people (Luke 22:3). Paul portrayed Satan as the god of this age (2 Cor. 4:4). He is the chief power of the demonic forces often referred to as “powers of the air” (Eph. 2:2; 6:12). In the General Epistles Satan is graphically portrayed as a roaring lion that seeks to devour (1 Pet. 5:8). Second Peter 2:4 and Jude 6 refer to angels which did not keep their place and thus sinned.

Although the NT teaches that this world is under the power of Satan, it must be remembered that neither he nor the demons are coequal with God. Satan and the demonic beings are creatures who are subject to God's sovereign will. The evil host may tempt but not coerce a person to sin. The NT is clear that Satan and his demonic following have already been judged and decisively defeated by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ (Col. 1:13; 2:15). Believers have the armor of Christ as spiritual security (Eph. 6:11-19).

Joe Cathey

DEVOTED, DEVOTED TO DESTRUCTION See Anathema.

DEVOUT Careful in fulfilling religious duties; pious; used only in Luke and Acts. Simeon is described as a righteous and devout person who welcomed the coming of the Messiah and on whom the Holy Spirit rested (Luke 2:25). Cornelius is described as a devout person who revered God, gave alms, and prayed continuously (Acts. 10:2). Ananias is described as a devout person according to the standard of the Jewish law. He had a “good reputation with all the Jews” (Acts 22:12 HCSB).

DEW Moisture that forms into drops of water on the earth during a cool night. Moist air drawing from the sea is largely responsible for the dew in western Palestine. Downward dew occurs in the summer when the soil is loose, thus providing good cooling conditions. Upward dew results from the condensation of water vapor from damp soil and is, therefore, more frequent in the winter season.

Dew is used in the Bible as a symbol of refreshment (Deut. 32:2; Ps. 133:3); a symbol of the loving power of God that revives and invigorates (Prov. 19:12); a symbol of the sudden onset of an enemy (2 Sam. 17:12); a symbol of brotherly love and harmony (Ps. 133:3); a symbol of God's revelation (Judg. 6:36-40); and a symbol of God's blessing (Gen. 27:28).

Gary Bonner

DIADEM English translation of three Hebrew terms designating a head covering symbolizing authority and honor. Mitsnepheth is the turban of the high priest (Exod. 28:4,39) or king (Ezek. 21:26). The priest's was made of fine linen (Exod. 28:39) with a golden plate (KJV, NASB, NIV) or a flower rosette of pure gold (NRSV) on its front. The plate or rosette is apparently called a nezer (literally, “sign of dedication”) in Exod. 29:6 (“crown” NASB, KJV; “diadem” NIV, NRSV; cp. Exod. 39:30).

The turban was worn by both religious and royal persons. Aaron the High Priest wore one (Exod. 28:37; 29:6; Lev. 16:4; Zech. 3:5) as did Queens Vashti (Esther 1:11) and Esther (Esther 2:17).

Tsaniph or tsephah is the turban worn by a man (Job 29:14) or woman (Isa. 3:23) or by the king (Isa. 62:3) or high priest (Zech. 3:5). Tsephirah is a braided crown, garland, or wreath signifying God's glorious power and authority to come (Isa. 28:5).

The word “diadem” was used in a metaphorical sense of the prudent person (Prov. 14:18), of justice (Job 29:14), of God (Isa. 28:5), of God's presence (Ezek. 21:26), and of Jerusalem (Isa. 62:3).

Just before the NT era, “diadem” was applied by Greeks to the symbol of royalty worn by the Persians. Since all levels of people wore the turban, the king's diadem was distinguished by its color and perhaps by jewels worn on it. To the Greeks and Romans the diadem was the distinctive badge of royalty and was usually white. Later a wreath was used as a crown for Greek kings.

The diadem should be distinguished from the wreath given for victory in athletic games (1 Cor. 9:25), for civil accomplishments, for military bravery, and for weddings.

In Rev. 12:3; 13:1; 19:12 the diadem conveys the idea of power and authority.

Glenn McCoy

DIAL See Sundial.

DIAMOND Precious stone used in jewelry and engraving. It is the hardest mineral known, formed of pure carbon crystals. Two Hebrew words stand behind English “diamond.” Yahelom is a stone on the high priest's breastplate (Exod. 28:18; NIV, “emerald”; NRSV, “moonstone”) and among the jewels of the king of Tyre (Ezek. 28:13). Shamir is the stone used on the point of an engraving tool to cut into stone surfaces (Jer. 17:1; NIV, “flint”; others suggest “emery”). The term also appears in Ezek. 3:9 and Zech. 7:12 as the hardest stone known.

Apparently Alexander the Great around 330 B.C. first discovered diamonds for the western world in India. This would indicate “diamonds” are not meant in the OT references. Emery stones or adamant stones were widely used for engraving. Emery was a variety of corundum and was composed of aluminum oxide. See Jewels, Jewelry; Minerals and Metals.

DIANA [Dī ān' ə] Roman goddess with similar characteristics to the Greek Artemis. KJV reads “Diana” in Acts, where Greek and most modern translations read “Artemis.” See Artemis.

DIASPORA Scattering of the Jews from the land of Palestine into other parts of the world. The term “dispersion” is also often used to describe this process.

The Diaspora took place over several centuries. While its exact beginnings are difficult to date, two major events greatly contributed to it. In 722 B.C. the Assyrians captured the Northern Kingdom (Israel). Following this victory, the Assyrians resettled large numbers of the Israelites in Assyria (2 Kings 17:6). In 586 B.C. the Babylonians captured the Southern Kingdom (Judah) and followed the same policy of resettlement. Many of the residents of Judah were transported to Babylon (2 Kings 25:8-12). While some of these persons later returned to Judah, many of them remained permanently in Babylon. Later other wars fought by the Greeks and Romans in Palestine helped scatter more of the Jewish people.

The result of the Diaspora was that by NT times as many Jews lived outside of Palestine as lived within the land. In almost every city Paul visited on his missionary journeys, he found a Jewish synagogue (Acts 14:1; 17:1,10; 18:4). The Diaspora thus helped pave the way for the spread of the gospel. See Assyria; Babylon; Exile; Synagogue.

Lynn Jones

DIBLAH [Dib' lāh] or DIBLATH [Dib' lāth] Place-name with variant manuscript spellings and English transliterations in Ezek. 6:14. The Hebrew term may mean “cake of figs.” Ezekiel used the term to describe the northern border of Israel as joined with the southern wilderness to describe all the territory of Israel which faced judgment—“from the desert to Diblah” (NIV). With slight manuscript support from the Latin Vulgate, many Bible students read “Riblah” supposing that in the earliest history of the text tradition a copyist made the simple mistake of changing a Hebrew “r” to a Hebrew “d,” the two letters being easily confused. See Riblah.

DIBLAIM [Dib lá' im] Personal or place-name meaning “two fig cakes.” Hosea 1:3 lists Diblaim as a parent of Gomer, Hosea's harlot wife. Some Bible students see Hosea's father-in-law so named; others, his mother-in-law. The latter case is combined with an understanding that she was also a harlot whose price was two fig cakes. Others would equate Diblaim with the place-name Beth-diblathaim. The most direct explanation seems to be that Diblaim is Gomer's father, of whom nothing more is known. See Beth-diblathaim.

DIBON [Di' bōn] or DIBON-GAD [Di' bōn gād] Place-name possibly meaning “pining away” or “fence of tubes.” 1. Capital city of Moab captured by Moses (Num. 21:21-31). Gad and Reuben asked for it as their tribal territory (Num. 32:3). Gad took control and fortified Dibon (Num. 32:34). It thus became known as Dibon-gad and was one of Israel's camping spots east of the Jordan (Num. 33:45-46). Joshua reported that Moses gave Dibon to the tribe of Reuben (Josh. 13:9,17). In pronouncing judgment on Moab, Isaiah described the religious mourning at the worship place in Dibon (Isa. 15:2), showing that Moab had gained control of Dibon by about 730 B.C. The Moabite stone of King Mesha, discovered in Dibon, shows that Moab controlled Dibon about 850 B.C. About 700 B.C. Jeremiah again announced destruction for Moab and Dibon (Jer. 48:18-22). Dibon stood on the northern hill across the valley from modern Dhiban. It is about 40 miles south of Amman, Jordan, and three miles north of the Arnon River. Occupation of the site apparently goes back to about 2500 B.C., but the main occupation period began after 1200 B.C., climaxing about 850 with Mesha. Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the city in 582 B.C. Nabateans built a temple there during Jesus' childhood. It was apparently abandoned about A.D. 100.2. In Nehemiah's day (about 445 B.C.) Jews lived in a Dibon in Judah. This may be the same as Dimonah. See Dimonah.

DIBRI [Dib' ri] Personal name meaning “talkative” or “gossip.” Father of an Israelite woman who had a son with an Egyptian father. The son cursed God's name and was stoned to death (Lev. 24:10-23).

DIDACHE See Apostolic Fathers.

DIDRACHMA Greek coin worth two drachmas or a Jewish half shekel, the amount of the temple tax paid by every male Jew above age 19 (Matt. 17:24). After the temple's destruction in A.D. 70, the Roman government apparently continued to collect the temple tax, possibly to support a Roman temple. The first readers of Matthew's Gospel would have understood the temple tax in the Roman context.

DIDYMUS [Díd' ɪ mūs] Personal name meaning “twin.” An alternative name for the Apostle Thomas (John 11:16). It appears only in John's Gospel. See Thomas.

DIETING For most people of the ancient world, and certainly for the common man, starvation was a constant and very real threat. For this reason, when the biblical writers wanted to describe someone who was blessed, they often said that such persons would eat rich, fat, and sweet foods, or eat in abundance (e.g., 2 Sam. 6:19; Neh. 8:10; 9:25; Prov. 24:13; Song 5:1; Isa. 7:22; 25:6; Ezek. 16:13; Joel 2:26). Weight loss was something to be avoided.

God created within humanity a wide variety of body shapes and sizes. God also created a wide variety of foods for the nourishment and pleasure of people (Gen. 1:29; 9:3). Yet biblical teaching implies that not all foods are equally beneficial for human consumption and that for some people the desire for certain foods can lead to enslavement (1 Cor. 6:12).

The book of Proverbs cautions that excessive eating and drinking is the mark of a fool (Prov. 23:20-21; cp. Eccles. 5:18; 9:7; 1 Cor. 15:32) and urges bodily restraint (Prov. 23:2; 25:16). The writer of Ecclesiastes noted that one who is blessed “eats at a proper time—for strength and not for drunkenness” (Eccles. 10:17). Daniel and his friends refused the rich foods of Babylon in favor of vegetables and water (Dan. 1:5-16) and were healthier as a result.

New Testament teaching holds that a person's body is the temple of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 6:19) and that it must therefore be subdued (1 Cor. 9:27) and cared for in a way that honors God (1 Cor. 6:20). For this reason, excessive eating is contrary to Christian discipline (Phil. 3:19).

Paul H. Wright

DIGNITIES KJV translation of Greek doxas (literally, “glorious ones”) in 2 Pet. 2:10. The people whom Peter condemned in his second letter willingly blasphemed the “dignities,” who are either good angels or evil angels (cp. Jude 8).

DIKLAH [Dik' lah] Personal name apparently meaning “date palm.” Grandson of Eber (Gen. 10:27). He was apparently the original ancestor of a tribe in Arabia that settled in an oasis where dates were grown, but nothing more is known of him.

DILEAN [Di' lo ān] Place-name meaning “protrusion” or “ledge.” Village in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:38). Tell en-Najileh southwest of Tell el-Hesi has been suggested as a possible modern site.

DILL Spice cultivated in Israel (Isa. 28:25-27). KJV translates “fitches”; NIV, “caraway.” It was probably black cumin, Nigella sativa. Jesus accused the scribes and Pharisees of tithing their dill but neglecting justice, mercy, and faith (Matt. 23:23). See Plants.

DIMNAH [Dim' nāh] Place-name meaning “manure.” Town in tribal territory of Zebulun given to Levites (Josh. 21:35). First Chronicles 6:77 appears to refer to the same city as Rimmon (cp. Josh. 19:13). A scribe copying the text could easily confuse the two names. See Rimmon.

DIMON [Di' môn] Place-name, perhaps meaning “blood.” City in Moab on which Isaiah announced judgment (Isa. 15:9). Dead Sea Scrolls text and Latin Vulgate read “Dibon” here. This may be the original reading, but that would go against the normal type of copying mistakes scribes make in that it would substitute an unknown place for a famous place. It may be that transcription of a Moabite name into the Hebrew language or the development of the language resulted in a change of pronunciation so that the two names represent one place. If Dimon is a separate town, it was probably located at modern Khirbet Dimme, about seven miles north of Kerak. Jeremiah 48:2 calls a Moabite town “Madmen.” The Hebrew word, madmen, may involve a play on words referring to Dimon. See Dibon.

DIMONAH [Di mō' nāh] Place-name related to Hebrew word for blood. A town on southeast border of tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:22). Some have suggested its location at Tell ed-Dheib near Aroer. It may be the same as Dibon mentioned in Neh. 11:25.

DINAH [Di' nāh] Personal name meaning “justice” or “artistically formed.” The daughter of Jacob and Leah (Gen. 30:21). According to Gen. 34 she was sexually assaulted by a man named Shechem, who wished to marry her. Simeon and Levi, her brothers, took revenge by killing the male residents of the city of Shechem. See Jacob; Leah; Patriarchs; Shechem.

DINAITE [Di' nā it] KJV transliteration of Aramaic word in Ezra 4:9. Modern translations translate the word as “judges.”

DINHABAH [Din' há bāh] City name of unknown meaning. Residence of one of earliest kings of Edom in period prior to Saul in Israel (Gen. 36:32). Nothing else is known of the city.

DINOSAURS Some interpreters hold that many of the biblical references to Leviathan (Job 41:1-34; Pss. 74:14; 104:26; Isa. 27:1), dragons (Ps. 74:13; Isa. 27:1; 51:9), and the behemoth (Job 40:15-24) preserve early memories of dinosaurs. Most, however, prefer to explain these great monsters in terms of large and terrifying animals known to man today.

The word “Leviathan” (perhaps derived from a verb meaning “to twist”) is the proper name of a large sea creature that defies easy zoological classification. Suggestions as to the identity of Leviathan include the crocodile, the dolphin, the whale, or the sea serpent.

The Hebrew word for dragon (tannin), which often refers to serpents (e.g., Exod. 7:9; Deut. 32:33; Ps. 91:13), is used generically in Gen. 1:21 for large sea creatures. Other passages mentioning tannin indicate a specific kind of large sea creature (Job 7:12; Ps. 74:13; Isa. 27:1; 51:9) which cannot be identified with certainty.

Behemoth (the plural form of the common Hebrew noun for cattle) occurs as a great monster only in Job 40:15-24. The description in Job suggests a hippopotamus or elephant.

God created all life for His enjoyment and glory, including dinosaurs (cp. Ps. 148:7). However, difficulties in interpretation preclude us from knowing to what extent the biblical writers knew about dinosaurs.

Paul H. Wright

DIONYSIUS [Di ó nýs' 1 ús] Athenian aristocrat who was converted to Christianity through the preaching of Paul the apostle (Acts 17:34). He was a member of the Areopagus, an elite and influential group of officials. See Areopagus.

DIOTREPES [Di ót' rə phēs] Personal name meaning “nurtured by Jove.” An individual whose self-serving ambition is cited unfavorably (3 John 9). John declared that Diotrepes rejected his authority. See John, Letters from.

DIPHATH [Di' phāth] NRSV, NASB reading of great grandson of Noah in 1 Chron. 1:6. KJV, NIV follow other Hebrew manuscripts and versions and Gen. 10:3 in reading Riphath. See Riphath.

DIRECTIONS In the Western world we take as our cardinal points for directions, the compass points, north, south, east, and west. We also take north as our primary reference point. At least since Roman times, this has been the pattern. But in the ancient Near Eastern world of Semitic speaking peoples, the primary reference was east, the direction of the rising sun. We know this from the vocabulary used for directions. Often the phrase “rising of the sun” or simply “rising” is used to express the direction east (Deut. 4:41,47; 4:49). The Hebrew word qedem and its related forms means both “in front of” and “east of.” The clearest example demonstrating that qedem means “east of” is Josh. 19:12, where the border of Zebulun is being described. One portion of this border is said to go from Sarid eastward (qedmah) toward the rising of the sun. Thus the direction “in front of” one was east. Ai is said to lie miqedem, “east of,” Bethel (Josh. 7:2). Other words describing what was before or in front of one could also mean “east of.” The Cave of Machpelah where Abraham buried Sarah is located al pene, “east of,” Mamre (Gen. 23:19; 25:9,18). Another reference locates the cave liphne, “east of” Mamre (Gen. 23:17). Both these word phrases use the literal words “to the face of” or “in front of” to indicate the direction east. Also, the biblical reference to the Tigris River as being “in front of” Assyria, means that the Tigris is east of Assyria (Gen. 2:14).

The OT expresses “west” in terms of the setting sun. The phrase “from the rising of the sun to its setting” expresses the concept “from east to west” (Isa. 45:6; Mal. 1:11; Pss. 50:1; 113:3). West was also often indicated by reference to the major geographical feature west of Israel-Canaan, the Mediterranean Sea. In Hebrew it was most often called simply “the sea” or “the great sea.” Joshua 1:4 describes “the Great Sea toward the setting of the sun” as the western border of Israel. Other times the direction west could be indicated by “sea” or “seaward” (Gen. 12:8; 13:14; Josh. 11:2,3).

The Hebrews used both specific words for the cardinal directions and terms related to the body for those directions. Just as qedem, “in front of,” could indicate “east, the Hebrew word achor and related forms can mean both “behind” and “west.” Thus the Mediterranean Sea is described in Hebrew as the “Behind Sea” or “Western Sea” (Deut. 11:24; 34:2; Josh. 2:20).

The specific Hebrew word for north was tsaphon. The northern boundary of Israel is described as running from the Mediterranean Sea to Mount Hor to Lebo-hamath to Zedad to Ziphron and to Hazar-enan (Num. 34:7-9). “North” was also that which was on the left hand using body position for directions. Samaria and her daughter towns are located north (literally, “left”) of Judah and Jerusalem (Ezek. 16:46). North is often specifically the direction from which God said He would bring judgment on Israel-Judah (Jer. 1:13-15), but it is also the direction from which the restoration would come (Jer. 31:8).

The direction “south” in Hebrew is negev. The word negev can be used to refer to the arid region in the south of Judah, usually to the south of Hebron and Beersheba (Gen. 20:1). It also is used for the direction “south” in general: the tribe of Manasseh's southern border ended at Wadi Kenah; towns south of that wadi belonged to Ephraim (Josh. 17:9). South was also that which was on the right hand. Thus Manasseh's southern border was also described as that which was on the right (Josh 17:7). The name “Benjamin” literally means “son of the right hand” or “son of the south.” Benjamin was the southernmost tribe of the 10 tribes of the Northern Kingdom, Israel.

The OT uses all the cardinal directions in several passages. God tells Abraham to look north and south, east and west (that is, in all directions), and all that land will be his and his descendants (Gen. 13:14). In the NT, ones from all directions, east and west, north and south, will sit at the table in God's kingdom (Luke 13:29).

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

DIRGE Modern translation term for lamentation. See Music, Instruments, Dancing; Psalms, Book of.

DISABILITIES AND DEFORMITIES See Diseases.

DISAPPOINTMENT The Bible recognizes the emotional and physical stress which can accompany disappointment and proclaims that hope is always found in God. Examples of disappointment recorded in the Bible include Samuel (1 Sam. 16:1), the men on the road to Emmaus (Luke 24:17-21), and Paul (1 Thess. 2:17-20). Many of the psalmist's cries reflect the depths of his disappointment in life and, at times, in God Himself (e.g., Pss. 39:12-13; 42:5a,9-11a).

Disappointment and discouragement break the spirit (Prov. 15:13), dry up the bones (Prov 17:22), and can lead to death (Prov. 18:14).

In spite of his circumstances, the psalmist learned to trust in God who, in the end, overcame his disappointment (Pss. 22:5; 40:1; 42:5b). Isaiah saw a day when all who were feeble and fearful would become strengthened (Isa. 35:3-4). In the meantime, Jesus commands that those who are disappointed continue to wait on God, pray, and not lose heart (Luke 18:1; cp. Matt. 5:4). Every believer is called to recognize that suffering produces endurance, endurance produces character, and character produces a hope in God that does not disappoint (Rom. 5:3-5).

Paul H. Wright

DISCERNING OF SPIRITS One of the gifts of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12:10). It apparently refers to the God-given ability to tell whether a prophetic speech came from God's Spirit or from another source opposed to God.

DISCHARGE Modern translation term for bodily excretion that rendered one ceremonially unclean (Lev. 15:2-33; Num. 5:2; KJV, "issue"). The nature of the discharge of males (Lev. 15:2-25) is unclear. Suggestions include hemorrhoids, spermatorrhea, that is, the involuntary release of sperm due to a weakening of the sexual organs, or a discharge related to an inflammation of the urinary tract. In the case of women, the discharge is the monthly period (15:19) or bleeding outside this period (15:25). A discharge rendered unclean the person and anything or anyone coming into contact with the source of uncleanness.

DISCIPLE Follower of Jesus Christ, especially the commissioned Twelve who followed Jesus during His earthly ministry. The term "disciple" comes to us in English from a Latin root. Its basic meaning is "learner" or "pupil." The term is virtually absent from the OT, though there are two related references (1 Chron. 25:8; Isa. 8:16).

In the Greek world the word "disciple" normally referred to an adherent of a particular teacher or religious/philosophical school. It was the task of the disciple to learn, study, and pass along the sayings and teachings of the master. In rabbinic Judaism the term "disciple" referred to one who was committed to the interpretations of Scripture and religious tradition given him by the master or rabbi. Through a process of learning which would include a set meeting time and such pedagogical methods as question and answer, instruction, repetition, and memorization, the disciple would become increasingly devoted to the master and the master's teachings. In time, the disciple would likewise pass on the traditions to others.

Jesus' Disciples In the NT 233 of the 261 instances of the word “disciple” occur in the Gospels, the other 28 being in Acts. Usually the word refers to disciples of Jesus, but there are also references to disciples of the Pharisees (Matt. 22:16; Mark 2:18), disciples of John the Baptist (Mark 2:18; Luke 11:1; John 1:35), and even disciples of Moses (John 9:28).

The Gospels often refer to Jesus as “Rabbi” (Matt. 26:25,49; Mark 9:5; 10:51; 11:21; John 1:38,49; 3:2,26; 6:25; 20:16 NIV). One can assume that Jesus used traditional rabbinic teaching techniques (question and answer, discussion, memorization) to instruct His disciples. In many respects Jesus differed from the rabbis. He called His disciples to “follow Me” (Luke 5:27). Disciples of the rabbis could select their teachers. Jesus oftentimes demanded extreme levels of personal renunciation (loss of family, property, etc.; Matt. 4:18-22; 10:24-42; Luke 5:27-28; 14:25-27; 18:28-30). He asked for lifelong allegiance (Luke 9:57-62) as the essential means of doing the will of God (Matt. 12:49-50; John 7:16-18). He taught more as a bearer of divine revelation than a link in the chain of Jewish tradition (Matt. 5:21-48; 7:28-29; Mark 4:10-11). In so doing Jesus announced the end of the age and the long-awaited reign of God (Matt. 4:17; Luke 4:14-21,42-44).

The Twelve As the messianic proclaimer of the reign of God, Jesus gathered about Himself a special circle of 12 disciples, clearly a symbolic representation of the 12 tribes (Matt. 19:28). He was reestablishing Jewish social identity based upon discipleship to Jesus. The Twelve represented a unique band, making the word “disciple” (as a reference to the Twelve) an exact equivalent to “apostle” in those contexts where the latter word was also restricted to the Twelve. The four lists of the Twelve in the NT (Matt. 10:1-4; Mark 3:16-19; Luke 6:12-16; Acts 1:13,26) also imply from their contexts the synonymous use of the terms “disciples”/“apostles” when used to refer to the Twelve.

A Larger Group of Followers The Gospels clearly show that the word “disciple” can refer to others besides the Twelve. The verb “follow” became something of a technical term Jesus used to call His disciples, who were then called “followers,” (Mark 4:10). These “followers” included a larger company of people from whom He selected the Twelve (Mark 3:7-19; Luke 6:13-17). This larger group of disciples/followers included men and women (Luke 8:1-3; 23:49) from all walks of life. (Even the Twelve included a variety: fishermen, a tax collector, a Zealot.) Jesus was no doubt especially popular among the socially outcast and religiously despised, but people of wealth and of theological training also followed (Luke 8:1-3; 19:1-10; John 3:1-3; 12:42; 19:38-39).

The Twelve were sent out as representatives of Jesus, commissioned to preach the coming of the kingdom, to cast out demons, and to heal diseases (Matt. 10:1,5-15; Mark 6:7-13; Luke 9:1-6). Such tasks were not limited to the Twelve (Luke 10:1-24). Apparently Jesus' disciples first included “a great multitude of disciples” (Luke 6:17). He formed certain smaller and more specifically defined groups within that “great multitude.” These smaller groups would include a group of “70” (Luke 10:1,17), the “Twelve” (Matt. 11:1; Mark 6:7; Luke 9:1), and perhaps an even smaller, inner group within the Twelve, consisting especially of Peter, James, and John—whose names (with Andrew) always figure first in the lists of the Twelve (Matt. 10:2; Mark 3:16-17; Luke 6:14; Acts 1:13), whose stories of calling are especially highlighted (Matt. 4:18-22; John 1:35-42 and the tradition that John is the “Other”/“Beloved Disciple” of the Gospel of John—13:23; 19:26; 20:2; 21:20), and who alone accompanied Jesus on certain significant occasions of healing and revelation (Matt. 17:1; Mark 13:3; Luke 8:51).

All Followers of Jesus The book of the Acts of the Apostles frequently uses the term “disciple” to refer generally to all those who believe in the risen Lord (6:1-2,7; 9:1,10,19,26,38; 11:26,29). In addition, the verb form “to disciple” as it appears in the final commissioning scene of Matthew's Gospel (28:19-20) also suggests a use in the early church of the term “disciple” as a more generalized name for all those who come to Jesus in faith, having heard and believed the gospel.

Conclusion We have seen that, as references to the Twelve, the words “apostle” and “disciple” could be synonymous. However, just as the term “disciple” could mean other followers of Jesus than the Twelve in the time of His ministry, so also after His resurrection the term “disciple” had a wider meaning as well, being clearly applied to all His followers. Whereas the term “apostle” retained a more specific meaning, being tied to certain historical eyewitnesses of the resurrected Lord, the word “disciple” tended to lose its narrower associations with the Twelve, and/or those who followed the historical Jesus, or who saw the risen Lord, and became a virtual equivalent to “Christian” (Acts 11:26). In every case, however, the common bond of meaning for the various applications of the word “disciple” was allegiance to Jesus. See Apostle.

Robert B. Sloan, Jr.

DISCIPLINARIAN See Schoolmaster.

DISCIPLINE Usually refers in the Bible to moral training, which includes the positive aspect of instruction and the negative aspect of correction, sometimes punitive. The result of receiving discipline with humility is wisdom and a satisfying, successful life (Prov. 4:13; 5:23; 10:17; 13:18). These various aspects of discipline are intertwined in the spiritual life of the believer and of the church.

In the OT the word usually renders a form of the Hebrew yasar, “to instruct, rebuke, warn.” “Discipline” in the NT usually renders a form of paideuo, “to instruct, correct.”

Discipline in Proverbs The book of Proverbs speaks of moral training more than any other biblical book. Its very purpose is to develop wisdom through “instruction in righteousness, justice, and integrity” (1:3 HCSB). Only an ungodly fool would refuse such training (1:7), which includes instruction in God's Torah or Law (1:8; 6:23; Deut. 6:6-7; Ps. 94:12; Eph. 6:4). A son must diligently pay attention to his father's and mother's discipline (4:1; 6:20; 13:1; 15:5), and a faithful and loving parent must be willing to punish wrongdoing as part of a child's training (13:24; 15:10; 19:18; 22:15; 29:15).

One effect of such training should be the development of self-discipline or self-control, an essential characteristic of one who is wise (1 Cor. 9:27; 1 Pet. 4:7). The Bible teaches that one needs moral training and the discipline of self to defeat the natural tendencies to wantonness and sinful selfishness that result from moral depravity resulting from the fall (Gen. 4:7).

Divine Discipline Divine discipline is distinct from God's judgment or punishment. While God's judgment and punishment is meted out on the unrighteous, God's discipline is reserved only for His children. The writer to the Hebrews exhorted his readers to be encouraged by God's discipline in their lives because it serves as the ultimate proof that God is indeed their father (Heb. 12:5-11). Representing God's gracious intention toward His children, he explained that He [God] does it for our benefit, so that we can share His holiness (v. 10) and that it yields the fruit of peace and righteousness to those who have been trained by it (v. 11).

Church Discipline Perhaps the discipline most neglected by Christians of the 21st century is church discipline. If church members are commanded to be concerned about one another in order to promote love and good works (Heb. 10:24), then we are also commanded to confront one another lovingly whenever a member falls into sin. During His earthly ministry Jesus commanded the church to practice discipline and outlined the procedure by which it should be executed (Matt. 18:15-20). If one member sins against another, the aggrieved party should privately confront the member who is in sin in hopes of restoring the relationship. If the member who is in sin refuses to repent and be restored after the initial private meeting, then the offended party should take one or two others along for a second confrontation. If he or she still will not repent, then the church must be told and action taken against the unrepentant member.

While Matthew's Gospel does not spell out precisely which sins are serious enough for church discipline, Paul's epistles do. In three separate passages, the apostle explains that a member needs to be disciplined for gross immorality that is publicly known (1 Cor. 5:1-13), doctrinal heresy (Rom. 16:17-18), and intentionally creating division in the church (Titus 3:10-11). Though the purpose of church discipline is always restoration (Gal. 6:1), when the persons in question will not admit that they have been in sin, they should be put out of the fellowship of the church and denied any privileges of church membership, including but not limited to partaking of the Lord's Supper (1 Cor. 5:11). This action removes the spiritual protection of the church from them and allows satanic attack to reveal their true spiritual status “for the destruction of the flesh, so that his spirit may be saved in the Day of the Lord” (1 Cor. 5:5 HCSB). Paul holds out the hope that the satanic assault may drive them back to the church in repentance.

Related to church discipline is the discipline of church leaders, a special circumstance about which Paul teaches in 1 Tim. 5:19-20: “Don't accept an accusation against an elder unless it is supported by two or three witnesses. Publicly rebuke those who sin, so that the rest will also be afraid” (HCSB).

Hershael W. York and E. Ray Clendenen

DISEASES Physical and/or mental malfunctions that limit human functions and lessen the quality of life. Successful treatment of disease depends primarily on prompt, correct diagnosis, and the use of effective therapeutic agents. Unfortunately, people living in biblical times had limited means to diagnose and treat illness. The best-educated people in biblical times had a meager understanding of human anatomy and physiology and even less knowledge about the nature of disease and its effect on the body. No one knew about bacteria and viruses. This fact hampered diagnosis. Illness was often attributed to sin or to a curse by an enemy. The main diagnostic tools were observation and superficial physical examination. The physician had few aids to use in his work.

Providers of Medical Care Ancient Near Eastern literature contains numerous references to physicians and medical practice. A Sumerian physician, Lulu, lived in Mesopotamia about 2700 B.C. A few decades later, a famous Egyptian named Imhotep established a reputation as a physician and priest. He also became noted as a great architect. He designed the Step Pyramid at Saqqara.

The Code of Hammurabi, from about 1750 B.C., contains several laws regulating the practice of medicine and surgery by physicians in the Old Babylonian Kingdom. Although the profession of medicine was in its infancy, the many practitioners slowly improved their skills.

The Egyptians made more rapid progress in medical knowledge and its application to patients than did the Babylonians. Their physicians tended to specialize. Each would limit his practice to one part of the body, such as the eye, the teeth, or the stomach. Egyptian doctors, like others, often used herbs in their medications. These were collected from many areas of the world and were often grown in gardens connected with the temples of Egypt. Egyptian physicians became respected throughout the ancient world. Their skill was even admired in a later period by the Greeks, who eventually became the foremost physicians.

The OT has only a few references to physicians. These persons most likely had been trained in Egypt. Physicians were called upon to embalm the body of Jacob (Gen. 50:2). King Asa sought medical care from physicians for his diseased feet (2 Chron. 16:12). Some nonmedical references are made to physicians (Jer. 8:22; Job 13:4). It is unlikely that many trained physicians lived among the ancient Hebrews.

The great Greek physician, Hippocrates, born about 460 B.C., is often referred to as the Father of Medicine. Hippocrates believed that disease had natural causes. He relied mainly on diet and various herbs to treat his patients. Around 300 B.C. the Greeks established an important medical school in Alexandria, Egypt, which flourished for several centuries and trained many physicians. The school was noted for its large library and laboratory facilities. Dissection of the human body was permitted, and some limited advances were made in the knowledge of anatomy.

By the time of Jesus, the city of Rome had become an important medical center. Many physicians practiced there. Originally they were in the slave class, but their profession gradually became esteemed. Julius Caesar granted Roman citizenship to Greek physicians practicing in Rome. The Romans made significant contributions in the area of public health, including the provision of a relatively pure water supply, an effective sewage disposal system, and the establishment of a food inspection program. The Romans also established a network of hospitals, initially founded to care for the needs of the army.

Outlying regions of the empire, such as Palestine, apparently had few well-trained doctors, although little information is available concerning professional medical care outside the large cities. The majority of people probably were born and died without ever being treated by a trained physician.

The NT mentions physicians only a few times. Jesus noted the purpose of a physician is to treat the ill (Matt. 9:12; Mark 2:17; Luke 5:31), and He referred to a common proverb, “Doctor, heal yourself” (Luke 4:23 HCSB). Mark and Luke related the story of a woman who had sought the help of physicians but had not been healed (Mark 5:25-34; Luke 8:43-48). Paul, in Col. 4:14, remarks that his colleague, Luke, was a physician. Luke was a Gentile, but his hometown is unknown. The source of his medical training is also unknown, but it is possible that he went to medical school in Tarsus, Paul's hometown.

In many lands priests were assigned medical duties. This was true among the ancient Hebrews, where priests were major providers of medical services. They were especially responsible for the diagnosis of diseases that might pose a threat to the community (Lev. 13). Priests in Israel apparently played little role in the actual treatment of ill persons.

During the time of the NT, the Roman god of healing, Aesculapius (known by the Greeks at an earlier time by the name of Asklepios), was popular. Many of his temples, staffed by his priests, were scattered throughout the Mediterranean world. Persons seeking healing thronged these temples. They often brought small replicas of the portion of the body that was afflicted by disease to these temples and left them with the priests.

Other sites, for one reason or another, became renowned as places of healing. A good biblical example of this is the Pool of Bethesda (John 5:1-15). The pool of Siloam also is connected with Jesus' ministry of healing (John 9:7).

Most of the medicine practiced in ancient Palestine and in other outlying parts of the Roman Empire was probably unprofessional. This was certainly true in OT times. Women, trained by apprenticeship and experience, served as midwives. Some persons became adept at setting broken bones. Families were left to apply their own folk remedies in most cases of illness, perhaps in consultation with someone in the community who had become known for his or her success in the treatment of various ailments. Fortunately, the human body has considerable ability to heal itself. Despite obvious medical limitations, many of the patients recovered; and many of the remedies used were “successful.”

Methods of Treating Disease The Bible contains little information about the treatment of disease, except through miraculous means. Much of the data concerning this subject has to be obtained from other ancient literature. Most of these records come from the ancient Babylonians, Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans. Some are even older. For example, a clay tablet containing 15 prescriptions from a Sumerian source has been found. This dates to about 2200 B.C.

An examination of these old records, often fragmentary and obscure, reveals that most medicines were derived from three sources. The majority came from various parts of many different plants. Early physicians also used substances obtained from animals, such as blood, urine, milk, hair, and ground-up shell and bone. In addition, certain mineral products were commonly used, including salt and bitumen. The use of these medicines was often accompanied by magical rites, incantations, and prayers. In the earliest periods, in particular, lines were not clearly drawn between religion, superstition, and science.

Modern doctors and Bible students have an almost impossible task as they try to diagnose accurately ailments mentioned in the Bible. Various infectious diseases undoubtedly accounted for a large number of the cases of serious illness and death. Nutritional deficiencies, birth defects, and injuries were common. The symptoms produced by these and other types of physical afflictions were treated by a variety of means.

Prevention is always the best form of treatment. Since the cause of most illness was unknown in the biblical period, relatively little could be done, however, to prevent disease. Ancient people did realize a contagious nature to some illnesses. In these cases, attempts were made to quarantine the afflicted person and prevent close contact with healthy individuals (Lev. 13).

The Hebrew word translated “leprosy” in Lev. 13 is a general term used to describe a number of different skin eruptions. Although true leprosy occurred in ancient times and often caused changes in the skin, many of the persons brought to the priests undoubtedly suffered from more common bacterial and fungal infections of the skin. The priests had the duty of determining, on the basis of repeated examination, which of these eruptions posed a threat to others. They had the authority to isolate persons with suspected dangerous diseases from the community.

Isaiah 38 relates the story of the very serious illness of King Hezekiah. The cause of his illness was a “boil” (v. 21). The Hebrew word translated “boil” is translated “sore boils” in Job 2:7. It is also the word used to describe the eruption occurring on men and beasts mentioned in Exod. 9:8-11 (cp. Lev. 13:18-20; Deut. 28:27).

The illness of Hezekiah was treated by applying a poultice of figs (Isa. 38:21). Hezekiah almost certainly had some type of acute bacterial infection of the skin. Prior to the discovery of antibiotics, these dangerous infections could cause death. Although it is unlikely that the figs had any medicinal value, they were probably applied in the form of a hot compress. Heat is an effective treatment for infections of the skin.

The use of hot and cold compresses and baths was widely employed in the ancient world to treat illness, although the Bible itself has little to say about this.

Medical care in biblical times frequently employed the use of different kinds of salves and ointments. Olive oil was used widely, either alone or as an ingredient in ointments. The use of oil for the treatment of wounds is mentioned in Isa. 1:6 and Luke 10:34. Oil also became a symbol of medicine, and its use was coupled with prayer for the ill (Mark 6:13; James 5:14).

Herbs and various products obtained from many different plants were among the most popular of ancient medicines. These were applied to the body as a poultice, or, in many cases, taken by mouth. Frankincense and myrrh—gum resins obtained from trees—were commonly used to treat a variety of diseases, although their main use was in perfumes and incense.

Wine was commonly thought to have medicinal value. One of its uses was to alleviate pain and discomfort. Wine, mixed with gall and myrrh, was offered to Jesus prior to His crucifixion, but He refused to drink it (Matt. 27:34; Mark 15:23). Wine also was used to soothe stomach and intestinal disorders (1 Tim. 5:23) and to treat a variety of other physical problems. Beer was also widely used as an ingredient in several medicines, especially by the Babylonians.

Mental illness and epilepsy were not uncommon in the ancient world, and the victims suffered greatly. Their sickness was usually associated with demonic powers. The afflicted person was often isolated and even abused in some cases. King Saul became mentally unstable, and it is of interest that he gained some help from music (1 Sam. 16:23), a form of therapy that has proved to be beneficial in some cases of mental illness. Perhaps the most dramatic example of mental illness related in the Bible concerns the Babylonian king, Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4). No treatment is described, but the king's sanity was restored when he acknowledged the true God.

Sterility was a great burden in biblical times. A childless couple was pitied by all. When Leah suffered a temporary period of sterility, she sent her son, Reuben, to the field to obtain mandrakes. Her barren sister, Rachel, also asked for some of the mandrakes (Gen. 30:9-24). The root of the mandrake was widely used in the ancient world to promote conception, although there is no reason to believe it was truly effective. It was also used as a narcotic.

Most babies were born without the benefit of a physician. Midwives were frequently sought to give help, especially in the case of difficult deliveries (Gen. 35:16-21; 1 Sam. 4:19-22). Babies were often born with mothers seated on a special stool (Exod. 1:16). Many mothers and babies died during childbirth or in the first few days and weeks after delivery. The high death rate was due to infection, blood loss, poor nutrition, and the absence of good medical care before, during, and after childbirth. The custom of breast-feeding fortunately did help prevent some illness.

Several examples of sickness are mentioned in the Bible where no description of the treatment given is described. King Asa had a disease of the feet (2 Chron. 16:12). The nature of the treatment provided by his physicians is not given, but it was unsuccessful, and he died after two years. He may have been afflicted with gout, but this is uncertain.

King Jehoram died with a painful intestinal disorder (2 Chron. 21:18-20). King Uzziah died of leprosy (2 Chron. 26:19-23). King Herod Agrippa I died of some kind of parasitic disease (Acts 12:21-23). Several kings died of injuries received in battle. Ahaziah died following a fall from the upper portion of his home in Samaria (2 Kings 1:2-17). When illness or accident occurred in the ancient world, it mattered little whether one was a royal person or a commoner—in either case, only limited medical help was available.

Several illnesses accompanied by fever are mentioned in Matt. 8:14-15; John 4:46-52; Acts 28:8. In the last cited reference, the ill man also had dysentery. Dysentery has several causes, but a very common and serious type was caused by amoeba, an intestinal parasite. Most fevers were due to infectious diseases, including malaria. There was no effective treatment for any of these infections, and death was all too often the outcome. Infections of the eye often resulted in blindness.

Small children were particularly vulnerable to illness, and the death rate could be high. The Bible tells of many children who suffered illness and sometimes death (2 Sam. 12:15-18; 1 Kings 17:17-24; 2 Kings 4:18-37; Luke 7:11-15; 8:40-56; John 4:46-52).

Since there was relatively little good medical care available and since illness so often led to disastrous results, it is not unexpected that sick persons in biblical times frequently asked for divine help. The Hebrew people were no exception to this practice. They often sought the help of God directly through prayer or through some person who was believed to possess special Godgranted power to heal. A large number of the miracles described in the Bible are miracles of healing.

Surgery The only surgical procedure mentioned in the Bible is circumcision. This was done for religious rather than medical reasons and was not ordinarily performed by a doctor. In many ways, however, advances in surgery occurred more rapidly than progress in other branches of medicine in many countries. Descriptions of operations have been found in ancient literature, and some old surgical tools have been found in the ruins of ancient cities. Skeletons and mummies sometimes bear the traces of ancient surgical procedures.

Boils were lanced; broken bones were set; arms and legs were amputated. Holes were drilled into skulls to relieve pressure, and stones were removed from the urinary bladder. Teeth were also extracted. Ancient mummies have been found with gold fillings in their teeth. In addition, false teeth, using human or animal teeth, were being prepared by at least 500 B.C. Other kinds of daring operations were performed. Surgery called for boldness on the part of both the doctor and the patient.

Jesus and the Treatment of Disease One of the major ministries of Jesus was the healing of ill persons. They flocked to Him in large numbers, often after having tried all the remedies available in their day. They were desperate for help.

Jesus did not believe that all illness was the direct result of sin (John 9:1-3). He had the power, however, both to forgive sin and to heal (Matt. 9:1-8; cp. Mark 2:1-12; Luke 5:17-26). Ordinarily, He did not use any kind of secondary means to treat the afflicted, although on several occasions He used spittle (Mark 7:32-35; 8:22-25; John 9:6-7). Some of the illnesses treated by Jesus probably had a psychosomatic basis; but many others undoubtedly had organic causes, including birth defects, accidental injuries, and infections.

Regardless of the cause of their distress, people found that Jesus could truly help. There can be no doubt that the ability of Jesus to perform miracles is seen most vividly in His healing ministry. The blind, the deaf, the lame, and sufferers of all varieties found in Him the help that was often not available through regular medical channels.

Kenneth Eakins

DISH Utensil for holding or serving food. The OT uses three terms for dish: a large, shallow metal dish (Judg. 5:25; 6:38), a platter (2 Kings 21:13), and a deep dish or bowl (Exod. 25:29; 37:16; Num. 4:7; 7:13). Dishes were generally made of earthenware. Those made of wood were more highly prized (Lev. 15:12). Dishes made of precious metal were used by the rich and in the temple. In the ancient Near East, those gathered at a meal usually ate out of one central dish (Matt. 26:23; Mark 14:20). To offer a person a choice piece of food from the common dish was a special sign of hospitality. See Pottery; Vessels and Utensils.

DISHAN [Dī' shān] Personal name meaning “bison” or “antelope.” This may be a variant spelling/pronunciation of Dishon. A Horite chief and son of Seir (Gen. 36:21,28,30). Apparently these Horites controlled the land of Edom before the Edomites entered the land. See Dishon; Edom; Horites; Seir.

DISHON [Dī' shōn] Name of Horite chief of Edom (Gen. 36:21,25-26,30). The name may be the same as Dishan with the variant spelling used to identify the separate individuals. See Dishan.

DISHONOR See Shame and Honor.

DISPENSATION English term derived from the Latin dispensatio that is commonly used to translate the Greek oikonomia. Etymologically the Greek word refers to the law or management of a household. The verb form oikonomeo means to manage, administer, regulate, or plan. It had connotations of financial responsibility as seen in Rom. 16:23, which mentions Erastus the treasurer of the city of Corinth. The term is employed to describe the administration of Paul's apostolic ministry in 1 Cor. 9:17. So beyond the monetary responsibility and accountability it is broadened to include all kinds of stewardship.

In the teaching of Jesus, it appears in his famous parable of the shrewd steward (Luke 16:1-13). Here particularly the task and the officer are closely aligned. Jesus used the word oikonomeo with its cognates eight times. The remaining uses in the NT are from Paul's pen (except one by Peter, 1 Pet. 4:10), bringing the total to over 20 occurrences.

The biblical usage of oikonomia reveals a theological usage and meaning. In Eph. 3:2 and 3:9 the dispensation is linked to the mystery of Christ, which Paul says is a revelation from God. The dispensation is hence an arrangement or management in which a responsibility is placed on mankind by God. As it is related to Jesus Christ, who had not been revealed for a long time (3:5), it is new with regards to time. Paul indicated earlier in the epistle that there is coming a “dispensation of the fullness of the times” (1:10 KJV; cp. HCSB, NASB), which appears as a future phenomenon. Colossians 1:25-29 indicates that there existed a previous dispensational arrangement different from the present one. This suggests that in Paul's thought at least three dispensations of God's dealings with mankind are evident: past, present, and future.

When seen in light of the progress of revelation (e.g., John 1:17; Gal. 3-4), the dispensations can be interpreted as taking on added significance. There is progression of revelation as salvation history unfolds. The different ages incorporate different (sovereignly appointed) ways or dispensations of relating to God. These must not be seen as multiple ways of salvation.

Salvation is always by grace through faith alone (Rom. 4). The church of the present age has a unique feature of including both Jews and Gentiles in a position of equality that had not been realized before (Eph. 2:11-22). The Mosaic economy as a whole is superseded (particularly important here is Galatians) as was predicted in the OT itself. In 2 Cor. 3:6, Paul mentions himself and his collaborators as ministers of the New Covenant (cp. Luke 22:20). An initial and partial fulfillment of the promises made to Israel in Jer. 31:31-34 and Ezek. 36:22-32 have come to pass in the ministry of the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. In the future ministry of Christ, at His return other remaining aspects of salvation history shall also come to pass. These dispensational arrangements are, therefore, to be seen as both a theology of progressive revelation in relation to time and as a hermeneutical tool for correctly interpreting God's relations to humanity.

Dispensationalism is a system of biblical interpretation that has been prominent in the church since the resurgence of biblical study in the mid 1800s, though its roots go back much further. John Nelson Darby, C. I. Scofield, and Lewis Sperry Chafer were among the most famous advocates of a system of theology and interpretation emphasizing the distinguishable elements within the dispensations. The most characteristic hermeneutical concern for Dispensationalism is the consistent distinction between National Israel and the Church. Some Classical Dispensationalists even held that Israel and the church had divergent final destinies, the one on renewed earth and the other in heaven. In the past seven or eight decades, this theology has witnessed remarkable numerical growth but also significant development. In the 1950s and '60s the extreme form of the dual nature of God's eternal plan was relaxed somewhat, especially in the writings of Charles Ryrie and John Walvoord. Instead of the previously taught permanent land or earthly fulfillment of God's promises to Israel as opposed to the spiritual heavenly promises held out to the Church, these theologians taught that one united future remained for both Jews and Gentiles in soteriological unity. More recently still, reconciliation has begun between some adherents of Dispensationalism and those of nondispensational theology. Particularly significant is the eschatological understanding of the NT with its already/not yet approach to fulfillment of promises made in the OT. Progressive Dispensationalism as advocated by evangelicals such as Craig Blaising, Darrell Bock, and Robert Saucy has emerged as a recent effort to fine-tune the hermeneutical system. This approach has been criticized by supporters of the earlier school but has gained a large hearing. This newer approach is closest to nondispensational thinking and could thereby serve as a bridge to unite evangelicals on biblical and theological matters. Dispensationalism remains a vibrant force within evangelical interpretations of the Bible. See Millennium; Revelation, Book of.

Doros Zachariades

DISPERSION See Diaspora.

DISSIPATION Deceptive desires leading to a lifestyle without discipline resulting in the dizzy hangovers of drunkenness. The Greek word apate means “deception” caused by riches (Matt. 13:22) and sin (Heb. 3:13). This is founded in the deceptive lusts of the unredeemed human heart (Eph. 4:22). People following such a way of life will suffer “the penalty for doing wrong” as they continue “reveling in their dissipation” (2 Pet. 2:13 NRSV). Asotia means to be hopelessly sick and refers to a lifestyle by which one destroys oneself. It is the prodigal son's “wild living” (Luke 15:13 NIV). It is the life of “dissipation” resulting from drinking wine (Eph. 5:18 NASB; cp. Titus 1:6; 1 Pet. 4:3-4). The Bible speaks against a disorderly life, whereas the Greeks used the term to mean a wasteful or luxurious life. The Bible teaches believers to avoid both lifestyles.

DISTAFF Part of the spindle used in spinning wool (Prov. 31:19). The obscure Hebrew word may refer to a small disk at the bottom of the spindle used to make the wheel spin faster. See Cloth, Clothing; Spindle.

DISTRICT Translates several different Hebrew and Greek words referring to a region, territory, or land. In the OT district often connotes a part of a larger whole, either the provinces of an empire (1 Kings 20:14-19), regions within a country (2 Chron. 11:23), or sections of a city (Neh. 3:9-18). In the NT “district” often refers to the area around a city (Matt. 15:21; 16:13; Mark 8:10). At Acts 16:12 the reference is to an administrative area (perhaps Matt. 2:22 also). At times district means no more than the general area (Matt. 9:26,31).

DIVERSITY Characteristic of human and animal populations (Gen. 10; Acts 17:26-27). Out of His richness God created an unfathomable number of creatures to fill the earth (Gen. 1:11-12,20-22,24-25) and respond to Him in praise (Ps. 148).

Although God chose the family of Abraham from among the nations to be His special possession, an ethnically diverse element has always been present in His people (Exod. 12:38; cp. Luke 4:25-27). At times Israel responded negatively to diverse populations within their midst, such as when Nehemiah criticized the Jews of Jerusalem for marrying foreign women (Neh. 13:23-30). The issue of diversity became critical during the initial spread of the church to the Gentile world (Acts 10:1-48; 15:1-21) and was resolved on the side of unity in Christ (Gal. 3:28). John saw that the population of heaven will contain persons “from every nation, tribe, people, and language” (Rev. 7:9 HCSB).

God provides a variety of spiritual gifts to equip and empower His church for service in a diverse world (1 Cor. 12:4-31; Eph. 4:11-13).

DIVES [Di' vès] Name sometimes given to the rich man of whom Jesus spoke in Luke 16:19-31. Dives actually is the Latin word for “rich” used in Luke 16:19 in the Vulgate translation. The idea that this was the name of the man emerged in medieval times. See Lazarus.

DIVIDED KINGDOM Two political states of Judah and Israel that came into existence shortly after the death of Solomon (1 Kings 11:43) and survived together until the fall of Israel in 722 B.C. The Northern Kingdom, known as Israel, and the Southern Kingdom, known as Judah, were operated as separate countries from approximately 924 B.C. until 722 B.C. (1 Kings 12). At times, the two countries were at war with one another. At other times, they cooperated in a friendly alliance. The Northern Kingdom came to an end in 722 B.C. when the Assyrians destroyed the capital city,

Samaria. The Southern Kingdom fell to the Babylonians in 587 B.C. James Newell

DIVIDING ROCK See Selah-Hammahlekoth.

DIVINATION AND MAGIC Practice of making decisions or foretelling the future by means of reading signs and omens. Several types of divination are mentioned in the Bible. Ezekiel 21:21 mentions consulting idols, the use of arrows, and examining the liver of an animal. Arrows were shaken in a quiver and either poured out on the ground or one was drawn out to indicate where to attack. The position, size, color, etc., of a dead animal's liver was seen as indicating the best choice or one's fate. Divination by looking into a cup filled with liquid was also practiced (Gen. 44:5).

Divination and magic, or sorcery, was common among the nations surrounding ancient Israel. Egyptian court magicians could imitate some of Moses' miracles (Exod. 7:11,22; 8:7), though not all of them (Exod. 8:18; 9:11). Divination was one reason the nations were driven out of Canaan (Deut.18:12). Divination was practiced by the Philistines (1 Sam. 6:2). Babylonian court magicians were advisers to the king (astrologers, charmers, diviners, and Chaldeans; Dan. 1:20; 2:2,10; 4:7; 5:7).

God condemned divination and magic in every form. The law of Moses repeatedly condemns the practice. In Exod. 22:18 and Lev. 20:27 it brings the death penalty. Leviticus 19:26 forbids the practice. Leviticus 20:6 commands the people to avoid those who engage in such practices, linking it to harlotry. To engage in divination is to be unfaithful to the Lord and to commit abomination (Deut. 18:9-22). People are exhorted to listen to God's prophets instead.

Condemnation of divination and magic is found in the historical writings. In 2 Kings 9:22 the sorceries of Jezebel are condemned. Manasseh, king of Judah, was considered evil for divination and idolatry (2 Kings 21:1-7; 2 Chron. 33:6). Divination and sorcery are listed among the sins that caused the fall of Israel to Assyria (2 Kings 17:17-18).

The prophetic writings also contain many references condemning divination. Isaiah mentions it repeatedly (Isa. 2:6; 3:1-3; 44:25; 47:9,12-15). Zechariah 10:1-2 admonishes to look to the Lord for rain, not to diviners. Jeremiah also said that diviners should not be listened to (Jer. 27:9; 29:8).

Consulting mediums, who contact the dead, is also forbidden, carrying the death sentence (Lev. 20:6,27; Isa. 8:19). Saul was guilty of consulting a medium to contact Samuel (1 Sam. 28), despite the fact that Saul had banished all mediums from the land.

In the NT magic and divination get less attention. Simon, a sorcerer in Samaria, was rebuked by Peter for attempting to buy the power of the Holy Spirit (Acts 8:9-24). Paul and Silas encountered a slave girl at Philippi who had a demonic power of foretelling the future (Acts 16:16-26). Paul commanded the demon to leave her, which led to their imprisonment. Witchcraft is among the things condemned as a work of the flesh in Gal. 5:20.

The Bible consistently condemns the practice of divination. Only rarely does it regard such practices as fraudulent. They are condemned, not because they are not supernatural, but because the source is often demonic and practitioners are trying to circumvent God to find guidance for the future. Christians should heed the biblical injunctions against astrology, fortune-telling, and mediums.

Fred Smith

DIVINE FREEDOM One of God's unique attributes is freedom. Scripture declares, "Our God is in heaven and does whatever He pleases" (Ps. 115:3 HCSB), and "The LORD does whatever He pleases in heaven and on earth, in the seas and all the depths" (Ps. 135:6 HCSB). God is of such a nature that He is self-determining. He acts according to His nature and choosing at all times. God's actions are always voluntary. God cannot be compelled to act by any other person or exterior force. Only His nature and will are determinative for His actions (Isa. 42:21; Eph. 1:11). Because He is absolutely true and faithful, His actions are always consistent with His nature, purposes, and promises.

God's greatness ensures that He thus accomplishes all that He intends. No task is beyond God's power or too difficult for Him to perform (Jer. 32:17). Nevertheless certain actions are contrary to His character. God's goodness renders him unable to perform certain actions. He cannot lie (Heb. 6:18). He can neither be tempted by evil nor tempt anyone to evil (James 1:13). Such restrictions need not be understood as limitations upon His freedom because they are self-caused, deriving from His free nature, and because such actions are not proper objects of power. The power to lie or to be the cause of evil does not contribute to greatness. In fact, just the opposite is the case; such abilities diminish greatness. Because God does not lie, His ultimate purposes are eternal and unchanging (Num. 23:19).

God's freedom is such that He is free from limitations upon either His goodness or His greatness. Additionally God is free from spatial or temporal limitations. As such He is supra-temporal and supraspatial (eternal and omnipresent). God's greatness ensures that His decisions are perfectly wise and consistent. He is thus a God who never acts illogically or absurdly, or frustrates Himself. Nor does God act arbitrarily or capriciously. So despite the fact that He is thoroughly free, His freedom is perfect freedom. He always acts for good and not evil (James 1:17) and in ways that reveal His glory and greatness.

Robert B. Stewart

DIVINE RETRIBUTION Repayment without stipulation of good or evil. The application of the word in theology is, however, almost always viewed as the response of a just and holy God to evil. Like other prominent theological terms (i.e., Trinity, etc.), the word is not found in the Bible, but the idea of God's repayment for evil is prominent in at least three ways.

First, the law of sowing and reaping is part of God's economy (Gal. 6:7-8). In the OT this takes the form of blessings and cursings. When Israel entered Canaan, half stood on Mount Ebal and half on Mount Gerizim and acknowledged that certain kinds of behavior bring consequences either for good or evil (Deut. 27:1-26). In the NT the certainty of reaping what one sows is plain (Rom. 6:21-22).

Second, coming judgment at the end of history includes repayment from God for rebellion. In the Great White Throne Judgment (Rev. 20:11-15), two criteria of judgment seem to be involved. Unbelievers are said to be judged from both the books (plural) and the book (singular). Specifically, the “books” are examined to demonstrate that the deeds of the condemned have demonstrated God's justice in judgment. A search of the “book” confirms that those being turned into hell are not named in the Lamb's Book of Life, and hence divine retribution falls because they failed to respond to God's gracious offer of salvation.

Finally, the justice of God's condemnation of sinners gives rise to the necessity of the grace of God in salvation and the substitutionary death of Jesus on the cross. In the OT Isaiah noted this pointedly (Isa. 53:6), “All of us like sheep have gone astray...but the Lord has caused the iniquity of us all to fall on Him” (NASB). In the NT Peter declares Christ suffered for us since He “bore our sins in His body on the tree” (1 Pet. 2:24 HCSB). An eternal principle of justice exists. God in His grace extends to sinners an offer of pardon rather than the retribution they deserve, because Jesus paid the price for human sin in His vicarious death, making it possible for the Father to be both “just” and still the “justifier” of the sinner who places his faith in Jesus (Rom. 3:26).

Retribution takes several forms in the Bible. Sometimes, the response of God is temporal and physical. Defeat by one's enemies, drought in the land (1 Kings 8:33-40), or even illness can be retributive acts of God (1 Cor. 11:30; 1 Chron.21:12-13). More serious, the inevitability of physical death is a residual effect of God's retribution (Gen. 2:17; Rom. 6:23). More serious, indeed irremediable, is “spiritual death” and the estrangement of the soul from God forever. This retribution carries with it confinement of the sinner in hell (Rev. 21:8; Matt. 18:19). For this reason the beginning of wisdom is still the “fear” of God (Luke 12:5). See Eschatology; Eternal Life; Everlasting Punishment; Future Hope.

DIVINERS' OAK Place visible from the gate of Shechem (Judg. 9:35,37). Some translations understand the underlying Hebrew to refer to a plain (KJV, plain of Meonenim; NRSV, Elonmeonenim). Others translate as the “diviners' oak” (NASB), “Soothsayers' terebinth” (REB), “soothsayers' tree” (NIV) or “oak tree of the fortune tellers” (TEV). In this case the tree formed part of a sanctuary. The terebinth was designated the diviners' or soothsayers' tree since persons would go to the sanctuary seeking an oracle. The tree is perhaps that associated with Abraham (Gen. 12:6), Jacob (Gen. 35:4), and Joshua (Josh. 24:26) (cp. Deut. 11:30; Judg. 9:6). It may well have played an important role in Canaanite worship at Shechem before Israel took over the ancient worship place. It was apparently located near the east gate of the city.

DIVINITY OF CHRIST See Christ, Christology; Incarnation; Jesus.

DIVORCE Breaking of the marriage covenant. An action contrary to the pattern of “one man, one woman, one lifetime” revealed by God in Gen. 1:27; 2:21-25. The root idea implied a cutting of the marriage bond. While ancient cultures differed in details, most had a concept of marriage and a corresponding concept of divorce.

The OT has numerous references to divorce. The concept that divorce constituted sin appeared in Mal. 2:14-16. First, Malachi stated that marriage represented a covenant between a man and a woman. Further, marriage provided companionship, brought oneness, and promoted a godly seed. The dissolution of marriage represented treacherous behavior before the Lord. God hated divorce, and He issued a warning to those who had not divorced.

Under certain conditions, divorce could occur under OT law (Deut. 24:1-4). Though a wife might abandon her husband, only the husband could seek a divorce. If a husband found “some indecency in her” (NASB), he was allowed, but not required, to write a “certificate of divorce” against his wife. The rejected wife might marry again, but she could not remarry her original husband. Deuteronomy 24 has been interpreted to mean either that any displeasing thing allowed for divorce or that only sexual immorality allowed for divorce. The most scripturally consistent interpretation would seem to be that if upon marriage a husband found that his wife had been sexually active during the engagement period (or even before), then he could divorce her. This was an important safeguard since, under OT law, adultery (sexual immorality during marriage) was punishable by death (Lev. 20:10). After the Babylonian captivity of Israel, Ezra (Ezra 10) led the Israelites to “put away all the wives and their children,” so as to remove idolatrous foreigners from Israel. Intermarriage with the idolatrous peoples around Israel had been forbidden in Deut. 7:3. Since other foreigners had been accepted into Israel (i.e., Ruth), this may have indicated a refusal to worship the Lord as God on the part of the foreign wives.

Divorce regulations appear in other parts of the OT. Priests were not allowed to marry divorced women (Lev. 21:14), indicating a higher standard for their actions. Also, the vow of a divorced woman was considered legally binding since she had no husband to affirm or to overrule her actions (Num. 30:9). Finally, the Lord used divorce as a symbol of his displeasure with Israel (Jer. 3:8), though He elsewhere indicated His future plans for Israel.

The NT also sheds light on the subject of divorce. The Lord Jesus stated that divorce, except in the case of sexual immorality, would cause complications for remarriage. An improper divorce would make the divorced wife and her future husband adulterers in their relationship (Matt. 5:31-32). In Matt. 19:3-12, Jesus stated that God did not intend for divorce to occur. Further, He stated that the Mosaic law allowed for divorce only because of the hardness of Israelite hearts. Jesus' disciples considered this a hard saying and said so; nevertheless, He affirmed His position on divorce (Matt. 19:7-12; Mark 10:4-12).

The Apostle Paul twice dealt with divorce. In his discussion of the law in Rom. 7:1-3, Paul used the illustration of marriage to show the authority of the law. He reaffirmed the principles of the sanctity of marriage, the wrongfulness of divorce, and the potential consequences of remarriage. In 1 Cor. 7:10-16 Paul reiterated the need to preserve the marriage commitment.

Based on Rom. 7:1-3 and 1 Cor. 7:39, Paul believed that divorce was no longer an issue once one spouse had died. The remaining spouse was free to marry as long as the new marriage was “in the Lord” (1 Cor. 7:39). Therefore, marriage in Scripture represented a sacred bond between one man and one woman for one lifetime. The concept of marriage was ordained by God and applied to believers and nonbelievers alike. This had ramifications for the leadership qualifications for God's other institution, the church (1 Tim. 3:1-13; Titus 1:5-9). A breaking of the marriage covenant opposed the plan of God and divided the God-ordained institution of the family. See Marriage. Michael R. Spradlin

DIZAHAB [Diz' á hãb] Place-name meaning “place of gold.” Place east of Jordan River used in Deut. 1:1 to locate where Moses spoke to Israel. Nothing else is known of it. It may be located in Moab in modern ed-Dhebe.

DOCTOR See Diseases.

DOCTRINE Christian truth and teaching passed on from generation to generation as “the faith that was delivered to the saints” (Jude 3 HCSB).

Specifically, doctrine refers to Christian teaching and most specifically to Christian teaching about God, the gospel, and the comprehensive pattern of Christian truth. The word itself means “teaching” and generally refers to the accepted body of beliefs held by the Christian church universally and to those beliefs specific to individual denominations and congregations in particular.

The Christian church cannot avoid teaching and thus must formulate a framework for understanding and teaching the basic rudiments and principles of the faith and for developing those basic doctrines into more comprehensive and thorough understandings. Without such a framework, the church has no coherent system of beliefs and no means of discriminating between true and false beliefs.

Doctrine thus serves a vital and necessary role within the life of the church and the life of the believer. The biblical focus on doctrine is not based upon the notion of static and dead beliefs but upon living truths cherished and defended by all true Christians.

The foundation, sourcebook, and authority for developing doctrine is the Bible. The Bible is “profitable for teaching” (2 Tim. 3:16), and it forms the structure, content, and authority for the development of doctrine.

The structure of Christian doctrine is rooted in the character of the Bible as the inerrant and infallible Word of God. As God's revelation, the Bible establishes a structure for thought and conveys truth in doctrinal form. Doctrine is most clearly rooted in the propositional nature of biblical revelation. The Bible sets forth a unified and comprehensive structure of Christian truth, and the church bears the responsibility to correlate these truths into a unified system of truth.

The content of Christian doctrine is derived from a careful consideration of the totality of the Bible's teaching. Doctrines are developed as Christians seek to understand the contents of the Bible and to express those teachings in understandable form appropriate for instructing believers.

The authority for Christian doctrines is the Bible itself. In formulating doctrine, the church takes other authorities into consideration. Experience often reveals the need for doctrinal attention, and true Christian doctrine is to be lived out in faithful Christian experience, not just received as matters of intellectual interest. Reason is also important in doctrinal formulation, for the tools of reason are indispensable to the task of expressing biblical truths in doctrinal form. Tradition also plays a role, for every generation of Christians inherits patterns of belief and practice from previous generations. We do not begin with a blank slate unformed by received traditions.

Nevertheless, the Bible cannot function merely as one authority among others. The Bible is the controlling and ultimate authority for all matters of Christian belief and practice. Experience, reason, and tradition are to be judged by Scripture, and Scripture is not to be judged by other authorities. This principle has characterized the church in every period of doctrinal strength and purity. When compromised, false teachings and heresies inevitably follow.

This principle was expressed during the Reformation as sola Scriptura, for Scripture alone is the final and controlling authority for all true Christian teaching and doctrinal formulation.

Once formulated, doctrines are often expressed and taught through catechisms and adopted as creeds and confessions. Every Christian denomination expresses its beliefs in some doctrinal form, whether highly developed or rudimentary. Likewise, every Christian must have a basic understanding of Christian doctrine in order “to give a defense to anyone who asks you a reason for the hope that is in you” (1 Pet. 3:15 HCSB).

The church must give constant attention to doctrine, for aberrant teachings and heresies are constant threats to the biblical integrity of the people of God. Like the Christians of ancient Berea, the church must continually examine its beliefs by Scripture (Acts 17:11). Heresies are to be confronted and corrected on Scriptural authority. False teachers are to be revealed and removed from fellowship (1 Tim. 6:3-5 KJV; Titus 3:10). The church cannot be unconcerned about false teachings but must protect the purity of true Christian faith in mutual submission to the Bible as the Word of God.

Doctrines are to be formulated, taught, and passed down from one generation to the next in a succession established by the apostles (Acts 2:42; 2 Tim. 2:2). The faith “once for all delivered” (Jude 3) is to be cherished, believed, defended, and protected by true Christians. Parents are responsible for teaching their children, and church leaders are to teach the flock of God with faithfulness.

No human formulation can express Christian truth in total comprehensiveness. Our doctrinal formulations are never coextensive with the fullness of biblical truth. Nevertheless, the church is called to express the structure and content of biblical truth and to be continually about the task of correcting our doctrines by Scripture, seeking to teach the gospel and the pattern of biblical truth as it was first received by the apostles.

R. Albert Mohler, Jr.

DODAI [Dō' dāi] Personal name related to Hebrew word meaning “favorite” or “beloved.” First Chronicles 27:1-15 describes David's army as being divided into 12 monthly divisions with an officer over each. Dodai was in charge for the second month. Second Samuel 23:9 and 1 Chron. 11:12 refer to Dodo the Ahohite, which is probably a variant spelling referring to the same person as Dodai. See Ahohite; Dodo.

DODANIM [Dō' dā nīm] Great grandson of Noah and son of Javan in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:4). In 1 Chron. 1:7 the name is Rodanim. Early copyists made the easy confusion between Hebrew “r” and “d.” If Rodanim is correct, the reference may be to inhabitants of Rhodes. If Dodanim is original, the identification of the people is not simple. It could refer to a land of Danuna known from the Amarna letters. This was apparently north of Tyre. A people with a similar name were among the Sea People who fought with Rameses III. Homer says Danaeans besieged Troy. Sargon II describes Yadanana who lived on Cyprus. Despite specific information, they were apparently from the Greek area and may have been Greek speaking.

DODAVAH [Dōd' ā vāh] or DODAVAHU [Dōdā va' hū] Personal name meaning “beloved of Yahweh.” Father of Eliezer the prophet (2 Chron. 20:37).

DODO [Dō' dō] Personal name meaning “his beloved.” 1. Grandfather of Tola, the judge (Judg. 10:1). 2. Father of Eleazar, one of David's three mighty men (2 Sam. 23:9). In 1 Chron. 27:4 he is called Dodai. 3. Citizen of Bethlehem and father of Elhanan, one of David's warriors (2 Sam. 23:24).

DOE Modern translation where KJV has “hind” or “roe.” The Hebrew has two words. Ya 'aalah refers to the female ibex or mountain goat (Prov. 5:19), the mate of the ibex, Capra nubiana or Capra sinaitica (Ps. 104:18). Ayalah is the female fallow deer (Gen. 49:21; 2 Sam. 22:34; Job 39:1; Pss. 18:33; 29:9; Jer. 14:5; Hab. 3:19; Song 2:7; 3:5). The male, Cervus caprolus, is the hart or deer of Deut. 12:15,22; 14:5; 15:22; 1 Kings 4:23; Isa. 35:6; Ps. 42:2; Song 2:9,17; Lam. 1:6. See Deer.

DOEG [Dō'ēg] Personal name meaning “full of fear.” An Edomite in the service of King Saul (1 Sam. 21:7). He was present at Nob at the time David arrived there during the course of his flight from Saul. Doeg subsequently reported to Saul that the priest Ahimelech had given assistance to David. After confronting Ahimelech, Saul ordered his guards to slay the priests of Nob. When the guards refused to obey, Saul told Doeg to kill the priests. In a grisly show of obedience, Doeg took the lives of 85 people. The title of Ps. 52 refers to this incident. See Saul.

DOG Considered an unclean animal; often wild, scavenger animal that ran in packs (Pss. 22:16-21; 59:6) but sometimes kept as domestic pet. Dogs served as watchdogs for herds (Isa. 56:10; Job 30:1) and for the dwelling (Exod. 11:7). Some were trained for hunting (Ps. 22:16), but some ran stray in the streets (Exod. 22:30; 1 Kings 14:11).

Metaphorically, “dog” was a term of contempt (1 Sam. 17:43) and self-abasement (1 Sam. 24:14). “Dog” may refer to a male cult prostitute (Deut. 23:18), though the exact meaning of “dog's wages” is disputed. The term “dog” was a designation for the wicked (Isa. 56:10-11). The prophet insulted the priests by saying their sacrifices were no better than breaking a dog's neck and sacrificing the dog (Isa. 66:3). This means that sacrifices are not needed in the new age and that the priests had neglected their first task, that of determining God's will.

Jesus used dogs to teach people to be discriminating in whom they chose to teach (Matt. 7:6). In Mark 7:27, Jesus probably was referring to the small dogs that people kept as pets. Jews contemptuously called Gentiles “dogs.” Paul insulted his Judaizing opponents, calling them dogs (Phil. 3:2; cp. 2 Pet. 2:22; Rev. 22:15).

DOMINION Either political authority (Num. 24:19; Dan. 7:6,12,14) or the realm in which such authority is exercised (1 Kings 4:24; 9:19). Dominion may have a positive connotation as when humankind is given dominion over creation (Gen. 1:26,28; Ps. 8:6) or a negative connotation that approximates the idea of domination (Gen. 37:8; Judg. 14:4; Neh. 9:28). Though humans exercise dominion in the political sphere and over creation, ultimate dominion belongs to God (Ps. 72:8; Dan. 4:3,34). Dominion is used figuratively for the authority of the law (Rom. 7:1) and for the domination of sin (Ps. 19:13; Rom. 6:14) and death (Rom. 6:9). The dominions of Col. 1:16 are angelic powers that are subordinated to Christ.

DOMITIAN See Rome and the Roman Empire.

DONKEY See Ass.

DOOR Opening for entering or leaving a house, tent, or room. At least five Hebrew words and one Greek term are translated “door” in the English Bible. The two most common Hebrew words have distinct usages, though they may be interchanged. Petach refers to the doorway, to the actual opening itself. Delet alludes to the door proper, usually made of wood sheeted with metal, though a slab of stone could be used. The Greek term thura is used for both of these Hebrew words.

“Door” is often used in a figurative sense in the Bible. In the OT “sin is crouching at the door” (Gen. 4:7 NASB) means that sin is very near. The valley of Achor, a place of trouble (Josh. 7:26), is later promised as “a door of hope” (Hos. 2:15). It will become a reason for God's people to trust Him again.

In the NT Jesus calls Himself “the door” (John 10:7,9). Faith in Him is the only way to enter the kingdom of God. God gave to the Gentiles “the door of faith” or an opportunity to know Him as Lord (Acts 14:27). Paul constantly sought a “door of service,” an occasion for ministry in the name of Christ (1 Cor. 16:9). Jesus stands at the door and knocks (Rev. 3:20). He calls all people to Himself but will not enter without permission.

Bradley S. Butler

DOORKEEPER Person guarding access to an important or restricted place. Temple doorkeeper was an important office in biblical times. The doorkeepers collected money from the people (2 Kings 22:4). Some Levites were designated doorkeepers (or “gatekeepers”) for the ark (1 Chron. 15:23-24). The Persian kings used eunuchs for doorkeepers (Esther 2:21). Women also served this function (John 18:16-17; Acts 12:13).

The Hebrew word underlying the translation “doorkeeper” in Ps. 84:10 (KJV, RSV, NIV) appears only once in the OT. The root idea is threshold. Thus some translations (NASB, REB, TEV) render the word “at the threshold” or some similar expression. The reference is to those waiting outside the temple either to beg alms or to seek admission. The thought of the verse is that it is better to be standing outside the temple than to be inside the tents of the wicked.

DOPHKAH [Dōph' kâh] Place-name, perhaps meaning “(animal) drive.” Station in the wilderness between Wilderness of Sin and Rephidim where Israel camped (Num. 33:12). It has been located at modern Serabit el-Chadim, but this is uncertain.

DOR [Dôr] Place-name meaning “dwelling.” Canaanite city located at modern Khirbet el-Burj, 12 miles south of Mount Carmel. Its early history shows connections with Egypt under Rameses II and with the Sea Peoples, who are closely related to the Philistines. Apparently the Tjeker, one of the Sea Peoples, destroyed the city shortly after 1300 B.C. Its king joined the northern coalition against Joshua (Josh. 11:2; 12:23) but met defeat. The Hebrew expression here, naphoth dor, or heights of Dor is unexpected since Dor lies on the seacoast. The reference must be to Mount Carmel. Dor lay in the territory assigned Asher, but the tribe of Manasseh claimed it (Josh. 17:11). The Canaanites maintained political control (Josh. 17:12; Judg. 1:27). Dor served as a district headquarters under Solomon, governed by Solomon's son-in-law Ben-abinadab (1 Kings 4:11).

DORCAS [Dôr' cās] Personal name meaning “gazelle.” A Christian woman of Joppa who was known for her charitable works (Acts 9:36). She was also called Tabitha, an Aramaic name. When she became sick and died, friends sent for the Apostle Peter. He came to Joppa. Through him Dorcas was restored to life. This was the first such miracle performed through any of the apostles, and it resulted in many new believers.

DOT REB translation of Greek term “little horn” (Matt. 5:18; cp. Luke 16:17), rendered in various ways in English translations (e.g., tittle, KJV; stroke of a letter or pen, NASB, NRSV, NIV). The dot is generally held to be a mark distinguishing similarly shaped letters, either the raised dot distinguishing sin from shin or else the hooks used to distinguish others (e.g., beth and kaph). Others suggest the letter waw is intended. Iota, translated “jot” or “smallest letter” is the smallest Greek vowel and is generally taken to represent the smallest Hebrew letter, yodh. Jesus thus contended that it was easier for heaven and earth to pass away than for the smallest detail of the law to be set aside. Matthew's qualification “until all things are accomplished”(HCSB) is perhaps a reference to the saving work of Christ as the fulfillment of all Scripture.

View of the ancient harbor at Dor in Israel.

DOTHAN [Dō' thān] Place-name of uncertain meaning, also known as Dothaim. A city of the tribe of Manasseh, west of the Jordan, northeast of Samaria, southeast of Megiddo, and now identified as Tell Dotha. It was located in an area less productive for agriculture and was traversed by roads used for commerce. Dothan is the area to which Joseph traveled to find his brothers (Gen. 37:17). From there, Joseph was sold to a caravan of Ishmaelites and carried to Egypt, following an ancient trade route over the Plain of Dothan to Egypt. Dothan was the place Elisha stayed (2 Kings 6:13). The king of Syria sought to capture Elisha by laying siege to the city. Elisha then led the Syrian army away from Dothan to Samaria and defeat. Dothan is five miles southwest of Genin, 11 miles northeast of Samaria, and 13 miles north of Shechem.

David M. Fleming

Excavations of the ruins at Dothan in Israel.

DOUBLE-MINDED Words used only by James in the NT to express a lack of purity of heart or a lack of absolute trust in God. The term literally means “of two minds or souls” (Greek dipsychos). It describes one who is trusting in God while also trusting in something else, such as self or the world. James encouraged those who were lacking in wisdom to ask God. The one who asks God and doubts is described in James 1:8 as an “indecisive man” (HCSB). He is one who is wavering between asking God in faith and not believing God will or can answer. He may also be one who asks God yet resorts to his own wisdom instead of that which God provides. This person is described as one who was “unstable in all his ways” indicating that his entire life was lived without a complete trust in God.

Later in his letter James encouraged his readers to purify their hearts (James 4:8), because they were “double-minded people.” James was calling for these Christians to make a commitment to trust in God and His ways while denying their own ways and trusting in themselves.

Thomas Strong

DOUBLE-TONGUED One of the qualifications of deacons is that they not be double-tongued, that is, inconsistent in speech (1 Tim. 3:8; HCSB, “hypocritical”). James 3:9-10 warns of the inconsistency of those who bless God while cursing those made in the image of God. First John 3:18 encourages consistency of loving words with loving actions. Inconsistency of speech might be taken as thinking one thing and saying another or as saying one thing to one, another thing to another.

DOUGH Flour or meal mixed with liquid, usually water but sometimes olive oil as well, which is baked as bread. Dough was normally leavened, given time to rise, and then kneaded before baking (Jer. 7:18; Hos. 7:4). The necessity for haste at the Hebrews' departure from Egypt caused them to carry their dough before it was leavened (Exod. 12:34). See Bread.

DOVE The term “dove” is applied rather loosely to many of the smaller species of pigeon. The first mention of the dove occurs in Gen. 8:8-12. Noah released a dove from the ark to determine if the floodwaters had subsided from the earth.

The moaning of the dove sometimes functions metaphorically (Isa. 38:14; 59:11; Ezek. 7:16). Psalm 55:6 notes the dove's powers of flight; Jer. 48:28 describes its nesting habits; Ps. 68:13 indicates its rich colors. Because of the gentleness of the dove and because of its faithfulness to its mate, this bird is used as a descriptive title of one's beloved in the Song of Songs (2:14; 5:2; 6:9). In Matt. 10:16 the dove symbolizes innocence.

All four Gospels describe the Spirit of God descending like a dove upon Jesus after His baptism (Matt. 3:16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; John 1:32).

The term “turtledove” also is applied to any of the smaller varieties of pigeon. The turtledove played a significant sacrificial role in the Bible (Gen. 15:9; Lev. 1:14; 5:7,11; 12:6; 14:22,30; 15:14; Luke 2:24). For those who could not afford a lamb, the law prescribed that two turtledoves or pigeons be offered for the sacrifice of purification after childbearing. Mary brought such an offering after the birth of Christ (Lev. 12:8; Luke 2:24). The turtledove also signified the arrival of spring (Song 2:12; Jer. 8:7).

Janice Meier

DOVE ON FAR-OFF TEREBINTHS Part of the superscription of Ps. 56 (NRSV; cp. REB, NIV); probably a reference to the secular tune to which the psalm was to be sung. “Hind of the Dawn” (Ps. 22 REB) and “Lilies” (Ps. 45 NIV) are possibly other hymn tunes. An alternative explanation relates to the association of doves with the ritual of atonement. In this case the title indicates an atonement psalm. KJV transliterates the Hebrew, Jonath-elem-rechokim. See Terebinths.

DOVE'S DUNG An item sold as food for an incredible price (2 Kings 6:25) during the siege of Samaria. Some interpret dove's dung as bird droppings since 2 Kings 18:27 indicates that in time of siege persons could be reduced to eating their own excrement and drinking their own urine. Others have suggested that the dung was to be used as fuel or as a salt substitute. Probably Dove's Dung refers to a bulbous plant similar to a wild onion that was edible after boiling or roasting. Still others emend the text to read some type of bean pods (REB, NIV).

DOWNSIZING The Bible's statements regarding God's providence in times of hardship are directly applicable to personal difficulties which result from corporate and financial downsizing. The biblical record is ample proof that no one is exempt from trouble (Job 5:7; Ps. 40:12). Job experienced a greater degree of downsizing than perhaps anyone before or since (Job 1:13-19). While Job apparently never understood the reasons for his misfortune (Job 42:1-6), God eventually restored both his wealth and position (Job 42:10-17).

The Apostle Paul learned “the secret of being content...whether in abundance or in need” (Phil. 4:12 HCSB). Paul understood that while circumstances are often beyond the control of individuals, nothing is beyond the realm of God, who cares for even the smallest part of His creation (Ps. 24:1; Matt. 6:25-33). For this reason God answers those who wait for Him (Ps. 40:1).

Paul H. Wright

DOWRY Marriage present that ensured the new wife's financial security against the possibility her husband might forsake her or might die. The husband-to-be or his father paid the dowry or bride price to the bride's father to be kept for the bride. The bride could protest if her father used the dowry for other purposes (Gen. 31:15). In addition the bride received wedding gifts from her father and husband (Gen. 24:53; 34:12; Judg. 1:15). The amount of the dowry depended on customs of the specific tribes or clans and upon the economic and social class of the parties involved (1 Sam. 18:23-27, a passage also showing that service could be substituted for money; cp. Gen. 29:15-30; Josh. 15:16-17). Besides guaranteeing future financial security, the dowry also compensated the bride and her family for the economic loss represented to her family by her leaving to join her husband's family. Deuteronomy 22:29 apparently puts the price at 50 shekels of silver, a much larger price than paid for a slave—30 shekels (Exod. 21:32; cp. Lev. 27:1-8). Payment of the dowry made the marriage a legal fact even before the official wedding ceremonies or consummation of the marriage. Ancient Near Eastern texts from different cultures show similar practices. Often the bride receives the dowry directly or indirectly through her father. See Family; Marriage.

DOXOLOGY Brief formula for expressing praise or glory to God. Doxologies generally contain two elements, an ascription of praise to God (usually referred to in third person) and an expression of His infinite nature. The term “doxology” (“word of glory”) itself is not found in the Bible, but both the OT and NT contain many doxological passages using this formula.

Biblical doxologies are found in many contexts, but one of their chief functions seems to have been as a conclusion to songs (Exod. 15:18), psalms (Ps. 146:10), and prayers (Matt. 6:13), where they possibly served as group responses to solo singing or recitation. Doxologies conclude four of the five divisions of the psalter (Ps. 41:13; 72:19; 89:52; 106:48), with Ps. 150 serving as a sort of doxology to the entire collection. Doxologies also occur at or near the end of several NT books (Rom. 16:27; Phil. 4:20; 1 Tim. 6:16; 2 Tim. 4:18; Heb. 13:21; 1 Pet. 5:11; 2 Pet. 3:18; Jude 25) and figure prominently in the Revelation (1:6; 4:8; 5:13; 7:12).

David W. Music

DRACHMA [Drák' má] Greek term used to refer to silver coins (Luke 15:8-9). It was a Greek unit of silver coinage that, during the time of the NT, was considered equivalent to the Roman denarius. In 300 B.C. a sheep cost one drachma, but apparently by NT times the drachma was worth much less. See Coins; Economic Life.

DRAGNET Large fishing net equipped with a weighted bottom edge for touching (“dragging”) the river or lake bottom and a top with wooden floats allowing the net to be spread across the water (Isa. 19:8). Such nets were normally let down from a boat and then drawn to shore by a crew positioned on the beach. In the case of a large catch, the net was hauled to shore by boat (John 21:6-8).

Habakkuk 1:14-17 pictures the residents of Judah as helpless fish before the Babylonian army, pictured as the fishermen. Here the fishing nets and hooks symbolize the Babylonian military machinery. The text is not evidence that ancient fishermen sacrificed to their nets or that the Babylonians sacrificed to their weapons of war. Rather the text points to the worship of military might.

Jesus compared the kingdom of God to a dragnet, containing both good and bad fish until the time of separation and judgment (Matt. 13:47).

DRAGON Term used by the KJV to translate two closely related Hebrew words (tannim and tannin). At times the terms appear to be interchangeable. Context indicates that the first term refers to a mammal inhabiting the desert (Isa. 13:22; 35:7; 43:20; Lam. 4:3). Most modern speech translations equate the animal with the jackal, though perhaps the wolf (REB) is intended. The second term has four possible uses: (1) “great sea monster” (KJV, “great whales”) in the sense of a large sea creature (Gen. 1:21; Ps. 148:7), possibly a whale; this sense of tannin as created being may serve as a correction of sense 4; (2) a snake (Exod. 7:9-10,12; Deut. 32:33; Ps. 91:13); (3) a crocodile (Jer. 51:34; Ezek. 29:3; 32:3); here the beast is used as a symbol of Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon or the Egyptian Pharaoh; (4) a mythological sea monster symbolic of the forces of chaos and evil in opposition to God's creative and redemptive work (Ps. 74:12-14; Job 7:12; 26:12-13; Isa. 27:1; 51:9-10). Leviathan and Rehab are used as parallel terms.

In the NT Revelation develops sense 4, describing the dragon as a great, red monster with seven heads and ten horns. This dragon is clearly identified with Satan (the Devil) and is termed the deceiver and the accuser of the saints. As in the OT texts, the dragon is put under guard (Rev. 20:1-3; Job 7:12) and later released for final destruction (Rev. 20:7-10; Isa. 27:1).

DRAGON WELL Jerusalem landmark in the time of Nehemiah which can no longer be identified with certainty (Neh. 2:13). The water source is described as a well (KJV, NASB, NIV), a spring (REB, NRSV), or a fountain (TEV). The NIV takes the underlying Hebrew word as jackal rather than dragon. The Dragon Well has been identified with the Gihon spring, the main water source during the time of Hezekiah, the Siloam pool which was fed by the Gihon, the En-rogel spring located 210 meters south of the confluence of the Hinnom and Kidron valleys, or with a spring along the east side of the Tyropoeon Valley which has since dried up.

DRAWERS OF WATER Water carriers (Josh. 9:21,23,27). See Occupations and Professions.

DREAMS In the ancient Near East dreams were one of several ways people sought to see the future and to make decisions that would be beneficial to them. In some societies, people went to temples or holy places to sleep in order to have a dream that would show them the best decision to make.

The dreams of common people were important to them, but the dreams of kings and of holy men or women were important on a national or international scale. One of the results was that many of the nations surrounding Israel had religious figures skilled in the interpretation of dreams. These figures could be consulted at the highest level of government for important decisions. In such nations as Egypt and Assyria, these interpreters even developed “dream books” by which they could give interpretations according to the symbols of a dream.

Dreams were important in the OT, too. Israel was forbidden to use many of the divining practices of her neighbors, but over a dozen times God revealed something through a dream. When we recognize that night visions and dreams were not strictly distinguished, we can find many more times in the OT and NT that God used this method to communicate. In fact, prophecy and the dreaming of dreams were to be tested in the same way according to Deut. 13.

What Dreams Were Interpreted? Not every dream was thought to be from God. Not every dream was significant. Some could be wishful thinking (Ps. 126:1; Isa. 29:7-8). In times of need and especially when a person sought a word from God, dreams could be significant.

Not every dream needed to be interpreted. To note this we can distinguish three types of dreams. A simple “message dream” apparently did not need interpretation. For instance, Joseph, in Matt. 1 and 2, understood the dreams concerning Mary and Herod even though no mention is made of interpretation. A second type, the “simple symbolic dream,” used symbols, but the symbolism was clear enough that the dreamer and others could understand it. The OT Joseph had this kind of dream in Gen. 37. Complex symbolic dreams, though, needed the interpretive skill of someone with experience or an unusual ability in interpretation. The dreams of Nebuchadnezzar described in Dan. 2 and 4 are good examples of this kind of dream. Even Daniel himself had dreams in which the symbolism was so complex that he had to seek divine interpretation (Dan. 8).

Were Dreams Ever Wrong or Wrongly Interpreted? Dreams were neither foolproof nor infallible. Both Jeremiah and Zechariah spoke against relying on dreams to express the revelation of God. Dreams could come without being God's word (Jer. 23:28). Jeremiah lumped dreamers together with soothsayers, sorcerers, and false prophets (Jer. 27:9). He cautioned exiles in Babylon not to listen to dreamers and false prophets who told them that the exile would not be long (Jer. 29:8). Zechariah pointed people toward the Lord, apparently because they were relying on dreamers and others to give them the truth (Zech. 10:1-2). Thus, while God often used dreams to reveal His will, there is a warning, too, not to rely on this method to know the will of God. See Inspiration of Scripture; Oracles; Prophecy, Prophets; Revelation of God.

Albert F. Bean

DRESS See Cloth, Clothing.

DRESSER OF SYCAMORE TREES One of the occupations of the prophet Amos (Amos 7:14). The tending involved slitting the top of each piece of fruit to hasten its ripening and to produce a sweeter, more edible fruit. Fruit infested with insects might be discarded at this time as well. The significance of Amos' trade is twofold: (1) he was a prophet solely because of the call of God, not because of training in a prophetic school; and (2) contrary to the accusation of the priest Amaziah (7:12), Amos did not earn his living by prophesying.

DRIED GRAPES Raisins. Grapes were dried in clusters for a food that was easily stored and transported (1 Sam. 25:18; 30:12; 2 Sam. 16:1; 1 Chron. 12:40). Nazarites were prohibited from eating dried grapes (Num. 6:3).

DRINK Beverages. Water was the primary drink. It was drawn from cisterns (2 Sam. 17:18; Jer. 38:6) or from wells (Gen. 29:2; John 4:11). In times of drought it was necessary to buy water (Deut. 2:28; Lam. 5:4). Milk was also a common beverage though it was considered a food rather than a drink. Several types of wine were consumed. “New” or “sweet” wine was likely wine from the first drippings of juice before the grapes had been trodden. Some interpreters argue that new wine was unfermented. Some texts in which it is mentioned, however, allude to its intoxicating effects (Hos. 4:11; Acts 2:13). In a hot climate before the invention of refrigeration, it was not possible to keep wine many months past the harvest before fermentation began. Sour wine, perhaps vinegar mixed with oil, was a common drink of day laborers (Ruth 2:14; Luke 23:36). Wine was considered a luxury item which could both gladden the heart (Ps. 104:15) or cloud the mind (Isa. 28:7; Hos. 4:11). See Milk; Water; Wine.

DRINK OFFERING See Sacrifice and Offering.

DROMEDARY One-humped species of camel. See Camel.

DROPSY Edema, a disease with fluid retention and swelling. Dropsy is a symptom of disease of the heart, liver, kidneys, or brain. The condition involves the accumulation of water fluid in the body cavities or in the limbs. Thus the TEV speaks of a man whose arms and legs were swollen (Luke 14:2).

DROSS Either the refuse from impure metal which is separated by a process of smelting (Prov. 25:4; 26:23) or else the base (impure) metal before the smelting process. Litharge (lead monoxide) from which silver was to be extracted is perhaps meant at Isa. 1:22,25. The same sense is required if the reading dross is preferred over the emendation glaze (REB, NRSV, NIV) at Prov. 26:23. Dross is a symbol of impurity. The wicked are pictured as dross (Prov. 25:4; Ps. 119:119) that renders the whole of society impure. Both Isa. 1:22,25 and Ezek. 22:18-19 speak of silver turned to dross as a picture of Israel's lost righteousness.

DRUGS (Illegal Narcotics) Several biblical principles address the scourge which results from the use of illegal narcotics. The Bible's strong counsel against drunkenness (Prov. 20:1; 23:20-21,29-35; Isa. 28:1, 7-8; Hab. 2:15-16; Gal. 5:16, 21; Eph. 5:18) is clear indication that illegal narcotics, which adversely affect the mind and body to an even greater degree than does alcohol, should be stringently avoided. Like alcohol abuse, drug abuse destroys one's ability to live a reasonable life (Isa. 5:11-12).

The Bible recognizes the compelling reality of temptation to give in to peer pressure, abuse oneself, and shut out one's surroundings (Prov. 31:4-7; Isa. 56:12; 1 Cor. 10:13; 15:33). Peter speaks of the importance of maintaining an alert mind in the face of difficult circumstances (1 Pet. 1:13; 5:8; cp. 1 Thess. 5:6). Even on the cross Jesus refused the drugging effects of wine mixed with gall (Matt. 27:34).

Christians are commanded to honor God with their bodies, which the Apostle Paul aptly calls temples of the Holy Spirit (1 Cor. 6:19-20). The Bible teaches the value of self-control (Prov. 25:28; Gal. 5:23) as one means to withstand temptation (1 Cor. 10:13). Ultimately, it is the work of Christ which breaks the cycle of sin and death (Rom. 7:18-8:2).

Paul H. Wright

DRUNKENNESS Result of consuming a quantity of alcohol; the outcome being the impairment of faculties. This impairment may be mild (deep sleep) to severe (dizziness, vomiting, hallucination, and death). The physical symptoms mentioned in Scripture are: staggering (Job 12:25; Ps. 107:27); wounds and beatings (Prov. 20:1; 23:29-35; Lam. 2:12); vomiting (Isa. 19:14; Jer. 25:27; 48:26); and hallucinations (Isa. 28:1-8; Prov. 23:33). The mental effects of alcohol mentioned in Scripture are a false sense of one's abilities and strengths (Isa. 28:11; Hos. 4:11). The spiritual effects of alcohol are the deadening of one's self to God and all religious thought (Isa. 5:11-12).

There are many cases of drunkenness in the OT. Among the better known cases of drunkenness are: Noah (Gen. 9:21), Lot (Gen. 19:33), Nabal (1 Sam. 25:36), Uriah the Hittite (2 Sam. 11:13), Elah king of Israel (1 Kings 16:9), and Ben-Hadad (1 Kings 20:16). Interestingly misfortune befalls each of these people either in their drunken stupor or shortly after they awake. Thus Scripture issues strong warnings against drunkenness

(Lev. 10:9; Deut. 21:20; Prov. 24:29-35; 1 Cor. 5:11; Gal. 5:21; Eph. 5:18). The Scriptures often refer to drunkenness as a great social problem. Consequently in Proverbs the drunkard is depicted as one who spends his money to feed his habit, only to suffer ill health and misfortune at the hands of his fellowmen. In the Prophets the drunken rich often take advantage of the poor in society (Amos 4:1; 6:6; Isa. 5:11-12; 28:1-8; 56:11-12). The Prophets also point out the foolishness of drunkenness (Jer. 25:27; 48:26; 51:39,57; Hab. 2:15). Jeremiah uses the metaphor of spiritual drunkenness to indicate not a state of spiritual bliss or enthusiasm but of foolishness and idolatry (Jer. 25:27-33). In the NT the Lord explicitly warned against the use of alcohol (Luke 21:34). In Paul's letters there are numerous warnings against the indulgence of alcohol (1 Cor. 5:11; 6:10; Gal 5:21; Eph. 5:18). Likewise a person desiring the office of a bishop cannot be addicted to wine (1 Tim. 3:2-3; Tit. 1:7-8; 2:2-3).

Joe Cathey

DRUSILLA [Drú'sil' lá] Wife of Felix, the Roman governor of Judea who heard Paul's case. Drusilla was a Jew and listened to Paul's arguments with her husband (Acts 24:24). She was the youngest daughter of Herod Agrippa I. She had been engaged to Antiochus Euphianes of Commagene, but he refused to become a Jew. King Aziz of Emesa did agree to be circumcised, and they were married. Átomos, a magician from Cyprus, helped Felix win Drusilla away from her husband. Apparently, her son Agrippa died when Mount Vesuvius erupted in A.D. 79. She may have also died in this disaster. See Herod.

DUGONG See Sea Cow.

DUKE (KJV) See Chief.

DULCIMER Apparently a Greek word used to name a musical instrument in Dan. 3:10. Many think the bagpipes are meant here (NASB). NRSV translates "drum."

DUMAH [Du' mäh] Place-name meaning "silence" or "permanent settlement."
1. Son of Ishmael and the original ancestor of the Arabian tribe (Gen.

25:14) centered in the oases of Dumah, probably modern el-Gof, also called Dumat el-Gandel, meaning Dumah of the Rocks. Rulers in Dumah apparently led coalitions supported by Damascus and later by Babylon against Assyria between 740 and 700 B.C. Thus Assyria punished Dumah in 689 when they also defeated Babylon. Sennacherib conquered Dumah. The remainder of Assyrian history is filled with troubled relationships with Arabian vassals, particularly those around Dumah. Isaiah proclaimed an oracle against Dumah (Isa. 21:11). 2. City of the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:52). It is probably modern Khirbet ed-Dome about nine miles southwest of Hebron. It may be mentioned in the Amarna letters.

DUMBNESS See Muteness.

DUNG Excrement of man or beast. “Dung” translates several different Hebrew and Greek words. An ash heap or rubbish heap was used to convey the haunt of the destitute (1 Sam. 2:8; Luke 14:35).

The first mention of dung in the Bible is in connection with the sacrificial rites. The sacred law required that the dung, along with other parts of the animal, should not be burned on the altar but should be burned outside the camp (Exod. 29:14; Lev. 4:11-12).

A major disgrace for a Jew was to have one's carcass treated as dung (2 Kings 9:37). Dung has been used as fertilizer for centuries. It is recorded in Luke 13:8 and Isa. 25:10 that the people of Palestine used it for that purpose. Dry dung was and is often used as fuel (Ezek. 4:12-15). Animal dung was used as fuel when it was mixed with straw and dried to a suitable state for heating the simple bread ovens.

Paul used a powerful metaphor with the word “dung” when he made a comparison between his personal knowledge of Christ and those who did not know Christ (Phil. 3:8). The word is used also in Scripture to indicate symbolically the degradation to which a person or a nation might fall (2 Kings 9:37; Jer. 8:2).

Gary Bonner

DUNG GATE Jerusalem landmark; one of the 11 gates in the time of Nehemiah (Neh. 2:13; 3:13-14; 12:31). Located at the southwest corner of the wall, the gate was used for the disposal of garbage, rubbish, and dung that was dumped into the Hinnom Valley below the city. Referred to as the Refuse Gate by NASB, and Rubbish Gate by TEV.

DUNGEON See Prison, Prisoners.

DURA [Dú' rá] Akkadian place-name meaning "circuit wall." Plain in Babylonia where King Nebuchadnezzar set up a mammoth golden image of a god or of himself (Dan. 3:1). The common place-name does not lend itself to an exact location.

DUST Loose earth, used both literally and figuratively. Dust is used in figures of speech for a multitude (Gen. 13:16; Num. 23:10; Isa. 29:5) or for an abundance (of flesh, Ps. 78:27; of silver, Job 27:16; of blood, Zeph. 1:17). Dust is used as a metaphor for death, the grave, or Sheol (Job 10:9; Eccles. 12:7; Dan. 12:2). Dust on a balance is a picture of something insignificant (Isa. 40:15). Human lowliness in relationship with God as well as humanity's close relationship with the rest of creation is expressed in the making of persons from dust (Gen. 2:7; Job 4:19; Ps. 104:29). To return to dust is to die (Gen. 3:19; Job 10:9; 17:16). To place dust on one's head was a sign of mourning (Lam. 2:10; Ezek. 27:30; Rev. 18:19). This act was sometimes accomplished by rolling in dust (Mic. 1:10). Dust on the head may have been a sign of defeat and shame as well as mourning in Josh. 7:6. To throw dust was a sign of contempt (2 Sam. 16:13), though to throw it in the air may have been a demand for justice (Acts 22:23).

To defile a crown in dust (Ps. 89:39) was to dishonor the office of king. To eat or lick dust (Gen. 3:14; Ps. 72:9; Isa. 65:25; Lam. 3:29; Mic. 7:17) was to suffer humiliation and powerlessness before an enemy. To lay one's horn (glory) in the dust was to experience humiliation and loss of standing (Job 16:15). To lay a soul in the dust (Pss. 7:5; 22:15) is to kill. To make something dust (Deut. 9:21; 2 Kings 13:7) is to destroy it completely. To raise from the dust (1 Sam. 2:8) is to rescue or exalt. To sit in the dust (Isa. 47:1) is to suffer humiliation.

For Jews to shake dust off their feet was a sign that Gentile territory was unclean. In the NT this action indicates that those who have rejected the gospel have made themselves as Gentiles and must face the judgment of God (Matt. 10:14-15; Acts 13:51).

Chris Church

The Dung Gate in old Jerusalem.

DWARF Person of abnormally small size, especially one with abnormal body proportions. The Hebrew word translated as dwarf by most English translations of Lev. 21:20 is used in Gen. 41:3,23 to describe the emaciated cows and shriveled heads of grain. Some thus understand the word to mean lean or emaciated. The early Greek and Latin versions understood the word to mean a type of eye disorder (cp. REB). Though denied the privilege of making the offering to God, priests with such a blemish were permitted to eat the holy food with other priests and Levites.

DWELLING Place where someone lives, in biblical times either a tent (Gen. 25:27), house (2 Sam. 7:2), or the territory in which one lives (Gen. 36:40,43). The OT repeatedly promises that those who keep the covenant will dwell in safety (Lev. 25:18-19; Zech. 2:10-11).

References to the dwelling place of God highlight both the immanence and transcendence of God. References which focus on God's drawing near to speak, listen, and fellowship include the following references to God's dwelling place: in the bush at Sinai (Deut. 33:16); in the tabernacle (Exod. 25:8; 29:45-46; 2 Sam. 7:2); at Shiloh (Ps. 78:60); in the land of Israel (Num. 35:34); in the temple (Pss. 26:8; 43:3; 135:2; Matt. 23:21); on Mount Zion (Pss. 9:11; 20:2; 132:14); and in Jerusalem (Pss. 76:2; 135:21; Ezra 7:15). The OT idea of God's dwelling with His people (Ezek. 37:27) is developed in a variety of ways in the NT.

The Word become flesh dwelt among humankind (John 1:14). The church is the dwelling place of God (Eph. 2:22). Christ dwells in believers' hearts (Eph. 3:17). Believers are the temple of God (1 Cor. 3:16) and their bodies the temple of His Holy Spirit (6:19). The NT closes with an echo of Ezekiel's hope of God's dwelling with His people in Rev. 21:3.

References focusing on the transcendence of God include those in which God is said to dwell in clouds and thick darkness (1 Kings 8:12), in a high and holy place (Isa. 57:15), or in light (1 Tim, 6:16). Though heaven is spoken of as God's dwelling (1 Kings 8:30,39,43,49), even heaven cannot contain God (1 Kings 8:27).

Dwelling is used figuratively for the body. To dwell in a house of clay (Job 4:19) is to possess a mortal body. The heavenly dwelling of 2 Cor. 5:2 is the resurrection body.

DYEING Process of coloring materials. The dying process is not mentioned in Scripture, though dyed material is. Blue, purple, and scarlet thread was used in the making of the tabernacle curtains (Exod. 25:4; 36:8,35,37). Dyed material was an important part of the spoils of war (Judg. 5:30). The work of the guild of linen workers (1 Chron. 4:21) may have included dyeing thread. Solomon requested the King Hiram of Tyre send him someone skilled in dyeing purple, blue, and crimson for the temple curtains (2 Chron. 2:7; 3:14). Job 38:14 as emended by some modern translators (NRSV) speaks of the dawn's "dyeing" the sky (most refer to "clay"). In the NT, Lydia was a seller of purple dyed goods (Acts 16:14).

The dyeing process involved soaking the material to be dyed in vats of dye then drying it. This process was repeated until the dyed material was the desired color. The process was concluded by soaking it in a fixing agent that rendered the cloth colorfast. Blue dye was made from the rind of pomegranates, crimson from grubs or worms that fed on oaks, and purple from the shell of the murex shellfish. Since this shellfish was found only in the vicinity of Acre on the Phoenician coast and since only a small amount of a dye material could be extracted from each shell, this dye was especially valued. Archeological evidence suggests that in Palestine of biblical times thread was dyed rather than whole cloth. See Cloth, Clothing.

DYSENTERY Disease characterized by diarrhea, painful bowel spasms, and ulceration and infection of the bowels resulting in blood and pus in the excreta. Modern speech translations of Acts 28:8 render the "bloody flux" of the KJV as dysentery. Many interpreters also understand the chronic bowel disease which afflicted King Jehoram (2 Chron. 21:15,18-19) as dysentery. The nontechnical language of the account does not permit a precise diagnosis excluding other diseases of the bowels such as chronic diarrhea or colitis. There is some disagreement on the nature of the symptoms given in 2 Chron. 21:15. The REB together with many commentators understand the phrase usually rendered his bowels came out as a reference to a prolapsed bowel, that is, his bowel slipped from its normal position. Others understand the text to refer to excretion of the bowel itself.

The Temple of Luxor, Egypt, at night.

EAGLE The term “eagle” refers to several large birds of prey active in the daytime rather than at night. The Hebrew term translated “eagle” (nesher) also sometimes is translated “vulture.” The eagle, the largest flying bird of Palestine, may reach a wingspread of eight feet or more. The Palestinian eagle builds great nests of sticks on rocky crags in the mountains (Job 39:27-28; Jer. 49:16). As one of the most majestic birds, it occupies a prominent role in the Bible. The eagle appears in the lists of unclean birds (Lev. 11:13; Deut. 14:12). OT writers noted the eagle's swift movement (Deut. 28:49; 2 Sam. 1:23; Jer. 4:13), the sweep and power of its flight (Prov. 23:5; Isa. 40:31), and the eagle's concern for its young (Exod. 19:4; Deut. 32:11).

In the ancient world the eagle or vulture often was associated with deity. The prophets and apocalyptists chose this bird to play a figurative or symbolic role in their writings (Ezek. 1:10; 10:14; Dan. 7:4; Rev. 4:7; 8:13).

In Exod. 19:4 and Deut. 32:11 the eagle is used figuratively of God's protection and care. In these passages God is pictured as a loving parent who redeems and protects His people even as the parent eagle cares for its young.

Janice Meier

EAR Physical organ of hearing. In the OT “ears” are involved in several rites. The right ear of a priest was consecrated with blood (Exod. 29:20; Lev. 8:24). The right ear of a leper was also sprinkled with blood and oil as part of being cleansed (Lev. 14:14,17). If a slave volunteered to serve a master for life, the slave's ear was pierced with an awl into the master's doorpost (Exod. 21:6; Deut. 15:17).

The ears appear in a variety of expressions in both Testaments. To speak to someone's ears was to speak to them or to speak in their hearing (Gen. 44:18; 50:4). To incline the ear was to listen (2 Kings 19:16) or even to obey (Jer. 11:8). To give ear was to pay careful attention (Job 32:11). To turn the ears toward wisdom (Prov. 2:2) was to desire understanding. Dull, heavy, closed, or uncircumcised ears expressed inattentiveness and disobedience (Isa. 6:10; Jer. 6:10; Acts 7:51). To stop the ears was to refuse to listen (Acts 7:57). Open ears were obedient, hearing ears. Open ears are a gift of God (Ps. 40:6) who sometimes uses adversity to open deaf ears (Job 36:15). To awake the ears was to make someone teachable (Isa. 50:4). To uncover or open the ear was to reveal something (Isa. 50:5). To let words sink into one's ears was to understand thoroughly (Luke 9:44). Sometimes the functions of the mind were attributed to the ear. Thus the ear exercised judgment (Job 12:11) and understanding (13:1).

EARLY RAIN See Rain.

EARNEST Sincerity and intensity of purpose or a deposit paid to secure a purchase. “Earnest” does not relate directly to any Hebrew or Greek word, but represents the attempts of translators to relay the sense of several grammatical constructions and words. For instance, KJV uses “earnest” or “earnestly” 24 different times as the translation of 13 different words, phrases, or constructions in the original languages. Some expressions have important theological significance. The fallen creation waits earnestly for redemption (Rom. 8:19). The Corinthians' earnest desire for Paul's welfare comforted him (2 Cor. 7:7). Believers should give earnest heed to Christian teachings (Heb. 2:1). In the agony of the cross Christ prayed earnestly (Luke 22:44). Paul urged the Corinthians to “earnestly desire the greater (spiritual) gifts” (1 Cor. 12:31 NASB). Christians earnestly await the new resurrection body (2 Cor. 5:2). Meanwhile, they earnestly contend for the faith (Jude 3).

The Greek arrabon is a first payment on a purchase that obligates the purchaser to make further payments. A payment made in advance, it secures legal claim to an article or validates a sales contract before the full price is paid. The concept is a Semitic one with the word being adopted into Greek. The related Hebrew term appears in Gen. 38:17, where Judah promised to send Tamar a young goat and she asked for a pledge to hold until she received the promised animal. God has given believers the Holy Spirit in their hearts as an earnest or pledge of the salvation to come (2 Cor. 1:22; 5:5; Eph. 1:14). Daily relationship with the Spirit brings total confidence that God will complete His plan and the believer will share His gift of eternal life.

EARRINGS See Jewels, Jewelry.

EARS OF GRAIN Fruit-bearing spike of a cereal such as maize that included both seed and protective structures. American corn was unknown in the ancient Near East. It is more proper to speak of the common grains of that area, namely, wheat and barley, as having heads. The law permitted passersby to handpick heads of grain from a neighbor's field (Deut. 23:25).

EARTH, LAND Various terms are translated as “earth” or “land” in the OT. The primary term erets is often distinguished from the other major term adamah by denoting a geographical or political territory (Gen. 11:28, “the land of his birth”; Gen. 13:10, “the land of Egypt”; Gen. 36:43 “the land of their own possession”), while both terms may denote the ground's surface, the soil that supports vegetation and all life (Gen. 1:11-12, erets; Deut. 26:2, adamah; Gen. 2:5-6, both). When not clearly specified by a modifier, it is often difficult to decide whether erets refers to the whole earth or just a part of it. However, adamah usually does not refer to the whole earth (but see for example Gen. 12:3 and 28:14, “all the families of the earth [adamah]” NASB). Other related terms include yabbashah (Gen. 1:10: “God called the dry land [yabbashah] earth” [erets]), sadeh (“field,” Gen. 2:5), and migrash (“pastureland,” Lev. 25:34). In the Septuagint and NT, ge is the usual equivalent of erets, with oikoumene occasionally rendered “inhabited earth.” Of the various senses associated with earth and land, the earth and the land of Israel stand out most prominently in biblical theology.

The earth is intimately linked with both God and humanity. The phrase “heaven and earth” refers to the totality of the created order (Gen. 1:1; 2:4). As Creator, Yahweh is the universal God, Sovereign, and Owner of heaven and earth (Gen. 14:19; 24:3; Exod. 9:14-16,29; 19:5; Deut. 4:39; Josh. 3:11; Ps. 24:1; Isa. 48:13). He is also Judge of the whole earth (Gen. 18:25; 1 Sam. 2:10; Isa. 24) and its Sustainer (Ps. 104:10-21, 27-30). At the same time, God transcends His creation (Isa. 40:12,22; 66:1-2; cp. 1 Kings 8:27; 2 Chron. 2:6).

The earth is humankind's God-given dwelling (Gen. 1:28-29; 9:1-3; Ps. 115:16). Man [adam] was formed out of the dust of the ground (adamah; Gen. 2:7) to serve ('bd) and keep (shmr) it (Gen. 2:15), and thus the destiny of humankind and the earth are bound together. The ground (adamah) was cursed on account of Adam and Eve's rebellion (Gen. 3:17-19). When the earth became corrupt in the sight of God because of the wickedness of humankind, God sent a flood to destroy the earth (Gen. 6; 9:11; cp. Isa. 24:5-6). At the revelation of the sons of God (the redemption of our bodies at the final resurrection), creation will also be freed from the bondage of corruption (Rom. 8:19-23), and there will be a “new heavens and a new earth” (Isa. 65:17; 2 Pet. 3:13; Rev. 21:1).

With the Abrahamic covenant God narrowed the focal point of His redemptive mission (the Noahic covenant confirmed a virtual new creation—Gen. 8:17; 9:7—but did not stop human rebellion, epitomized at Babel). Nevertheless, the promise of a specific land, Canaan, to Abraham and his descendants (Gen. 12:7; 13:15,17; 15:7; 17:8; 26:3-4; 35:12; 48:4; 50:24) is accompanied by the promise of blessing to “all the families of the earth” (Gen. 12:3; 28:14; “all the nations of the earth” in 22:18 and 26:4). Israel was to obey Yahweh in its land the way humankind should on the earth but failed to do. The good land was given to Israel as a possession (Deut. 9:6), providing abundance (“land flowing with milk and honey,” e.g., Exod. 3:8; Num. 13:27; cp. Deut. 8:7-9; 11:10-12) and rest from wandering (Josh. 1:13; cp. Deut. 12:9).

In the history of Israel, blessings and curses on the land reflected Israel's obedience to or rebellion against Yahweh in the land. The prophets employed imagery of the land mourning as a result of people's evil deeds (Hos. 4:1-3; Jer. 12:4; 23:10; Amos 1:2). Israel was warned that the land would vomit them out the way it had vomited out the Canaanites if they followed the Canaanites in their wickedness (Lev. 18:25-28). The covenant curses, which culminated in removal from the land and scattering among the nations for their disobedience (Lev. 26:32-39; Deut. 28:63-65), came first upon the Northern Kingdom (2 Kings 17:6-23; Amos 7:11) and then the Southern Kingdom of Judah (2 Kings 23:26-27; Jer. 7:15). Nevertheless, Yahweh promised a restoration to the land (e.g., Isa. 14:1; 27:12-13; Jer.

16:15; 23:8; Ezek. 28:25; Amos 9:15; Zeph. 3:10), which partially occurred under Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah.

In the NT proclamation is focused on the kingdom of God and Jesus Christ as its embodiment (references to the promised land are rare: e.g., Acts 7:3-7; 13:17-19; Heb. 11:9). Some argue that land is not a NT concern. More likely, the symbol of land is universalized in light of Christ. Abraham and his descendants will inherit the world (Rom. 4:13; cp. Matt. 5:5 where “the earth” is apparently parallel with “the kingdom of heaven,” Matt. 5:3,10 and 25:34,46 where the inherited kingdom is the context for entrance into eternal life). Using the pattern of an exodus followed by possession of the land, the Father “who has enabled you to share in the saints' inheritance in the light. He has rescued us from the dominion of darkness and transferred us into the kingdom of the Son He loves” (Col. 1:12-13 HCSB; cp. 1 Pet. 1:3-5). Abraham and other OT believers were seeking after and longing for a better homeland, a heavenly one (Heb. 11:13-16). The redemption of God's people will include the redemption of all creation as their inheritance (Rom. 8:14-25). In the meantime, God's people are to respond with careful obedience to God's grace, so as to enter into God's rest (Heb. 4:1-11).

Will the Jews enjoy a restoration to their land, perhaps in a future millennium? One's answer depends in part on one's interpretation of OT prophecy and stance on eschatology (for example, whether Rev. 20 refers to a future literal millennium and whether the OT prophecies will be fulfilled in a more literal fashion for the Jews then). The NT's emphasis, however, is on the inauguration of the kingdom of God at Christ's first coming and its consummation when Christ returns. In the new heaven and new earth, where God dwells in harmony with His people, God's creation and redemption of humankind and the earth and His promise of land and His people's entrance into blessing, rest, and eternal life will reach their final goal (Rev. 21-22).

Randall K. J. Tan

EARTHQUAKE Shaking or trembling of the earth due to volcanic activity or, more often, the shifting of the earth's crust. Severe earthquakes produce such side effects as loud rumblings (Ezek. 3:12-13 RSV), openings in the earth's crust (Num. 16:32) and fires (Rev. 8:5). Palestine has two to three major quakes per century and two to six minor shocks per year. The major quake centers in Palestine are Upper Galilee, near the biblical town of Shechem (Nablus) and near Lydda on the western edge of the Judean mountains. Secondary quake centers are located in the Jordan Valley at Jericho and Tiberias.

The Bible mentions an earthquake during the reign of Uzziah (Amos 1:1; Zech. 14:5). The oracles of Amos are dated two years before this earthquake. The precise year of this quake has not been settled to everyone's satisfaction. Most would view the period between 767 and 742 B.C. as the likely dates for the earthquake.

Many times God's judgment or visitation is described using the imagery of an earthquake (Ps. 18:7; Isa. 29:6; Nah. 1:5; Rev. 6:12; 8:5; 11:13; 16:18) and is often seen as a sign of the end of time (Matt. 24:7,29). Many times an earthquake is a sign of God's presence or of God's revelation of Himself (1 Kings 19:11-12; Ps. 29:8; Ezek. 38:19-20; Joel 2:10; 3:16; Acts 4:31; Rev. 11:19). At times the whole universe is described as being shaken by God (Isa. 13:13; 24:17-20; Joel 3:16; Hag. 2:6-7; Matt. 24:29; Heb. 12:26-27; Rev. 6:12; 8:5).

Even though earthquakes were usually seen as things to escape (Isa. 2:19,21), they could be used by God for good purposes (Acts 16:26). The earth quaked in revulsion at the death of Jesus (Matt. 27:51-54), and the earth quaked to move the stone from Jesus' tomb (Matt. 28:2). Those who love God and are faithful to Him have no need to fear the trembling of the earth (Ps. 46:2-3).

Phil Logan

EAST See Directions.

EAST COUNTRY Designation for territories lying in the direction of the rising sun. At Gen. 25:6 the reference signifies desert lands more than direction. At 1 Kings 4:30 the wisdom of the East, either of Mesopotamia or of the desert dwelling Arabs, together with the wisdom of Egypt signifies all wisdom. The East Country of Ezek. 47:8 lies in the direction of the Dead Sea. The East Country and West Country of Zech. 8:7 refer to the whole world.

EAST GATE This designation refers to three different gates. 1. KJV refers to the East Gate of Jerusalem as leading to the Hinnom Valley (Jer. 19:2). This valley lies to the south of the city rather than the east. Modern speech translations render this phrase “Potsherd Gate.” This gate may be identified with the Valley Gate (2 Chron. 26:9; Neh. 2:13,15; 3:13) or perhaps to the Refuse or Dung Gate (Neh. 2:13; 3:13-14; 12:31) located 1,000 cubits away. 2. The East Gate of the outer court of the temple. Since the temple faced east, this gate was the main entrance to the temple complex (Ezek. 47:1). Levites in charge of the East Gate of Solomon's temple had responsibility for the free-will offerings (2 Chron. 31:14). In a vision Ezekiel saw the glory of the Lord depart through the East Gate before the destruction of the city (Ezek. 10:19). His vision of the new temple included the return of God's glory through the same gate (Ezek. 43:1-2). God's use of this gate rendered it holy. It was to remain closed. Only the prince (messianic king) was allowed to enter it (Ezek. 44:1-3). 3. The East Gate of the inner court of the temple. This gate was closed on the six working days but open on the Sabbath (Ezek. 46:1).

EAST SEA Ezekiel's expression for the Dead Sea (Ezek. 47:18). See Dead Sea.

EAST WIND See Wind.

EASTER The special celebration of the resurrection at Easter is the oldest Christian festival, except for the weekly Sunday celebration. Although the exact date was in dispute and the specific observances of the festival developed over the centuries, it is clear that Easter had special significance to the early generations of Christians. Since Christ's passion and resurrection occurred at the time of the Jewish Passover, the first Jewish Christians probably transformed their Passover observance into a celebration of the central events of their new faith. In the early centuries the annual observance was called the pascha, the Greek word for Passover, and focused on Christ as the paschal Lamb.

Although the NT does not give any account of a special observance of Easter and evidence from before A.D. 200 is scarce, the celebrations were probably well established in most churches by A.D. 100. The earliest observance probably consisted of a vigil beginning on Saturday evening and ending on Sunday morning and included remembrance of Christ's crucifixion as well as the resurrection. Evidence from shortly after A.D. 200 shows that the climax of the vigil was the baptism of new Christians and the celebration of the Lord's Supper. By about A.D. 300 most churches divided the original observance, devoting Good Friday to the crucifixion and Easter Sunday to the resurrection. See Church Year. Fred A. Grissom

EATING See Cooking; Food.

EBAL [E' bal] Personal name and place-name possibly meaning "bare." 1. Grandson of Seir and son of clan leader Shobal among the Horite descendants living in Edom (Gen. 36:23). 2. Son of Joktan in line of Shem (1 Chron. 1:22). He is called Obal in Gen. 10:28 through a scribal copying change. 3. Mountain near Shechem on which Moses set up the curse for the covenant ceremony (Deut. 11:29; 27:13). An altar was also on Ebal (Deut. 27:4-5). Ebal rises 3,100 feet with its stark rock, bare of vegetation, giving the appearance of curse. On the north of Shechem, it stands opposed to the fruitful Mount Gerizim, the mount of blessing to the south. Joshua carried out the covenant ceremony on Ebal and Gerizim (Josh. 8:30-35), building an altar on Ebal. Later the Samaritans built their temple on Mount Ebal (cp. John 4:20). See Gerizim and Ebal.

EBED [E' bed] Personal name meaning "servant." 1. Father of Gaal, who led revolt in Shechem against Abimelech (Judg. 9:26-40). See Abimelech; Gaal. 2. Clan leader who returned from exile under Ezra (Ezra 8:6).

EBED-MELECH [E bēd-mē' lēk] Personal name meaning “servant of the king.” An Ethiopian eunuch in the service of King Zedekiah of Judah (Jer. 38:7). When Jeremiah was imprisoned in a cistern used as a dungeon, Ebed-melech was responsible for the prophet's rescue. As a result of his faith in the Lord, he received the promise recorded in Jer. 39:15-18.

EBENEZER [E b ēn ē' zēr] Place-name meaning “stone of help.” The name of a site near Aphek where the Israelites camped before they fought in battle against the Philistines (1 Sam. 4:1). During the second of two engagements in the area, the Philistines captured the ark of the covenant. Later, after the recovery of the ark and a decisive Israelite victory over the Philistines, Samuel erected a monument to which he gave the name Eben-ezer.

EBER [E' bēr] Personal name meaning “the opposite side.” 1. The ancestor of Abraham and the Hebrew people, and a descendant of Shem (Gen. 10:21-25; 11:14-17). Numbers 24:24 apparently refers to him as the original ancestor of a people associated with the Assyrians and threatened by Balaam with destruction by Kittim. Precisely who was meant at this point is not known. 2. A member of the tribe of Gad, called Heber by KJV (1 Chron. 5:13). The name entered Israel's record about 750 B.C. (V. 17). 3. Clan leader in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:12). 4. Another clan leader of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:22). 5. Head of priestly family of Amok (Neh. 12:20) in days of Jehoiakim (609-597 B.C.).

EBEZ [E' bēz] Spelling of Abez in modern translations. See Abez.

EBIASAPH [ə bi' 4 sāph] Personal name meaning “my father has collected or taken in.” A Levite descended from Kohath (1 Chron. 6:23). The same person may be mentioned in verse 37, but the precise relationship of these family lists is uncertain with one or both possibly incomplete. He and his family kept the gate of the tabernacle (1 Chron. 9:19). The Abiasaph of Exod. 6:24 is apparently the same person. See Abiasaph.

EBLA [E b' la] Major ancient site located in Syria about 40 miles south of Aleppo. Covering about 140 acres, the mound is known today as Tell Mardikh. Excavations have been conducted since 1964 by an Italian team headed by P. Matthiae. The discovery of over 17,000 clay tablets in the mid-1970s revealed a major Syrian civilization in the mid-third millennium and brought the site worldwide prominence by the late 1970s.

Though few of these tablets are published yet, they appear to date from about 2500 B.C. Most were discovered in the two rooms of Palace G in fallen debris, but in a way that allowed for reconstructing the original shelving. They are written in a cuneiform script similar to that used in Mesopotamia. Sumerian was used on a limited scale as well as a new language that has come to be called Eblaite. The later language was correctly assumed to be Semitic so that decipherment was almost immediate. Nevertheless, the complexity of reading the cuneiform signs has created significantly different readings, with attending controversies. At least four categories of texts are known: (1) administrative texts relating to the palace make up the majority (about 80%), (2) lexical texts for the scribes, (3) literary and religious texts, including accounts of creation and a flood, and (4) letters and decrees.

Many early attempts to draw connections between Ebla and the Bible have not proven to be convincing. The term Ebla never occurs in the Bible, and no biblical personalities or events have yet been identified in the Ebla tablets. Some biblical personal names such as Ishmael have been attested at Ebla; but since they can be attested elsewhere in the ancient Near East, this has no special significance. Claims that the Ebla tablets mention biblical cities such as Sodom, Gomorrah, Jerusalem, and Hazor have not been substantiated. Efforts to identify the Israelite God Yahweh with the -ya elements of Eblaite personal names have not been compelling because these -ya elements can frequently occur in both Semitic and non-Semitic languages.

On the other hand, valuable general information can be gleaned from Ebla for the study of the Bible. Ebla was a major religious center, and over 500 gods are mentioned in the texts. The chief god was Dagon, a vegetation deity associated in the Bible with the Philistines (1 Sam. 5:2). Other gods include Baal, the Canaanite god of fertility, and Kamish (the biblical Chemosh), god of the Moabites (Judg. 11:24). In addition, there is reference to “the god of my father” (cp. Gen. 43:23). Some similarities between prophets at Ebla and Mari can be drawn with Israelite prophets, especially their call by the deity and their role as messengers of the deity to the people.

Actually, contacts between Ebla and the Bible are by necessity limited for three reasons: (1) The illumination of the Bible using other ancient Near Eastern civilizations is usually general cultural background rather than specific and direct connection. (2) A more specific limitation in this case is that the Elba tablets are generally too early to have specific bearing on the OT. (3) Finally, the study of Ebla is in its infancy with very few texts already published. As more texts are published, we can expect additional information to illuminate not only the Bible but the rest of the ancient Near East as well.

James C. Moyer

EBONY See Plants.

EBRON [ĕ' brŏn] City in territory of Asher (Josh. 19:28), spelled Hebron in KJV. Several manuscripts in Josh. 19:28 plus the lists in Josh. 21:30; 1 Chron. 6:74 have Abdon. See Abdon.

EBRONAH [ə brŏ' nāh] (KJV) See Abronaah.

ECBATANA [ĕc' bā tā nā] Modern translation spelling of Achmetha. See Achmetha.

ECCLESIASTES, BOOK OF The English title, Ecclesiastes, was derived from the Greek Septuagint's translation of the Hebrew, Qohelet (1:1-2,12; 7:27; 12:8-10). Both Qohelet and Ecclesiastes denote one who presides over an assembly, that is, a preacher or teacher.

Authorship and Date Traditionally Solomon has been identified as the author of Ecclesiastes, but in modern times many, including a large number of conservative scholars, have followed Martin Luther's lead in assigning the book to the postexilic period (usually between ca. 300-200 B.C.). Scholars who espouse the latter view generally consider the book to be a unified composition of one author while recognizing some editorial work, particularly in the prologue and epilogue.

Those who accept the late date point out that the name of Solomon is nowhere expressly mentioned as the author. More serious is the charge that Aramaisms, two apparently Persian words, parallels to Mishnaic Hebrew, and other signs of late Hebrew demand a postexilic date. Sometimes it is also alleged that the author shows evidence of dependence on Greek thought and that the book reflects late theology.

In defense of the traditional view, the following evidence has been cited. (1) Both Christian and Jewish tradition (e.g., Talmud) named Solomon as the author. (2) While the text does not state specifically that Solomon wrote the book, in 1:1 the author identifies himself as the “son of David, king in Jerusalem,” and in 1:12 he adds that he was “king over Israel in Jerusalem.” Only one son of David, Solomon, ruled over the United Kingdom of Israel (excepting Rehoboam whose brief reign over the 12 tribes and weak character would hardly satisfy the requirements of the text). References in the book to the author's unrivaled wisdom (1:16), opportunities for pleasure (2:3), extensive building programs (2:4-6), and unequaled wealth (2:7-8) all point to Solomon. Like Solomon the writer also penned many proverbs (12:9). Those who deny Solomonic authorship generally respond that Solomon is merely the central character of the book or that the writer is putting his words into Solomon's mouth. (3) Many recent examinations of the language of Ecclesiastes have also supported a pre-exilic date of composition. The amount of Aramaic influence in the book has been greatly exaggerated. For example, a recent study concludes that there are only seven terms of Aramaic origin in the book, four of which are attested elsewhere in early biblical Hebrew. Concerning the Persian words, one is questionable (pardes) and the other (pitgam) may have entered the Hebrew language early. Various other studies have indicated no grounds for asserting Mishnaic Hebrew influence and have suggested that supposed late linguistic forms are actually early Canaanite-Phoenician in nature. (4) Evidence for dependence on Greek thought is lacking as the vast majority of scholars recognize. Moreover, if Ecclesiastes was written in the third century B.C.—the heart of the Greek Empire—we would expect significant Greek influence on the language of the book. (5) Late theology is not demonstrable. (6) Numerous affinities exist between Proverbs and Ecclesiastes.

Whether the author was Solomon or another, based on the many admonitions in the book that reflect the experiences of the elderly, we may assume that he was an old man who felt death was imminent.

Canon Ecclesiastes was included in the Septuagint (third century B.C.), and Ben Sira (Ecclesiasticus) knew and used the book (ca. 190 to 180 B.C.). Qumran fragments of Ecclesiastes confirm its canonical status in the mid-second century B.C. While no quotations exist, passages in the NT seem to refer to Ecclesiastes (e.g., Rom. 8:20; James 4:14). Josephus and early Christian writers like Melito of Sardis, Epiphanius, Origen, and Jerome allude to the book.

In the English Bible, Ecclesiastes is placed with the books of poetry following the order in the Greek Septuagint. Yet in the Hebrew Bible it is included in the Hagiographa or Writings, specifically the section of the Hagiographa referred to as the Megilloth. Five scrolls are included there—Ruth, Song of Songs, Ecclesiastes, Lamentations, and Esther. These books are diverse in content but have one thing in common. They were each read publicly at one of the great annual Jewish festivals: the book of Ruth at the Feast of Weeks (Pentecost), the Song of Songs at the Passover festival, Ecclesiastes at the Feast of Tabernacles, Lamentations at the commemoration of the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 B.C. (the ninth of Ab), and the book of Esther at the Purim festival. Doubtless Ecclesiastes was read at the Feast of Tabernacles, probably Israel's most joyous feast, because of the book's many exhortations to enjoy the life that God has given (2:24-25; 3:13; 5:18-20; 8:15; 9:9).

Text The text of Ecclesiastes is well preserved, and disputed passages are rare. Three manuscripts of Ecclesiastes (dating to the second century B.C.) were recovered at Qumran. These contain part of 5:13-17, substantial portions of 6:3-8, and five words from 7:7-9. Besides orthographic (spelling) differences, variants from the Masoretic Text are few and insignificant.

Type of Literature Ecclesiastes, Job, and Proverbs are generally classified as the OT wisdom books. Proverbs deals with practical (didactic) wisdom, but Ecclesiastes and Job are more philosophical in nature. Job tackles the problem of why the righteous suffer, while Ecclesiastes examines the question of the meaning of life. Much of Ecclesiastes was written in poetical form as may be readily observed from a modern translation of the Bible. Hebrew poetry is characterized by parallelism—primarily synonymous or repetition, (1:9a,18; 3:1), synthetic or development of a thought (1:3; 2:13), and antithetic or contrast (1:4; 7:26b; 10:12).

Theme Probably no biblical book is so dominated by one leading theme as is Ecclesiastes. In 1:2 the author declares that “everything is meaningless” (NIV) or better, “vanity” (KJV, NRSV, NASB, NKJV, ASV). The Hebrew word translated “meaningless” or “vanity” is hebel (literally, “breath”), the key word in the book. Here it occurs 38 times, roughly half of its appearances in the OT. In Ecclesiastes hebel primarily seems to denote items (approximately two dozen) that are fleeting as breath (6:12; 7:15; 9:9; 11:10), senseless (4:7-8; 5:7, 10; 7:6), or like breath have no substance or lasting value (2:1,11). At first glance the declaration that “all is vanity” (1:2) seems negative, but the phrase in the following verse (1:3), “under the sun” (only in Ecclesiastes in the Bible, 29 times), clarifies the author's perspective. The meaning is that earthly existence is brief and mere worldly accomplishments are of no eternal worth. The author developed this theme using what may be labeled the “quest motif.” His search covered all the main areas of human existence: the city, fields, gardens, the temple, a house, a bedroom, courts of justice, seats of power, and even warfare. He examined wealth, power, religion, relationships, work, and play.

Interpretation Of all the books in the Bible, Ecclesiastes is usually considered to be the most problematic. The work has been called pessimistic, shocking, unorthodox, and even heretical. For example, certain statements in the book have been interpreted to deny life after death (3:18-21; 9:5-6,10). Yet, when these passages are considered in light of the overall theme of the book, it becomes clear that the author is not denying the existence of the human spirit after death but is stating an obvious fact: at death earthly life (life “under the sun”) with its joys, sorrows, and opportunities is over. In 12:7 the author explicitly declares that the body “returns to the ground it came from, and the spirit returns to God who gave it” (NIV).

The author of Ecclesiastes has been deemed a pessimist, or even an existentialist. Others have argued he was an apologist who defended faith in God by pointing to the grimness of life without God. However, it may be best to regard the author as a realist. He observed that all persons (both good and bad) experience injustice, grow old, die, and are forgotten. The lives of all human beings are brief. Earthly possessions and mere worldly endeavors are temporary and have no eternal value for believers or nonbelievers. Only what is done for God will endure. Therefore, human beings should live in light of eternity realizing that someday they will give an account to God (12:13-14).

Outline

- I. The author identifies himself and announces the theme of the book (1:1-3).
- II. The Teacher sets forth observations concerning life under the sun on various topics (1:4-12:7).
 - A. The vanities of earthly life, earthly wisdom, pleasure, worldly success, earthly wisdom, and earthly work, as well as the first exhortation to enjoy life (1:4-2:26)
 - B. A proper time for all of life's activities, observations concerning the worker, time and eternity, a second exhortation to enjoy life, God's works and actions, and a third exhortation to enjoy life (3:1-22)
 - C. Various evils of life (4:1-6:6)
 - D. Miscellaneous observations on various subjects with a fifth and sixth exhortation to enjoy life (6:7-11:6)
 - E. Living in light of the reality of death (11:7-12:7)

III. The author restates the theme, emphasizes the truth and purpose of his instruction, and presents the grand conclusion of the book: “Fear God and keep his commandments” (12:8-14).

Stephen R. Miller

ECONOMIC LIFE In ancient Palestine economic life involved the simple desire to improve the condition of life and to expand contact with other people. The people's success in doing this was determined to a large extent by the environmental conditions in which they lived. Adequate rainfall or water sources, arable farm and grazing lands, and the availability of natural resources were the most important of these ecological factors. Once the nation was formed and the monarchy established, the demands of the local and international markets, government stability, and the effects of international politics also came into play. Throughout their history, however, the economic life of the people of Israel was at least in part governed by the laws of God that concerned the treatment of fellow Israelites in matters of business and charity.

Like most of the rest of the Near East, the economy of ancient Palestine was primarily agricultural. However, unlike the major civilizations of Mesopotamia and Egypt, Israel's economy was not as completely dominated by the concerns of palace or temple as they were in other nations. For instance, there was no state monopoly on the ownership of arable land. Private ownership of land and private enterprise were the rule during the early history of the tribes of Israel. This changed somewhat after the establishment of the monarchy when large estates were formed (2 Sam. 9:10) to support the kings and the nobility. Attempts were also made by the royal bureaucracy to control as much of the country's land and economic activity as possible (1 Kings 4:1-19).

Further changes took place after the conquest of the nation by Assyria and Babylon. From that point on, the economic efforts (farm production, industry, and trade) of the nation were largely controlled by the tribute demands of the dominant empires (2 Kings 18:14-16) and the maintenance of international trade routes. This pattern continued into the NT period when Roman roads speeded trade but also held the populace in submission. The economy, while relatively stable, was burdened with heavy taxes (Matt. 22:17-21) to support the occupation army and government.

Environmental Conditions Many aspects of the economic life of the people were determined by the environmental conditions in which they lived. Palestine has a remarkably varied geographic pattern and huge shifts in climate. Within its environs are steppe and desert to the south and east in the Negev and the corresponding areas of the Transjordan. In these areas only dry or irrigation farming is possible, and much of the land is given over to pastoralists guiding their flocks and herds. A desolate wilderness region lies near the Dead Sea, while well-watered farmlands are found in the Shephelah plateau (between the coastal plain and the hill country) and in the Galilee area of northern Palestine. Rolling hill country dominates the center of the country where agriculture must be practiced on terraced hillsides and where water conservation and irrigation are necessary to grow crops.

The semitropical climate of Palestine includes a hot, dry summer and autumn during which no rains fall for six months. The drought is broken in September or October with rains continuing throughout the winter and into March and April. Yearly amounts of rainfall, which may all come in torrents within a few days, average 40 inches a year in the north and in the western areas of the hill country and Shephelah. Under the influence of the desert winds and the barrier of the hill country, these amounts decrease to the south and east, with less than eight inches a year in the desert regions of the Judean wilderness and the Negev. Average temperatures also vary widely, again with the highlands and northern coastal strip remaining cooler while the desert regions and low-lying areas see temperatures well into the 90 degree range.

Uncertain climatic conditions often determined the economic activity of the local village, the region, and the nation. The fact that Abram's first experience in Palestine was a famine (Gen. 12:10) is not surprising. Drought, which destroyed crops (1 Kings 17:1; Jer. 14:1-6), had a ripple effect on the rest of the economy. Some people left the country for the more predictable climate of Egypt (Gen. 46:1-7) or went to areas in Transjordan unaffected by a famine (Ruth 1:1). Economic hardship brought on by climatic extremes also hurt the business of the local potter, tanner, blacksmith, and weaver.

Local Village Economy Agriculture in ancient Palestine took three basic forms: grain production (barley and wheat), cultivation of vines and fruit trees, and the care of oleaginous plants (olive, date, sesame) from which oil was extracted for cooking, lighting, and personal care uses. Most of the energies of the village population were taken up with plowing fields (1 Kings 19:19) and the construction and maintenance of the hillside terraces where vineyards (Isa. 5:1-6; Mark 12:1) and grain were planted. In the hill country water sources were usually in the valleys, and thus it would have been too much work to carry water up to the hillside terraces. As a result, irrigation channels were dug to ensure that the terraces were evenly watered by rain and dew. Roof catch basins and plastered cisterns were constructed to augment water supplies from the village's wells and springs during the dry summer months.

The ideal situation for every rural Israelite was to spend his days “under his vine and his fig tree” (1 Kings 4:25 NASB). To ensure this possibility for his sons, a man's ownership of land was considered part of a family trust from one generation to the next. Each plot of land was a grant to the household by Yahweh and as such had to be cared for so that it would remain productive. Its abundance was the result of hard work (Prov. 24:30-34) and was to be shared with the poor (Deut. 24:19-21). Yahweh's grant of the land was repaid (Num. 18:21-32) through the payment of tithes to the Levites and through sacrifices.

The family's holdings were duly marked off. It was strictly against the law to remove the boundary stones (Deut. 19:14; Prov. 22:28). Inheritance laws were well defined with every eventuality provided for in the statutes. Normally, the oldest son inherited the largest portion of the lands of his father (Deut. 21:17; Luke 15:31). Sometimes this was all a man had to pass on to his children. It thus became traditional that land not be permanently sold outside the family or clan (Lev. 25:8-17). The tradition was so strong that Naboth could refuse King Ahab's request to purchase his vineyard saying he could not give him “the inheritance of my fathers” (1 Kings 21:3). In later periods, however, the prophets spoke of rich men “who add house to house and join field to field” (Isa. 5:8 NASB), taking advantage of the poor farmer whose land has been devastated by invading armies (Mic. 2:2) or drought.

If a man died without a male heir, his daughters would receive charge of the land (Num. 27:7-8), but they were required to marry within the tribe to ensure it remained a part of the tribal legacy (Num. 36:6-9). A childless man's property passed to his nearest male relative (Num. 27:9-11). The tragedy of childlessness was sometimes resolved through the levirate obligation. In these cases the nearest male relative married the dead man's widow to provide an heir for the deceased (Gen. 38). The duty of the redeemer, or go'el, as the relative was called, also included the purchase of family lands that had been abandoned (Jer. 32:6-9).

Since life was uncertain and disease and war often took many of the village's inhabitants, laws were provided to ensure that the widow, the orphan, and the stranger would not go hungry. Each field owner was required to leave a portion of the grain unharvested and some grapes on the vine (Lev. 19:9-10). This belonged to the poor and the needy who had the right to glean in these fields (Ruth 2:2-9). The land was also protected from exhaustion by the law of the sabbatical year, which required that it be left fallow every seventh year (Lev. 25:3-7).

Despite the backbreaking work of harvesting fields with flint-edged sickles (Joel 3:13), the grain and the fruits meant the survival of the village and was cause for celebration (Judg. 21:19). Following the harvest, the threshing floor became the center of the economic activity of the village and countryside (Joel 2:24). The sheaves of grain from the harvested fields of the district were brought here (Amos 2:13) to be trampled by oxen (Deut. 25:4) and threshing sledges (2 Sam. 24:22; Isa. 41:15). The grain was further separated from the chaff with winnowing forks (Ruth 3:2; Isa. 41:16; Jer. 15:7) and finally with sieves (Amos 9:9; Luke 22:31). Once this process was complete, the grain was guarded (Ruth 3:2-7) until it could be distributed to the people. The village may have had a communal granary, but most kept their grain in home storage pits or private granaries (Matt. 3:12).

Because of the importance this distribution held for the wellbeing of the people, the threshing floor gradually became associated with the administration of justice for the community. This is seen in the Ugaritic epic of Aqhat (dated to about 1400 B.C.) where the hero's father Daniel is said to be judging the cases of widows and orphans at the threshing floor. Similarly, Ruth's coming to Boaz as he lay on the threshing floor after the winnowing (Ruth 3:8-14) may have been an attempt to obtain justice regarding the ownership of her dead husband's estate. In another instance from the monarchy period, it can be seen how the threshing floor evolved into a symbolic place of judgment used by kings to augment their authority. First Kings 22:10 (NASB, NIV) portrays Kings Ahab and Jehoshaphat sitting enthroned before the gates of Samaria on a threshing floor as they judge the statements of the Prophet Micaiah.

Village economies also included the maintenance of small herds of sheep and goats. Nomadic pastoralism, like that described in the patriarchal narratives, was not a part of village life. The flocks were moved to new pastures in the hill country with the coming of the dry summer season, but this would have required only a few herdsmen (1 Sam. 16:11). Only the shearing of the sheep would have involved large numbers of the community (2 Sam. 13:23-24).

What little industry existed in Israelite villages was designed to complement agricultural production and provide both necessities and some trade goods. This activity included the making of bricks and split timbers for house construction, and the weaving of material for clothing. Some households had the skill to shape cooking utensils and farm tools from clay, stone, and metal. Few, however, had the ability to shape their own weapons, relying in many cases on clubs and ox goads (Judg. 3:31) for protection.

In exceptional cases village craftsmen may have set up stalls or business where they provided some of the more specialized items, especially fine pottery, bronze weapons, and gold and silver jewelry. Anything additional could either be done without or obtained in trade with other villages or nations who might possess a particularly fine artisan (1 Sam. 13:20). It is also possible that during a yearly visit to the city (Luke 2:41) to attend a religious festival the villager could visit the stalls of traders from all over the Near East and buy their wares.

Urban Economic Life Local trade expanded beyond the sale of surplus commodities and handcrafted items as the villages and towns grew in size. Population growth, sparked by the establishment of the monarchy and social stability, also increased the needs and appetites for metals (gold, tin, copper, iron), luxury items, and manufactured goods. A network of roads gradually developed to accommodate this economic activity and to tie together the villages and towns throughout the nation. More sophisticated road construction, designed to allow heavy vehicular traffic, was introduced by the kings who marshaled large numbers of corvée workers (persons who worked in lieu of paying taxes) to construct public works projects (1 Kings 9:15-22). Eziongeber, a port on the Red Sea, was acquired from the Edomites and serviced a fleet of ships bringing gold from Ophir and rare woods and other luxury items to the royal court (1 Kings 9:26; 10:11-12). Another fleet joined that of Hiram of Tyre in the Mediterranean trade (1 Kings 10:22).

Within the walled cities and towns, most commercial activity occurred within the gate complex or its environs. This would have been the site of the heaviest traffic in any town and the most likely spot, other than private homes (Jer. 18:2-3), for stalls and shops to be set up for business. Since legal matters were also handled here (Deut. 21:18-19), business contracts could be witnessed (Gen. 23:15-16) and disputes settled (Ruth 4:1-6). Shops may have also been established within the walls of those cities that had hollow-wall (casemate) construction.

Since this was an economy without coined money until about 550 B.C., barter and specified weights (shekel, mina, talent) of precious metals were used as rates of exchange. Prices, as always, were determined by the law of supply and demand (2 Kings 6:25; Rev. 6:6), with an extra markup to cover the costs of transport, and, where applicable, manufacturing. For instance, luxury items such as spices and perfumes from Arabia and ivory and rare animals commanded high prices. They were portable enough to make the venture worthwhile.

Weights and measures also fitted into the sale of commodities in the town marketplace. These weights varied from one district and time period to the next (2 Sam. 14:26; Ezek. 45:10). However, the law required that Israelites provide a fair measure to their customers (Lev. 19:35-36). The fact that the law did not prevent fraud in every case is seen in the prophets' cries against deceitful weights (Mic. 6:11) and false balances (Amos 8:5). Archaeological evidence shows some attempt by the royal administration to standardize shekel weights. Hieratic symbols on these markers demonstrate a reliance on the Egyptian system of weights and measures.

Slave labor was also an outgrowth of the urbanization of Israel and the constant military campaigns of the kings. The large number of military prisoners joined the levies of forced labor gangs (1 Kings 5:13; 9:20-22) building roads and repairing the walls of the fortresses which guarded the kingdom. Royal estates were managed by stewards (1 Chron. 27:25-31) and worked by large bands of state-owned slaves and a levy of free men (1 Sam. 8:12).

It is unlikely that private individuals held as many slaves as the monarchy or the social elite. Since the laws regarding slaves were quite stringent (Exod. 21:1-11,20,26; Lev. 25:39-46), it is more likely that day laborers were hired by most landowners (Matt. 20:1-5). The leasing of land to tenant farmers was another alternative to the labor problem, but this was not common in Israel until the NT period (Matt. 21:33-41; Mark 12:9).

Israelites could sell their families or themselves into slavery to resolve a debt (Exod. 21:7-11; Lev. 25:39; Matt. 18:25). This was regulated by the law so that the normal term of slavery or indenture was no more than six years. Then the slave was to be released and given a portion of the flock and the harvest with which to make a new start (Deut. 15:12-14). Perpetual slavery was only to occur if the Israelite himself chose to remain a slave.

This choice might be made because he did not want to be separated from a wife and children acquired during his term of enslavement (Exod. 21:1-6) or because he did not feel he would have a better life on his own (Deut. 15:16).

Urbanization and the imposed demands of foreign conquerors brought greater complexity to the economic life of the people of Palestine. Travel and trade increased, and the variety of goods and services was magnified by the increased demands of consumers and the influx of new ideas and technologies from outside the country. Agriculture remained the staple of the economy, but it was augmented by the public works projects of the kings and foreign rulers. The increase in commercial and private traffic was facilitated by better highways and means of transport. Slave labor also became more common, but the majority of slaves came from a pool of military prisoners acquired in the wars that solidified and protected the nation's borders. See Agriculture; Commerce; Slave, Servant; Transportation and Travel; Weights and Measures.

Victor H. Matthews

ECZEMA See Diseases; Scurvy.

ED [Ed] Place-name meaning “witness.” Altar that the tribes assigned territory east of the Jordan built as a witness that Yahweh is God of both the eastern and western tribes. The building resulted in a dispute between the two groups of tribes, but Phinehas, the priest, helped settle the dispute, ensuring the altar was a symbol and would not be used for burnt offering (Josh. 22:34). NASB, NIV, NRSV read “witness.”

EDAR [E' dar] (KJV, Gen. 35:21) See Eder.

EDEN [E' den] Garden of God. “Eden” is probably derived from the Sumerian-Akkadian edinu, meaning “flatland” or “wilderness.” The similarity to the Hebrew verb eden, meaning “delight” or “pleasure,” resulted in the Septuagint's translation of the expression “garden of Eden” as “garden of delight,” hence paradise.

“Eden” appears 20 times in the OT but never in the NT. Two usages refer to men (2 Chron. 29:12; 31:15). Twice the name is used to designate a city or region in the Assyrian province of Thelassar (Isa. 37:12; 2 Kings 19:12). Ezekiel 27:23 mentions a region named Eden located on the Euphrates. Amos 1:5 refers to the ruler of Damascus as holding the scepter of the house of Eden.

The 14 remaining appearances relate to the idyllic place of creation. In Genesis (2:8,10,15; 3:23-24; 4:16) the reference is to the region in which a garden was placed. Though details seem precise, identification of the rivers that flow from the river issuing forth from Eden cannot be accomplished with certainty. The Euphrates and the Tigris can be identified, but there is no agreement on the location of the Pishon and the Gihon.

Joel 2:3 compares Judah's condition before its destruction with Eden. In Isa. 51:3 and Ezek. 36:35 Eden is used as an illustration of the great prosperity God would bestow on Judah. These exilic prophets promised that the nation God restored after the exile would be like Eden's garden. Ezekiel also refers to the trees of Eden (31:9,16,18) and calls Eden the garden of God (28:13). See Paradise.

Robert Anderson Street

EDER [E' d̄er] Place and personal name meaning “water puddle” or “herd.” 1. Tower near Bethlehem (Gen. 35:21; cp. v. 19). The exact location is not known. Micah referred to Jerusalem as the “tower of the flock,” the same Hebrew expression as in Genesis (Mic. 4:8). 2. A town in the southern limits of the tribal territory of Judah near Edom (Josh. 15:21). Its location is not known. 3. A Levite of the clan of Merari (1 Chron. 23:23; 24:30). 4. A leader of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:15); KJV spelling is Ader.

EDICT See Decree.

EDIFICATION Literally “building up,” it approximates encouragement and consolation (1 Cor. 14:3; 1 Thess. 5:11), though with edification focus falls on the goal, defined as being established in faith (Col. 2:7) or attaining unity of faith and knowledge, maturity, and the full measure of Christ (Eph.

4:13). Edification is the special responsibility of the various church leaders (Eph. 4:11-12) and is the legitimate context for the exercise of their authority (2 Cor. 10:8; 13:10). The work of building up is, however, the work of all Christians (1 Thess. 5:11). Spiritual gifts are given for the edification of the church. Of these gifts, those which involve speaking are especially important (1 Cor. 14; Eph. 4:29). All elements of Christian worship should contribute to edification (1 Cor. 14:26). Prophecy and instruction are especially important (1 Cor. 14:3,18-19). Edification is not all talk, however, but involves demonstrating love (1 Cor. 8:1) and consideration for those weak in faith (Rom. 15:1-2).

EDOM [E' dōm] Area southeast and southwest of the Dead Sea, on opposite sides of the Arabah, was known as Edom in biblical times and was the home of the Edomites. The name "Edom" derives from a Semitic root that means "red" or "ruddy" and characterizes the red sandstone terrain of much of the area in question. Moreover, the Edomite area was largely "wilderness"—semidesert, not very conducive to agriculture—and many of the inhabitants were semi-nomads. Thus, the boundaries of Edom would have been rather ill defined. Yet not all of Edom was wilderness; the vicinity of present-day Tafileh and Buseireh, east of the Arabah, is fairly well watered, cultivable land, and would have boasted numerous villages during OT times. This would have been the center of Edomite population. Buseireh is situated on the ruins of ancient Bozrah, the capital of Edom. Note that the modern name, "Buseireh," preserves memory of the ancient one, "Bozrah."

The hills of Edom between Petra and Bozrah toward the Wadi Arabah.

Most of the biblical passages pertaining to Edom refer to this Edomite center east of the Arabah. Isaiah 63:1, for example, speaks of one that “comes from Edom, with garments of glowing colors from Bozrah, this One who is majestic in His apparel, marching in the greatness of His strength” (NASB). (See also Jer. 49:22; Amos 1:11-12.) Yet there are other passages that presuppose that the territory west of the Arabah, south of the Judean hill country and separating Judah from the Gulf of Aqaba, was also part of Edom. See especially the description of Judah's boundary in Num. 34:3-4 and Josh. 15:1-3, where Judah's south side is described as extending to “the border of Edom, southward to the wilderness of Zin” (NASB). Certain of the tribal groups that ranged this wilderness area south of Judah are listed in the Edomite genealogy of Gen. 36. In NT times even the southern end of the Judean hill country (south of approximately Hebron) was known officially as Idumea (Edom).

The “land of Seir” seems to be synonymous with Edom in some passages (Gen. 32:3; 36:8; Judg. 5:4). Egyptian texts from about 1300 to 1100 B.C. know of Shasu (apparently seminomadic tribes) from Seir and Edom. “Teman” also is used in apposition to Edom in at least one biblical passage (Amos 1:12) but normally refers to a specific district of Edom and possibly to a town by that name. One of Job's visitors was Eliphaz the Temanite (Job 2:11; cp. Ezek. 25:13).

The Israelites regarded the Edomites as close relatives, even more closely related to them than the Ammonites or Moabites. Specifically, they identified the Ammonites and Moabites as descendants of Lot, Abraham's nephew, but the Edomites as descendants of Esau, Jacob's brother (Gen. 19:30-36; 36). Thus Edom occasionally is referred to as a “brother” to Israel (Amos 1:11-12). Edomites seem not to have been barred from worship in the Jerusalem temple with the same strictness as the Ammonites and Moabites (Deut. 23:3-8). Yet, as is often the case with personal relations, the closest relative can be a bitter enemy. According to the biblical writers, enmity between Israel and Edom began with Jacob and Esau (when the former stole the latter's birthright) and was exacerbated at the time of the Israelite exodus from Egypt (when the Edomites refused the Israelites passage through their land). Be that as it may, much of the conflict also had to do with the fact that Edom was a constant threat to Judah's frontier and moreover blocked Judean access to the Gulf of Aqaba.

Both Saul and David conducted warfare with the Edomites—probably frontier wars fought in the “wilderness” area southwest of the Dead Sea (1 Sam. 14:47-48; 2 Sam. 8:13-14). David achieved a decisive victory in the valley of salt, probably just southwest of Beer-sheba where the ancient name still is preserved in modern Arabic Wadi el-Milk. Apparently this secured Davidic control of the Edomite area west of the Arabah as well as access to the Gulf of Aqaba. Thus we read that Solomon built a fleet of ships at Eziongeber and sent them to distant places for exotic goods. Later Hadad of the royal Edomite line returned from Egypt and became an active adversary to Solomon. This would have involved Edomite attacks on Solomon's caravans that passed through traditionally Edomite territory from Ezion-geber to Jerusalem (1 Kings 11:14-22).

Apparently Judah gained the upper hand against Edom again during the reign of Jehoshaphat. Once again we read of a Judean attempt (unsuccessful this time) to undertake a shipping venture from Ezion-geber (1 Kings 22:47-50). Edom regained independence from Judah under Joram, who succeeded Jehoshaphat to the throne (2 Kings 8:20-22). A later Judean king, Amaziah, is reported to have defeated the Edomites again in the valley of salt and then to have pursued 10,000 survivors to “the top of the cliff” from which they were thrown down and dashed to pieces (2 Chron. 25:11-12).

Conflict between Judah and Edom and efforts on the part of Judean kings to exploit the commercial possibilities of the Gulf of Aqaba continued (2 Kings 14:22; 16:6; 2 Chron. 26:1-2; 28:17) until eventually the Edomites, like the other peoples and petty kingdoms of Syria-Palestine, fell under the shadow of the major eastern empires—the Assyrians, then the Babylonians, finally the Persians and the Greeks. Some scholars hold that the Edomites aided the Babylonians in their attacks on Jerusalem in 597 and 586 B.C. and then took advantage of the Judeans in their helpless situation. This would explain, for example, the bitter verbal attacks on Edom in passages such as Jer. 49:7-22 and the book of Obadiah. Yet there is no clear evidence to support this view.

The mountainous landscape of the land of Edom.

By NT times a people of Arabic origin known as the Nabateans had established a commercial empire with its center in the former Edomite territory east of the Arabah. Their chief city was Petra, and the whole region southeast of the Dead Sea had come to be known as Nabatea. Only the former Edomite territory west of the Arabah was still known as Idumea (Edom). Herod the Great was of Idumean ancestry. See Bozrah; Esau; Nabateans; Petra; Sela; Transjordan.

EDOMITES See Edom.

EDREI [Ed' rə i] Place-name of unknown meaning. 1. Royal city of Og, king of Bashan (Josh. 12:4). Invading Israel defeated Og there (Num. 21:33-35). It is also known from Egyptian records. Its location is modern Dera, halfway between Damascus and Amman. The clan of Machir in the tribe of Manasseh laid claim to the city (Josh. 13:31). 2. Fortified city in the tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:37).

EDUCATION IN BIBLE TIMES Most teaching and learning in the biblical periods consisted of informal training and concentrated on the goal of passing along an approach to life centered on guidance for a moral and religious lifestyle. Formal education was restricted to the elites of society (the rulers and their immediate workers) throughout most of the biblical period. Literacy in the sense of reading and writing was normally linked to the ruling classes and their helpers due to the requirement for a more formal setting for such training. On the other hand, the gradual acceptance of the OT as canon brought a greater need and reason for teaching, at least, an ability to read to a larger segment of the population, with the synagogues serving as settings for such training (likely during the time of the exile). In general, however, the lower classes did not need literacy to fulfill their everyday obligations or had no free time for the required training in what would have been an unnecessary luxury among life's primary demands. Due to this, informal learning is the major form of education referenced in the biblical text, with home and community settings serving as the vehicles for such training.

Informal and Semiformal Learning Three major types of learning are mentioned in the Bible with different emphases in each setting. The first and most common setting was the home in which moral instruction, cultural patterns, historical events, and spiritual guidance were taught by parents to children on an informal level with extended family involved in the task many times as well. A prime example of this setting is found in Deut. 6 (which includes the “Shema”) where parents are commanded to recite the commandments of God to their children and discuss them throughout the day. The normal discipleship of children by their parents is engaged as the vehicle of choice for passing along the religious heritage of the group. Of course virtually all aspects of daily life were taught in the home, but ideally even these should have had a religious tone in the instruction since all of life was religious in nature. What is specific in the OT is that a conscious effort is demanded in this endeavor with the content delineated in its broad contours from the religious standpoint. Other examples of household education include instruction in holiness codes (laws about what was clean and unclean, dietary laws, and Sabbath rules), teachings about the importance of such historical events as the Passover, and the passing along of work skills through apprenticeship in the father's trade.

A second type of learning related especially to the needs of the political elites for helpers such as scribes in keeping government records and promoting their image in the public domain. These needs are reflected in the tax lists and conquest records found in several archaeological finds from the region in the OT period. Sumerian remains on clay tablets attest to this type of record keeping among them as well as among the Babylonians and Assyrians, with increased use of scribal recording of materials during the first millennium before Christ, as seen in the literary advances of this time period in both the Hebrew culture and the surrounding cultures. The training requirement for such scribal work was quite complicated, and only a small segment of the society outside of the elites (upper class) achieved a high level of literacy training. This semiformal structured educational training was directly related to literacy and did not necessarily involve learning in other areas of study (in fact, such instruction was not likely a part of the training of scribes) unless the retainers (helpers of the elites) were being trained to teach the children of the elites in a formal education setting.

In the OT context Ezra is the prime example of a religious emphasis on scribal training and activity. Ezra marks a turning point as a class of religious scribes emerges in order to copy the sacred texts and to read them to the people. Members of this scribal group often became interpreters of the text during the intertestamental and NT time periods.

The emergence of the synagogue gatherings provided further settings for offering training in at least minimal levels of reading literacy as required for reading the sacred text in the synagogue services. Also, spiritual instruction and moral guidance were taught to children through the synagogue organization during the week. For the NT period this is the likely source for any educational training outside of the home that Jesus and His disciples would have had.

Formal Learning A third setting for learning in the biblical time period involved the education of elites themselves, those in the upper stratum of society. In these settings a more formal education system existed that included training by others outside of the family unit who were hired for that purpose (or slaves were used). While records of this type of training in the OT time period are limited, a general picture includes royal courts and wealthy urban elites with at least some collections of important works. In Egypt and the Babylonian, Assyrian, and Persian empires, the levels of formality, breadth, and sophistication of such learning were quite high. By the fifth century Athens had achieved a remarkable level of literacy, training, and education, with a widespread scope of involvement that went beyond simply the elites of the city. The philosophical giants Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle are examples of the heights of learning that were being introduced to the urban public of this period. But by the time of the Greek conquests under Alexander the Great, the more traditional pattern of formal education as a privilege of the elites again prevailed, with the teaching responsibilities often placed in the hands of the retainers (slaves and employees) of these elites.

The pattern for formal education in the Greco-Roman culture of the NT period included beginning with grammar instruction during the early childhood years, followed by guidance in the art of rhetoric and speech. Sometimes the student received instruction from a tutor in the home and at other times by attending a school, with various combinations possible between these two options. Quintilian, one of Rome's greatest teachers in the first century, described the education system and its various components in detail. The young pupil started in the care of the grammaticus (grammar teacher) to learn grammar and then passed into the hands of the rhetor for instruction in rhetoric and speech. The grammar teaching included reading and writing, with a beginning process of copying the writings of others, then recasting those writings into one's own words, and finally composing original works. This last step of composition was then developed more fully in the next stage of training in rhetoric. Moral instruction was normally part of the entire process by means of readings, role models, and discussions. Quintilian also noted the importance of the father/family in the education process and goals, the need for a strong grasp of grammar, and the challenge to continue learning throughout one's lifetime.

Although none of the leaders of the early church or writers of the NT was likely a member of the ruling elites, Paul and Luke may have had some formal educational training. Paul is stated to have studied under Gamaliel in Jerusalem and may have had some formal training in Tarsus before going to Jerusalem, but even if this was so, his training would have been at a lower level than that afforded the ruling classes. He would not have been from the ruling elites of Tarsus since his trade was tent-making, which implied a status at most fitting for the retainers of the elites or possibly affiliated with the merchant stratum on a lower level. Taking at face value the tradition of Luke being a physician, Luke also belonged to a social stratum no higher than the retainer class. So Luke as well would not have been likely to have passed through all of the formal training afforded to the elites. However, Luke's reference to the "most excellent Theophilus" may reflect a relationship to one of the ruling elites befitting a member of the retainer stratum. At any rate, Luke's introduction to his Gospel indicates a level of training suitable to digesting and investigating both oral and written sources, thus implying at least some level of training in literacy for Luke.

Libraries In conjunction with the training of elites and the prestige of learning opportunities, libraries emerged in some of the leading cities of the Roman Empire. The most famous library in antiquity was the Alexandria library, which at its height of prestige had over 500,000 scrolls of writings between the main library and the smaller “daughter's library” beside it. The goal was for the library to have all of the known works of any type extant. The excellence of the Alexandria library is seen in the practice of comparing (and correcting) copies in other libraries to those in Alexandria due to the “old text” being preserved there. As a byproduct of this goal, the Torah from the OT was translated into Greek and added to the library in the mid-third century B.C., and then later over a period of time the Prophets and the Writings as well as other books were added to that translation. This Greek Old Testament became the version used predominantly in the early church.

While the library at Alexandria was the best known in the ancient world and reputed to be the largest in holdings, libraries also were located in other cities such as Antioch, Pergamum, Athens, Rhodes, Carthage, and Rome. By the time of Christianity, many of the larger cities had libraries, with at least some public access in the major centers. During the time of the Roman Empire, Alexandria remained the best center for studying Greek works, with Rome housing the best collection of works by Latin writers (as well as a substantial collection of Greek works).

The function of libraries was to provide access to the works of the classic Greek writers of antiquity, such as Homer, Plato, and Aristotle, as well as to those of others of less stature or contemporary authors. The copies of the works were stored in the library with duplicates made for those who wished to use the works outside of the library setting. Sometimes the author would pay to have copies made for friends, while at other times the buyer would underwrite the copying of the book. Borrowing books, while allowed in some locations, was limited at best and may often have been restricted to certain citizens of standing. See Library.

Bill Warren

EGLAH [Ēg' lāh] Personal name meaning “heifer, young cow.” David's wife and mother of his son Ithream (2 Sam. 3:5).

EGLAIM [Ēg' lā'im] Place-name meaning “two cisterns.” Place in Moab used by Isaiah to describe far limits of Moab's distress. It is modern Rugm el-Gilimeh, southeast of el-Kerak. It is distinct in location and Hebrew spelling from Eneglaim (Ezek. 47:10).

EGLATH-SHELISHIYAH [Ēg' lath-shē lish'ī yāh] Place-name meaning “the third heifer.” Place apparently in Moab where Moab fugitives fled in Isaiah's description of disaster (Isa. 15:5). The name has given translators and interpreters many problems. The location is not known. The words do not apparently fit the poetic structure and are unexpected in the syntax and context, there being no adverb or preposition between Zoar and Eglath-Shelishiyah in the Hebrew. KJV makes the phrase an identifying statement with Zoar—“an heifer of three years old.” The same problems arise in the closely related Jer. 48:34.

J. Maxwell Miller

EGLON [Ēg'lōn] 1. Moabite king who oppressed the Israelites (Judg. 3:12). Aided by the Amalekites and Ammonites, Eglon dominated Israel for 18 years. He was finally slain by the Benjamite judge Ehud, who ran the obese monarch through with a short sword. 2. Canaanite city whose king entered an alliance with four other Canaanite rulers against Gibeon (Josh. 10:3). The Gibeonites had made a treaty with Israel (Josh. 9). Subsequently, Eglon was captured by the Israelite army under Joshua. It became a part of the territory of the tribe of Judah. Most scholars long held that the modern site of Tell el-Hesi was the location of ancient Eglon. More recently, however, some have contended for Tell 'Eton. Both places are to the southwest of Lachish. See Ehud; Joshua; Judges.

EGYPT Land in northeastern Africa, home to one of the earliest civilizations, and an important cultural and political influence on ancient Israel.

Geography Egypt lies at the northeastern corner of Africa, separated from Palestine by the Sinai wilderness. In contrast to the modern nation, ancient Egypt was confined to the Nile River Valley, a long, narrow ribbon of fertile land (the “black land”) surrounded by uninhabitable desert (the “red land”). Egypt proper, from the first cataract of the Nile to the Mediterranean, is some 750 miles long.

Classical historians remarked that Egypt was a gift of the Nile. The river's three tributaries converge in the Sudan. The White Nile, with its source in Lake Victoria, provides a fairly constant water flow. The seasonal flow of the Blue Nile and Atbara caused an annual inundation beginning in June and cresting in September. Not only did the inundation provide for irrigation, but also it replenished the soil with a new layer of fertile, black silt each year. The Nile also provided a vital communication link for the nation. While the river's flow carried boats northward, prevailing northerly winds allowed easy sailing upstream.

Despite the unifying nature of the Nile, the “Two Lands” of Egypt were quite distinct. Upper Egypt is the arable Nile Valley from the First Cataract to just south of Memphis in the north. Lower Egypt refers to the broad Delta of the Nile in the north, formed from alluvial deposits. Egypt was relatively isolated by a series of six Nile cataracts on the south and protected on the east and west by the desert. The Delta was the entryway to Egypt for travelers coming from the Fertile Crescent across the Sinai.

History The numerous Egyptian pharaohs were divided by the ancient historian Manetho into 30 dynasties. Despite certain difficulties, Manetho's scheme is still used and provides a framework for a review of Egyptian history.

The unification of originally separate kingdoms of Upper and Lower Egypt about 3100 B.C. began the Archaic Period (First and Second Dynasties). Egypt's first period of glory, the Third through Sixth Dynasties of the Old Kingdom (2700-2200 B.C.) produced the famous pyramids.

Low Nile inundations, the resultant bad harvests, and incursions of Asiatics in the Delta region brought the political chaos of the Seventh through Tenth Dynasties, called the First Intermediate Period (2200-2040 B.C.). Following a civil war, the 11th Dynasty reunited Egypt and began the Middle Kingdom (2040-1786 B.C.). Under the able pharaohs of the Twelfth Dynasty, Egypt prospered and conducted extensive trade. From the Middle Kingdom onward, Egyptian history is contemporary with biblical events. Abraham's brief sojourn in Egypt (Gen. 12:10-20) during this period may be understood in light of a tomb painting at Beni Hasan showing visiting Asiatics in Egypt about 1900 B.C.

Under the weak 13th Dynasty, Egypt entered another period of division. Asiatics, mostly Semites like the Hebrews, migrated into the Delta region of Egypt and began to establish independent enclaves, eventually consolidating rule over Lower Egypt. These pharaohs, being Asiatics rather than native Egyptians, were remembered as Hyksos, or “rulers of foreign lands.” This period, in which Egypt was divided between Hyksos (15th and 16th) and native Egyptian (13th and 17th) dynasties, is known as the Second Intermediate or Hyksos Period (1786-1550 B.C.). Some believe Joseph's rise to power (Gen. 41:39-45) may have taken place under a Hyksos pharaoh. See Hyksos.

The temple of Luxor.

Funerary statuettes from the tomb of King Tut (Pharaoh Tutankhamun).

The Hyksos were expelled and Egypt reunited about 1550 B.C. by Ahmose I, who established the 18th Dynasty inaugurated the Egyptian New Kingdom. Successive 18th Dynasty pharaohs made military campaigns into Canaan and against the Mitannian kingdom of Mesopotamia, creating an empire that reached the Euphrates River. Foremost among the pharaohs was Thutmose III (1479-1425 B.C.), who won a major victory at Megiddo in Palestine. Amenhotep III (1391-1353 B.C.) ruled over a magnificent empire in peace—thanks to a treaty with Mitanni—and devoted his energies to building projects in Egypt itself. The great successes of the Empire led to internal power struggles, especially between the powerful priesthood of Amen-Re and the throne.

Amenhotep III's son, Amenhotep IV (1353-1335 B.C.), changed his name to Akhenaton and embarked on a revolutionary reform which promoted worship of the sun disc Aton above all other gods. As Thebes was dominated by the powerful priesthood of Amen-Re, Akhenaton moved the capital over 200 miles north to Akhetaton, modern Tell el-Amarna. The Amarna Age, as this period is known, brought innovations in art and literature; but Akhenaton paid little attention to foreign affairs, and the Empire suffered. Documents from Akhetaton, the Amarna Letters, represent diplomatic correspondence between local rulers in Egypt's sphere of influence and pharaoh's court. They especially illuminate the turbulent situation in Canaan which, depending upon one's preference for a 15th or 13th century date for the exodus, could be a century after or prior to the Israelite invasion.

The reforms of Akhenaton failed. His second successor made clear his loyalties to Amen-Re by changing his name from Tutankhaten to Tutankhamen and abandoning the new capital in favor of Thebes. He died young, and his comparatively insignificant tomb was forgotten until its rediscovery in 1921. The 18th Dynasty would not recover. The General Horemheb seized the throne and worked vigorously to restore order and erase all trace of the Amarna heresy. Horemheb had no heir and left the throne to his vizier, Ramesses I, first king of the 19th Dynasty.

Seti I (1302-1290 B.C.) reestablished Egyptian control in Canaan and campaigned against the Hittites, who had taken Egyptian territory in North Syria during the Amarna Age. Construction of a new capital was begun by Seti I in the eastern Delta near the biblical Land of Goshen. Thebes would remain the national religious and traditional capital. See Hittites.

Bust of the Egyptian queen Nefertiti, wife of Pharaoh Akhenaton.

Ramesses II (1290-1224 B.C.) was the most vigorous and successful of the 19th Dynasty pharaohs. In his fifth year he fought the Hittites at Kadesh-on-the-Orontes in north Syria. Although ambushed and nearly defeated, the pharaoh rallied and claimed a great victory. Nevertheless, the battle was inconclusive. In 1270 B.C. Ramesses II concluded a peace treaty with the Hittites recognizing the status quo. At home he embarked on the most massive building program of any Egyptian ruler. Impressive additions were made to sanctuaries in Thebes and Memphis, a gigantic temple of Ramesses II was built at Abu Simbel in Nubia, and his mortuary temple and tomb were prepared in Western Thebes. In the eastern Delta, the new capital was completed and called Pi-Ramesse (“domain of Ramesses”; cp. Gen. 47:11). Many scholars view this as the biblical Ramesses (Exod. 1:11), a storage city built for the unnamed pharaoh of the exodus.

After a long reign, Ramesses II was succeeded by Merneptah, his son (1224-1214 B.C.). A stele of 1220 B.C. commemorates Merneptah's victory over a Libyan invasion and concludes with a poetic account of a campaign in Canaan. It includes the first extrabiblical mention of Israel and the only one in known Egyptian literature. After Merneptah the 19th Dynasty was a period of confusion.

Egypt had a brief period of renewed glory under Ramesses III (1195-1164 B.C.) of the 20th Dynasty. He defeated an invasion of the Sea Peoples, among whom were the Philistines. The remainder of 20th Dynasty rulers, all named Ramesses, saw increasingly severe economic and civil difficulties. The New Kingdom and the Empire came to an end with the last of these rulers in 1070 B.C. The Iron Age had taken dominance of the Near East elsewhere.

The late period (1070-332 B.C.) saw Egypt divided and invaded but with occasional moments of greatness. While the high priesthood of Amen-Re controlled Thebes, the 21st Dynasty ruled from the east Delta city of Tanis, biblical Zoan (Num. 13:22; Ps. 78:12; Ezek. 30:14; Isa. 19:11; 30:4). It was likely a pharaoh of this dynasty, perhaps Siamun, who took Gezer in Palestine and gave it to Solomon as his daughter's dowry (1 Kings 3:1; 9:16). The 22nd Dynasty was founded by Shoshenq I (945-924 B.C.), the Shishak of the Bible, who briefly united Egypt and made a successful campaign against the newly divided nations Judah and Israel (1 Kings 14:25; 2 Chron. 12). Thereafter, Egypt was divided between the 22nd through 25th Dynasties. The “So king of Egypt” (2 Kings 17:4), who encouraged the treachery of Hoshea, certainly belongs to this confused period, but he cannot be identified with certainty. Egypt was reunited in 715 B.C., when the Ethiopian 25th Dynasty succeeded in establishing control over all of Egypt. The most important of these pharaohs was Taharqa, the biblical Tirhakah who rendered aid to Hezekiah (2 Kings 19:9; Isa. 37:9).

Assyria invaded Egypt in 671 B.C., driving the Ethiopians southward and eventually sacking Thebes (biblical No-Amon; Nah. 3:8) in 664 B.C. Under loose Assyrian sponsorship, the 26th Dynasty controlled all of Egypt from Sais in the western Delta. With Assyria's decline, Neco II (610-595 B.C.) opposed the advance of Babylon and exercised brief control over Judah (2 Kings 23:29-35). After a severe defeat at the Battle of Carchemish (605 B.C.), Neco II lost Judah as a vassal (2 Kings 24:1) and was forced to defend her border against Babylon. The Pharaoh Hophra (Greek Apries; 589-570 B.C.) supported Judah's rebellion against Babylon but was unable to provide the promised support (Jer. 37:5-10; 44:30). Despite these setbacks, the 26th Dynasty was a period of Egyptian renaissance until the Persian conquest in 525 B.C. Persian rule (27th Dynasty) was interrupted by a period of Egyptian independence under the 28th through 30th Dynasties (404-343 B.C.). With Persian reconquest in 343 B.C., pharaonic Egypt had come to an end.

Sailboat on the Nile River near Luxor.

Alexander the Great took Egypt from the Persians in 332 B.C. and founded the great city of Alexandria on the Mediterranean coast. After his death in 323 B.C., Egypt was home to the Hellenistic Ptolemaic Empire until the time of Cleopatra, when it fell to the Romans (30 B.C.). During the NT period, Egypt, under direct rule of the Roman emperors, was the breadbasket of Rome.

Religion Egyptian religion is extremely complex and not totally understood. Many of the great number of gods were personifications of the enduring natural forces in Egypt, such as the sun, Nile, air, earth, and so on. Other gods, like Maat (“truth,” “justice”), personified abstract concepts. Still others ruled over states of mankind, like Osiris, god of the underworld. Some of the gods were worshiped in animal form, such as the Apis bull that represented the god Ptah of Memphis.

Many of the principal deities were associated with particular cities or regions, and their position was often a factor of the political situation. This is reflected by the gods' names that dominate pharaohs' names in various dynasties. Thus the god Amen, later called Amen-Re, became the chief god of the Empire because of the position of Thebes. The confusion of local beliefs and political circumstances led to the assimilation of different gods to certain dominant figures. Theological systems developed around local gods at Hermopolis, Memphis, and Heliopolis. At Memphis, Ptah was seen as the supreme deity who created the other gods by his own word, but this notion was too intellectual to be popular. Dominance was achieved by the system of Heliopolis, home of the sun god Atum, later identified with Ra. Similar to the Hermopolis cycle, it involved a primordial chaos from which appeared Atum who gave birth to the other gods.

Popular with common people was the Osiris myth. Osiris, the good king, was murdered and dismembered by his brother Seth. Osiris' wife, Isis, gathered his body to be mummified by the jackal-headed embalming god Anubis. Magically restored, Osiris was buried by his son, Horus, and reigned as king of the underworld. Horus, meanwhile, overcame the evil Seth to rule on earth. This cycle became the principle of divine kingship. In death, the pharaoh was worshiped as Osiris. As the legitimate heir Horus buried the dead Osiris, the new pharaoh became the living Horus by burying his dead predecessor.

The consistent provision of the Nile gave Egyptians, in contrast to Mesopotamians, a generally optimistic outlook on life. This is reflected in their preoccupation with the afterlife, which was viewed as an ideal continuation of life on earth. In the Old Kingdom it was the prerogative only of the king, as a god, to enjoy immortality. The common appeal of the Osiris cult was great, however, and in later years any dead person was referred to as “the Osiris so and so.”

To assist the dead in the afterlife, magical texts were included in the tomb. In the Old Kingdom they were for royalty only, but by the Middle Kingdom variations were written inside coffin lids of any who could afford them. In the New Kingdom and later, magical texts known as The Book of the Dead were written on papyrus and placed in the coffin. Pictorial vignettes show, among other things, the deceased at a sort of judgment in which his heart was weighted against truth. This indicates some concept of sin, but the afterlife for the Egyptian was not an offer from a gracious god but merely an optimistic hope based on observation of his surroundings.

The Bible mentions only one Egyptian gods, Amon (Jr 46:25). Even so, the Egyptian religion did not significantly influence the Hebrews. There are some interesting parallels between biblical texts and Egyptian literature. An Amarna Age hymn to the Aton has similarities to Ps. 104, but direct borrowing seems unlikely. More striking parallels are found in wisdom literature, as between Prov. 22 and the Egyptian Instruction of Amen-em-ope.

Daniel C. Browning, Jr. and Kirk Kilpatrick

View of Giza, Egypt, showing two of three pyramids located here and the famous Sphinx.

EGYPTIAN, THE Leader of an unsuccessful attempt to capture Jerusalem in about A.D. 54. In Acts 21:38 the tribune commanding the Antonia fortress mistook Paul for this revolutionary who led 4,000 “assassins” into the wilderness. Josephus mentioned two incidents involving the same, or a similar, character. In the first, an Egyptian false prophet led a group into the desert. The procurator Felix dispersed this revolutionary band with cavalry and foot soldiers. Later the Egyptian gathered 30,000 in the wilderness, leading the multitude to the Mount of Olives from which, so he promised, they would see the walls of Jerusalem fall at his command. Felix again responded with force, killing 400 and taking 200 captive. The Egyptian ringleader escaped.

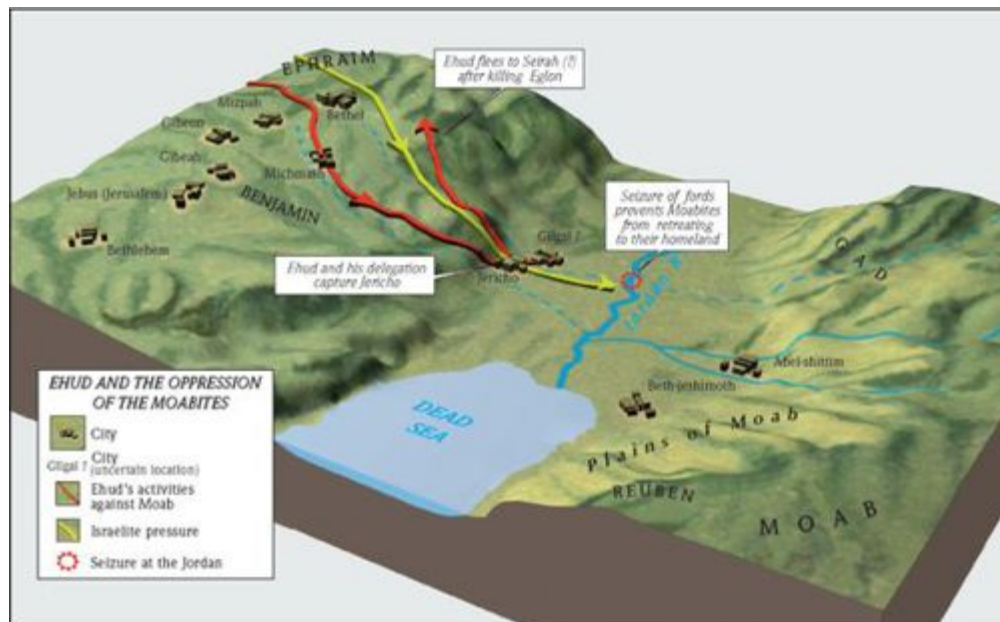

Such a sizable following suggests that either an Egyptian Jew or a proselyte to Judaism was the leader of the revolt rather than a pagan Egyptian. The tribune presumed that the Egyptian was a barbarian (unable to speak Greek). This presumption together with Paul's response that he was a Jew of Tarsus, an important city of Cilicia, suggests a rural origin for the Egyptian rebel.

EHI [E' hi] Personal name meaning “my brother.” A son of Benjamin (Gen. 46:21), but he does not appear in the lists of Benjamin's sons in Num. 26:38–40; 1 Chron. 8:1–2.

EHUD [E' hüd] Personal name meaning “unity, powerful.” 1. A left-handed Benjamite whom the Lord raised up to deliver the Israelites from Moabite oppression (Judg. 3:15). By a ruse he gained access to the Moabite King Eglon and assassinated him. 2. Great grandson of Benjamin and clan leader in that tribe (1 Chron. 7:10). 3. Clan leader in tribe of Benjamin who originally lived in Geba but were deported by someone unknown to Manahath (1 Chron. 8:6). The name Ehud appears unexpectedly in the text, so that scholars search for other names in the lists of Num. 26 and 1 Chron. 8:1–5 who might be the same person without sure results.

EKER [E' kër] Personal name meaning “root” or “offspring.” Son of Ram and grandson of Jerahmeel in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:27).

EKRON [Ek' rön] Northernmost of the five major Philistine cities known as the Pentapolis. The site of ancient Ekron has been much debated but now is generally agreed to be modern Tell Mique, about 14 miles inland from the Mediterranean Sea and 10 miles from Ashdod. The site is one of the largest in Palestine, covering some 50 acres. Ekron lies on the road leading from Ashdod into the Judean hill country and up to Jerusalem through the Sorek Valley.

Ekron was assigned to both Judah (Josh. 15:11,45–46) and Dan (Josh. 19:43) in the tribal allotments. It probably lay on the border between the tribes. Judges 1:18 reports that Judah captured Ekron along with other parts of the Philistine coast, but Ekron was certainly in Philistine hands at the time the ark was captured (1 Sam. 5:10). It was also the place to which the Philistines retreated after David slew Goliath (1 Sam. 17:52). Ahaziah, the son of King Ahab of Israel, called on the god of Ekron, Baal-zebub, when he was sick (2 Kings 1:2–16).

Excavations at Tell Miqne have discovered much pottery that is typically Philistine. From the last period before Tell Miqne was destroyed by the Babylonians, the excavators found an important industrial complex near the city gate. A hoard of iron agricultural tools was found. Hundreds of whole pottery vessels were present. Perhaps most importantly, a well-preserved olive press was discovered. This press is the largest and best preserved known in Israel. A horned altar was also found during the excavations.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

EL  One of several words for God found in biblical Hebrew and the name of the high god among the Canaanites. The word is common to Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic, yet the origin and root from which the word was derived is obscure. “El” is a general term that expresses majesty or power. It occurs 238 times in the OT, most frequently in Psalms and Job. The normal biblical usage is as a simple noun for deity. “El” is a synonym for the more frequent noun for God: Elohim. “El” refers to the God of Israel and in other passages to one of the pagan gods. In some instances qualifying words are associated with “El” in order to distinguish which god is being addressed. Exodus 34:14 is an example of the expression “other god”; Pss. 44:20 and 81:9 are translated “strange god.”

“El” was frequently combined with nouns or adjectives to express the name for God with reference to particular attributes or characteristics of His being. El Shaddai, “God Almighty,” appears in Gen. 17:1. El-elohe-Israel, in Gen. 33:20, was used to distinguish the God of Israel from all others. El Elyon, in Gen. 14:18 and Ps. 78:35, was written to suggest the exalted nature of God. El Gibbor (Isa. 9:6; Jer. 32:18) has been interpreted as a portrayal of God as a mighty warrior. El Roi, the God who sees, is found only in Gen. 16:13. See Canaan.

James Newell

ELA [E' la] Personal name of unknown meaning, perhaps related either to el, Hebrew word for God, or to Elah, a slightly different Hebrew spelling not noted in KJV. Father of one of Solomon's district superintendents (1 Kings 4:18). See Elah.

ELADAH [E' a-dah] (KJV) See Eleadah.

ELAH [E' lah] Personal name and place-name meaning “oak,” “mighty tree,” or “terebinth.” See Terebinth. 1. Clan chief descended from Esau (Gen. 36:41) and thus an Edomite. See Edom; Esau. 2. A valley where Saul and his army set up battle lines against the Philistines (1 Sam. 17:2). The valley runs east and west just north of Socoh. There David defeated Goliath (1 Sam. 21:9). 3. King of Israel (732-723 B.C.), killed while he was drunk during rebellion that Zimri, his general, led successfully (1 Kings 16:6–14). 4. Father of Hoshea, who led a revolt and became king of Israel (732-723 B.C.) (2 Kings 15:30). 5. Son of Caleb and father of Kenaz among clans of Judah (1 Chron. 4:15). 6. Head of a clan from Benjamin who settled in Jerusalem after the exile (1 Chron. 9:8).

ELAM [E' lam] Personal name and place-name.

1. Elam was a son of Shem, one of the sons of Noah (Gen. 10:22; 1 Chron. 1:17). He may have given his name to the region known as Elam.

2. The region of Elam is on the western edge of ancient Persia, modern Iran. The Zagros Mountains lie east and north while the Persian Gulf is to the south and the Tigris River is on the west. The ancient capital of the area is Susa. The region has been inhabited since before 3000 B.C., but only a few of the periods are of importance for biblical history.

Elam appeared in history when Sargon of Akkad subdued it about 2300 B.C. Soon, though, Elamites reversed the role, sacked Ur, and set up an Elamite king in Eshnunna. The Elamite presence continued in Babylon until the time of Hammurabi about 1700 B.C.

After Hammurabi, Kassites invaded Elam. Their rule lasted until about 1200 B.C. The next century was the high point of Elam's power. All of western Iran was theirs. Again the Babylonians brought Elamite power to an end. The Assyrian Ashurbanipal brought an end to the periods of strength and weakness. He swept through the region in a series of campaigns and captured Susa in 641 B.C. He may have moved some Elamites to Samaria at that time (Ezra 4:9). Earlier, Elam had incorporated Anshan, later home of Cyrus the Great, into the kingdom. As Assyria weakened, Elam and Anshan became part of the kingdom of the Medes. Thus, they participated with the Babylonians in the defeat of the Assyrian Empire. Elam had little subsequent independent history, but it continued to be part of the Medes' and the Persians' empires. In Scripture Elam's importance may have been due to its role as a vassal of the great empires, supplying troops for them.

Elam is mentioned in Scripture in narratives and oracles. Abraham fought Chedorlaomer, king of Elam, to secure the return of Lot and others (Gen. 14). Although this king cannot be identified from other records, the events may have occurred during Elam's time of strength prior to Hammurabi. Prophets mentioned Elam in oracles.

Other biblical references mention Elam as a personal name or homeland. Perhaps most interesting is the presence of men from Elam on the day of Pentecost. These may have been Jews from the region of Elam or converts to Judaism (Acts 2:9). God was still gathering His people from there. See Persia; Cyrus; Assyria.

3. Clan head of tribe of Benjamin living in Jerusalem (1 Chron. 8:24). 4. Priestly gatekeeper under David (1 Chron. 26:3). 5. Two clan leaders among the exiles who returned to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel in 537 B.C. (Ezra 2:7,31; cp. 8:7; 10:2,26). 6. Postexilic leader who signed Nehemiah's covenant to obey God (Neh. 10:14). 7. Priest who helped Nehemiah lead the people in celebrating the completion of the Jerusalem wall (Neh. 12:42).

Albert F. Bean

ELASAH [Eĕl ă' sâh] Personal name meaning "God has made." 1. Son of Shaphan, the royal scribe. He took Jeremiah's message to the exiled community in Babylon while on a mission for King Zedekiah (Jer. 29:3). 2. Descendant of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:39–40); spelled "Eleasah" in English translations. 3. Descendant of Saul and Jonathan in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:37; cp. 9:43); spelled "Eleasah" in English translations. 4. Priest with a foreign wife who agreed to divorce her to avoid temptation of foreign gods in the time of Ezra (Ezra 10:22).

ELATH [E' lath] or ELOTH [E' loth] Place-name meaning "ram," "mighty trees," or "terebinth." See Terebinth. Port city on northern end of Red Sea. Israel passed through it on way through Edom in wilderness (Deut. 2:8). It was significant enough to serve as a point of reference to identify Ezion-geber, where King Solomon made his naval vessels (1 Kings 9:26; cp. 2 Chron. 8:17–18). Later King Uzziah (792-740) rebuilt the seaport and controlled it for Judah (2 Kings 14:22). Archaeologists have usually identified Elath as another name for Ezion-geber and located it at Tell el-Kheleifeh. More recent archaeological work has attempted to show that Ezion-geber was the port city on the island of Jezirat Faraun. Elath would then be the mainland base to which goods were transferred for loading onto pack animals for the long caravan travels northward to Judah, Israel, Syria, or Phoenicia or for travels eastward to Assyria or Babylonia or westward to Egypt. See Ezion-geber.

Aqaba, Jordan, at the mouth of the Gulf of Aqaba with Elath in the distance.

EL-BERITH [El-bīr' 1th] Name of a god meaning “god of the covenant.” A god worshiped in a temple at Shechem. It had a stronghold or citadel guarding it. There the citizens of Shechem sought protection when Abimelech attacked them, but Abimelech set the citadel on fire (Judg. 9:46–49). KJV translates “god Berith.” See Baal-berith; Shechem.

EL-BETHEL [El-bēth' 2l] Place-name meaning “god of the house of El (god).” Either Bethel or place in or near Bethel, where Jacob built an altar to God as memorial to his previous visit to Bethel when he had seen a vision of God (Gen. 35:7; cp. 28:10–19). Apparently the name used for God was used as a place-name. See God of the Fathers.

ELDAAH [El dā' ah] Personal name meaning “God has called,” “God has sought,” or “God of wisdom.” Son of Midian and grandson of Abraham thus original ancestor of clan of Midianites (Gen. 25:4).

ELDAD [El' dād] Personal name meaning “God loved.” Along with Medad, he was one of 70 elders of Israel that God selected to help Moses, but the two did not meet at the tabernacle with the others. Still the Spirit came upon Eldad and Medad in the camp, and they prophesied. Joshua attempted to stop them, but Moses prayed that all God's people might have the Spirit (Num. 11:16–29). See Medad; Prophet; Spirit.

ELDER Prominent member of both Jewish and early Christian communities. In the OT, “elder” usually translates the Hebrew word zaqen from a root that means “beard” or “chin.” In the NT, the Greek word is presbuteros, which is transliterated in English as “presbyter” and from which the word “priest” was derived.

Old Testament From the beginning of Israelite history, the elders were the leaders of the various clans and tribes. When the tribes came together to form the nation of Israel, the elders of the tribes naturally assumed important roles in governing the affairs of the nation. Moses was commanded to inform the “elders of Israel” of the Lord's intention to deliver Israel from Egypt and to take the elders with him to confront the pharaoh (Exod. 3:16,18). Similarly, 70 of the elders participated with Moses at the covenant meal at Sinai (Exod. 24:9–11). As the task of governing Israel grew in complexity, part of the burden was transferred from Moses to a council of 70 elders (Num. 11:16–17).

During the period of the judges and the monarchy, the elders were prominent in the political and judicial life of Israel. They demanded that Samuel appoint a king (1 Sam. 8:4–5); they played crucial roles in David's getting and retaining the throne (2 Sam. 3:17; 5:3; 17:15; 19:11–12); and they represented the people at the consecration of the temple of Solomon (1 Kings 8:1,3). In the legal codes of Deuteronomy, the elders are responsible for administering justice, sitting as judges in the city gate (Deut. 22:15), deciding cases affecting family life (Deut. 21:18–21; 22:13–21), and executing decisions (Deut. 19:11–13; 21:1–9).

Although elders were less prominent in the Postexilic period and the term was apparently not used much in Jewish communities outside Palestine, the “council of elders” was an integral part of the Sanhedrin at Jerusalem. In the NT, frequent reference is made to the elders of the Jews, usually in conjunction with the chief priests or scribes (Matt. 21:23; Mark 14:43). In this context the elders, apparently members of leading families, had some authority but were not the principal leaders in either religious or political affairs.

New Testament In the earliest Jewish Christian churches, at least the church in Jerusalem, the position of “elder” was almost certainly modeled after the synagogue pattern. Although there are few specific details about the function of elders in the Jerusalem church, they apparently served as a decision-making council. They are often mentioned in conjunction with the apostles, and some passages give the impression that the apostles and elders of Jerusalem considered themselves to be a decision-making council for the whole church (Acts 15; 21:17–26).

Other churches also had elders. Acts 14:23 reports that Paul and Barnabas appointed elders in churches on their missionary journey. These elders do not seem to fit the Jewish pattern, however. In the address to the Ephesian elders, Paul referred to them as overseeing the church and serving as shepherds of the church (Acts 20:28). Paul did not use the term “elders” often, usually referring to the functions of ministry rather than titles of offices. For example, in Rom. 12:6–9 Paul referred to those with gifts for prophecy, serving, teaching, and several other aspects of ministry (cp. 1 Cor. 12). Although those exercising such gifts in churches are not expressly called elders, it is likely that at least some of them were elders. Thus, elders in the Pauline churches were probably spiritual leaders and ministers, not simply a governing council.

One of the most debated questions concerning the pattern of early Christian ministry is the relationship between bishops and elders. Some scholars believe the two terms are interchangeable; others argue that they refer to distinct offices. Nowhere in the letters of Paul is there any explicit reference to the duties of either, nor is there any listing of the qualifications of elders. Titus 1:5–9 is the only passage that mentions both terms. The passage begins with a direction that elders be appointed in every town and continues with a description of the qualifications for a bishop. The context leads to the conclusion that the directions and the qualifications refer to the same persons, thus implying that the terms are interchangeable.

The qualifications in Titus 1:6–9 and in 1 Tim. 3:1–7 apparently apply to elders. It becomes apparent that the elders were the spiritual leaders of the churches. Taken as a whole, the qualifications describe one who is a mature Christian of good repute, with gifts for teaching, management, and pastoral ministry. The only specific reference to the ministry of elders is the description (James 5:14–15) of elders praying for and anointing a sick person. Although “bishop” usually occurs in the singular form, none of these passages indicate that there was only one elder in each congregation. The nature of the relationship between the various elders is nowhere described.

Fred A. Grissom

ELEAD [Él' ə' ád] Personal name meaning “God is a witness.” Member of tribe of Ephraim killed by men of Gath for stealing their cattle (1 Chron. 7:21). See Ezer.

ELEADAH [Él' ə' á' dáh] Personal name meaning “God adorned Himself.” Modern translation spelling for KJV Eladah, a descendant of Ephraim (1 Chron. 7:20).

ELEALEH [Él' ə' á' léh] Moabite place-name meaning “God went up” or “high ground.” Town that tribe of Reuben requested from Moses and strengthened (Num. 32:3,37). Isaiah announced judgment on the town (Isa. 15:4; 16:9; cp. Jer. 48:34). It is modern el-'Al, a mile north of Heshbon in a fertile plain.

ELEASAH [Él' ə' á' sáh] Personal name meaning “God acted,” or “God made,” using same Hebrew spelling as Elasah. 1. Member of clan of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:39–40). See Elasah. 2. Descendant of Saul and Jonathan in tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:37; 9:43).

ELEAZAR [Él' ə' á' zár] Personal name meaning “God helps.” 1. The third son of Aaron (Exod. 6:23) and high priest of Israel (Num. 20:28). After Aaron's death Eleazar took his place as Moses' helper. It was in the presence of Eleazar that Moses commissioned Joshua (Num. 27:22). According to Josh. 14:1 Eleazar and Joshua were the key figures in the distribution of Canaanite territories among the Israelite tribes. When he died, Eleazar was buried on a hill belonging to his son Phinehas (Josh. 24:33). He was an ancestor of Ezra the scribe (Ezra 7:5). See Aaron; Priests and Levites. 2.

Son of Abinadab who was sanctified by the men of Kirjath-jearim to have responsibility for the ark of the Lord (1 Sam. 7:1). 3. One of David's renowned warriors, the son of Dodo (2 Sam. 23:9). 4. Son of Mahli who died having had no sons, but only daughters (1 Chron. 23:21–22). 5. Son of Phinehas who assisted in weighing out the silver and gold utensils in the house of God (Ezra 8:33). 6. One of the sons of Parosh in a list of persons who had married foreign wives. He later put away his wife because of Ezra's reform banning foreign marriage (Ezra 10:25). 7. Musician involved in the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:42). 8. Son of Eliud and father of Matthan. He was an ancestor of Joseph the husband of Mary (Matt. 1:15).

ELECT LADY Recipient of John's second letter (2 John 1) sometimes understood to be an individual, but the phrase probably is a way of referring to a local church congregation. The members of the church would then be the “children” who are mentioned in the same verse. The “elect sister” of verse 13 would be another congregation whose members were sending greeting.

ELECTION God's plan to bring salvation to His people and His world. The doctrine of election is at once one of the most central and one of the most misunderstood teachings of the Bible. At its most basic level, election refers to the purpose or plan of God whereby He has determined to effect His will. Thus election encompasses the entire range of divine activity from creation, God's decision to bring the world into being out of nothing, to the end time, the making anew of heaven and earth. The word “election” itself is derived from the Greek word, eklegomai, which means, literally, “to choose something for oneself.” This in turn corresponds to the Hebrew word, bachar. The objects of divine selection are the elect ones, a concept found with increasing frequency in the later writings of the OT and at many places in the NT (Matt. 22:14; Luke 18:7; Col. 3:12; Rev. 17:14). The Bible also uses other words such as “choose,” “predestinate,” “foreordain,” “determine,” and “call” to indicate that God has entered into a special relationship with certain individuals and groups through whom He has decided to fulfill His purpose within the history of salvation.

Israel as the Object of God's Election The doctrine of election is rooted in the particularity of the Judeo-Christian tradition, that is, the conviction that out of all the peoples on earth God has chosen to reveal Himself in a special, unique way to one particular people. This conviction resonates through every layer of OT literature from the early awareness of Israel as “the people of Yahweh” through the Psalms (147:19–20a, “He declares His word to Jacob, His statutes and judgments to Israel. He has not done this for any nation” [HCSB]; cp. Isa. 14:1; Ezek. 20:5). We can identify five major motifs in the OT portrayal of God's election of Israel.

(1) Election is the result of the sovereign initiative of God. At the very beginning of Israel's role in salvation history is the call of Abraham to leave his homeland for a new one that would be shown unto him (Gen. 12:1–7). This directive came to Abraham from God who also promised to bless his descendants and all peoples on earth through them. While Abraham responded to this call in obedience and faith, his election was not the result of his own efforts, but solely of God's decision. (2) The central word in Israel's vocabulary for describing their special relationship with God was “covenant.” This covenant was not a contract between equal partners, but a bond established by God's unmerited favor and love. The gracious character of the covenant is a major theme in Deuteronomy. “For you are a holy people to the LORD your God; the LORD your God has chosen you to be a people for His own possession out of all the peoples who are on the face of the earth. The LORD did not set His love on you nor choose you because you were more in number than any of the peoples, for you were the fewest of all peoples” (Deut. 7:6–7 NASB). (3) Within the covenanted community God selected certain individuals to fulfill specific functions. The following persons are said to be elected in this sense: Abraham (Neh. 9:7), Moses (Ps. 106:23), Aaron (Num. 16:1–17:13), David (Ps. 78:70), Solomon (1 Chron. 28:10), and Zerubbabel (Hag. 2:23). Kings, priests, and prophets are all chosen by God, though in different ways and for various purposes. Jeremiah believed that he had been elected and set apart as a prophet even before he was born (Jer. 1:4–5). (4) Israel's election was never intended to be a pretext for pride but rather an opportunity for service. “I am the LORD, I have called you in righteousness,...as a light to the nations” (Isa. 42:6 NASB). From time to time the children of Israel were tempted to presume upon God's gracious favor, to assume, for example, that because the Lord had placed His temple at Jerusalem, they were exempt from judgment. Again and again the prophets tried to disabuse them of this false notion of security by pointing out the true meaning of the covenant and their mission among the nations (Jer. 7:1–14; Amos 3:2; Jonah). (5) In the later OT writings, and especially during the intertestamental period, there is a tendency to identify the “elect ones” with the true, faithful “remnant” among the people of God. The birth of the Messiah is seen to mark the dawn of the age of salvation for the remnant (Ezek. 34:12–13,23–31; Mic. 5:1–2). The community of Essenes at Qumran saw themselves as an elect remnant whose purity and faithfulness presaged the Messianic Age.

Election and the New Covenant Early Christians saw themselves as heirs of Israel's election, “a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for His possession” (1 Pet. 2:9 HCSB). Paul treats this theme most extensively, but we should not overlook its central importance for the entire NT. Again, certain individuals are singled out as chosen by God: the 12 apostles (Luke 6:13), Peter (Acts 15:7), Paul (Acts 9:15), and Jesus Himself (Luke 9:35; 23:35). In the Synoptic Gospels the term “elect ones” is always set in an eschatological context, that is, the days of tribulation will be shortened “because of the elect, whom He chose” (Mark 13:20 HCSB). Many of the parables of Jesus, such as that of the marriage feast (Matt. 22:1–14) and that of the laborers in the vineyard (Matt. 20:1–16), illustrate the sovereignty of God in salvation. In John, Jesus is the unmistakable Mediator of election: “You did not choose Me, but I chose you,” He reminded the disciples (John 15:16a HCSB). Again, His followers are those who have been given to Him by the Father “before the world existed” and “not one of them is lost” (John 17:5,12 HCSB). Also in John the shadow side of election is posed in the person of Judas, “the son of destruction.” Though his status as one of the elect is called into question by his betrayal of Christ, not even this act was able to thwart the fulfillment of God's plan of salvation.

There are three passages where Paul deals at length with different aspects of the doctrine of election. In the first (Rom. 8:28–39) divine election is presented as the ground and assurance of the Christian's hope.

Since those whom God has predestinated are also called, justified, and glorified, nothing can separate them from the love of God in Christ Jesus. The second passage (Rom. 9–11) is preoccupied with the fact of Israel's rejection of Christ that, in the purpose of God, has become the occasion for the entrance of Gentile believers into the covenant. In the third passage (Eph. 1:1–12) Paul pointed to the Christocentric character of election: God has chosen us “in Christ” before the foundation of the world. We can refer to this statement as the evangelical center of the doctrine of election. Our election is strictly and solely in Christ. As the eternal Son, He is, along with the Father and the Holy Spirit, the electing God; as the incarnate Mediator between God and humankind, He is the elected One. We should never speak of predestination apart from this central truth.

Election and the Christian Life Paul admonished the Thessalonians to give thanks because of their election (2 Thess. 2:13), while Peter said that we should confirm our “calling and election” (2 Pet. 1:10 HCSB). However, in the history of Christian thought, few teachings have been more distorted or more misused. The following questions reveal common misperceptions. (1) Is not election the same thing as fatalism? Predestination does not negate the necessity for human repentance and faith; rather it establishes the possibility of both. God does not relate to human beings as sticks and stones but as free creatures made in His own image. (2) If salvation is based on election, then why preach the gospel? Because God has chosen preaching as the means to awaken faith in the elect (1 Cor. 1:21). We should proclaim the gospel to everyone without exception, knowing that it is only the Holy Spirit who can convict, regenerate, and justify. (3) Does the Bible teach “double predestination,” that God has selected some for damnation as well as some for salvation? There are passages (Rom. 9:11–22; 2 Cor. 2:15–16) that portray God as a potter who has molded both vessels of mercy and vessels of destruction. Yet the Bible also teaches that God does not wish any one to perish but for all to be saved (John 3:16; 2 Pet. 3:9). We are not able to understand how everything the Bible says about election fits into a neat logical system. Our business is not to pry into the secret counsel of God but to share the message of salvation with everyone and to be grateful that we have been delivered from darkness into light. (4) Does not belief in election result in moral laxity and pride? Paul says that God chose us “for salvation through sanctification by the Spirit” (2 Thess. 2:13 HCSB). We are to work out our salvation with fear and trembling, even though to be sure, it is God who is at work within us both to will and do His good pleasure (Phil. 2:12–13). The proper response to election is not pride but gratitude for God's amazing grace that saves eternally. Election, then, is neither a steeple from which we look in judgment on others, nor a pillow to sleep on. It is rather a stronghold in time of trial and a confession of praise to God's grace and to His glory.

Timothy George

EL-ELOHE-ISRAEL [Él-el ó' hù-Is' rá él] Divine name meaning “God, the God of Israel.” Name that Jacob gave the altar he set up in the land he bought near Shechem (Gen. 33:20). See Patriarchs.

EL-ELYON See El; God.

ELEMENTS, ELEMENTARY SPIRITS Greek term (ta stoicheia) used in a number of ways in ancient sources and in the NT.

First, “elements” could refer to the primary or elementary points of learning, especially for a religion or philosophy. This seems to have been the earliest meaning of the phrase and appears to be the way in which the writer of Hebrews uses it (cp. Heb. 5:12). Second, the term could refer to the four basic elements out of which all other materials were thought to have emerged: fire, air, water, and earth. Peter refers to the destruction of the elements in 2 Pet. 3:10. The term is also associated with the stars or other heavenly bodies, which were thought to consist of fire, the purest of the elements. Finally, the term came to be used in association with “elementary spiritbeings” who were thought by some to exercise a certain amount of control over the heavenly bodies—for either good or evil.

There are a number of different interpretations concerning how Paul uses the term (Gal. 4:3,9; Col. 2:8,20). The immediate context in Galatians favors “elementary spirits,” since Gal. 4:8–9 connects the stoicheia with “[beings] that by nature are not gods” (HCSB). One problem, however, is that no other evidence for this meaning of the term can be found prior to the second century. Further, the broader context equates returning to the Torah with returning to the stoicheia, which perhaps would favor equating the elements with philosophical principles or a nationalistic view of the Torah. On balance, Paul probably is using the term to refer to “elementary spirits,” but certainty eludes us.

C. Hal Freeman, Jr.

ELEPH [ע' לֶפֶח] (KJV) See Haeleph.

ELEPHANTS While elephants are not specifically referred to in the Bible, ivory is mentioned in connection with King Solomon, that ivory was among the riches he imported (1 Kings 10:22). Ivory tusks were used in trading among nations in Ezek. 27:15, and in Rev. 18:12 ivory is again mentioned among products traded or bought. See Ivory.

ELHANAN [עֵלְחָנָן] Personal name. In Hebrew, 2 Sam. 21:9 states the he rather than David killed Goliath (see 1 Sam. 17:50). But the parallel 1 Chron. 20:5 says Elhanan killed “Lahmi the brother of Goliath.” One explanation is that “Lahmi the brother of,” was inadvertently dropped from 2 Sam. 21:9 by a copyist. Less likely is that Elhanan was David's personal name, whereas David was his throne name. In that case, his father's name, Jesse, was mistakenly written as “Jaare-oregim,” the “oregim,” meaning “weaver,” mistakenly copied from the end of the verse (lit. “the beam of a weaver”). In 1 Chron. 20:5, Elhanan's father's name is given as “Jair,” only a slight variation from “Jaar.” Also See David.

ELI [עֵלִי] Personal name meaning “high.” The priest at Shiloh who became the custodian of the child Samuel (1 Sam. 1:3). He was the father of Hophni and Phinehas. After Samuel's birth, his mother Hannah brought him to the sanctuary at Shiloh in fulfillment of a vow she had made to the Lord. Eli thereby became the human agent largely responsible for the religious and spiritual training of the boy. When Samuel mistook the voice of God for the voice of Eli, Eli instructed him to ask the Lord to speak the next time he heard the voice (1 Sam. 3). Eli's death was precipitated by the news of the death of his sons and the capture of the ark of God by the Philistines (1 Sam. 4:18).

ELI, ELI, LAMA SABACHTHANI This cry of Jesus on the cross, traditionally known as the “fourth word from the cross,” means “My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?” (Matt. 27:46; Mark 15:34 HCSB). It is a quotation from Ps. 22:1. The Markan form, Eloi, is closer to Aramaic than Matthew's more Hebraic Eli.

This saying of Jesus from the cross strikes a dissonant chord for some Christians, because it seems to indicate that Jesus felt forsaken by the Father. There are several ways to consider the meaning of this passage in reverent faith. It is possible to interpret these words as a beautiful testimony to Jesus' love of His Bible, the OT, and His quoting of it in this hour of darkest crisis. In this case, such verses in Ps. 22 (5,7,8,12,14,18) indicate that Jesus sees Himself and His fate in this psalm. However, since the Gospels record only the first verse of the psalm and we do not know whether Jesus quoted the entire Psalm, this view may run the risk of not taking the phrase at face value.

Another view sees this cry as indicating a genuine forsaking of Jesus by the Father, a forsaking that was necessary for our redemption. This view leads some to questions about the nature of the godhead and theories of atonement that we cannot address in this brief discussion. Perhaps the most serious difficulty of this view is that it raises the question of whether the idea of God the Father turning His back on the obedient Son is consistent with the general biblical teaching of the steadfastness and faithfulness of God. Would He desert a trusting child in such an hour?

A view that takes into consideration the full humanity—as well as full divinity—of Jesus seems most helpful. Obviously Jesus felt deserted as He bore the burden of human sin and suffered the agony of crucifixion. This feeling of His death as a “ransom for many” may, indeed, have obscured for a time His feeling of closeness with the Father, so that even in dying He was tempted as we are. Rather than forsaking the Father in that moment, He cried out to Him in prayer.

ELIAB [ə li' əb] Personal name meaning “God is father.” 1. Leader of tribe of Zebulun under Moses (Num. 1:9). He brought the tribe's offering at the dedication of the altar (Num. 7:24). 2. Member of tribe of Reuben and father of Dathan and Abiram. See Abiram; Dathan. 3. First son of Jesse to pass by and be rejected when Samuel searched for king to replace Saul (1 Sam. 16:6). He fought in Saul's army (1 Sam. 17:13) and became angry at David's interest in fighting Goliath (1 Sam. 17:28). His daughter married King Rehoboam (2 Chron. 11:18). He is apparently called Elihu in 1 Chron. 27:18. 4. Levite in the line of Kohath and ancestor of Samuel (1 Chron. 6:27). The same person is apparently called Elihu in 1 Sam. 1:1 and Eliel in 1 Chron. 6:34. 5. Levite appointed as a temple musician under David (1 Chron. 15:18,20; 16:5). 6. Military leader from the tribe of Gad under David (1 Chron. 12:9).

ELIADA [ə li' ə dā] Personal name meaning “God has known.” 1. Son born to David after he established his rule in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:16). In 1 Chron. 14:7 he is listed as Beeliada (“Baal has known” or “the lord has known”). 2. Father of Rezon, who established himself as king of Damascus after David conquered Zobah (1 Kings 11:23). 3. Military commander of the tribe of Benjamin (2 Chron. 17:17) under King Jehoshaphat (873-848 B.C.).

ELIADAH [ə li' ə dāh] (KJV, 1 Kings 11:23) See Eliada.

ELIAH [ə li' əh] (KJV, 1 Chron. 8:27; Ezra 10:26) See Elijah.

ELIAHBA [ə li' əh bā] Personal name meaning “God hides in safety” or “my god is Chiba.” A leading soldier in David's army (2 Sam. 23:32).

ELIAKIM [E li' ə kīm] Personal name meaning “God will raise up.” 1. Son of Hilkiah who was in charge of the household of King Hezekiah of Judah (2 Kings 18:18). That responsibility had previously belonged to Shebna; Isa. 22:15–25 deals with the displacing of Shebna by Eliakim. 2. Son of Josiah who was placed on the throne of Judah by Pharaoh Neco of Egypt (2 Kings 23:34). The Pharaoh changed the name of Eliakim to Jehoiakim. The latter name is the one by which this individual is more widely known. See Jehoiakim. 3. Priest who was involved in the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem (Neh. 12:41). 4. Ancestor of Joseph, the husband of Mary (Matt. 1:13). 5. Son of Melea, mentioned in Luke's genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:30).

ELIAM [ə li'əm] Personal name meaning “God is an uncle or relative” or “God of the people.” 1. Father of Bathsheba (2 Sam. 11:3). The two parts of his name are reversed in 1 Chron. 3:5, becoming Ammiel. 2. Leading warrior under David (2 Sam. 23:34). The related list in 1 Chron. 11 does not have Eliam but in a similar position has Ahijah (“my brother is Yahweh”).

ELIAS [ə li'əs] NT spelling of Elijah (KJV), transliterating the Greek spelling. See Elijah.

ELIASAPH [ə li ə səph] Personal name meaning “God has added.” 1. Leader of the tribe of Gad under Moses (Num. 1:14). He presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (Num. 7:42). 2. Levite of the family of Gershon (Num. 3:24).

ELIASHIB [ə li ə shib] Personal name meaning “God repays or leads back.” 1. Descendant of David in Judah after the return from exile in Babylon (1 Chron. 3:24). 2. Leading priest under David (1 Chron. 24:12). 3. High priest in time of Nehemiah who led in rebuilding the sheep gate in the Jerusalem wall, a gate through which sheep were led to the nearby temple for sacrifice (Neh. 3:1). His house was built into the city wall (Neh. 3:20). He was the son of Joiakim and the father of Joiada (Neh. 12:10). His grandson married the daughter of Sanballat, who strongly opposed Nehemiah's efforts (Neh. 13:28), possibly indicating some tension between Nehemiah and the priestly leaders. He may be the Eliashib whose son had a room in the temple (Ezra 10:6). 4. Priest in the time of Nehemiah who administered the temple storerooms and provided a place for Tobiah, Nehemiah's strong opponent (Neh. 13:4–9). This may be the Eliashib of Ezra 10:6. 5. Levite and temple singer in Ezra's day who agreed to divorce his foreign wife to avoid tempting Israel to worship other gods (Ezra 10:24). 6. Two Israelites who agreed to divorce their foreign wives under Ezra's leadership (Ezra 10:27,36).

ELIATHAH [ə li' ə tháh] Personal name meaning “my God has come.” A temple musician appointed under David to play and prophesy (1 Chron. 25:4). He headed a division of temple workers (1 Chron. 25:27, where the Hebrew spelling of the name varies slightly). Many scholars of the Hebrew language think the names of the last nine sons of Heman in verse 4b originally formed a verse of a Hebrew psalm in which Eliathah would have meant “my God are You.”

ELIDAD [ə li' dād] Personal name meaning “God loved” or “my God is uncle or friend.” The name in Hebrew is a variant spelling of Eldad. Representative of tribe of Benjamin on committee that God chose to help Joshua and Eleazar divide the land of Canaan among the tribes (Num. 34:21). See Eldad.

ELIEHOENAI [Éli ɪ é hó é' nɪ] Personal name meaning “to Yahweh are my eyes” (cp. Ps. 123:2). 1. One of the temple porters or gatekeepers under David (1 Chron. 26:3). 2. One of the 12 clan heads who returned to Jerusalem from Babylon with Ezra (Ezra 8:4).

ELIEL [ə li' ɛl] Personal name meaning “my God is God” or “my God is El.” 1. Clan leader in the tribe of Manasseh east of the Jordan River (1 Chron. 5:23–24). 2. Levite and ancestor of the singer Heman (1 Chron. 6:34). 3. Member of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:20). 4. Another Benjaminite (1 Chron. 8:22). 5. Military leader under David (1 Chron. 11:46), not listed in 1 Sam. 23. 6. Another military leader under David not listed in 1 Sam. 23 (1 Chron. 11:47). 7. Warrior from the tribe of Gad who served under David in the wilderness (1 Chron. 12:11). 8. Chief Levite in the time of David (1 Chron. 15:9,11). 9. Overseer of temple offerings among the Levites (2 Chron. 31:13) under King Hezekiah (715-686 B.C.).

ELIENAI [Éli ɪ é' nɪ] Abbreviated form of the Hebrew personal name Eliehoenai. The abbreviated form's literal meaning is “my God, my eyes.” A member of the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:20). See Eliehoenai.

ELIEZER [Éli ɪ é' zər] Personal name meaning “God helps.” 1. Servant of Abram who would have been the patriarch's heir if Abram had remained childless (Gen. 15:2). 2. Second son of Moses and Zipporah (Exod. 18:4). 3. One of the sons of Becher the Benjamite (1 Chron. 7:8). 4. One of the priests who blew the trumpets when the ark of the covenant was brought to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 15:24). 5. A ruler of the Reubenites (1 Chron. 27:16). 6. Son of Dodavah, who prophesied against Jehoshaphat (2 Chron. 20:37). 7. One of the leaders whom Ezra sent for (Ezra 8:16). 8. Priest who put away his foreign wife (Ezra 10:18). 9. Levite who put away his foreign wife (Ezra 10:23). 10. Member of the clan of Harim who put away his foreign wife (Ezra 10:31). 11. Son of Jorim mentioned in the genealogy of Jesus (Luke 3:29).

ELIHOENAI [Él i hó e' ni] (KJV, Ezra 8:4) See Eliehoenai.

ELIHOREPH [Él i hó' réph] Personal name meaning “my God repays,” or “my God is the giver of the autumn harvest,” or borrowed from Egyptian, “Apis is my God.” One of Solomon's two royal scribes with his brother Ahijah (1 Kings 4:3). Their father may have been Egyptian. The name could indicate that Solomon's father-in-law (1 Kings 3:1) had helped him organize and staff his administration. Shisha, the name of Elihoreph's father, is the Egyptian word for scribe. REB takes Elihoreph as a title: “adjutant general.”

ELIHU [Él i' o' hù] Personal name meaning “he is God.” 1. Son of Barachel the Buzite who addressed Job after the latter's first three friends had ended their speeches (Job 32:2). Elihu's words fill Job 32–37. Interpreters differ with regard to the significance of Elihu's speeches. His words seem to be somewhat more insightful than those of the other three friends, yet they still prove finally unsatisfactory as an explanation of Job's suffering. See Job. 2. Samuel's great grandfather (1 Sam. 1:1). 3. Member of tribe of Manasseh who defected to David (1 Chron. 12:20). 4. Mighty military hero under David (1 Chron. 26:7). 5. David's brother in charge of the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 27:18).

ELIJAH [Él i' jäh] Personal name meaning “my God is Yah.” The prophet from the ninth century B.C. from Tishbe of Gilead in the Northern Kingdom has been called the grandest and the most romantic character that Israel ever produced (1 Kings 17:1–2 Kings 2:18). He was a complex man of the desert who counseled kings. His life is best understood when considered from four historical perspectives that at times are interrelated: his miracles, his struggle against baalism, his prophetic role, and his eschatological relationship to Messiah.

Miracles His first miracle was associated with his prophecy before King Ahab (1 Kings 17:1) in which he said there would be no rain or dew apart from his declaration. Immediately after the prophecy, he retreated to the brook Cherith where he was fed by ravens. His next refuge was Zarephath where he performed the miracle of raising the widow's dead son (1 Kings 17:17–24). Here he was first called “a man of God.”

On Mount Carmel his greatest public miracle involved his encounter with the 450 prophets of Baal and the 400 prophets of Asherah (1 Kings 18:19–40). The contest was to determine the true God. The false prophets called on their gods, and Elijah called on His God to see which would rain fire from heaven. After the false prophets failed to hear from their gods, Elijah wet the wood on his altar to the true God by pouring four jars of water over it three times. In response of Elijah's prayer, Yahweh rained fire from heaven to consume the wet wood. As a result of their deception, Elijah ordered the false prophets killed.

Elijah next prophesied that the drought was soon to end (1 Kings 18:41) after three rainless years. From Carmel, Elijah prayed. He sent his servant seven times to see if rain was coming. The seventh time a cloud the size of a hand appeared on the horizon. Ahab was told to flee before the storm. Elijah outran his chariot and the storm to arrive at Jezreel.

Baalism Interwoven in the life of Elijah is his struggle with Baalism. Jezebel, daughter of Ethbaal, king of Sidon and Tyre (1 Kings 16:31), was Ahab's wife and Israel's queen. She brought the worship of her god Baal into Ahab's kingdom. Even “Ahab served Baal a little” (2 Kings 10:18). The contest on Carmel showed a contrast between the contesting deities. Yahweh's power and Baal's impotence was further revealed through the drought. Jezebel planned revenge toward Elijah for ordering the false prophets slain, so Elijah retreated to Judah and finally Mount Horeb. There he observed the power of the wind, earthquake, and fire; but the Lord was not seen in these forces. In a small voice the Lord commanded him to go anoint Hazael king of Syria, Jehu king of Israel, and Elisha as his own successor (1 Kings 19:1–17).

Prophet His prophetic role constantly placed Elijah in opposition to the majority of the people of his nation. His prophetic confrontations involved King Ahab and later his son Ahaziah. Their toleration of polytheism was the ongoing reason for Elijah's prophetic denunciations.

Entrance to Elijah's cave near Tyre.

When Ahaziah fell and injured himself, he sent messengers to ask Baal-zebub (lord of flies) about his fate. Elijah intercepted them and sent word back to Ahaziah that he was soon to die (2 Kings 1). Ahaziah sent three different detachments of 50 soldiers each to arrest Elijah. The first two units were destroyed by fire from heaven. The captain of the third group pleaded for his life. He safely escorted Elijah to the king where he delivered the prophecy of his pending death personally.

Relationship to Messiah Elijah and Elisha were involved in the schools of the prophets when Elijah struck the waters of the Jordan and they parted to allow their crossing (2 Kings 2:1–12).

Malachi promised God would send Elijah the prophet before the coming “day of the LORD” (Mal. 4:5). John the Baptist was spoken of as the one who would go before Messiah “in the spirit and power” of Elijah (Luke 1:17 HCSB). John personally denied that he was literally Elijah reincarnate (John 1:21,25). Some considered Jesus to be Elijah (Matt. 16:14; Mark 6:15).

The Chapel of Elijah on Mount Sinai, commemorating the traditional site to which Elijah fled.

Elijah appeared along with Moses on the Mount of Transfiguration with Jesus to discuss His “departure.” Here Peter suggested that three tabernacles be built for Jesus, Moses, and Elijah (Matt. 17:4; Mark 9:5; Luke 9:33).

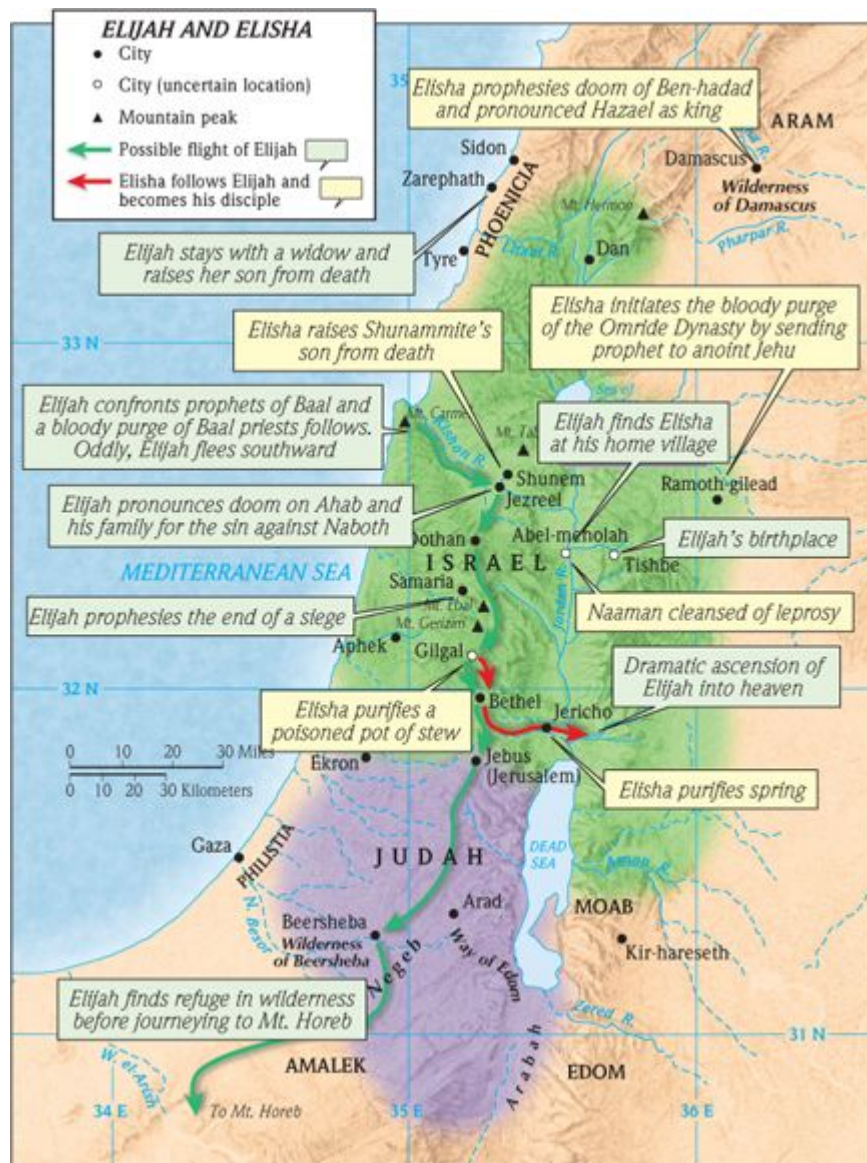

The two witnesses referred to in Rev. 11:6 are not identified by name, but their capacity “to close the sky so that it does not rain” (HCSB) leads many to conclude they are Moses and Elijah.

Nelson Price

ELIKA [ə li' ká] Personal name meaning “my God has arisen” or “my God has vomited.” One of David's military heroes from the village of Harod (2 Sam. 23:25). He does not appear in the parallel list in 1 Chron. 11.

ELIM [E'lim] Place-name meaning “trees.” One of the encampments of the Israelites after the exodus from Egypt (Exod. 15:27). It was the first place where they found water. It had 12 wells of water and 70 palm trees (Num. 33:9). Its exact location is unknown.

ELIMELECH [ə'lim' ə'lək] Personal name meaning “my God is king.” Husband of Naomi, who led his family from Bethlehem to Moab to escape famine and then died in Moab. This prepared the scene for the book of Ruth (Ruth 1:2–3; cp. 4:3).

ELIOENAI [El ʔ o e' ni] Personal name meaning “to Yo [Yahweh] are my eyes,” a Hebrew spelling variant of Eliehoenai. See Eliehoenai. 1. Postexilic descendant of David, maintaining Israel's royal line (1 Chron. 3:23–24). 2. Clan leader of the tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:36). 3. Grandson of Benjamin and thus great grandson of Jacob (1 Chron. 7:8). 4. Priest who agreed under Ezra's leadership to divorce his foreign wife to protect the community from false worship (Ezra 10:22). 5. Israelite who agreed to divorce his foreign wife (Ezra 10:27). 6. Priest who led in the service of dedication and thanksgiving for the completion of repairs of the wall around Jerusalem (Neh. 12:41).

ELIPHAL [ə li' phāl] Personal name meaning “God has judged.” Military hero under David (1 Chron. 11:35). In 2 Sam. 23:34 the name appears as Eliphelet. See Eliphelet.

ELIPHALET [ə li' ph' ə lēt] (KJV, 2 Sam. 5:16; 1 Chron. 14:7). See Eliphelet.

ELIPHAZ [El ʔ phāz] Personal name meaning “my god is gold.” 1. Son of Esau by his wife Adah, the daughter of Elon the Hittite (Gen. 36:4). Eliphaz became the ancestor of the chieftains of several Edomite clans (Gen. 36:15–16). 2. One of three men who visited Job and engaged the sufferer in dialogue (Job 2:11). He is identified as a Temanite, meaning he was from Teman in Edom. His recorded speeches to Job are marked by a simplistic theological traditionalism and a tone of moral superiority. He may have been a descendant of Eliphaz the son of Esau. See Job.

ELIPHELEH [ə li' ph' ə lēh] (KJV) or ELIPHELEHU [ə li' ph' ə lē hū] Personal name meaning “God treated him with distinction.” Levite and musician in temple under David (1 Chron. 15:18,21).

ELIPHELET [ə li' ph' ə lēt] Personal name meaning “God is deliverance.” 1. David's son born in Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:16). He is apparently listed twice in both 1 Chron. 3:6,8 and 14:5,7, with an abbreviated Hebrew spelling in 14:5. 2. Descendant of Saul and Jonathan in the tribe of Benjamin (1 Chron. 8:39). 3. Clan leader who accompanied Ezra on his return from exile in Babylon (Ezra 8:13). 4. Man who divorced his foreign wife under Ezra's leadership to avoid false worship among God's people (Ezra 10:33). 5. Famous warrior under David (2 Sam. 23:34).

ELISABETH [ɛˈlɪsəˈbɛθ] Personal name meaning “my God is good fortune” or “my God has sworn an oath.” A woman descended from Aaron who was the wife of Zacharias the priest (Luke 1:5). Both she and her husband are described in Luke 1:6 as being noteworthy examples of piety and devotion to the Lord. However, she was barren in her old age. God removed from her the stigma of childlessness, and she became the mother of John the Baptist, forerunner of Christ. She also was kin to Mary the mother of Jesus, but the Bible does not indicate the exact degree of relationship between the two women. See Annunciation; John.

ELISEUS [ɛlɪˈseʊs] KJV spelling of Elisha, following the Greek transliteration of the Hebrew, in Luke 4:27. See Elisha.

ELISHA [əˈlɪˈʃɑː] Personal name meaning “my God is salvation.” A ninth century B.C. Israelite prophet, son of Shaphat of Abel-meholah (1 Kings 19:16).

His Name and Call Experience Elisha was plowing one day when “Elijah passed over to him and threw his mantle on him” (1 Kings 19:19 NASB). This action symbolically manifested God's plan to bestow the prophetic powers of Elijah upon Elisha. The chosen one understood the call of God for, “he left the oxen and ran after Elijah” (1 Kings 19:20). That Elisha felt the call of prophetic succession is again clear following Elijah's dramatic ascent into heaven. There Elisha “took up the mantle of Elijah that fell from him” (2 Kings 2:13).

The beginning of Elisha's ministry should be dated to the last years of King Ahab's rule (1 Kings 19) or approximately 850 B.C. The prophet then served faithfully during the reigns of Ahaziah (about 853 B.C.), Jehoram or Joram (852 B.C.), Jehu (ca. 841 B.C.), Jehoahaz (ca. 814 B.C.), and Jehoash or Joash (798 B.C.).

His Miracles After Elijah insisted to his chosen successor that he, “Ask what I shall do for you, before I am taken from you,” Elisha answered, “Let a double portion of spirit be upon me” (2 Kings 2:9). Taking up the mantle of the departed prophet, he parted the Jordan River. Following this miracle the prophetic order or “sons of the prophets” declared, “The spirit of Elijah rests on Elisha” (2 Kings 2:15).

Soon thereafter, Elisha made bad water wholesome (2 Kings 2:19–22). His reputation soon assumed so sacred an aura that harassment of the prophet merited severe punishment. For mocking the bald prophet, 42 boys were attacked by two she-bears (2 Kings 2:23–24).

The prophet used his power to provide a widow with an abundance of valuable oil to save her children from slavery (2 Kings 4:1–7). He made a poisonous pottage edible (2 Kings 4:38–41), fed a hundred men by multiplying limited resources (2 Kings 4:42–44), and miraculously provided water for thirsting armies (2 Kings 3:13–22). Once he made an iron ax head float (2 Kings 6:5–7).

Some of the miracles of Elisha are quite well known and loved. This barren woman and her husband who had graciously opened their home to the prophet had in turn been given a son by the Lord. One day while the boy worked in the field with his father, he suffered an apparent heatstroke and died. The compassion and tenacious hope of the mother met its reward when she sought and found the man of God and pleaded for help. God's power through Elisha raised the boy from the dead (2 Kings 4:8–37).

Elisha's spring at Jericho which is the source for Elisha's well (located in the covered area).

Yet another well-known story is the healing of Naaman the leper and the subsequent affliction of Gehazi the dishonest servant of Elisha (2 Kings 5:1–27). The miraculous powers of the prophet were prominently displayed still further in the war between Syria and Israel. The Syrian soldiers were blinded, then made to see. Then, at last, divine intervention totally foiled the Syrian siege of Samaria (2 Kings 6:8–7:20).

Elisha's power did not end at death. For when a dead man was thrown into Elisha's grave and touched his bones, “he revived and stood up on his feet” (2 Kings 13:21).

In carrying out the second and third commands of the “still small voice” to Elijah (1 Kings 19:11–16), Elisha enhanced his legacy beyond the realm of miracle worker. He played a major role in Hazael becoming king of Syria (2 Kings 8:7–15) and also in the anointing of Jehu as king of Israel (2 Kings 9:1–13).

Powerful enough to perform miracles and appoint kings, yet sensitive enough to weep over the fate of Israel (2 Kings 8:11–12), Elisha, disciple and successor to Elijah, proved to be both prophet and statesman.

J. Randall O'Brien

ELISHAH [ə li' shāh] Place-name of unknown meaning. Elishah, or Alashiya as it appears in Hittite, Akkadian, and Ugaritic texts, is a name for all or part of the island of Cyprus, which exported copper and purple cloth. Others would locate it as the present Haghio Kyrko in Crete. Among the Amarna letters from Egypt are letters from the king of Elishah to the pharaoh mentioning copper exports. The Greeks established a colony on Cyprus by about 1500 B.C. This would explain the relationship of Elishah as a son of Javan or the Greeks in the Table of Nations (Gen. 10:4; cp. 1 Chron. 1:7). Ezekiel noted in his lament over Tyre that Tyre had imported from Elishah the purple fabric for which Tyre was famous (Ezek. 27:7).

ELISHAMA [ə lish' ə má] Personal name meaning “God heard.” 1. Leader of the tribe of Ephraim under Moses in the wilderness (Num. 1:10). He presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (Num. 7:48–53; cp. 1 Chron. 7:26). 2. David's son born after he captured and moved to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:16). He is apparently listed twice in 1 Chron. 3:6,8, though 1 Chron. 14:5 reads the first Elishama as Elishua, as in 2 Sam. 5:15. 3. Royal scribe under King Jehoiakim (609-597 B.C.). Baruch's scroll of Jeremiah's preaching was stored in Elishama's room before it was taken to be read to the king (Jer. 36:12–21). 4. Ancestor with royal bloodlines of Ishmael, the person who murdered Gedaliah and took over political control of Judah immediately after Babylon had destroyed Jerusalem (2 Kings 25:25). 5. Descendant of the clan of Jerahmeel in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:41). 6.

Priest under King Jehoshaphat (873-848 B.C.). He taught the book of the law to the people of Judah at the king's request (2 Chron. 17:7–9).

ELISHAPHAT [ə lish' ə phāt] Personal name meaning “God had judged.” Military captain who helped Jehoiada, the priest, overthrow Queen Athaliah and establish Joash (835-796 B.C.) as king of Judah (2 Chron. 23:1).

ELISHEBA [ə lish' ə bə] Personal name meaning “God is good fortune.” Wife of Aaron, the high priest (Exod. 6:23).

ELISHUA [Él ɪ shu' ə] Personal name meaning “God is salvation.” David's son born after he captured and moved to Jerusalem (2 Sam. 5:15). See Elishama 2.

ELIUD [ə li' ūd] Personal name meaning “God is high and mighty.” Great, great grandfather of Joseph, the earthly father of Jesus (Matt. 1:14–15).

ELIZABETH [ə liz' ə bēth] Americanized spelling used in modern translations of KJV Elisabeth. See Elisabeth.

ELIZAPHAN [Él ɪ zə' phān] Personal name meaning “God has hidden or treasured up.” 1. Clan leader among the sons of Kohath among the Levites in the wilderness with Moses (Num. 3:30; cp. 1 Chron. 15:8; 2 Chron. 29:13). 2. Representative of tribe of Zebulun on the council to help Joshua and Eleazar divide the land among the tribes (Num. 34:25).

ELIZUR [ə li' zūr] Personal name meaning “God is a rock.” Leader of tribe of Reuben under Moses in the wilderness (Num. 1:5). He presented the tribe's offerings at the dedication of the altar (Num. 7:30–35).

ELKANA [Él kə' nah] Personal name meaning “God created.” 1. One of the sons of Korah, the priest (Exod. 6:24). 2. Son of Jeroham. He became the father of Samuel (1 Sam. 1:1). 3. Person named in a list of Levites (1 Chron. 6:23–26). 4. Father of Asa who is mentioned in a list of Levites (1 Chron. 9:16). 5. Benjaminite warrior who deserted Saul and joined David (1 Chron. 12:6). 6. One of two gatekeepers for the ark of the covenant (1 Chron. 15:23). 7. An official in the service of King Ahaz of Judah who was assassinated by Zichri the Ephraimite (2 Chron. 28:7). See Samuel.

ELKOSH [Ēl' kōsh] Place-name of unknown meaning. Home of Nahum the prophet (Nah. 1:1). Although several traditions exist that identify various places as the site of Elkosh, its location remains unknown. That it was in Judea is fairly likely.

ELLASAR [Ēl lā' sār] Babylonian place-name of unknown meaning. The capital city of King Arioch, who joined the eastern coalition against Sodom and Gomorrah, resulting in Abraham's involvement in war (Gen. 14:1). Identification with Larsa in Babylon was based on a false identification of Arioch. The Mari texts mention Ilanzura between Carchemish and Harran. Other scholars suggest Ellasar is an abbreviation for TilAsurri on the Euphrates River. Others suggest it is located on the southern coast of the Black Sea near Pontus in Asia Minor. Thus the question of exact identification still remains open.

ELM See Plants; Terebinth.

ELMADAM [Ēl mā' dām] or ELMODAM [Ēl mó' dām] (KJV) Personal name of unknown meaning. An ancestor of Jesus Christ (Luke 3:28).

ELNAAM [Ēl nā' ām] Personal name meaning "God is a delight." Father of military leaders under David (1 Chron. 11:46). He is not listed in 2 Sam. 23.

ELNATHAN [Ēl nā' thán] Personal name meaning "God has given." 1. Father of King Jehoiachin's mother (2 Kings 24:8). 2. Possibly to be identified with 1. He was the member of King Jehoiakim's advisory staff who brought the prophet Uriah back to the king from Egypt for punishment (Jer. 26:22–23). He tried to prevent the king from burning Baruch's scroll of Jeremiah's preaching (Jer. 36:12–26). 3. Three men of the same name plus a "Nathan" are listed in Ezra 8:16 as part of the delegation Ezra sent to search for Levites to return from Babylon to Jerusalem with him. Many Bible students feel that copying of the manuscripts has introduced extra names into the list.

ELOI [ə lō' ī] Greek transliteration of Aramaic 'elohi, "my God." See Eli, Eli, Lama Sabachthani.

ELON [E' lōn] Personal name and place-name meaning "great tree" or "tree of god" (cp. Gen. 12:6; Judg. 9:6,37). See Terebinth. 1. The Hittite father of Esau's wife Bashemath (Gen. 26:34). 2. Site where Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, was buried, called "Allon-bachuth" or "the oak of weeping" (Gen. 35:8). See Allonbachuth. The same point may be referred to as the "oak of Tabor" (1 Sam. 10:3) or the "palm tree of Deborah" (Judg. 4:5). See Bochim. 3. The Hittite father of Adah, Esau's wife (Gen. 36:2), Bashemath being listed as Ishmael's daughter (36:3). See Basemath. 4. Son of Zebulun and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:14). A clan in Zebulun was thus named for him (Num. 26:26) 5. City in tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:33), often transliterated into English as Allon. See Allon. The reference may simply be to a large tree that served as a boundary marker. 6. City in tribal territory of Dan (Josh. 19:43). It may be located at Khirbet Wadi Alin. It is probably the same place as Elon-beth-hanan (1 Kings 4:9), though some read Ajalon and Bethhanan or "Elon, and Beth-hanan" (REB). 7. Judge from the tribe of Zebulun (Judg. 12:11–12). 8. A leader in the tribe of Simeon (1 Chron. 4:37).

ELON-BETH-HANAN [E' lōn-bēth-hā' nān] See Elon.

ELON-MEONENIM [E' lōn-mē ōn' ə nīm] See Diviner's Oak.

ELONITE [E' lōn īt] Citizen of Elon. See Elon.

ELOTH [E' lōth] Variant spelling of Elath. See Elath.

ELPAAL [Eī pā' āl] Personal name meaning "God has made." A clan name in the tribe of Benjamin, mentioned twice in 1 Chron. 8 (vv. 11–12,18). Bible students debate whether the references refer to the same clan ancestor or to two individuals. It is also uncertain whether he or his sons receive credit for building Ono and Lod(v. 12).

ELPALET [Eī pā' ēt] (KJV) See Elpelet.

ELPARAN [Él pá' rân] Place-name meaning “tree of Paran.” The place where the eastern coalition of kings extended its victory over the Horites (Gen. 14:6). It is apparently a place in or near Elath. See Elath; Paran.

ELPELET [Él pèl' èl] David's son born after he captured and moved to Jerusalem (1 Chron. 14:5). This is apparently an abbreviated spelling of Eliphelet. See Eliphelet.

EL-SHADDAI See El; God.

ELTEKE or ELTEKEH [Él' tē kē] Place-name meaning “place of meeting,” “place of hearing,” or “plea for rain.” A city in Dan (Josh. 19:44) assigned to the Levites (Josh. 21:23). Egyptian pharaohs claim to have conquered an Altaku, which may be the same. Sennacherib of Assyria met an Egyptian army there about 701 B.C. It has been variously located at Khirbet el-Muqenna on the eastern edge of the coastal plain, at Tell eshShalaf, and at Tell el-Melat, northwest of Gezer.

ELTEKON [Él' tē kōn] Place-name meaning “securing advice.” Village in tribal territory of Judah in southern hill country (Josh. 15:59). Its location is unknown, though some have suggested Khirbet ed-Deir, west of Bethlehem.

ELTOLAD [Él' tō' lād] Place-name meaning “plea for a child.” Village in tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:30), given to tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:4). First Chronicles 4:29 apparently abbreviates it as Tolad. Its location is not known.

ELUL [ə' lūl] Sixth month of Hebrew year, name taken over from Akkadian. It included parts of August and September. See Neh. 6:15.

ELUZAI [ə lū' zā] Personal name meaning “God is my strength.” A member of King Saul's tribe of Benjamin, who became a military leader for David, while he lived as a fugitive in Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:5).

ELYMAS [Él' ŷ mās] Personal name possibly meaning “wise.” A magician and false prophet also known as Bar-jesus (Acts 13:6–11). At Paphos on the island of Cyprus, Elymas tried to dissuade the deputy Sergius Paulus from listening to the words of Barnabas and Paul. He was denounced by Paul and stricken temporarily blind. See Sergius Paulus.

ELYON See El; God.

ELZABAD [Él zà' bád] Personal name meaning “God made a gift.” 1. Soldier who fought for David while he was a fugitive in Ziklag (1 Chron. 12:12). 2. Levite and grandson of Obed-edom, identified as a valiant man (1 Chron. 26:7). He was a porter or gatekeeper in the temple.

ELZAPHAN [Él zà' phān] Personal name meaning “God has hidden or treasured up.” An abbreviated form of Elizaphan. A son of Uzziel, Aaron's uncle (Exod. 6:22). He helped carry the dead bodies of Nadab and Abihu out of the wilderness camp after God punished them (Lev. 10:4–5).

EMBALMING Process of preserving bodies from decay. Embalming originated in Egypt and was seldom used by the Hebrews. The practice is rarely mentioned in the Bible, and the human remains unearthed in Palestinian tombs generally show no signs of having been embalmed. In Gen. 50:2–3 it is recorded that Joseph ordered the embalming of Jacob's body and that “physicians” required 40 days to perform the process. Verse 26 says Joseph was embalmed and laid to rest in Egypt. The embalming of these two patriarchs testifies both to their importance in the community and to plans to remove their bodies for burial in Canaan (Gen. 50:13; Exod. 13:19).

Related passages including 2 Chron. 16:14 describe the burial of Asa and the John 19:39–40 account of Jesus' burial. The use of spices mentioned in both of these passages did not constitute embalming but ceremonial purification.

The Egyptian art of mummification was an elaborate version of embalming that required 70 days for completion.

Joe Haag

EMEK-KEZIZ [E' mĕk-ke' zĭz] Place-name meaning “the cutoff valley” or “the valley of gravel.” It is listed as one of the cities assigned to the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. 18:21). Its location is not known.

EMERALD See Minerals and Metals.

EMERODS Archaic form of the word “hemorrhoids” used by the KJV for the disease(s) in Deut. 28:27 and 1 Sam. 5–6. It is impossible to identify the disease with certainty. Whatever its precise nature, the disease was regarded as incurable and fatal. Modern speech translations are agreed that the malady is likely not hemorrhoids. The underlying Hebrew term is rendered tumors except for the passage in Deuteronomy where NRSV and TEV opt for ulcers or sores. The presence of tumors associated with an infestation of mice has suggested bubonic plague to some interpreters. On the basis of the earliest Greek OT reading, the NIV includes the margin reading “tumors of the groin.”

EMIM [E' mĭm] or EMITES [E' mĭts] (NIV) National name meaning “frightening ones.” They lost a war to the eastern coalition of kings (Gen. 14:6) and are identified with a place in northern Moab, Shaveh Kiriathaim. They were ancient giants or Rephaim (Deut. 2:10–11). See Rephaim.

EMMANUEL [Ēm măn' ū ʔĭ] See Immanuel.

EMMAUS [Ēm mǎ' ūs] Place-name meaning “hot baths.” A village that was the destination of two of Jesus' disciples on the day of His resurrection (Luke 24:13). As they traveled, they were joined by a person whom they later realized was the risen Christ. Emmaus was about 60 furlongs (approximately seven miles) from Jerusalem. That statement is the only clue to its location. As many as four sites have been proposed as the location of Emmaus, but certainty is not possible. See Resurrection.

EMMOR [Ēm' mōr] (KJV, Acts 7:16) See Hamor.

EMPEROR WORSHIP Practice of assigning the status of deity to current or deceased rulers.

Old Testament Although the term “emperor worship” is usually applied to the Roman cult, there were similar beliefs and practices in OT times. In Egypt, for example, the current ruler was considered the incarnation of the god Horus, son of Re, and at death he became Osiris. The most obvious example of emperor worship in the OT is the well-known story of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego (Dan. 3). King Nebuchadnezzar made an image of gold, presumably of himself, and commanded everyone to fall down and worship the image or be killed (3:5–6). Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego refused to commit idolatry by worshiping the image (3:16–18). They were thrown into a furnace but were not burned (3:27). Thereafter, Nebuchadnezzar permitted them to worship their God unhindered (3:29). See Gods, Pagan.

New Testament Although the Greeks believed the gods could appear as men, (cp. Acts 14:12–13), they usually rejected the deification of rulers. Yet, Alexander the Great began to refer to himself as “son of Zeus” after encountering the priest of Amun in Egypt. After his burial in Alexandria, a temple and cult were dedicated to him there, which spread to Asia Minor and even Athens. The Ptolemies and Seleucids, who considered themselves heirs of his empire, also considered themselves heirs of his divinity and built temples in their names. This ruler cult was also inherited by the Roman Empire. In Ephesus in 48 B.C., Julius Caesar was decreed “god on earth, descended from Ares and Aphrodite, and universal savior of human life.” After his death the people of Rome echoed this declaration, and the Senate made it official in 42 B.C., building an altar to him. Again in the Eastern provinces, Julius Caesar's adopted son and heir of the empire, Octavian, who became known as Augustus, was likewise worshipped. His birthday was celebrated as “the beginning of good news [euangelia]” for the world, and temples were dedicated to “Rome and Augustus.” Then like his predecessor, at Augustus's death in 14 B.C. he took his place in Rome among the gods.

The emperors Tiberius and Claudius likewise waited until their deaths for deification, but Tiberius's successor Caligula and Claudius's successor Nero were not so patient. Caligula represented himself as Helios the sun god, and Nero claimed the designation Apollo. Domitian (A.D. 81–96) even issued his orders as coming from a god. He built a temple with a huge statue of himself in Ephesus.

Forum and temple of Augustus in Rome—the major center of emperor worship.

Determined to return his empire to its traditional Roman religion, Domitian was especially vicious toward Christians. But they were also victims of the royal cult during the reigns of Nero and other Roman emperors. Persecution of Christians was severe, partly because of gross misconceptions regarding the practice of the Christian faith. Christians were considered undesirable and were vigorously rooted out. When on trial, if they worshiped the pagan gods, that is, the emperor and the imperial cult, they would be freed. If not, they would suffer all manner of punishments and death. All the suspected Christian had to do was sprinkle a few sacrificial grains of incense into the eternal flame burning in front of the statue of the emperor. Since the punishments were so horrible and the means of escape so easy, many Christians gave in. Many did not and were burned alive, killed by lions in the arena, or crucified.

A specific NT example of emperor worship is the worship of the beast in the book of Revelation. Revelation 13 speaks of a beast that is given ruling authority. An image is made of the beast, and all are commanded to worship it (13:4,12,14–15; see also Dan. 8:4,8–12). See Rome and the Roman Empire.

Donna R. Ridge and E. Ray Clendenen

ENAIM [ə nā' ɪm] or ENAM [ɛ' nām] Place-name meaning “two eyes or springs.” A village near Timnah, where Tamar seduced Judah (Gen. 38:14). It is probably the same as Enam in the tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:34). The exact location is not known. See Timnah.

ENAN [ɛ' nān] Personal name meaning “eyes or springs.” Father of Ahira, the leader of the tribe of Naphtali under Moses (Num. 1:15). See Ahira.

ENCHANTER See Divination and Magic.

EN-DOR [ɛn' dɔr] Place-name meaning “spring of Dor,” that is, “spring of settlement.” 1. Home of witch who brought up Samuel from the grave (1 Sam. 28:7). Psalm 83:10 says Jabin died there (cp. Judg. 4–5). It is modern Khirbet Safsafe, three miles south of Mount Tabor. 2. City tribe of Manasseh claimed but could not conquer (Josh. 17:11; cp. Judg. 1:27).

ENDURANCE See Perseverence; Steadfastness

ENEAS [ə nē' əs] Variant spelling of Aeneas. See Aeneas.

EN-EGLAIM [ɛn-ɛg' la ɪm] Place-name meaning “spring of the two calves.” A spring near the Dead Sea where Ezekiel predicted a miracle, the salt waters being made fresh and becoming a paradise for fishing (Ezek. 47:10). It is apparently Ain Feshcha on the western coast of the Dead Sea.

ENEMY Adversary or foe; one who dislikes or hates another and seeks to harm the person. Sometimes referring to an individual opponent or to a hostile force, either a nation or an army.

The natural inclination of all people is to hate their enemies. Some have even misconstrued God's law to teach hatred. Jesus taught rather to love one's enemies and to seek their good (Matt. 5:43–47). This is also the teaching of the OT (Prov. 24:17; 25:21).

In the Bible a person who disobeys divine commands is declared to be God's enemy. Paul referred to sinners as the enemies of God (Rom. 5:10). Job felt that God had become his enemy, too (Job 13:24). Because of this severed relationship, God has made provision for our forgiveness in the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Satan is also called “the adversary” (1 Tim. 5:14–15 HCSB). He has revealed himself as such throughout history by seeking to hurt men and women, leading them away from God.

The greatest and final enemy is death itself (1 Cor. 15:26). It is feared by all because of its finality and unknown nature. But the Bible teaches that Jesus has “abolished” death once for all (2 Tim. 1:10). Those who have trusted Christ for the salvation He freely gives need not fear death.

Bradley S. Butler

EN-GANNIM [En-gán' ním] Place-name meaning “the spring of gardens.” 1. Town in the tribal territory of Judah located in the Shephalah (Josh. 15:34). It has been located at modern Beit Jemal, about two miles south of Beth-shemesh or at ‘umm Giina one mile southwest of Beth-shemesh. 2. Town in tribal territory of Issachar designated as city for Levites (Josh. 19:21; 21:29). Anem (1 Chron. 6:73) is apparently an alternate spelling. The same place may be meant in 2 Kings 9:27 by Beth Haggan (NIV, REB, NRSV) or the “garden house” (KJV, NASB). It is located at modern Jenin west of Beth-shean and about 65 miles north of Jerusalem.

EN-GEDI [En-gè' dī] Place-name meaning “place of the young goat.” A major oasis along the western side of the Dead Sea about 35 miles southeast of Jerusalem. The springs of En-gedi are full, and the vegetation is semitropical. Both biblical and extra-biblical sources describe Engedi as a source of fine dates, aromatic plants used in perfumes, and medicinal plants (Song 1:14). It was a chief source of balsam, an important plant used for perfumes, and a major source of income for the area. En-gedi apparently lay on a caravan route that led from the east shore of the Dead Sea around to its south, then up the west side to En-ge-di. From there the road went up to Tekoa and then to Jerusalem.

En-ge-di, also called Hazazon-tamar (2 Chron. 20:2), was inhabited by Amorites in the time of Abraham and was subjugated by Chedorlaomer (Gen. 14:7). In the tribal allotments, it was given to Judah and was in the district of Judah known as the wilderness district (Josh. 15:62). When David was fleeing from Saul, he hid in the area of Engedi (1 Sam. 23:29). Saul was in a cave near En-ge-di when David cut off a piece of his robe but spared his life (1 Sam. 24). During the reign of Jehoshaphat, Moabites, Ammonites, and others gathered at Engedi to attack Judah (2 Chron. 20:1–2).

Recent excavations at En-ge-di have uncovered a fortress belonging to the period of the monarchy, a workshop used in producing perfumes, and a sanctuary belonging to the Chalcolithic or early Bronze Age.

Joel F. Drinkard, Jr.

One of few natural waterfalls in Israel is located at En-gedi on the west side of the Dead Sea.

ENGINE Catapult or battering ram. See Arms and Armor.

ENGRAVE To impress deeply, to carve. Many materials were engraved including clay writing tablets (Isa. 8:1), metal, precious gems, stone (Zech. 3:9), and wood. Engraving was frequently done with an iron pen, a stylus, sometimes with a diamond point (Job 19:24; Jer. 17:1). Signet rings engraved with the sign or symbol of the owner were quite common throughout the ancient world (Gen. 38:18; Esther 3:12; Jer. 22:24). In fact, “like the engravings of a signet” ring or cylinder is a set phrase used to describe the various engraved gems of the high priest's vestments (Exod. 28:11,21,36; 39:6,14). The Hebrew words translated “engrave” are used both for carving wood and working with precious stones in the construction of the tabernacle and temple (Exod. 31:5; 35:33; 1 Kings 6:18,35; 2 Chron. 2:7). A graven image (Exod. 20:4) is a carved idol (as opposed to one cast in a mold).

EN-HADDAH [Ēn-hād' dah] City in tribal lot of Issachar (Josh. 19:21). It is apparently el-Hadetheh about six miles east of Mount Tabor.

EN-HAKKORE [Ēn-hāk' kōr rə] Place-name meaning “spring of the partridge” or “spring of the caller.” Place where God gave Samson water after he threw down the jawbone he had used to kill a thousand Philistines (Judg. 15:18–19). It is near Lehi, or literally translated, “Jawbone,” which is probably near Beth-shemesh.

EN-HAZOR [Ēn-hā' zōr] Place-name meaning “spring of the enclosed village.” A fortified city in the tribal territory of Naphtali (Josh. 19:37). It may be located at Khirbet Hazireh, west of Kadesh. Others would locate it southwest of Kedesh on the border joining Naphtali and Asher.

EN-MISHPAT [Ēn-mish' pát] Place-name meaning “spring of judgment.” Another name for Kadesh, where the eastern coalition of kings defeated the Amalekites and Amorites. The location is usually called Kadesh-barnea and identified with the oasis now called ain Hudeirat. See Kadesh-barnea.

ENOCH [Ē' nōk] Personal name meaning “dedicated.” 1. The son of Jared who was taken up to God without dying (Gen. 5:18). He became the father of Methuselah. Enoch lived in such close fellowship with God that he was translated into the presence of God without dying. Hebrews 11:5 attributes his translation to faith. According to Jude 14, he prophesied. The name of Enoch is associated with a large body of ancient extrabiblical literature. See Genesis; Resurrection; Apocalyptic; Apocrypha; Pseudepigrapha. 2. Son of Cain for whom Cain built a city and named it (Gen. 4:17–18).

ENON CITY [E' nōn Citi] TEV translation of Hazar-enan (Ezek. 47:17). See Hazar-enan.

ENOS [E' nōs] or ENOSH [E' nōsh] Personal name meaning “humanity” or “a man.” Son of Seth and therefore the grandson of Adam (Gen. 4:26). The period following his birth is identified as the time when people began to worship Yahweh. See Gen. 5:6–11.

EN-RIMMON [Ēn-rim' mōn] Place-name meaning “spring of the pomegranate.” A town in Judah (Neh. 11:29) where people lived in Nehemiah's day (about 445 B.C.). Ain and Rimmon or Remmon appear as separate cities in the tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:32), settled by the tribe of Simeon (Josh. 19:7). These two are sometimes read as one city (19:7 RSV but not NRSV), but this makes the numbers of the cities in the lists inaccurate. It is located at Khirbet er-Ramamin, about two miles south of Lahav

EN-ROGEL [Ēn-rō' gēl] Place-name meaning “spring of the fuller” or “spring of the foot.” A border town between the tribal territory of Judah (Josh. 15:7) and that of Benjamin (Josh. 18:16). Jonathan and Ahimaaz, the priests' sons, stayed at En-rogel as messengers to relay to David what the priests might learn from Absalom when he took over Jerusalem from his father (2 Sam 17:17). Adonijah staged a party there to proclaim himself as David's successor as king of Judah (1 Kings 1:9). En-rogel lay near Jerusalem where the Kidron and Hinnom Valleys met at modern Bir Ayyub.

EN-SHEMESH [Ēn-shē' mēsh] Place-name meaning “spring of the sun.” Town on border between tribal territories of Judah (Josh. 15:7) and Benjamin (Josh. 18:17). It is located at Ain el-Hod, “the spring of the apostles,” about two miles east of Jerusalem on the eastern edge of Bethany.

En-rogel with the traditional site of Jacob's well located under the dome in the center of the photo.

EN-TAPPUAH [Ēn-tāp pū' ah] Place-name meaning “spring of apple.” A spring near the town of Tappuah which marked the border of the tribe of Manasseh and Ephraim (Josh. 17:7). See Tappuah.

ENTRANCE ROOM See Arch.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION The earth and its resources belong to God (Lev. 25:23; Job 41:11; Pss. 24:1; 89:11) yet have been entrusted to people (Gen. 1:28–30; 2:15; 9:1–4; cp. Deut. 8:7–10). For this reason, people have a sacred responsibility to care for the earth (cp. Luke 12:41–48) with the same diligence that God cares for it (Deut. 11:12; Pss. 65:5–13; 104:10–22). Adam's initial activity in the garden of Eden consisted of tilling the ground (Gen. 2:15) and naming the animals (Gen. 2:19–20), thus signaling his active stewardship of creation.

The Mosaic law included statutes which seem to have been aimed specifically at protecting the environment. Among these were injunctions that the land was to lay fallow every seven years (Exod. 23:10–11; Lev. 25:3–7) and that fruit was not to be picked from trees under four years of age (Lev. 19:23–25).

The connection between God's covenant and the land, however, ran much deeper than individual statutes. The Israelites understood that their adherence to the stipulations of God's covenant as a whole had direct consequences for the land. Obedience to God's commands resulted in a land that was blessed, that is, productive and fertile (Deut. 28:1–6), while disobedience adversely affected the fertility of the land (Gen. 3:17–19; Deut. 11:13–17; 28:1–4, 15–18), creating an ecological imbalance (Deut. 29:22–28; Jer. 4:23–28; Hos. 4:2–3).

Paul H. Wright

ENVY Painful or resentful awareness of another's advantage joined with the desire to possess the same advantage. The advantage may concern material goods (Gen. 26:14) or social status (30:1). Old Testament wisdom frequently warns against envying the arrogant (Ps. 73:3), the violent (Prov. 3:31), or the wicked (Ps. 37:1; Prov. 24:1, 19). In the NT “envy” is a common member of vice lists as that which comes out of the person and defiles (Mark 7:22), as a characteristic of humanity in rebellion to God (Rom. 1:29), as a fruit of the flesh (Gal. 5:21), as a characteristic of unregenerate life (Titus 3:3), and as a trait of false teachers (1 Tim. 6:4). “Envy” (sometimes translated “jealousy” by modern translations) was the motive leading to the arrest of Jesus (Matt. 27:18; Mark 15:10) and to opposition to the gospel in Acts (Acts 5:17, 13:45; 17:5). Christians are called to avoid envy (Gal. 5:26; 1 Pet. 2:1).

Envy is sometimes a motive for doing good. The Preacher was disillusioned that hard work and skill were the result of envying another (Eccles. 4:4). Paul was, however, able to rejoice that the gospel was preached even if the motive was envy (Phil. 1:15).

The KJV rightly understood the difficult text in James 4:5, recognizing that it is a characteristic of the human spirit that it “lusteth to envy.” Contrary to modern translations, the Greek word used for “envy” here (phthonos) is always used in a negative sense, never in the positive sense of God's jealousy (Greek zelos). God's response to the sinful longings of the human heart is to give more grace (4:6). See Jealousy.

EPAENETUS [ə pē' nē tūs] Personal name meaning “praise.” The first Christian convert in Achaia and thus a friend with special meaning for Paul (Rom. 16:5). See Achaia.

EPAPHRAS [Ep' ə phrās] Personal name meaning “lovely.” A Christian preacher from whom Paul learned of the situation of the church in Colossae (Col. 1:7). He was a native of Colossae whose ministry especially involved Colossae, Laodicea, and Hierapolis. Later he was a companion of Paul during the latter's imprisonment. Though Epaphras is mentioned in the NT only in the letters to the Colossians and to Philemon, Paul evidently held this man in high regard.

EPAPHRODITUS [ə pəph rō di' tūs] Personal name meaning “favored by Aphrodite or Venus.” A friend and fellow worker of Paul the apostle (Phil. 2:25). He had delivered to Paul a gift from the church at Philippi while the apostle was in prison. While he was with Paul, Epaphroditus became seriously ill. After his recovery, Paul sent him back to Philippi, urging the church there to receive him “with all gladness” (Phil. 2:29). The name Epaphroditus was common in the first-century Greek-speaking world.

EPENETUS [ə pē' nē tūs] Variant spelling of Epaenetus. See Epaenetus.

EPHAH [E' pháh] Personal name meaning “darkness.” 1. Son of Midian and grandson of Abraham (Gen. 25:4). The line came through Abraham's wife Keturah rather than Sarah and did not inherit as did Isaac. Ephah was thus the original ancestor of a clan of Midianites, and the clan name could be used in poetry in parallel with Midian to talk about the Midianites (Isa. 60:6). 2. Concubine of Caleb and mother of his children (1 Chron. 2:46). 3. Son of Jahdai and apparently a descendant of Caleb (1 Chron. 2:47).

4. An entirely different Hebrew word with a different first letter lies behind the English “ephah” as a dry measure of grain. It is one-tenth of a homer and equal to one bath of liquid (Ezek. 45:11). It is also equal to 10 omers (Exod. 16:36). Thus it is about 40 liters, though we do not have enough information to make precise estimates. Estimates place it about half a bushel. The vision of Zech. 5:7 of a woman sitting in an ephah basket contains the imaginative images of visions, for any ephah would be far too small for a woman to sit in. Israel was constantly warned not to have two ephah measures, one for buying and the other for selling (Deut. 25:14; Prov. 20:10; cp. Lev. 19:36; Ezek. 45:10; Amos 8:5).

EPHAI [E' phi] Personal name meaning “bird.” Father of men who joined Ishmael in revolt against and murder of Gedaliah, the governor of Judah after Babylon captured and destroyed Jerusalem in 586 B.C. (Jer. 40:8). Ephai was from Netophah near Bethlehem.

EPHER [E' phēr] Personal name meaning “young deer.” 1. Son of Midian, grandson of Abraham through his wife Keturah, and clan father among the Midianites (Gen. 25:4). 2. Descendant of Caleb in the tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:17). 3. Original ancestor of clan in tribe of Manasseh (1 Chron. 5:24).

EPHES-DAMMIM [E' phēs-dām' mīn] Place-name meaning “end of bloodshed.” Town between Socoh and Azekah where Philistines gathered to fight Saul (1 Sam. 17:1) preceding David's killing of Goliath. It is apparently the same as Pas-dammim (1 Chron. 11:13). It is modern Damun, four miles northeast of Shocoh.

EPHESIANS, LETTER TO THE [E phe' shēnz] While it is not the longest of the Pauline Epistles, Ephesians is the one that best sets out the basic concepts of the Christian faith. Paul and the Ephesians Precise information on the introduction of Christianity to Ephesus is not available. From Acts 13:1—14:28 we know Christianity was introduced to the Asian peninsula early. Paul and Barnabas, during the first missionary journey about A.D. 45–48, established Christianity in Cilicia, Pamphylia, and Phrygia. The newly established religion moved inevitably westward to the coast and to the flourishing city of Ephesus, a city of multiple religions, gods, and goddesses.

At the close of his second missionary journey about A.D. 49–52, Paul left Achaia (Greece) taking Aquila and Priscilla with him. They stopped at Ephesus and surveyed the situation in that city where religions flourished. The Ephesians urged Paul to stay there, but he declined. Leaving Aquila and Priscilla and perhaps Timothy there to carry on the Christian witness (Acts 18:18–21), Paul sailed to Antioch. He returned to Ephesus during a third missionary journey and experienced the triumph over the challenge of Jewish religious leaders as well as that of the Greco-Roman religions represented in the worship of the Greek goddess Artemis (Roman name—Diana; Acts 19:24).

His ministry in Ephesus lasted three years (Acts 20:31). From there he journeyed to Jerusalem where he was arrested by the Jews and turned over to the Romans. He was imprisoned in Caesarea for two years (Acts 21:15–26:32). He was sent to Rome where he was imprisoned for another two years (Acts 27:1–28:31).

Interpreters are divided in opinion as to the time and place of the writing of Ephesians. These two imprisonments of Paul are the only ones which might bear on the question of where and when the Imprisonment Epistles were written. In all four of these epistles, Paul mentioned his imprisonment.

A related and much debated question is the year of Paul's writing each epistle and the place. To our knowledge only two places appear to be viable options—Caesarea and Rome. Majority opinion through Christian history has favored Rome. A much smaller minority of interpreters has argued for Caesarea.

A third opinion has grown out of Col. 4:16 in which Paul urged the church at Colossae to exchange letters with the church at neighboring Laodicea so both might get the benefit of both letters. This opinion, which was never widely held, took the position that Paul was writing from an imprisonment in Ephesus and that the “Laodicean” letter was what we have as “Ephesians.”

Careful review of this very extensive and complex issue leaves the subjective opinion that all four Prison Epistles were written by Paul during his imprisonment in Rome about A.D. 61–62. Also subjective is the opinion that they were written in this order: Ephesians A.D. 61; Colossians A.D. 61; Philemon A.D. 61; Philippians A.D. 62.

Introduction to the Epistle Paul's motive for writing this letter was the challenge that Christianity faced in confrontation with other religions and philosophies of the day. Paul was convinced that the religion he proclaimed was the only way of redemption from sin and sonship to God.

The challenge was the struggle for human minds as they sought the “good life.” Even in Judaism, the cradle in which it was born, Christianity faced that aggressive encounter.

Paul opposed a Judaism he considered to have become a religion of human attainment, doing the works of the law as a means of being right with God. He offered instead Christianity as a religion of divine provision, salvation by faith in God's providing what humans could never attain.

That distinction was also what brought Christianity into conflict with Greek philosophy and with the Greco-Roman nature religions. The Christian view is that the “good life” comes by faith, not by intellectual processes, speculations, and rules of conduct in the integration of personality.

Analysis of the Epistle: Theology and Ethics Following the pattern of all of his epistles, Paul introduced himself as an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God—not by human will, not even by his own will, but God's will. That was the driving force in his life.

The expression “at Ephesus” is not in the oldest manuscripts of Ephesians, but it is in many of the best ones. Its absence has led to speculation that in writing the epistle Paul left a blank space and that he meant the epistle to be a circular one to go to several churches. As the epistle was read in the churches, the public reader would insert the name of that church; such as, at Laodicea, at Hierapolis, at Colossae, and so forth. Indeed one manuscript of about the middle of the second century had “at Laodicea” in that place.

“Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ” (Eph. 1:2 HCSB) is in all of Paul's epistles. It is always in that order, grace and peace. Grace is the work of the Father by which salvation from sin comes. Peace is the condition of the believer's heart after grace has done its work. They are in that order because there can be no peace in the heart until grace has done its work.

Following a frequently used pattern in Paul's epistles, two basic themes are developed. First there is a major section on some theological theme. Second there follows a major section in ethics growing out of the theological theme. In the NT theology and ethics are bound together; they are never to be separated.

In his theological part (1:3-3:21) Paul centered attention on the plan and propagation of redemption. He began with a literary pattern of a poem or song to praise God for what He has done in providing salvation for sinful humanity. The provision of redemption is presented as the work of the Trinity: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. A refrain “to the praise of His glorious grace” repeats itself after each section, each with a slight variation.

Paul turned to thanksgiving to show the blessings of redemption (1:15-2:10). He wanted his readers to know Christ better, the Christ who enables believers to have the incomparable power that resurrected Christ and that now rules in this age and the one to come. This power can come to persons who were dead in sin but are saved by grace, being raised up with Christ to participate in His rule but also to live out of grace in the good works God has planned for His people to do.

Paul turned to the language of imperative to explain the propagation of redemption (2:11-3:21). A people without hope, separated from the people of the covenant have been brought to salvation through the blood of Christ. Thus unity of all races is accomplished through Him. In the cross He brought peace and provided access to God through the one Holy Spirit. All are joined together in Christ's church built on the foundation of the apostles and serving as the residence of God the Spirit. This good news is a mystery, a mystery God calls people to share with other people through His grace and a mystery which allows all people to approach God in confidence and freedom.

Paul turned to prayer to conclude this section and reveal the goal of redemption (3:14–21). His prayer was that Christ may dwell in the believers who will be rooted in love and can grasp the marvelous greatness of that love.

In his ethical part (4:1–6:24) Paul looked at the application of redemption to the church, to personal life, and to domestic life. Ethical imperatives dominate the section. He sought unity in the Spirit—one body, one Spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father. Within the unity he celebrated the diversity of the individuals within the church, a diversity stemming from the differing gifts Christ gives. The use of the gifts within the church leads to maturity for the church and its members. Maturity involves growing in Christ, in His love, each doing the work Christ gives and not seeking to do the work assigned another.

This has consequences for personal life, calling for a complete transformation from the lifestyles of unbelievers. Without faith the individual is devoted to selfish lust and earthly dissipation. The believer becomes like God in holiness, purity, and righteousness. A central element of this is human speech, speaking the truth and saying that which helps build up others. Anger and malice must turn to love, compassion, and forgiveness. Walking in the light means pleasing God and showing the sinfulness of evil deeds. This is the wise path avoiding spirits that make one drunk but turning to the one Spirit who leads to praise and worship. This changes one's role at home. Submission to one another becomes the key, a submission motivated by loyalty to Christ and love to the marital partner. That love follows the example of Christ's love for His church. Parents expect honor from children while training children in the Lord's way of love. Similarly, masters and servants respect and help one another.

To complete his letter, Paul called his readers to put on God's armor to avoid Satan's temptations. This will lead to a life of prayer for self and for other servants of God. This will lead to concern for and encouragement from other Christians. As usual, Paul concluded his letter with a benediction, praying for peace, love, faith, and grace for his beloved readers.

Outline

- I. Salutation: The apostle greets the church (1:1–2).
- II. Theology: The plan of redemption leads to the propagation of redemption (1:3–3:21)
 - A. The plan of redemption (1:3–14)
 1. The work of the Father: He has blessed and chosen us in Christ, predestining us for sonship in Him (1:3–6).
 2. The work of the Son: He brings redemption and forgiveness from sin through His blood (1:7–12).
 3. The work of the Spirit: He seals us as God's cherished possession (1:13–14).
 - B. The blessings of redemption (1:15–2:10)
 1. A clear insight into the nature of redemption (1:15–19)
 2. A full insight into the nature of Christ (1:20–23)
 3. A transition from spiritual death to spiritual life (2:1–9)
 4. A life of good works wrought out in Christ (2:10)
 - C. The propagation of redemption (2:11–3:21)
 1. Redemption is for all without regard to race (2:11–13).
 2. Redemption makes all people one in Christ (2:14–22).
 3. Redemption is to be revealed to people through other people (3:1–13).
 4. Redemption has a goal: revelation of the nature of God's love through Christ (3:14–21).

- III. Ethics: Redemption is applied in church life, personal life, and domestic life (4:1–6:24).
 - A. The application of redemption in church life (4:1–16)
 - 1. The Holy Spirit produces unity (4:1–6).
 - 2. Christ provides a diversity of gifts (4:7–11).
 - 3. The Spirit's unity and Christ's gifts result in maturity (4:12–16).
 - B. The application of redemption in personal life (4:17-5:21)
 - 1. Desires and practices of old life are ended (4:17–32).
 - 2. In the new way of life the redeemed learn to walk in love (5:1–5).
 - 3. In the new way of life the redeemed learn to walk in light (5:6–14).
 - 4. In the new way of life the redeemed learn to walk in wisdom (5:15–21).
 - C. The application of redemption in domestic life (5:22-6:9)
 - 1. Mutual duties of husbands and wives to each other (5:22–33)
 - 2. Mutual duties of parents and children to each other (6:1–4)
 - 3. Mutual duties of masters and servants to each other (6:5–9)
- IV. Conclusion: Prepare for the spiritual conflict of life (6:10–24).
 - A. Know God is your Ally and Satan your enemy (6:10–12).
 - B. Put on the armor God supplies (6:13–17).
 - C. Pray for boldness for Christian leaders (6:18–20).
 - D. Communicate with and encourage one another (6:21–22).
 - E. Live under God's benediction of peace, love, faith, and grace (6:23–24)

Ray Summers

EPHESUS [Eph' ə sōs] One of the largest and most impressive cities in the ancient world, a political, religious, and commercial center in Asia Minor. Associated with the ministries of Paul, Timothy, and the Apostle John, the city played a significant role in the spread of early Christianity. Ephesus and its inhabitants are mentioned more than 20 times in the NT.

Location The ancient city of Ephesus, located in western Asia Minor at the mouth of the Cayster River, was an important seaport. Situated between the Maeander River to the south and the Hermus River to the north, Ephesus had excellent access to both river valleys that allowed it to flourish as a commercial center. Due to the accumulation of silt deposited by the river, the present site of the city is approximately five to six miles inland.

Historical Background The earliest inhabitants of Ephesus were a group of peoples called Leleges and Carians who were driven out around 1000 B.C. by Ionian Greek settlers led by Androclus of Athens. The new inhabitants of Ephesus assimilated the native religion of the area, the worship of a goddess of fertility whom they identified with the Greek goddess Artemis, the virgin huntress. (Later the Romans identified Artemis with their goddess Diana.)

Around 560 B.C. Croesus of Lydia conquered Ephesus and most of western Asia Minor. Under Croesus' rule the city was moved farther south and a magnificent temple, the Artemision, was constructed for the worship of Artemis. In 547 B.C., following the defeat of Croesus by Cyrus of Persia, Ephesus came under Persian control. Disaster struck the city in 356 when fire destroyed the Artemision.

Alexander the Great, who was reportedly born on the same day as the Artemision fire, took over the area in 334 B.C. His offer to finance the ongoing reconstruction of the temple was diplomatically declined. The rebuilt temple, completed about 250 B.C., became known as one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

Lysimachus, one of Alexander's generals, ruled over Ephesus from about 301 to 281 B.C., when he was killed by Seleucus I. Under Lysimachus the city was moved again, this time to higher ground to escape the danger of flooding. City walls were built; a new harbor was constructed; and new streets were laid out. After the death of Lysimachus, Ephesus fell under the control of the Seleucids until their defeat by the Romans in 189 B.C. Rome gave the city to the king of Pergamum as a reward for his military assistance. In 133 B.C., at the death of the last Pergamum ruler, the city came under direct Roman control.

A carved paving stone in ancient Ephesus that is probably an advertisement for a brothel.

A part of the Roman Harbor baths and gymnasium complex excavated at ancient Ephesus.

The Great Theater of ancient Ephesus as viewed from the Arcadian Way on the way to the harbor.

EPHESUS

A D. 46 - A D. 400

Reconstruction of the Artemesion, the great temple of Artemis (Roman Diana) at Ephesus in ancient Asia Minor (modern Turkey) which was begun in 360 B.C. to honor the ancient many-breasted mother goddess of the Anatolian region. The cult was adopted by the conquering Alexander the Great of Greece and renamed Artemis (Roman Diana). The temple was completed by the Greeks and was recorded as one of the seven wonders of the ancient world—four times larger than the Parthenon at Athens.

A baptismal pool from the Roman period located in the Double Church of Mary at ancient Ephesus.

The re-erected marble façade of the library of Celsus at ancient Ephesus.

Curetes Street in ancient Ephesus with the Library of Celsus in the background.

The Great Theater of Ephesus with the Arcadian Way in the background leading to the ancient harbor.

Under the Romans, Ephesus thrived, reaching the pinnacle of its greatness during the first and second centuries of the Christian era. At the time of Paul, Ephesus was probably the fourth largest city in the world, with a population estimated at 250,000. During the reign of the emperor Hadrian, Ephesus was designated the capital of the Roman province of Asia. The grandeur of the ancient city is evident in the remains uncovered by archaeologists, including the ruins of the Artemision, the civic agora, the temple of Domitian, gymnasiums, public baths, a theater with seating for 24,000, a library, and the commercial agora, as well as several streets and private residences. Also discovered were the head and forearm of a colossal statue of the emperor Domitian. Today the Turkish town of Seljuk occupies the site of ancient Ephesus. See Asia Minor, Cities of; Ephesians, Letter to the; Revelation of Jesus Christ; Timothy, First Letter to.

Mitchell G. Reddish

EPHLAL [Eph' lal] Personal name meaning “notched” or “cracked.” Descendant of Jerahmeel in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 2:37).

EPHOD [E' phod] Priestly garment connected with seeking a word from God and used in a wrong way as an idol. The exact meaning and derivation of the term “ephod” are not clear.

In early OT history there are references to the ephod as a rather simple, linen garment, possibly a short skirt, apron, or loincloth. It is identified as a priestly garment (1 Sam. 14:3; 22:18). It was worn by Samuel (1 Sam. 2:18) and by David when he danced before God on the occasion of the transfer of the ark of the covenant to David's capital city of Jerusalem (2 Sam. 6:14). From its earliest forms and uses, it appears that the ephod was associated with the presence of God or those who had a special relationship with God. It is portrayed as a source of divine guidance, as when David wanted to know if he should trust the people of Keilah (1 Sam. 23:9–12) or when he wanted to know if he should pursue the Amalekites (1 Sam. 30:7–8).

There are references to a special ephod associated with the high priest. It appears to have been an apron-like garment worn over the priest's robe and under his breastplate. It is described in detail in Exod. 28–35. Woven of gold, blue, purple, and scarlet materials, it was very elaborate and ornate. On top of each of the shoulders the ephod was fastened by two onyx clasps on which were engraved the names of six of the 12 tribes. Twelve gemstones on the breastplate contained the names of the 12 tribes. Some scholars believe that this breastplate also contained a pouch where the sacred lots, Urim and Thummim, were kept (Exod. 28:30). The ephod was fastened around the waist by a beautiful and intricately woven girdle. The robe worn with the ephod was equally elaborate. It was blue in color, with a fringe at the bottom comprised of golden bells and blue, purple, and scarlet pomegranates (Exod. 28:31–34). Apparently, the ephod of the high priest was not only worn by the high priest, but also prominently displayed in the tabernacle. It may have been placed upon a divine image and used as an object of worship at some times in Israel's history. This usage, plus the importance of the ephod, may have led to idolatrous use in worship during the time of the judges (Judg. 8:27; 17:5–6).

The importance of the ephod in Hebrew worship is seen in the fact that, even after the division of the nation into the Northern and Southern Kingdoms, there is mention of the ephod in worship in the Northern Kingdom (Hos. 3:4). See Ark of the Covenant; Priests; Tabernacle; Teraphim.

Daniel B. McGee

EPHPHATHA [Ēph' phá thá] Aramaic expression that Jesus spoke when He healed a person who was deaf and had a speech impediment. It is translated “be opened.” When Jesus had said it, the individual was healed (Mark 7:34).

EPHRAIM [Ē' phrá ʾim] Personal and tribal name meaning “two fruit land” or “two pasture lands.” The younger son of Joseph by the Egyptian Asenath, daughter of the priest of On (Gen. 41:52). He was adopted by his grandfather Jacob and given precedence over his brother Manasseh (Gen. 48:14). He was the progenitor of the tribe of Ephraim, which occupied a region slightly to the northwest of the Dead Sea (Josh. 16) and was the leading tribe of the Northern Kingdom, ever ready to assert its rights (Josh. 17:15; Judg. 3:27; 4:5; 7:24-8:3; 12:1).

Ephraim played an important role in Israelite history. Joshua was an Ephraimite (Josh. 19:50). Samuel was an Ephraimite (1 Sam. 1:1). Jeroboam I was an Ephraimite (1 Kings 12:25). The important sanctuary at Shiloh was located in the territory of Ephraim. From the eighth century B.C., Ephraim was often used as a designation for Israel (Isa. 11:13; Jer. 7:15; Hos. 5:13). See Patriarchs; Tribes of Israel.

EPHRAIM, CITY OF Another name for Ephron. See Ephron.

EPHRAIM, FOREST OF Densely wooded site of the battle between the forces of King David and the rebel army of Absalom (2 Sam. 18:6,8). The location of the forest presents difficulties. The account in 2 Samuel suggests a site on the east side of the Jordan near enough to the city of Mahanaim in the Jabbok Valley to allow David to send reinforcements. The difficulty arises since the tribal allotment for Ephraim was west of the Jordan. Joshua 17:14–18 predicts Ephraim's expansion north into the wooded Jezreel Valley and the vicinity of Beth-shan, both within Issachar's territory. It is possible that this dominant tribe also settled in the wooded hills to the east of the Jordan.

EPHRAIM GATE Entrance to Jerusalem located 400 cubits (about 200 yards) from the Corner Gate (2 Kings 14:13). The section of wall between these two gates was destroyed by King Jehoash of Israel in the eighth century. In Nehemiah's time the city square at the Ephraim Gate was one of the sites where booths for the celebration of the feast of tabernacles were set up (Neh. 8:16).

EPHRAIMITE [E' phrá im it] Member of tribe of Ephraim. See Ephraim.

EPHRAIM, MOUNT KJV designation for the hill country belonging to Ephraim. Modern translations use the phrase “hill country of Ephraim” since an entire region is intended rather than a particular mount. Scripture specifies that the following cities were located in the hill country of Ephraim: Bethel (Judg. 4:5); Gibeah (Josh. 24:33); Ramah (Judg. 4:5); Shamir (10:1); Shechem (Josh. 20:7); Timnath-heres or -serah (Josh. 19:50; Judg. 2:9).

EPHRAIN [E' phrá in] KJV reading of city in 2 Chron. 13:19 following the earliest Hebrew scribal note. Hebrew text reads “Ephron,” as do most modern translations. See Ephron.

EPHRATAH [Eph' rá táh] or EPHRATH [E' phráth] or EPHRATHAH [Eph' rá tháh] Place and personal name meaning “fruitful.” 1. Town near which Jacob buried his wife Rachel (Gen. 35:16–19; usually translated in English as Ephrath, NRSV). Genesis 35:16 seems to indicate that Ephrath(ah) must have been near Bethel. This is supported by 1 Sam. 10:2; Jer. 31:15, which place Rachel's tomb near Ramah on the border between the tribal territories of Ephraim and Benjamin. Genesis 35:19, however, identifies Ephrath(ah) with Bethlehem (cp. Gen. 48:7). It is part of Judah's tribal territory according to the earliest Greek translation of the OT, words omitted in current Hebrew manuscripts (Josh. 15:59 REB). Micah 5:2 also appears to equate Bethlehem and Ephrath(ah) as the home of the coming Messiah. This, in turn, was based on Bethlehem (1 Sam. 16:1) and Ephrath(ah) (1 Sam. 17:12) as the home of David's father Jesse and thus of David. In sending Messiah, God chose to start over at David's birthplace. Naomi's husband Elimelech was an Ephrathite from Bethlehem (Ruth 1:2). In Ruth 4:11 Bethlehem and Ephrathah are apparently identified in poetic parallelism. It may be that Ephrathah was a clan name of a family in Bethlehem whose importance made the clan name a synonym for the city. The parallelism in Ps. 132:6 seems to equate Ephrathah with “the field of Jaar” (NASB and most modern translations). This would be Kiriath-jearim, though two different resting points of the ark—Bethlehem and Kiriath-jearim—may be intended here. The identification with Kiriath-jearim could be supported by the genealogy in 1 Chron. 2 that lists both personal names and place-names. Shobal, the founder of Kiriath-jearim, was the son of Ephrathah, Caleb's wife (1 Chron. 2:19,50). In 1 Chron. 4:4 Ephrathah's son Hur was the father of Bethlehem. Ephrathah may have been a clan name associated with several different geographical localities, the most famous of which was Bethlehem. The textual and geographical connections are not always easy to figure out. 2. Caleb's wife (1 Chron. 2:50; spelled Ephrath in 2:19; cp. 4:4).

The entrance to the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem (Ephrathah).

EPHRATHITE [Eph' rá thít] Citizen or clan member of Ephrathah. See Ephrathah.

EPHRON [E' phrōn] Personal name and place-name meaning “dusty.” 1. Hittite who sold the cave of Machpelah to Abraham (Gen. 23:8–20). The narrative follows the normal manner of concluding a purchase agreement among Near Eastern people. Abraham was also buried in the cave with Sarah (Gen. 25:9–10). It became the patriarchs' burying place (Gen. 49:30–33; 50:13). 2. Mountain marking the tribal border of Judah with Benjamin (Josh. 15:9). It is located northwest of Jerusalem near Mozah at el-Qastel. 3. City that King Abijah of Judah (913-910 B.C.) took from King Jeroboam of Israel (926-909 B.C.), according to spelling of Hebrew text (2 Chron. 13:19). The earliest Hebrew scribes suggested that “Ephrain” was the correct spelling (KJV). It is apparently identical with Ophrah in Benjamin (Josh. 18:23; 1 Sam. 13:17), located at et-Taiyibeh about four miles north of Bethel. The city of Ephraim (2 Sam. 13:23; John 11:54) is probably the same city. If et-Taiyibeh is the correct location, it is a high city, 300 feet higher than Jerusalem and could be quite cold. Some would locate the city of Ephraim in the lower valley at ain Samieh, on the edge of the desert.

EPICUREANISM [Ep i cū rē' ān i sm] School of philosophy which emerged in Athens about 300 B.C. The school of thought was founded by Epicurus who was born in 341 B.C. on the Greek island of Samos. Epicurus founded his school (The Garden) in Athens. Around him he gathered his students and refined his philosophy. Epicurean thought had a significant impact on the Hellenistic world and later on Rome. Paul met Epicureans as he preached about Jesus and the resurrection in Athens (Acts 17:18).

Epicurean philosophy centered on the search for happiness. Pleasure is the beginning and fulfillment of a happy life. Often today, Epicurus' ideas are distorted. Many think he proposed a life of sensual pleasure and gluttony. This concept is far from his philosophy and his own lifestyle. To Epicurus, happiness could only be achieved through tranquillity and a life of contemplation. The goal of Epicureanism was to acquire a trouble-free state of mind, to avoid the pains of the body, and especially mental anguish. Epicureans sought seclusion from worldly temptations. Epicurus taught that a man should not become involved in politics or affairs of the state. These activities simply served to distract one from the life of contemplation. He believed in gods, but he thought that they were totally unconcerned with the lives or troubles of mortals.

Gary Poulton

EPILEPSY Disorder marked by erratic electrical discharges of the central nervous system resulting in convulsions. In ancient times epilepsy was thought to be triggered by the moon. The term in Matt. 4:24, translated as “epileptics” by most modern translations, is literally “moonstruck.” The KJV term “lunatick” from the Latin luna (moon) assumes the same cause for the disorder. Many interpreters understand the symptoms of the boy in Mark 9:17–29 (inability to speak, salivation, grinding teeth, rigid body, convulsions) as expressions of epilepsy.

EPIPHANY Term “epiphany” comes from a Greek word which means “appearance” or “manifestation.” In Western Christianity the festival of Epiphany, observed on the sixth of January, celebrates the manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles, the coming of the Magi to see the child Jesus (Matt. 2:1–12). The 12 days between Christmas and Epiphany have often been called the “Twelve Days of Christmas.”

In much of Eastern Christianity, Epiphany is a celebration of the baptism of Jesus, a recognition of His manifestation to humanity as the Son of God (Mark 1:9–11). In the early centuries before the observance of Christmas, Epiphany celebrated both the birth of Jesus and His baptism. See Church Year.

Fred A. Grissom

EPISTLE See Letter.

ER  Personal name meaning “protector” or “watchful.” 1. Oldest son of Judah and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 38:3). He married Tamar but was so wicked that God killed him (Gen. 38:6–7). 2. Grandson of Judah (1 Chron. 4:21). 3. Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:28).

ERAN [E' rān] Personal name meaning “of the city” or “watchful.” Some of the earliest translations and the Samaritan Pentateuch read “Eden” rather than Eran. Eran was grandson of Ephraim and a clan leader in the tribe of Ephraim (Num. 26:36).

ERANITE [E' rān it] Member of clan of Eran (Num. 26:36).

ERASTUS [ə rās' tūs] Personal name meaning “beloved.” 1. Disciple Paul sent with Timothy from Ephesus to Macedonia to strengthen the churches during his third missionary journey (Acts 19:22). 2. City financial officer of Corinth who joined Paul in greeting the church at Rome (Rom. 16:23). He may have been a slave or a freed slave working for the city government; he may well have been a high-ranking and influential government leader—city treasurer. If so, he would have political power, prestige, and probably some wealth. 3. Disciple who remained at Corinth and was not with Paul when he wrote Timothy (2 Tim. 4:20). He may have been identical with either of the other men named Erastus or may be a separate individual.

ERECH [E' rēch] Hebrew transliteration of Akkadian place-name: Uruk, one of the oldest Sumerian cities founded before 3100 B.C. Genesis' Table of Nations reports that Nimrod, the mighty hunter, included Erech in his kingdom (Gen. 10:10). Ashurbanipal, king of Assyria (668-629 B.C.), exiled “men of Erech” (NASB) to Samaria about 640 B.C. (Ezra 4:9). Sumerian literature lists Erech as one of the first cities after the flood. Gilgamesh, the hero of Akkadian flood stories, appears as king of Erech. Excavations at Erech provide early evidence of pictographic writing and numerical notation on clay tablets and reveal an astronomical observatory and a scribal school. It is modern Warka, about 120 miles southeast of Babylon and 40 miles northwest of Ur.

ERI [E' ri] Personal name meaning “of the city of” or “watchful.” A son of Gad and grandson of Jacob (Gen. 46:16). Original ancestor of clan of Erites (Num. 26:16).

ERITE [E' rite] Member of clan of Eri. See Eri.

ESAIAS [ə sī' ūs] KJV transliteration of Greek spelling of Isaiah in the NT. See Isaiah.

ESARHADDON [E sār hād' dōn] Assyrian royal name meaning “Ashur (the god) has given a brother.” King of Assyria (681-669 B.C.). He was the favorite son of Sennacherib, whom he succeeded as king (2 Kings 19:36–37; Ezra 4:2; Isa. 19:4; 37:37–38). In Isa. 19:4 he is probably the “cruel lord” and “fierce king” who conquered Egypt. In Ezra 4:2 he is recognized as the king who colonized Samaria. See Assyria.

M. Stephen Davis

ESAU [E' sau] Personal name whose meaning is not known. Son of Isaac and Rebekah; elder twin brother of Jacob (Gen. 25:24–26; 27:1,32,42; 1 Chron. 1:34); father of the Edomite nation (Gen. 26:34; 28:9; 32:3; Deut. 2:4–29; Mal. 1:2–3). At birth his body was hairy and red “and they named him Esau” (Gen. 25:25,30; 27:11,21–23). The second born twin, Jacob, father of the nation Israel, held Esau's heel at birth (Gen. 25:22–26); thus depicting the struggle between the descendants of the two which ended when David led Israel in the conquest of Edom (2 Sam. 8:12–14; 1 Chron. 18:13; cp. Num. 24:18).

From the first Jacob sought to gain advantage over Esau (Hos. 12:3). Esau, the extrovert, was a favorite of his father and as a hunter provided him with his favorite meats. Jacob was the favorite of his mother Rebekah.

As a famished returning hunter, Esau, lacking self-control, sold his birthright to Jacob for food (Gen. 25:30–34). Birthright involved the right as head of the family (Gen. 27:29) and a double share of the inheritance (Deut. 21:15–17). This stripped Esau of the headship of the people through which Messiah would come. Thus, the lineage became Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Having lost his birthright, he was still eligible to receive from Isaac the blessing of the eldest son. Rebekah devised a deception whereby Jacob received this blessing (Gen. 27:1–30).

A well that marks the traditional site where Jacob met Esau.

Years later the two brothers were reconciled when Jacob returned from Mesopotamia. Esau had lived in the land of Seir. As Jacob neared Palestine, he made plans for confronting his wronged brother and allaying his anger. Esau, with an army of 400, surprised Jacob, his guilty brother, and received him without bitterness (Gen. 33:4–16).

The two reconciled brothers met again for the final time at the death of their father (Gen. 35:29). Though their hostility was personally resolved, their descendants continue to this day to struggle against each other. Nelson Price

ESCHATOLOGY Derived from the combination of the Greek eschatos, meaning “last,” and logos, meaning “word” or “significance.” Refers to the biblical doctrine of last things. The doctrine of last things normally focuses on a discussion of the return of Christ at the end of the age, the coming judgments, various expressions of the kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of God, the nature of the glorified body, and the prospects for eternal destiny. Generally, eschatology sets itself apart as a theology of the future and in juxtaposition to both history and the present age.

This general consensus about the nature of eschatology was challenged by C. H. Dodd and others in the early part of the 20th century. In a 1935 publication entitled The Parables of the Kingdom, Dodd noted NT passages in which Jesus and others seemed to speak of the kingdom of heaven as if it were already present. John the Baptist spoke of the kingdom of God as being “at hand” (Matt. 3:2), and Jesus Himself seems to have employed that same terminology (Matt. 10:7). Even more specifically Jesus declared, “If I drive out demons by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God has come to you” (Matt. 12:28 HCSB). In Luke 17:20 and following, Jesus again seems to insist that the kingdom of God is in the midst of the disciples. Dodd concluded that Jesus believed He was bringing the kingdom in His own person. Dodd reinterpreted passages that had always been given a futuristic cast in light of his theory, which became known as realized eschatology, meaning that the fulfillment of all endtime anticipation was secured in Christ.

Dodd's critics, however, responded by pointing to his failure to deal adequately with texts such as Matt. 6:10 where Jesus Himself taught His disciples to pray, “Your kingdom come. Your will be done on earth as it is in heaven” (HCSB). Again Jesus said that the gospel of the kingdom will be preached to all the earth as a witness to all the nations “and then the end will come” (Matt. 24:14 HCSB). Jesus seemed also to allude to a future time when He spoke of people coming from the east and west and north and south to “recline at the table in the kingdom of God” (Luke 13:28–29 HCSB). Paul seems to be speaking of a future act when he says, “Then comes the end, when He hands over the kingdom to God the Father, when He abolishes all rule and all authority and power. For He must reign until He puts all His enemies under His feet” (1 Cor. 15:24–25 HCSB).

This debate, which at first seems to be merely another scholarly discussion, is important because it gave rise to a new emphasis on the eschatology of the NT as being an eschatology of “already—and not yet.” In other words, Jesus does seem to indicate that in some meaningful sense the kingdom of God came with the advent of the Messiah. Still there are other respects in which the kingdom does not arrive in its ultimate expression until the end times. Consequently, one may conclude that the study of last things begins with the incarnation of Christ and does not end until the events associated with His return.

In this regard, to speak of the return or coming again of Christ is more technically accurate than to refer to the second coming. There are two reasons for this. First, in only one text does the Bible approximate the language of “second coming.” The author of Hebrews says that “the Messiah...will appear a second time, not to bear sin, but to bring salvation to those who are waiting for Him” (Heb. 9:28 HCSB). The other references in the NT simply speak of His coming or His presence among us. The second reason for caution at this point is the fact that there do seem to be theophanies or more precisely Christophanies (appearances of Christ) in the OT. If this is the case, then to speak of His incarnation would be the proper terminology for the beginning of the eschatos and to speak of His return the best way to think of the final fulfillment of all prophecy.

Eschatological Material in the Old Testament The OT, not just the NT, is intensely eschatological in its nature. If eschatology does indeed begin with the coming of the Christ, then all messianic prophecies fall in the category of eschatological material. For example, Isa. 9:6–7, a passage about the birth of Christ, becomes eschatological because not only does it speak of a child (a son) being given but also that “the government will be upon His shoulders” and that “of the increase of His government and peace there will be no end.” Other books of the OT have large segments of material that are clearly eschatological, having to do with the end time. For example, Dan. 9 records the famous seventieth week prophecy of Daniel. A portion of the prophecy seems to have been fulfilled at the time of the death of the one to whom the passage refers as “the Prince.” Clearly, the “Prince” is used as a synonym for the Messiah (Dan. 9:25). But again the prophecy also speaks of the 70 weeks being apportioned not only “to make an atonement for iniquity” but also “to bring in everlasting righteousness” and “to seal up vision and prophecy” (Dan. 9:24 NASB). Once again, the events seem to indicate a continuum beginning at the incarnation and atonement of Christ and culminating in the fulfillment of all prophecy and the bringing of everlasting righteousness.

The Prophet Ezekiel boasts many eschatological passages but from chapters 36 to 48 there can be little question but that the end times are in view. These chapters include a magnificent view of an eschatological temple, salient information on God's plan for the restoration of the Jewish nation, and in chapter 36 an explanation of God's again dealing with the Jewish people after their recalcitrance (Ezek. 36:19–24). Meantime Zechariah sees a day coming when there will be a fountain open for the house of David and for the house of Jerusalem “for sin and for impurity” (Zech. 13:1). The marvelous prophecies of Isaiah contain significant and far-reaching prophecies of the end times. For example, the days will come, predicted Isaiah, “in the last days” when all nations will “hammer their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks” and learn of war no more (Isa. 2:2,4 NASB). The same prophet sees a return to domesticity on the part of the animals—a day when “the wolf will dwell with the lamb, and the leopard will lie down with the kid” (Isa. 11:6). He further anticipates a day when the original fruitfulness of the earth will be restored and the desert “will rejoice and blossom” (Isa. 35:1).

Eschatological Material in the New Testament The NT takes up where the OT ended. Jesus Himself spoke frequently about the eschatos. His remarks are enshrined in what is known as the Olivet Discourse in Matt. 24–25, a discourse provided in succinct form in what is called the Little Apocalypse in Mark 13. In those passages Jesus spoke specifically of cataclysmic upheavals belonging to the end times and such devastation during the period known as the Great Tribulation that “unless those days were cut short, no one would survive” (Matt. 24:22 HCSB). Jesus announced that men would see Him coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory (Matt. 24:30) but that no one would know the day nor the hour of these events, only His Father in heaven (Matt. 24:36). He spoke of two who would be in the field—one of whom would be taken and another left (Matt. 24:40). He illustrated the whole theme of His return with the parable of the wise and foolish virgins (Matt. 25:1–13), which culminated in a warning concerning watchfulness. Jesus concluded this discourse with the gathering of all nations and God's final judgment for them (Matt. 25:31–46).

Paul frequently visited eschatological themes as in 1 Cor. 15, where he explicated carefully the nature of the glorified body that the saints will receive at the coming of the Lord. In Rom. 9–11, Paul picked up the question of God's program with the Jewish people, which he sees them as continuing and flourishing again in the last days. He speaks of an olive tree whose original branches (the Jews) were taken away and of the branches of a wild olive tree (the Gentiles), which were grafted in. However, he anticipates a time coming when the original branches will be grafted in again (Rom. 11:17–26). Finally, he speaks of “a partial hardening” that “has come to Israel until the full number of the Gentiles has come in” and then anticipates “all Israel will be saved” (Rom. 11:25–26 HCSB).

In addition to all of these passages, the Apocalypse of John (the book of Revelation) is a book that is eschatological almost from the outset. A vision of the glorified Christ in chapter one is followed by messages to seven historical churches in Asia Minor in chapters two and three. But beginning with the throne room scene of heaven in chapter four, the remainder of the book seems to be futurist in its orientation, dealing principally with the unfolding of the catastrophic events during the Great Tribulation and concluding with the anticipation of the final judgment (Rev. 20:11–15) and the unveiling of the new heavens and new earth in chapters 21 and 22.

Systems of Thought about the Eschatos At no point in biblical interpretation is a hermeneutical presupposition more compelling than in the study of the end times. In approaching eschatological materials that often make use of highly symbolic language, the questions arise: “To what degree are the subjects broached in the text to be taken literally?” and “To what degree should they be taken in a figurative fashion?” As an example of the problem, the passages in Isaiah that foretell a wolf lying down with a lamb might be interpreted to belong to an actual kingdom age in which all animals live at peace with other animals and with their human neighbors. On the other hand, some interpreters insist that this be understood figuratively. In this case, the passage would not anticipate a literal fulfillment but depicts the peace of God that exists in the heart of the believer and, for that matter, in the cosmos when Christ is honored as King. The discussion comes ultimately to a head in Rev. 20:1–10, a section in which a period of “a thousand years” is mentioned no less than six times in seven verses. This thousand years, which is spoken of in theological literature as the millennium (from Latin mil meaning one thousand and annum meaning years) is a period in which Satan is not allowed to deceive the nations for a thousand years and in which the saints of God live and reign with Christ for a thousand years. If one approaches these verses with a hermeneutical decision that they are to be understood in a straightforward way, then he would anticipate a thousand-year reign of Christ on the earth at the end of the age. If, on the other hand, the material is to be treated as merely “Jewish apocalyptic genre” that should be understood spiritually instead of literally, then the passage becomes simply another way of speaking of the ultimate sovereignty of God and His reign over all things. The basic decision one makes about this will then determine in which of the following ways he understands the eschatology of the Bible.

Amillennialism The amillennialists (the alpha negative prefix has the sense of “no”) is the position of those who believe that most of the eschatological materials in the Bible referring to the end of the age should not be understood in a strictly literal fashion. They anticipate no kingdom age on this earth and understand the kingdom solely in the terms of its eternal expression.

Postmillennialism On the other hand, post-millennialists (so called because the word post means “after”) believe that there will be a kingdom age of sorts on the earth that will be consummated by the coming of Christ. Hence, the coming of Christ is “post” (after) the millennium. This view, which was more popular in church history prior to World War II, sees the church and its missionary movement as being wonderfully prolific and successful. Consequently, at some point the reign of Christ through the church is experienced on the earth, the culmination of which is the coming of Christ at the end of the millennium.

Premillennialism Another popular view that attempts to understand the Scriptures generally in a more literal fashion sees Christ returning to the earth before the millennium (hence, the prefix “pre”). According to this view, the kingdom age on earth cannot begin without the King in residence. Hence, Christ returns to the earth, subdues all of His enemies, and establishes a kingdom of righteousness for a thousand years.

The Tribulation As indicated earlier, Jesus spoke of a coming time of trouble on the earth such as has never been duplicated in all the history of the world. This message seems also to be the clear teaching of the seventieth week of Daniel, the book of Revelation, and other texts. One of the questions that theologians have debated, particularly in recent years, has been the relationship of the church to the tribulation. This debate is one in which neither amillennialists nor postmillennialists, but only premillennialists, have a stake. Among premillennial scholars there are three primary positions and a number of subsidiary positions. The three major positions are designated pretribulationism, midtribulationism, and posttribulationism.

Pretribulationists believe that Christ will be revealed at the outset of the tribulation period of seven years. The dead in Christ will rise, and every true believer will be caught up to be with the Lord in the air. A period of seven years of the outpouring of the wrath of God upon the earth, which will conclude with the return of Christ to establish His millennial kingdom, will follow. Hence, Christ comes for the church prior to the tribulation and prior to the millennium to establish His kingdom.

Midtribulationism, on the other hand, notes that the Apocalypse divides the tribulation into two periods of three and one-half years each. Midtribulationists suggest that Christ will return for the church after the first half of the tribulation. The church, therefore, will have to experience the first forty-two months of the tribulation period but will be rescued from the most debilitating portion of it.

Posttribulationism (referred to as historic premillennialism by its advocates), however, argues that the church endures the Great Tribulation but is not the object of God's wrath poured out on the wicked. They see only one return of Christ in Scripture, in opposition to the two posited by either pretribulationism or midtribulationism. Therefore, Christ comes at the end of the tribulation to receive the church to Himself and then returns immediately to the earth to establish the kingdom age.

Other views that have been advocated by a few include partial rapturism (the view arguing that only the watching church will be taken) and pre-wrath-rapturism (a view that simply moves the time of the rapture later in the tribulation than midtribulationists maintain). The view, however, is still essentially a midtribulationist view.

Other Eschatological Issues Other issues that are debated among those studying eschatology include (as indicated above) the coming of Christ. The issue here is whether or not one may discern the return of Christ to happen in two segments—one for the church and one to establish His kingdom—or whether there is but one return of Christ to establish the kingdom age.

Still another question revolves around the nature and number of the judgments. At least three passages of Scripture address the question of end-time judgments. First Corinthians 3:11–15 seems to envision a judgment of believers that is also mentioned in Rom. 14:10 and 2 Cor. 5:10, referred to as the “judgment seat of Christ” in the latter reference. Matthew 25:31–46 recalls the words of Jesus regarding the “sheep and goat judgment.” Revelation 20:11–15 has been called the “Great White Throne Judgment” and seems to focus on the judgment of the lost. Amillennialists and some premillennialists tend to believe that all these judgments are simply varying pictures of the final judgment of all men. On the other hand, other premillennialists argue that they are three separate judgments—the judgment seat of Christ representing a judgment that will take place immediately following the rapture of the church prior to the tribulation. It is a judgment for believers only and has to do with the bequeathal of rewards. The sheep and goat judgment in Matt. 25, on the other hand, is a determination of who enters the millennial era or the kingdom age by the Lord at the conclusion of the tribulation. Sheep enter; goats are excluded.

The Great White Throne Judgment, however, is a judgment at the end of all time in which only unbelievers are judged.

A final question relates to eternal destiny. The Bible makes it reasonably clear that those who are not found written in the Book of Life are turned aside into the lake of fire or into hell. The righteous, on the other hand, are admitted into heaven. Few evangelical Christians question either the existence of heaven or the eternal longevity of it. However, the possibility of a place of punishment that provides suffering for eternity has proved an intolerable conception for some theologians in the present era. Theologians as prominent as John Stott and Clark Pinnock, therefore, have argued that the lost are turned aside into hell where after a period of suffering for their sins they are annihilated. Annihilationism is viewed by most evangelical scholars as radically inconsistent with the testimony of the biblical narrative. Those who agree point out that if the words used to describe hell are not to be taken literally, then it is difficult to imagine that the same words used to describe heaven should be taken in a different way.

Conclusion Eschatology has too often become a battlefield of contention rather than an oasis of hope in the desert of life. Attitudes toward the study of eschatology range from preoccupation with such matters alone to the desire to avoid the subject altogether as one that has caused too much contention and that is too difficult. Both approaches seem less than wholesome. The object of the information given in the Bible concerning eschatology seems to be not so much to provide every detail but rather to create hope and anticipation as the church looks for “the blessed hope and glorious appearing of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ” (Titus 2:13). See Apocalyptic; Kingdom of God; Millennium; Rapture; Revelation, Book of; Tribulation.

Paige Patterson

ESDRAELON [Es dra' lon] Greek translation of the word “Jezreel,” indicating the low-lying area that separates the mountains of Galilee from the mountains of Samaria.

Old Testament Esdraelon, also called the Great Plain of Esdraelon or the Plain of Jezreel, is the area assigned to Zebulun and Issachar (Josh. 19:10–23). It extends from the Mediterranean Sea to the Jordan River at Bethshean. Included are the Valley or Plain of Megiddo in the east and the Valley of Jezreel in the west.

Sources disagree on the actual naming of the area. Some scholars say that the Valley of Jezreel is the name for the entire region; Esdraelon being the western portion, comprised of the Plain of Accho and the Valley of Megiddo. Whatever the entire region is called, it is assumed that references to Jezreel indicate both the town of Jezreel and the valley in which it is located; and references to Megiddo indicate both the town and the plain on which it is located.

The historical and biblical significance of Esdraelon in the OT is its association with war and bloodshed. As a battleground, it was a strategically favored place. It was occupied by Canaanites who were less than willing to relocate when the tribes of Israel tried to settle there (Judg. 1:27). The Song of Deborah in Judg. 5 celebrates the battle “at Taanach, by the waters of Megiddo” (Judg. 5:19) where Barak finally routed the Canaanites.

Other important battles were fought in Esdraelon. Frequently the question of Israel's leadership was settled there. Josiah died in battle against Pharaoh Neco at Megiddo (2 Chron. 35:20–24). Saul and Jonathan died at the hands of the Philistines in the Valley of Jezreel (1 Sam. 29:1,11; 31:1–7). Jehu killed his rivals Joram and Ahaziah at Jezreel (2 Kings 9). He later slaughtered all the men of Ahab and Ahaziah and all the prophets of Baal there (2 Kings 10).

Brutal slaughter for other than political reasons took place in Esdraelon. Naboth owned a vineyard in Jezreel. Jezebel and Ahab wanted to buy the vineyard, but Naboth refused because it had been handed down to him from his ancestors (1 Kings 21:3). Jezebel arranged Naboth's murder so Ahab could take possession of the vineyard (1 Kings 21:5–16).

The tragedies at Esdraelon did not go unnoticed by God. For her part, Jezebel was later murdered at Jezreel as prophesied by Elijah (1 Kings 21:23; 2 Kings 9:36). Hosea prophesied vengeance on the house of Jehu for his role in the slaughter at Jezreel (Hos. 1:4–5).

New Testament Esdraelon is mentioned in the NT as Armageddon or har-Megiddon, meaning hill or city of Megiddo. Revelation 16:16 echoes the OT portrayal of Esdraelon as a place of war and tragedy. The final battle of the Lord will be waged there (Rev. 16:14–16; 19:19).

Donna R. Ridge

The valley of Armageddon, or Plain of Esdraelon, as seen from the site of ancient Megiddo.

ESDRAS See Apocrypha.

ESEK [E' sĕk] Place-name meaning “strife.” A well that Isaac's servants dug in the valley near Gerar to find water for their herds. The shepherds of Gerar disputed Isaac's claim to the watering place. Isaac apparently gave in to the claim without warfare, thus receiving God's assurance of blessing (Gen. 26:18–24).

ESHAN [E' shān] or ESHEAN (KJV) Place-name meaning “I lean on.” Town in the hill country of Judah assigned to tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:52). A text tradition in the earliest Greek translation reads “Soma” instead of Eshan, possibly pointing to a location at modern Khirbet Hallat Sama. Otherwise, the location is not known.

ESH-BAAL [Ēsh-bā' al] Personal name meaning “man of Baal.” Son of Saul, the first king of Israel (1 Chron. 8:33; 9:39). In 2 Sam. 2:8 the name is Ishbosheth, “man of shame,” apparently an intentional corruption in the Hebrew tradition to avoid the name of the Canaanite god and to characterize the person with such a name. First Samuel 14:49 lists Ishui or Ishvi as Saul's son, possibly another way of respelling the name to avoid Baal. In Saul's day “baal” may have been a title applied to Yahweh indicating “He is Lord or Master.” In this case Esh-baal would mean “the man of the Lord.” Otherwise, Saul's name for his son would seem to indicate some devotion to the Canaanite god Baal at the period in his life when he named the son. Saul's son Jonathan named his son Merib-baal. See Ish-bosheth; Ishvi; Jonathan; Merib-baal.

ESHBAN [Ēsh' bān] Personal name of unknown meaning. An Edomite listed as a descendant of Seir the Horite (Gen. 36:26).

ESHCOL [Ēsh' col] Place-name meaning “valley of grapes” or “cluster.” 1. A valley in Canaan that was explored by the 12 Israelites sent to spy out the land (Num. 13:23). From the valley of Eshcol they brought back an exceptionally large cluster of grapes. Apparently the valley was given the name on account of grape clusters such as the one found by the Israelite spies. 2. Brother of Mamre and Aner (Gen. 14:13). He and his brothers were Amorites who were allies of Abram in the defeat of Chedorlaomer.

ESHEK [Ē' shĕk] Personal name meaning “oppression” or “strong.” A member of the tribe of Benjamin descended from King Saul (1 Chron. 8:39).

ESHKALONITE [Ēsh' kə lōn it] Citizen of Ashkelon. See Ashkelon.

ESHTAOL [Ēsh' tā ol] Place-name meaning “asking (for an oracle).” Town in lowlands of Shephelah of Judah allotted to the tribe of Judah (Josh. 15:33) but also to the tribe of Dan (Josh. 19:41). Near there, God's Spirit stirred Samson of the tribe of Dan (Judg. 13:25). Samson was buried near Eshtaol (Judg. 16:31). The tribe of Dan sent men from Eshtaol to seek a new homeland (Judg. 18:2–11). Its citizens were kin to the clan of Caleb and to residents of Kiriath-jearim (1 Chron. 2:53). It may be located at modern Irtuf, a mile south of Ishwa.

ESHTAOLITE [Ĕsh' tā ō lit] or ESHTAULITE [Ĕsh' tā ū lite] (KJV) Citizen of Eshtaol. See Eshtaol.

ESHTARAH [Ĕsh' tō rāh] (NIV; REB, Beashtaroth) See Beeshterah.

ESHTEMOA [Ĕsh tō mō' ā] Place and personal name meaning “being heard.” The name may indicate an ancient tradition of going to Eshtemoa to obtain an oracle or word of God from a prophet or priest. 1. City in tribal allotment of Judah (Josh. 15:50, with variant Hebrew spelling; See Eshtemoh). God set it aside for the Levites (Josh. 21:14). While living in exile in Ziklag, David sent some of the plunder from his victories to Eshtemoa (1 Sam. 30:28). 2. Member of clan of Caleb in tribe of Judah (1 Chron. 4:17), probably listed as the clan father of those who settled in Eshtemoa. The relation between the two Eshtemoas in 1 Chron. 4:17,19 is not clear. The city is the modern es-Samu about eight and a half miles south-southwest of Hebron and 14 miles northeast of Beersheba.

ESHTEMOH [Ĕsh' tō mōh] Variant Hebrew spelling of Eshtemoa (Josh. 15:50). See Eshtemoa.

ESHTON [Ĕsh' tōn] Personal name of uncertain meaning. Member of the tribe of Judah Chron. 4:11–12).

ESLI [Ĕs' li] Personal name of unknown meaning. Ancestor of Jesus (Luke 3:25), spelled Hesli in NASB. Some scholars equate him with Elioenai (1 Chron. 3:23). See Elioenai.

ESPOUSAL See Betrothal.

ESROM [Ĕs' rōm] (KJV, NT) See Hezron.

ESSENES Members of a Jewish sect that existed in Palestine during the time of Christ. They are not mentioned in the NT. They were ascetics who practiced community of goods, generally shunned marriage, refrained from attending worship in the temple, and attached great importance to the study of the Scriptures. Many scholars associate the Dead Sea Scrolls discovered in 1947 with an Essene community. See Dead Sea Scrolls; Qumran.

ESTHER [Ēs' tēr] Persian personal name meaning “a star.” Since this is not the biblical Esther's given name at birth (Esther 2:7), some have suggested that this name is linked to the planet Venus and the goddess Ishtar. Whether the name was given to her by her cousin Mordecai to hide her identity as a Jew or given to her when she was presented to the king, from the mind-set of the Persians a name linked to the goddess of fertility would be appropriate for the queen's role.

ESTHER, BOOK OF Placed by the Jews in the third section of the Hebrew Bible known as the Writings. While some debate over the book occurred due to the lack of inclusion of the name of God, the activity of the Lord was so obvious in the book that this objection was overruled.

According to the book of Esther, the woman more popularly known as Esther in the Bible was named Hadassah (meaning “myrtle”) when she was born. Orphaned at some point in childhood, she was raised by her cousin Mordecai among the Jews living in Persia. Hadassah became queen when the King of Persia's wife Vashti refused to appear before him at a banquet for his nobles. She was chosen as the most beautiful of all of the eligible maids in the entire empire of the Persian monarch. Hadassah's remarkable beauty was not an accident. In accord with the emphasis on the providence of God in this book, her incredible beauty must be seen as from the hand of God. Her identity as a Jew was unknown to the king.

About the time that Esther was named the new queen, Mordecai discovered a plot against the king's life. He made the plot known to Esther, who in turn passed on the information so that the plot was foiled.

The ruins of ancient Qumran probably inhabited by Essenes from 130B.C. until A.D. 70.

Haman the Agagite (who seems to be identified as a descendant of Agag, king of the Amalekites) was made prime minister of Persia. Infuriated by Mordecai's refusal to bow to him, Haman began to plot against Mordecai and all of the Jews. After Haman had the Persian monarch sign a decree against the Jews for their destruction on an appointed day, Mordecai and all of the Jews lamented their potential approaching doom.

Mordecai then called on Esther to approach the king. He reminded her that as a Jew she would not escape and that it might be the case that “for such a time as this” God had allowed her to rise to the position of queen of Persia. Esther, after fasting and prayer, risked her life by entering the king's throne room unbidden. After the king extended the royal scepter to her, she requested the king's presence at a banquet prepared in his honor. Haman was also invited.

Meanwhile, Haman was busy plotting Mordecai's death and building a gallows on which he intended to hang him. Providentially the king happened to read about Mordecai's faithfulness in revealing the earlier plot against his life. The king then purposed to honor Mordecai and asked Haman what should be done for the man that the king would like to honor. Thinking that he was prescribing his own treatment, Haman found out to his chagrin that the high honors he prescribed would be performed by him for Mordecai.

At the banquet on the second day, Esther revealed Haman's plot to the king. Haman was then hanged upon the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. After another decree was sent out allowing the Jews to defend themselves, many of those of the provinces became Jews. On the appointed day the Jews were victorious. The celebration continues each year with the Feast of Purim (9:24–28).

The Historical Period of the Book The Hebrew “Ahasuerus” is usually identified with Xerxes I (486-465/64 B.C.). The Persian was khshayarsha. The Elephantine papyri spell the name kshy'resh which is close to the Greek Xerxes. Evident throughout the book is the intimate knowledge possessed by the writer of Persian customs, of the topography of Susa, and of the interior of the Persian royal palaces. Persian names and loanwords were used throughout the book.

It is suggested that Mordecai may have been linked to the household of Otanes, one of the seven noble families of Persia. When the Persians chose a king from the seven nobles, Otanes requested that his name not be put in with the other six nobles on the condition that his household would remain free in Persia only to obey the commands of the new king with which they were in agreement (Herodotus III, 83). This could explain why Mordecai was not obliged to bow to Haman.

The Traditional Use of the Book The book of Esther provides the historical background for the feast of Purim. In plotting against the Jews, Haman cast lots (purim from Assyrian puru) to determine their fate (9:24–28). The story of God's preservation of His people is a reminder of His covenant with Abraham that He will not only bless those who bless His people, but he will also curse those who curse them. The preservation of the Jews kept alive messianic expectations in the intertestamental period.

When this story is rehearsed to groups of Jewish children during the feast of Purim, it is customary for the children to hiss (like a snake) loudly and stomp their feet every time the name of Haman occurs in order to block out even the sound of his name. As such he is seen as a “satanic” figure.

Outline

- I. Vashti Dismissed (1:1–22)
 - A. The Feast and the King's Summons (1:1–11)
 - B. The Queen's Refusal and Dismissal (1:12–22)
- II. Esther Made Queen (2:1–23)

The traditional site of the tombs of Esther and Mordecai in the modern country of Iran.

- A. A Replacement for Vashti Sought (2:1–4)
 - B. Esther Taken into the King's Harem (2:5–16)
 - C. Esther Crowned the New Queen (2:17–20)
 - D. Mordecai Discovers a Plot against the King's Life (2:21–23)
 - III. Haman and the Decree of Death (3:1–15)
 - A. Haman Made Prime Minister (3:1)
 - B. Mordecai's Refusal to Bow (3:2–4)
 - C. Haman's Wrath and Plot against the Jews (3:5–9)
 - D. The Decree Is Sealed and Sent Out (3:10–15)
 - IV. Esther's Dilemma (4:1–17)
 - A. Mordecai Mourns (4:1–2)
 - B. The Jews Mourn (4:3)
 - C. Mordecai Gives Esther Counsel (4:4–14)
 - D. Esther Asks for the Jews to Fast (4:15–17)
 - V. Esther's Banquet: Day One (5:1–14)
 - A. Esther Enters the King's Court (5:1–2)

- B. The King and Haman Invited to a Banquet (5:3–5)
- C. The King and Haman to Return (5:6–8)
- D. Haman's Gallows (5:9–14)
- VI. Esther's Banquet: Night One (6:1–14)
 - A. The Restless King (6:1–3)
 - B. Mordecai Honored (6:4–14)
- VII. Esther's Banquet: Day Two (7:1–10)
 - A. The Request of the Queen (7:1–7)
 - B. Haman Is Hanged (7:8–10)
- VIII. Mordecai and the Counter-Decree (8:1–17)
 - A. Mordecai Is Promoted (8:1–2)
 - B. The Decree Written by Mordecai (8:3–17)
- IX. Victory for the Jews: The Feast of Purim (9:1–32)
- X. Mordecai Prospers (10:1–3)

Kirk Kilpatrick

ETAM [E' tām] Place-name meaning “place of birds of prey.” 1. Rocky crag where Samson camped during his battles with the Philistines (Judg. 15:8–13), conferring there with men of Judah who wanted to bind him and hand him over to the Philistines. The exact location is not known. It must be near Lehi. See Lehi. 2. Town in territorial allotment of tribe of Judah according to earliest Greek translation of the OT but omitted from present Hebrew manuscripts (Josh. 15:59 REB). Rehoboam, king of Judah (931-913 B.C.), fortified the city (2 Chron. 11:5–6), which seems to indicate that Etam stood between Bethlehem and Tekoa. Rehoboam probably feared attack from Egypt, which had sheltered Jeroboam, king of Israel (2 Chron. 10:2). Pharaoh Shishak did, indeed, attack (2 Chron. 12:2–4). Some scholars think Rehoboam's fortification program came after Shishak's attack. A road ran along the ridge through or near Hebron, Bethzur, and Bethlehem to Jerusalem. Etam protected the approach to this road from the east. Etam is located at Khirbet el-Khohk, southwest of Bethlehem. 3. Member of tribe of Judah and apparently clan father of town of same name associated with Jezreel (1 Chron. 4:3). 4. Village assigned to Simeon (1 Chron. 4:32), though it is not listed in Simeon's tribal territory in Josh. 19:7. It may be modern Aitun, about 11 miles southwest of Hebron.

ETERNAL LIFE Life at its best, having infinite duration characterized by abiding fellowship with God. This important term in the NT is emphasized in the Gospel of John but also appears in the other Gospels and in Paul's writings. Eternal life in the NT eliminates the boundary line of death. Death is still a foe, but the one who has eternal life already experiences the kind of existence that will never end.

Yet, in this expression, the emphasis is on the quality of life rather than on the unending duration of life. Probably some aspects of both quality and duration appear in every context, but some refer primarily to quality of life, and others point to unending life or a life to be entered into in the future.

In terms of quality, life is (1) life imparted by God; (2) transformation and renewal of life; (3) life fully opened to God and centered in Him; (4) a constant overcoming of sin and moral evil; and (5) the complete removal of moral evil from the person and from the environment of that person.

Eternal Life as Experience in the Present This term in John has important implications. The one trusting in the Son has eternal life; the one disobeying the Son has the wrath of God abiding on him (John 3:36). Trusting and obeying go together; they leave no room for neutrality. The one who hears Christ's message and believes or trusts in the Father who sent Him has eternal life. This person does not come into condemnation but has passed out of death into life (John 5:24). The perfect tense—one who has passed and remained in the state of having passed from death into life—emphasizes eternal life as a permanent, present reality. But no presumption is possible here. Eternal life is a present reality for the one hearing and trusting (John 5:24).

The bold metaphors of eating and drinking point to active involvement with Christ. “Anyone who eats My flesh and drinks My blood has eternal life” (John 6:54a HCSB). Verse 57 explains that “the one who feeds on Me will live because of Me.” Since Christ is our life, we must make that life part of us by “sharing in Christ,” by actively coming to Him and drawing life-giving strength from Him.

Eternal life is defined in Jesus' high priestly prayer: “This is eternal life: that they may know You, the only true God, and the One You have sent—Jesus Christ” (John 17:3 HCSB). The present tense of the verb “to know” indicates that this knowledge is by experience—not from intellectual facts. Genuine knowledge of God by experience brings eternal life. Such experience transforms life.

Eternal Life as Experienced in the Present and Future John compared the lifting up of the serpent in the wilderness to the lifting up of the Son of Man on the cross and His exaltation to heaven. People who respond to Christ by constant trust have eternal life (John 3:15). They have healing from something more deadly than snakebite—the destructive effects of sin. Here eternal life involves a present healing, a present reality. But John 3:16 refers both to the present and the future.

